The clairvoyant reading was a surprise to myself, for, like many others, I believed Aunt Elmina to be dishonest with mediums, for certainly she received evidence enough of the truth of Spiritualism, on her trip of investigation, to hav made a convert of her, had she had any desire to be convinced. She acknowledged that she was puzzled by one slate-writing she received; but, after visiting Truesdell, she knew it was a fraud because Truesdell said it was. Is it possible she could put more faith in Truesdell's word (a self-convicted trickster) than in the evidence of her own eyesight? Surely not, if she was honest with herself and the mediums. She denies the Ann Lee message published in the Liberal, claiming that the "thee's" and "thou's" were not correct, and the plain language, as she terms it, was not used correctly. Now, as private letters are becoming public property, allow me to say to Aunt Elmina that in her personal letter to myself on this very subject she commits the same errors she accuses Ann Lee of doing, proving that her letter to me was a fraud, and that Aunt Elmina never wrote it, for she (Aunt Elmina) claims to use the plain language correctly. And right here let me say, if Aunt Elmina is honest in claiming to be a Materialist, why does she cling to the language of the Bible as her standard? This proves conclusivly to my mind that Mrs. Slenker still clings to the tenets of her sect. Taking her writings and letters as a criterion, they are decidedly adverse to Elmina, and therefore I could not hav gleaned her honesty of purpose in this matter from them, as any true critic will acknowledge. The clairvoyant reading was given as received, and, I confess, has made a change in my mind in favor of our friend Elmina. I rely on the judgment of those gone before, and accept their reading as the truth in regard to Aunt Elmina's honesty of purpose, knowing that spirit friends can read the soul, while we in the mortal life must be content to judge by appearances. I should hav remained quiet in the controversy, even hav borne the fraud accusation in the Ann Lee message, but the "gleaning" from her letters she accused me of was the last feather that broke the camel's back. Please excuse me, Aunt Elmina, but this time I was bound to talk back just a little bit.

SALLIE CAVE SCOVELL.

SERMONET.

TEXT: "Now the word of the Lord came unto Jonah saying, Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and cry against it, for their wickedness has come up before me" (Jonah i, 1, 2).

My beluved bruthren and sisteren, yu diskuver bi the tex that the wurd of the lord kum to Jonah. How it kum to him, or hu brot it tu him, is sumthin yu needent giv yourselvs eny truble about, fur the Bible saze so, and that iz suffisent fer al uf us. But Jonah knu that the Lord wanted him tu go tu preach tu 120,000 peple hu dident kno ther rite hand from ther left. But Jonah dident relish the job, so he struk out to anuther quarter. He dident like to risk his life amung so meny wicked, ignorent peple. But when he got on the ship, and the storm arose, he wus aslepe, while the cru got skeered and each praid tu there gods tu save them. But this doing no good, they went into the lottery bizness, and Jonah being the prize, they konkluded he wasent worth keeping, so they heaved him overbord; and the big fish seeing him, took a liking tu him—tuk him in out of the wet. But, akording tu the tale, he proved himself tu be a bad brekfast for the fish, for he had his hed repped up in tobako leaves, wich kaused the fish tu womit him up—allso it made the fish sik, fur he run klene out on shore before he spued. But droppen this part ov the subjek, we will pas on and follow Jonah into Nineveh, when he told the peple that they wood all be destroyed if they dident repent. They being so ignerant, was easy purswaded. And then kum the rush for sakkloth, because the Buke saiz they kivered themselvs and all the uther beasts with sakkloth. This brot grate joy tu the weavers, for they was on a strike, and up went there wages, for there was a grate demand for sakkloth. But what wikednes their beasts had dun i kant tell yu, unles they had sum bad kiking mules. But there wus a grate spekulation in sakkloth, and God spared the site fur the sake of the spekelaters. And that made Jonah mad, and he konkluded to quit preeching and go to razing gourds. But when he got in the shade of the gourdvine, God followed him there and stuk a worm on the stalk, wich killed the stalk and left poor Jonah settin in the sun. And that made Jonah madder. And we kant blame him much, fur God lide to Jonah, and dident destroy Nineveh after telling Jonah he would. But then, God had made Nineveh, and Jonah to, and had a rite tu do with his own as he pleased—and Jonah had no bizness to run away when God told him to go preach to the Ninevites.

You will find the rest of this sermon in the Book of Jonah, in regular order, in the inspired wurd.

REV. TIMOTHY TUGMUTTON,
Pastor ov the Church ov True Believers.

CORVALLIS, OREGON, August 27, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me a few words with C. L. James. He starts out with the assertion that the idea of our government being a social compact for the repression of crime and the good of the people is an exploded fiction. He ought not to imagin something exploded every time he shoots off his mouth. If there is any fact made clear by the history of our government, it is that it was established by the will of the majority. If Mr. James does not want the majority to rule, it is self-evident that he favors minority rule, and if the minority were reduced to Mr. C. L. James alone he would probably be the most perfect government on earth. My personal acquaintance with law and government haters is that they are the most self-asserting and tyrannical of men, the social and (would-be) political Ghengis Khans, whose real grievance is that their great abilities hav not been appreciated. Progressiv civilization would be impossible without some self-sacrifice—the giving up somewhat of our personal freedom; but the gain is worth all it costs. Does Mr. James want to become a savage in order to become free? If so, Terra del Fuego is the place for him. According to Darwin, in his trip around the world, the Fuegeans hav neither laws, or officers, or priests; each person is a law unto himself. Yet they are supposed to be the lowest savages on earth. Perhaps many of our laws could be made better and some done away with to our advantage, but I hav little to complain of in that respect. Many social usages are more troublesome, humiliating, and unjust than our laws. Petty peculation in our daily business absorbs far more of our income than taxes do. Mr. James will please excuse me for thinking we need a change for the better in our people more than in our government or laws. L. JOY.

READING, KAN., Sept. 14, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find postal note, to pay as per advice. Thanks for not stopping my paper when time expired. My family would feel lonely on the Sabbath if we did not receive THE TRUTH SEEKER. Under my own responsibility I hav endeavored to add new subscribers. I would like THE TRUTH SEEKER read in every family, to help lay down the bars of religious prejudices, supernatural dogmas of faiths and beliefs, and bring into closer proximity our relation as a human family. The ideas of Colonel Ingersoll are immensely grand and comprehensiv. A Baptist missionary was in our town last Sunday. In giving his statistics, he said that every soul saved by the water-route Baptist church cost only $2.30. In Kansas the river route is the cheapest. Much has been said about our free country; I fail to see its freedom. In England it is church and state; in this country it is state and churches, Sunday laws and chaplains. The public press, with few exceptions, supports these suckers. W. O. DAVIES.

EUREKA, KAN., Sept. 13, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I came to the above little city the last of May. I hav children here, and am visiting them after a nine-years' absence. The town has five rival churches, and the outward guise of Christianity is the only passport into the society of the blood-bought elect. Old-time acquaintances, many of them, see me now from out the corner of their eye in passing, having ostracized me for scattering my copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER where I thought they would be read. There are four men here that hav read a large number of papers and pamphlets lent them, and I was led to hope I might send at least three subscribers when I renewed my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, September 1st. But money is scarce here, and they hav not felt like sparing the money at this writing. I will send their names and three months' trial subscriptions for at least two by the 1st of next month.

SILAS GLEASON.

MONEY AGAIN.

MOUND CREEK, KAN., Sept. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER, August 22d, your correspondent "Holt" asks, "Where is your basis?" When a government issues money on value received, whoever asks "Where is your basis?" does not understand what money is, for the basis is the one particular fact of the value received by the government of the individual—which value was individual cost—and the law power.

Friend Holt says: "A debt must be contracted before money can be issued." That is true; and it is true, also, that credit is contracted at one and the same time. That is a condition precedent of the necessity of the issuance of money.

Example: A. does a job of painting the Capitol at Washington, say $10. Now, until this account is paid there exists a vacuum of government's debt, and A. the painter's credit.

Watch out now, for right here hinges a deal of financial clap-trap. In the case in hand, which party is debtor? Clearly the painter is creditor and the government or nation debtor. The painter is now handed his money, which reads thus:

Ten dollars—a full legal tender issued to A. on value received. UNCLE SAM.

Now, how stands the account? The vacuum of creditor and debtor is filled. Both debt and credit are eliminated. And that which killed both livs a law-created fact, based on what it cost the individual who received it, and whose credit it paid when received, and based on the value the government admits it received by the nomen stamp on its face, and to which it has affixed the legal power, to first cancel government's debt by its first step into circulation. Hence we hav forever a living law fact based on cost and value received, the summum bonum of associated power, money, which money is neither debt or credit, a forced loan, or redeemable.

But my friend Holt says, "Hence money is credit in circulation." Money cannot be either debt or credit, for it kills both and still livs. My note for value received circulates; it is evidence of my debt that circulates, and confidence that I will pay it makes my debt money circulate. Did I possess the entire law power of the nation, then I could make money, and its beneficence would inure to me; the money would be the nation's forever, and it would cancel my indebtedness forever for the value I received, for which I gave the notes. Can't a child see the beneficence of public money? Take our case of the painter. Ten dollars benefit to the Capitol. The ten-dollar debt paid by the legal tender given by Uncle Sam. Ten dollars added to the present volume. Ten dollars in the hand of the painter equal to his labor-cost, to say nothing of a family fed and clothed, and we hav, by the benefaction of the issuance of national money, forty dollars, absolutely thirty dollars gain—national gain—without interest, minus the cost of stamping and issuing the money! No logic can refute it. That is a money and basis worth contending for, and ought to fully satisfy the most fastidious. ELIAS LEE.

THOMSON, MO., Aug. 30, 285.

MR. EDITOR: We hav just had a series of lectures in Carbon, Ind., by C. B. Reynolds, who came there and delivered his first lecture on the 15th. He was expecting his Tent. It not having arrived, we erected a rostrum in the grove, from which he lectured out in the open air to large audiences till Friday evening, when the Tent arrived, about 5:30. A number of the friends assisted in erecting the Tent, and by that time there was a large audience assembled. Rain began to pour, but the Tent was filled, and a large number had to go home, not being able to get in. Some of the religious element made some disturbance previous to the arrival of the Tent, but got ashamed of themselvs, and everything passed off peaceably to the end of the lecture.

Mr. Reynolds is a man of great energy and perseverance. His lectures are masterpieces of facts and truths, demonstrated by eloquence, humor, and sarcasm. He has left a lasting impression in Carbon, many acknowledging that they had been duped by priestcraft, but would never be again. Mr. Reynolds is undoubtedly the right man in the right place.

Mr. Reynolds and Mr. Tilney, the genial young musician, remained from the 15th to the 23d. Having delivered some ten or eleven lectures, they pulled stakes for Logansport, Ind., leaving behind them many friends. I actually believe the people were sorry to see them leave, for there was as much, if not more, interest manifested up to the last night as at any time before. WILLIAM OLDHAM.

NEW ALBANY, IND., Aug. 28, 285.

MR. EDITOR: If it will not be infringing on your valuable space, I would like to answer some letters from friends through your columns in regard to the plans of the "Liberal, Mutual, and Scientific Society." It will probably interest some others that hav contemplated entering a society of Liberal, communistic tendencies. I hav received several letters asking "if all [be compelled to] contribute to a common fund, will this not exclude moneyless Freethinkers?" As an answer to these, and for the information of others, I will try and giv a brief outline of our proposed plan.

All members (and others) will contribute to a fund as much as they can, or wish. This fund to be equal joint-stock of all members.

With this fund the society will purchase land, stock, stores, build houses, etc. If there is not enough donated to meet the requirements of the society, it (the society) will borrow from members who hav it, or from other sources, enough to meet their wants.

I think this will giv moneyless Freethinkers a chance. I am certain there will be no trouble of getting all the help we want from those who hav it, either as a loan or contribution.

I believe I hav, in former letters to you, given our principles, "Giv to the producers the benefit of what is produced." We want to hav a just distribution of wealth. As Henry George says: "If some men hav not enough to liv decently, do not others hav far more than they really need? If there is not wealth sufficient to go around, giving everyone abundance, is it because we hav reached the limit of the production of wealth? Is our labor all employed? Is our capital all utilized? On the contrary, in whatever direction we look, we see the most stupendous waste of productiv forces, which if permitted to freely play, the production of wealth would be so enormous that there would be more than a sufficiency for all. There is in nature no reason for poverty, not even for the poverty of the crippled or decripit. For man is by nature a social animal. But if we will not adapt social organization to natural laws; if we allow dogs in the manger to monopolize what they cannot use; if we allow strength and cunning to rob honest labor, we must hav chronic poverty, and all the social evils it inevitably brings." To adapt our organization to natural laws is our object.

And if our friends, and the lovers of humanity, will giv us a little aid, we will soon hav an organization that will contribute more happiness, and giv more help, where it is needed, than any of the orthodox secret societies and institutions in existence. Yours very truly, E. E. PARK.

OWEN SOUND, ONT., Sept. 14, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Hav you anything that will do good work to put in the hands of a child of twelve, whose father is a Freethinker, but whose mother is not? I want something to giv her to make a start with. Do you see?—the design should not be too plain.

Now many, many thanks for sending THE TRUTH SEEKER after the time was up. I hope you had a grand meeting at Albany; I should hav liked to be there, but I am a cripple, and this money I send was made with the buck-saw and the ax. I remain yours, CHARLES DUNN.

DOWAGIAC, MICH., Sept. 8, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: This being a rainy day, Mr. Knapp is spending it in the house, and has just finished reading Watson Heston's article in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I hasten to thus publicly thank him for using his pen so nobly and valiantly in behalf of the toilers all over the land. May his pen never need be turned into a sword in defense of the same! Every drop of blood in my veins is burning, yea, curdling with indignation at the moral cowardice and lethargy shown by our leaders on this labor question! Enough, as I hav only room to say that I want Helen Gardener's book, if extant, and inclose amount. ABBIE KNAPP.

BELLEVILLE, KAN., Sept. 17, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed with this you will find $3, for which please send THE TRUTH SEEKER to an old and true friend of D. M. Bennett, our silent but ever remembered and revered co-worker in the cause of humanity.

Now if anyone else says, "Stop my paper," I will try at least to get as many new subscribers as possible to take his place.

Truly yours, DR. H. PATRICK.

ROCKY COMFORT, ARK., Sept. 7, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I don't see any letters from this part of the moral vineyard, and therefore conclude there are not many of our sort in northwestern Arkansas. But there are a few.

The Methodists hav got through with a protracted meeting here. They are not as tenacious as they used to be. There is a considerable falling off from what it was some time ago. There are but three here who would not kneel when they said so—two Freethinkers and one Universalist, and their pilot gave us hallelujah, you bet.

Will you please tell us in your "Answers to Inquirers" how long Robert G. Ingersoll has been an Infidel or Freethinker.—[We do not know.—ED. T. S.]. M V. GAUTNEY.

PORTVILLE, N. Y., Sept. 18, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I think my subscription to your valuable paper must hav nearly, if not quite, expired; hence I inclose $3 for the same another year. Please do not let me lose a number, as I want to be sure and not lose the report of the Albany Convention. THE TRUTH SEEKER coming to our family weekly is about the only social advantage we hav here, as the dry-rot of superstition struck this place in its infancy, and Liberalism and Freethought are unintelligible words to my neighbors so far as I know.

I would like to say a few words on the Liberal monument business, to free my mind if nothing more. I see the Bruno Statue Fund is growing slowly. Now, I am glad of this, glad that freedom and knowledge hav at last wrought in the hearts of the people a desire to do justice to some of the martyrs to whom Liberalism owes so much. But would it not be more consistent with the spirit of progress, more in accord with humanitarian work, to make such a memorial in the form of a school of philosophy or science, or even a home for destitute Liberals in old age? Many of these hav given the best energies of their life to promulgate the truths of Freethought; their work hav they done "without money and without price;" yet in their old age they are homeless. Would not such a home built by Liberals of this age be a more fitting tribute to our martyred dead than any monument of marble or stone?

Yours, for universal mental liberty, JOHN L. BROOKS.

CINCINNATI, O., Sept. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: From the standpoint of reason and sound sense, doth it not look as if large portions of the community are on the verge of lunacy. Behold the antics and monkeyshines of the rabble known by the queer name of the Salvation Army. Another army should be organized to rescue the silly people from this noisy and turbulent crowd of hypocritical fanatics. They are a disgrace to civilization, both of body and mind. Then, again, that other very strange and peculiar sect of religionists who so enthusiastically say they see the ghastly ghosts of those long since extinct. Sir, whenever persons are in so deplorable a state of mental aberration, it is a painful experience to the minds of those who stand free from such religious frenzy. Pitiful, indeed, is the state of those who hav become so infatuated as to sink their minds in the Maelstrom of spookite speculations and wild fanaticism, which are leading many to the dismal asylum for the insane where human intellect is a total blank.

Every writer and every publisher should use every effort to persuade and clearly show to these mistaken people that real happiness can only be secured by shunning these unwise and cranky ways, and having a well-balanced brain to guide us daily in the path of solid truth and genuin sense, for our individual benefit right here and now. All anti-natural ideas and pursuits hav a tendency to unbalance the mind and make persons fit candidates for the madhouse.

Fraternally yours, T. WINTER, Materialist.

LABOR ADVOCATE OFFICE,
WABASH, IND., Sept. 18, E.M. 285.

MR. EDITOR: The grand old TRUTH SEEKER comes to me replete with the wisdom of humanity, teaching self-reliance as the only remedy or recipe for evolving out of wrong conditions. How I wish I had the ability some of your writers evince! I could make my paper more effectiv in cracking the orthodox nut in this city and county. I tell you I am stirring them up in great shape; twice I hav been threatened with the demolition of my office, but I consider it but the vapid mouthing of an over-zealous but harmless orthodoxy. Their fangs hav grown old with age; the sun of Freethought has so warped their teeth that not only are they incapable of incisiv work, but the enamel is so affected that they are fast giving way to decay. I am, with a few other Liberals, trying to get Robert G. Ingersoll to giv a lecture here in the near future.

My paper is run in the interest of Liberalism and labor, and an amusing incident came to my notice last night which I can not use in my paper, and I will giv it to you. As I hav no press at present, I print only one page at home. I hav inserted the Nine Demands of Liberalism, and, as I am short of room, I hav not inserted, as I intend to as soon as I get a press (I only want one large enough to print one page of five column folio), the Preamble and Declarations of Principles of the Knights of Labor. And here comes the difficulty. An Assembly of the Knights of Labor has lately been organized here, and a gentleman is keeping company with a young lady; by some means she had been told that her affianced was a Knight of Labor, and having procured a copy of my paper, as it is the only Knight of Labor paper in the county, she read it carefully (of course she is a church-member); soon her eye struck the Nine Demands; carefully marking articles 4 and 7, she laid it away for the next Sunday-night interview, at which time she blandly informed him that, if he did not leave the Knights of Labor, she would never! no, never! speak to him again; she never would hav anything to do with one that belonged to an organization that advocated the abolition of the Lord's holy day, and the taking the Bible out of the public school. Not a bit of it! He did not hav a constitution and by-laws of the Knights of Labor, so his efforts to convince her that the Nine Demands was the rule of action of the Liberals, and was not the Preamble and Principles of the Knights of Labor, were fruitless, so he came to me and I gave him the Preamble and Principles of the the Knights of Labor, and peace reigns in that quarter. I am a Knight of Labor, and am satisfied from as much observation as I hav had it is a grand organization for the wage-workers; it recognizes no Protestant, Catholic, color, politics, or sex in passing upon the eligibility of an applicant, and then it has no religious ceremony in opening or closing an assembly. Inside we simply are Knights, not Protestants, Catholics, Republicans, Democrats, Infidels, white, black, male, or female distinctivly, and, further, in every other organization I hav been acquainted with, in taking the obligation, there were either words or actions by which we recognized a God and asked his help to keep that obligation, but in this I had only to simply affirm. An exchange says, "The Knights of Labor is rapidly educating old party ideas out of its members." And I find those that are strong thinkers and activ participants in the labor movement are further and further from the pale of the church. Should they not be, when the Christian "rule of action"—that crude Bible—says, "Submit yourselvs to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake?" When we strike out to think for ourselvs, we soon find by reasoning from effect to cause that the teachings of the Bible are the protoplasm of all oppression, especially of the wage-worker. This is why I run my paper as I do. I am striking at the root of this powerful evil, the only true way to uccess. Yours, etc., ARTHUR C. EVERETT.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

When the Cows Come Home.

With klingle, klangle, klingle,
'Way down the dusty dingle,
The cows are coming home;
Now sweet and clear, and faint and low,
The airy twinklings come and go,
Like chimings from some far-off tower,
Or patterings of an April shower
That make the daisies grow;
Ko-klarg, ko-klarg, koklinglelingle,
'Way down the darkening dingle,
The cows come slowly home;
And old-time friends, and twilight plays
And starry nights, and sunny days,
Come trooping up the misty ways
When the cows come home.

With jingle, jangle, jingle,
Soft sounds that sweetly mingle,
The cows are coming home;
Malvine, and Pearl, and Florimel,
DeKamp, Redrose, and Gretchen Schell,
Queen Bess, and Sylph, and Spangled Sue,
Across the fields I hear her oo-oo,
And clang her silver bell;
Go-ling, go-lang, golinglelingle,
With faint, far sounds that mingle,
The cows come slowly home;
And mother songs of long-gone years,
And baby joys, and childish tears,
And youthful hopes, and youthful fears,
When the cows come home.

With ringle, rangle, ringle,
By twos, and threes, and single,
The cows are coming home;
Through the violet air we see the town,
And the summer sun a-sipping down;
The maple in the hazel glade
Throws down the path a longer shade,
And the hills are growing brown;
To-ring, to-ring, to-ringleringle,
By threes, and fours, and single,
The cows come slowly home,
The same sweet sound of wordless psalm,
The same sweet June-day rest and calm,
The same sweet scent of bud and balm,
When the cows come home.

With a tinkle, tankle, tinkle,
Through fern and periwinkle,
The cows are coming home.
A loitering in the checkered stream,
Where the sun-rays glance and gleam,
Starine, Peachbloom, and Phebe Phyllis,
Stand knee-deep in the creamy lilies
In a drowsy dream;
To-link, to-lank, to-linklelinkle,
O'er the banks with buttercups a-twinkle,
The cows come slowly home;
And up through Memory's deep ravine
Come the brook's old song, and its old-time sheen,
And the crescent of the silver queen,
When the cows come home.

With a klingle, klangle, klingle,
With a loo-oo, and moo-oo, and jingle,
The cows are coming home;
And over there on Merlin hill
Hear the plaintiv cry of the whip-poor-will;
The dew-drops lie on the tangled vines,
And over the poplars Venus shines,
And over the silent mill;
Ko-ling, ko-lang, ko-linglelingle;
With ting-a-ling and jingle
The cows come slowly home;
Let down the bars; let in the train
Of long-gone songs, and flower, and rain,
For dear old times come back again
When the cows come home.

—Agnes E. Mitchell.

Pond Lily Farm.

It's a pretty name, isn't it? Pond Lily Farm! And would you like me tell you all about my visit there?

All right. You sit still and listen, and I'll talk.

The day was just lovely, and Onset Bay was all alive with golden sparkles that danced and shimmered all over it's smooth surface, while all sorts of shapes might be traced in the clouds that floated lazily on the bosom of the blue sky overhead.

"Hey there! don't you want to go to Pond Lily Farm to-day?" and the voice that thus saluted my ears came nearer.

"Come along if you do," continued the voice, which came from the throat of our friend the doctor. "The boat is on the shore, and won't wait long. Come just as you are—no extras—calico is good enough for this excursion—or any other," he added slowly. "All hands can go," he shouted, as we hastily filled a lunch-basket and donned our shade hats.

There were only the two Bethiahs, Tommy and Bonny, the two dogs who were bound to go anyway, the doctor, and myself in the boat.

We were soon sailing serenely past Wickett Island, which rises like an emerald seventy-five feet above sea level, and on, making a lovely pathway over the calm waters between the undulating bluffs on the left and the three islands, Onset, Hogg, Mashnee, on the right, with a full view of Monument Beach in the southeast.

On we went, leaving the rickety old dock, Point Independence, Swift's sand-bank, and Ramsdell's Knoll in the distance, and at length we were in the waters of Buzzard's Bay, and almost too soon we were landing on the beach at Pond Lily Farm.

Taking a narrow footpath leading from the shore through the wildwood, which was fragrant with sweet-fern, bay-berry, juniper, sassafras, and the speckled leaves of sarsaparilla, stopping every now and then to gather wild-asters, yarrow, coreopsis, heavy clusters of bright golden-rod and delicate ferns that grew along the mossy, shaded way, we were, almost before we knew it, at the very door of the old, old farm-house.

Such a quaint, old-fashioned building, with a wide roof reaching away down, and so very old that the shingles upon it were worm-eaten and worn thin by the pelting of the storms of many years.

The front door, that somehow seemed in the wrong place, was all boarded and nailed up.

"What is that for?" we asked.

"Don't like front-door company," was the reply from the hermit who livs there all alone, and who met us with a smile.

"Was he a regular hermit?"

"Why, yes; that is, he lived in solitude, alone."

Of course, you think there was live stock there, it being a farm—cows, horses, oxen, pigs, chickens, dogs, cats, and the like. But not so. There was nothing of the kind, except some handsome cows from a neighboring farm. They had wandered over the broken fences and tumble-down walls, and were quietly browsing under the apple-trees in front of the house.

Trailing vines and shrubbery ran wild in clumps, and straggled over the walls and up the sides of the old wash-house.

Near by was the old well, lined with stones, in the cracks and crevices of which grew mosses and sprays of ferns dripping water, drop by drop, all the time.

I let the "old oaken bucket" down in the well, and the weight at the end of the long "well pole" almost drew up the bucket full of sparkling water, and as cold as ice. After a draught of the good old "Adam's ale" and a rest beneath the wide-spreading balm of Gilead trees, we wandered over the old farm, where there was not a potato growing, no wheat, no rye, no corn, or anything that you would naturally expect to see on a farm, only grass, rank and tall, and magnificent trees, whose branches waved royal welcome to us as we passed by.

But there were beach plums in abundance, just turning purple, and such handsome wild cherry-trees, glistening with fruit, just such fruit as I used to pick from the trees in my own grandpapa's garden, down on Cape Cod, long ago.

Didn't I wish that all the children of THE TRUTH SEEKER fireside were running and romping with us over that old farm, down through the meadow, over tangled briars and blackberry vines!

Into the grove of pine and oak we plunged, one Bethiah and I, and taking a shaded path, treading on spongy mosses, we all at once came right upon a lovely little lily pond, bordered with graceful ferns and wild flowers that nodded good morning to us, or we fancied so. The pond was covered with a canopy of broad lily leaves, among which were scattered lily buds and blossoms, fair, pure, and fragrant as an infant's dream of beauty.

"Chick-a-dee! chickadee!" twittered a bird amid the deep, dark stillness, and "Kachug" muttered a frog, as he leaped into the water with a big splash. We picked huckleberries awhile, and enjoyed the wild loveliness, and then returned to the house to find that we were utterly unable to do justice to the lunch spread upon the hermit's table, we were so full of cherries, plums, berries, and sweet apples.

Oh, it was such a funny old house, inside as well as out! Such little windows, with eighteen panes of glass in each! And such low, smoky old walls, and wonderful old cupboards! A broken lamp-globe of glass lay in a hundred pieces in a chair; a thick piece of tobacco—a plug, they call it—lay on the table between a huge jack-knife and a copy of Burns's poems, while in a corner, back of a lounge, was a stringless guitar, the melody of which had died when its owner's fingers grew cold in death.

All was silent in the rooms above and below, but every article, every piece of furniture, had its history.

The barred front door would not open, as I told you, and spiders had homes in every window, and you may believe it was desolate enough in the old house.

I wanted to make conversation, and said to the hermit, "Of course, you can't be lonely with so much natural beauty outside."

"And so many cherries and beach plums, and apples in the orchard!" said one of the Bethiahs.

"Hum!" said the hermit, scornfully. "You don't know—you don't know!" he muttered, after a pause.

"Put a cricket on the hearth, why don't you?" I said softly. "It will tell you to cheer up. Don't you know the crickets say 'Cheer up!—cheer up?'"

"Crickets!" exclaimed the hermit, sneeringly. "I sometimes set the water boiling on the stove for company. I like to hear it hissing and steaming," he added, mournfully.

The sun by this time was creeping down in the west, and the hermit told us it was time to be going. The doctor and the hermit went on ahead, for the latter signified his intention to accompany us home, and bade us close the door with the padlock and start for the shore.

Bonny and Tommy insisted upon staying awhile to dance around the mild-eyed cows in the orchard and bark at them. They gazed at the dogs, shaking their heads, as if to say, "Go on, you impudent rascals, or we will hook you with our long horns."

We gathered some marsh rosemary on the beach, and picking up our india-rubbers that we had left near an old fence, we found them full of crickets.

"Crickety! crickety! cricket! Here are your friends for company!" said I, tossing the little creatures toward the hermit, who turned away without a word.

We jumped into the boat, and a fair wind and flowing sail soon brought us to our starting-place near the big rock, Jumbo.

The dogs leaped overboard and swam to the beach. The two Bethias waded barefoot to the shore, when the boat could come no nearer; the doctor waded also, and the hermit himself took the smallest one of our party to the land, pig back!

A Boarding School in 1750.

I invite you, boys and girls, to cross the wide Atlantic, and find amusement in visiting a boarding-school, or academy, of the olden times.

In the days of good Queen Bess, schools were few and far between, as angels' visits are said to be, but in the town of Norwich, England, there existed a celebrated training-school for the youth of both sexes.

An old abbey furnished the requisit room, and high-born maidens slept in the cells where nuns had once repeated their ave Marias, and were gathered by day in a school-room which had formerly been used as a refectory or dining-hall. Separated from this building by a crumbling stone wall of great hight was the ancient monastery, which was now transformed into an academy for the boys of Albion. Both buildings were well-nigh covered with beautiful clambering ivy.

The children of that day, in dress and appearance, were exact miniature copies of grown-up people.

Queen Elizabeth numbered three thousand robes in her wardrobe, and the daughters of noblemen carried with them to school from thirty to three hundred dresses, according to the wealth and station of their parents.

Young misses of six and ten years of age wore trains on important occasions, and, at all times, appeared in long, pointed waists, with deep ruffles around the neck. Silk robes were embroidered with serpents, and birds, and ostriches, in bright colors. Handkerchiefs were trimmed with gold lace and sometimes ornamented with a dozen solid gold or silver buttons, which must hav been particularly nice for young noses. Sleeves were worn separate from the dresses, and often of different material. Ladies' and children's boots were made with heels two inches high, which were called pantofles, and both boots and slippers were frequently trimmed with artificial flowers.

Young lads, also, wore sleeves of large size and gay colors. Wigs had not, in 1579, become fashionable for children, but their hair was often dyed. Garters were worn conspicuously by men and boys, and were a test of rank and fashion. It is on record that these articles, for state occasions, sometimes cost "four score pounds a pair," equal to some three hundred and fifty dollars in our money.

The tops of boots were of embroidered linen and shirts were often embroidered with gold thread. In such apparel as this the schoolboys of that day played leap-frog and hunt the slipper and other ancient games.

The beds were the only comfortable articles of furniture then known, and were frequently of such size as to accommodate from twelve to twenty persons. Thus a teacher could sleep with all his pupils around him. How would you like that, boys? One specimen of these bedsteads, the great bed of Ware—of which Shakspere makes mention—is still preserved in England as a curiosity, and was, at one time, the property of the late Charles Dickens.

Hashes and stews formed the principal food set before the school-children whose mode of life we are depicting, and, as forks were not brought from Italy till 1580, and did not come into general use for fifty years, they ate their stews and hashes with the aid of pewter spoons and their fingers.

Table linen was unknown, but on feast days a narrow strip of Turkey carpeting extended the length of the dining table, this being the only purpose for which carpeting was used when first brought to England. Rushes were scattered upon the floor, and the remnants of each meal were thrown down to the dogs upon the rushes, which were renewed, as history tells us, three or four times a year.

And now, perhaps, you will inquire what were the studies pursued by the pupils of Norwich academy in the year 1570?

Education was esteemed of much less importance than dress and amusements, and, therefore, we mention this topic last of all in our account of the "good old times."

The boys were taught "Latin, Greek, and figures," but we are told that the young ladies could scarcely read. Embroidery and working tapestry were the principal occupations of the fair sex, and the school girls were taught "to prepare physic and make pastry; to dry herbs and bind up wounds; to make banners and scarfs, and to be obedient to their fathers, brothers, and lords."

Early marriages were frequent, and many of these Norwich school-girls were wedded wives, whose education must be completed before they were taken home to keep the keys and cut the bread, and rule a retinue of servants—duties which would be required of them in the castles of their husbands.

Knitting became customary about this time, and on the occasion of the visit of Queen Elizabeth to Norwich, in 1570, eight young girls walked in the procession that welcomed her, knitting yarn hose, which was then a great curiosity.

Having thus ransacked the annals of the past to bring before you this picture of the school children of the olden times, we humbly submit to your consideration the question, whether our republican boys and girls are not more highly favored, more sensibly dressed, and better educated in every respect in our schools to-day, than were the children of English nobles, with all their wealth, power, and prestige, three hundred years ago?—S. S. Colt, St. Nicholas.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—RHOMBOID.

Across: 1. A wedge-like piece of stone.
2. A town in South Wales.
3. Mutiny.
4. A conflict.
5. A noted city in France.

Down: 1. A letter.
2. On high.
3. To row.
4. Also.
5. A musical instrument.
6. To depend.
7. A constellation.
8. A prefix.
9. A letter.

Pittsburgh, Pa. H. E. JUERGENS.

2.—A BATCH OF RIDDLES.—NO. 1.

I ride when I carry,
And run without feet,
And take the most rest
When I giv up my seat.

NO. 2.

An afternoon visit and an organ of sense,
And a source of delight, without any pretense,
Will giv you a dish that is fit for a king.
Now write a reply to the riddle I sing.

NO. 3.

I part with all I get, my friend,
And run headforemost by the other end.

NO. 4.

Once I lived all alone on the brow of a hill;
Though I moved with the rest I always stood still.
And now I am dead I can travel around,
Though I hav but one leg to get over the ground.

ISAAC A. POOL.

ANSWER TO PUZZLE IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, SEPT. 15, 1885.

No. 1.—

A chaffinch loves a chaffy play,
A charming life he feels;
A chariot tempts not him away,
He goes on wings, not wheels.
He knows a chalk cake from a cake
Of what we call a cheese,
A churn is not required to make
A cake like one of these.
A chessel is a wooden vat
In which a cheese is pressed.
Who guesses these I'll giv a chat,
A charity(,) my best.

Escanaba, Mich. ISAAC A. POOL.

N. D. C.

How to Become

A MEDIUM

IN YOUR OWN HOME.

A 16-page pamphlet, containing full instructions and a letter designating all your phases of mediumship, and a copy of the Riddle of the American Spiritual Sphinx, or the Lost Key Found, sent FREE upon receipt of three two-cent stamps to cover expenses of mailing, etc. Address, JAMES A. BLISS, 121 West Concord st., Boston, Mass. 39tf.

Something New!

Every Liberal should hav one of our beautiful

MOTTO CARDS,

(7x22), ready for framing, for their homes.
Twenty-five cents per copy.
Also Large Cards (14x22), and expressing the NINE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.
Thirty cents each.
Circulars sent FREE. Address all orders to
LIBERAL MOTTO SUPPLY CO., Troy, N. Y.

POCKET ATLAS

Of the

WORLD.

Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE.

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-page colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents, by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N. Y.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:

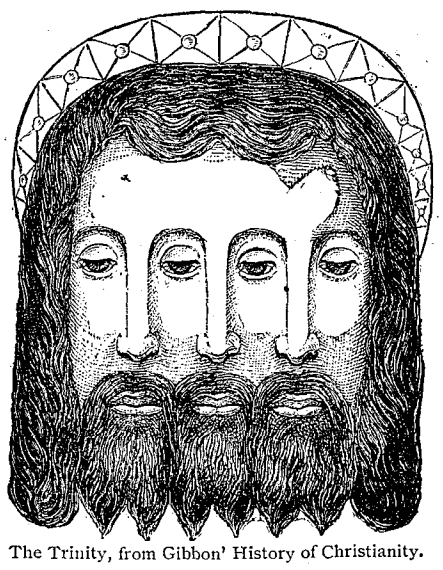
OR,

MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who have helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr, Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.



PRICE, - - - - - $1.25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

EVOLUTION:

A SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE.

By Robert C. Adams.

Paper, 25 cents. For Sale at this Office.

The Trinity, from Gibbon' History of Christianity.

History of Christianity

AND

A VINDICATION

of some passages in the "History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" by

EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With a Life of Gibbon, preface and notes by the editor, including critical notes by Guizot, Milman, Wenck, an "English Churchman," and other scholars.

1 vol. 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With 65 engravings. $2 00

This book shows when, where, and how Christianity originated, who were its founders, and what were the sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

"I know of no book that contains more real and valuable information upon the origin of Christianity."—R. G. INGERSOLL.

"One of the most learned and interesting books ever written and published."—Boston Investigator.

FOR SALE AT TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

JUST OUT.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

THE MAGNIFICENT

COLORED LITHOGRAPHS

—OF THE—

D. M. BENNETT MONUMENT.

PRINTED IN SEVEN COLORS ON THE BEST LITHOGRAPH PAPER, SIZE, 22½ x 28½.

THE BRONZE MEDALLION

PRINTS AS LARGE AS A CABINET PHOTOGRAPH, THUS GIVING NOT ONLY A PICTURE OF THE MONUMENT, BUT AN ACCURATE

LIKENESS OF D. M. BENNETT.

The lithograph is designed for framing, and will be a treasure for all Liberals.

Sent, postpaid, and securely wrapped, to subscribers to the Monument Fund for 30 cents; to others, 50 cents. Address this office.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, with Sixty-seven Engravings, Preface, and Notes.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.
Zadig; or, Fate.
The Sage and the Atheist.
The Princess of Babylon.
Tho Man of Forty Crowns.
The Huron; or, The Pupil of Nature.
Micromegas.
The World as it Goes.
The Black and the White.
Memnom the Philosopher.
Andres Des Touches at Siam.
The Study of Nature.
A Conversation With a Chinese.
Plato's Dream.
A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.
An Adventure in India.

I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find nothing in it trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all, that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observation of the vulgar.—Voltaire.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, 4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

The BIBLE—WHENCE and WHAT?

BY RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B,

A Book of Hints and Suggestions Concerning the literature contained in the Old and New Testaments. 12mo. 232 pages. Price, $1.

THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

Wanted—Lecture Engagements.

The city of Cleveland failed to convict "Gorsuch, the Anarchist." He is again free, and open for lecture engagements. Address,

W. J. GORSUCH,
4t38 107 Fifth Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

THE RISE OF

INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY

From Thales to Copernicus.

By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $2.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Missing Link

—IN—

MODERN SPIRITUALISM

By A. LEAH UNDERHILL, of the Fox family.

This book purports to be a truthful account of the phenomena occurring at Hydesville in the house of Mr. Fox, and since to various members of the Underhill family, especially the author, who has had a good offset to "Bottom Facts," being essentially controversial, and will be used for offense and defense by believers in Spiritual manifestations. Mrs. Underhill contends that the exhibitions of an occult power, as narrated in her book, demonstrate beyond doubt the realty of the survival of man's spirit; that death is but birth into another stage of progressed and progressiv life; and proves what has hitherto been but a dogma of an unproved and unprovable faith, the immortality of the soul. PRICE, $2.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

Ingersoll Catechised:

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies $1; 100 copies $3. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail:

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study, the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy. The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

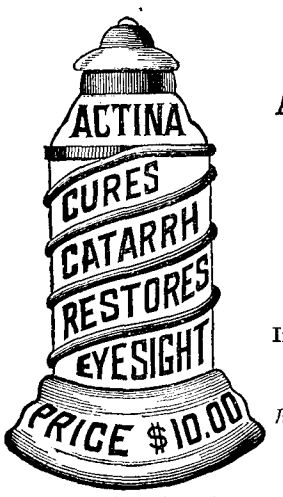
Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

A New and Useful Work.

WEDLOCK, OR, THE RIGHT RELATIONS OF THE SEXES—Disclosing the Laws of Conjugal Selection, and showing Who May and Who May Not Marry. A Scientific Treatise. By SAMUEL R. WELLS, One vol., 12mo, 250 pages; plain muslin, price, $1.50; in fancy gilt binding, $2.

Among the subjects treated are the following: Marriage a Divine Institution; Qualifications for Matrimony; The Right Age to Marry; Motives for Marrying; Marriages of Consanguinity—of Cousins, when Justifiable; Conjugal Selection—Affinities; Courtship—Long or Short; Duty of Parents; Marriage Customs and Ceremonies of all Nations; Ethics of Marriage; Second Marriages, are they Admissible? Jealousy—Its Cause and Cure; Causes of Separation and Divorce; Celibacy—Ancient and Modern; Polygamy and Pantagamy; Love Signs in the Features, and How to Read Them; Physiognomy; Sensible Love Letters—Examples; The Poet's Wife; The Model Husband and the Model Wife—the Mutual Obligations, Privileges, and Duties; The Poetry of Love, Courtship, and Marriage—Being a Practical Guide to all the Relations of HAPPY WEDLOCK.



The book is handsomely printed and beautifully bound It was intended more especially for young people, but may be read with interest and with profit by those of every age. Copies will be sent by post to any address on receipt of price.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st floor shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.

Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

ACTINA BATTERY.
Patent applied for

The Wonder of the Nineteenth Century!

Do you wear Glasses, and wish to do without them?

ACTINA CURES DISEASES OF THE EYE AFTER OCULISTS FAIL.

Are you suffering from that most common of all diseases,

CATARRH?

Are you troubled with

Deafness, Neuralgia, Hay Fever, or Severe Headache.

If so, WHY NOT Investigate ACTINA? this will cost nothing.

☞ A General Agent wanted for every city and town in the United States.

Send for Catalogue Containing all Information.

Remit Money by Registered Letter, Check, Draft, or P. O. Order to

"ACTINA" COMPANY

SOLE PROPRIETORS

88 FIFTH AVENUE, near 14th Street, N. Y.

Please mention this paper. 3140

Poetry.

Apostrophe to the Church.

Church, I behold the ages past
  Loom up in lurid luster,
And flit before my vision fast
  And round my fancy cluster.
My blood burns hot in every vein,
And vengence rankles in my brain.

O church! thy standard now unfurls,
The smoke above faggots curls,
  And superstitions thrive.
Beneath thy tread earth groans again—
Thy music is the moans of men
  Cremated while alive.

The intellectual world is robed
  In superstition's rags;
The sun of science sets behind
  Mount Calvary's barren crags;
Majestic Bruno stands in flame,
  His eyes grow dim and swell,
The priests kneel down and pray their God
  To damn his soul in hell.

O church! thy crimson tides of war
  Out over nations surge;
Thy bloody butchers sing a psalm,
  The vanquished chant a dirge.
The rack, and stake. and gory gulfs,
  The work of pious wrath,
The grinning, glaring, skeletons
  All strewn along thy path,
Still burn and blaze from death's dark page
To haunt thee in thy feeble age.

Beneath thy grim cathedral spires,
I hear the groans and see the fires,
  And Christ's religion rages.
Commandments given by thy Lord
Adorn the warrior's bloody sword,
And in the murky dungeons dark
  Clank iron chains on sages.

O Church! O heinous, holy fraud!
That murders man and worships God,
  Look forward to thy doom;
Thou who art rotten to the core,
Whose record past is traced in gore,
  Retire to thy tomb. WM. SCOTT.

Tyrone, Pa.

American Liberalism.

The pendulum its motion swings
  From high to low, from low to high;
A moment to the earth it clings,
  Then leaps exultant to the sky.

Engulfed in yawning chasm lies
  The sturdy swimmer of the deep,
Who on the coming wave shall rise,
  And through the blue triumphant sweep.

The bending bow succumbs to strength,
  As earthward drops the soaring lark;
But it shall use its force at length
  And hurl the arrow to the mark.

Accept this cheer of royal birth,
  A heritage to sorrow given,
That truth, though sorely crushed to earth,
  Shall surely rise again to heaven.

So did the gods, described as such,
  When wounded on celestial plain,
To earth come down, whose healing touch
  But gave them strength to rise again.

Through mystic changes life may creep;
  A thousand years are as a day;
So through the endless ages sweep
  The mighty cycles of decay.

Nations and races rise and fall
  In rhythmic cadence down the years,
Regardless of the monarch's call,
  The widow's or the orphan's tears.

Be this the beat that brings us low.
  We soon shall feel the mounting curve;
The crested wave shall overflow,
  From depths reclaim the man of nerve.

Draw tight the bowstring, grasp it well,
  The wood elastic never breaks!
The time is near when from the dell
  The prisoned arrow motion takes.

Then woe betide the luckless wight
  Who would oppose its fearless course!
The day has dawned to shame the night,
  The night of error and of force.

Here Justice holds her scales abeam,
  And Reason grasps the equal poise,
To weigh ambition's fitful dream
  Against the hearth's domestic joys.

Man to his fullest stature springs,
  Complete, self-confident, and strong,
No longer slave to tyrant kings,
  Nor mythic monsters' cruel wrong.

Ages to come shall bless the day!
  Shall bless these heroes of the strife,
That frees from superstition's sway,
  Renewing freedom's precious life.

The plastic forces yield and build
  Secure and firm foundations strong,
Where the iconoclast has killed
  The priest in temples of the wrong.

The glowing conflagration sweeps
  In living flames across the sky,
Where 'mid old error's musty heaps
  The dead in dust and ashes lie!

ISAAC A. POOL.

IT was one of the good little boys from a Sunday-school near Boston who gave to the verse taught by his teacher: "Behold, a greater than Solomon is here!" this interpretation: "Hold a grater to Solomon's ear!" When at a loss to giv the answer "Cain" to a question relativ to that individual, the teacher, to jog his memory, asked, "What does a man walk with?" Quick as a flash came the reply: "A woman."

Dr. Sunderland's Last and Greatest Work.

IDEOLOGY: Mental Anæsthesia Self-Induced; Miraculous Cures Self-Made; Involution and Evolution in the Human Mind as in the Whole of Things. By Dr. Laroy Sunderland, Foundation Fellow of the Society of Science, Literature, and Art, London. Two volumes in one, price $1.50. For sale at this office.

I hav read Mr. Sunderland's book, Ideology, with a far more than ordinary interest, because of the connection of the phenomena called Spiritual with the phenomena he calls "Ideology."

I think no one can read the two volumes and not see their close connection and relationship. He proves beyond dispute that trances, somnambulism, mesmeric sleep, revival epidemics, prayer, faith and mind-cures, as well as all kinds of similar conditions, come, not through the influence of others, but are self-induced through the power of the mind and imagination.

We all know fear will kill both animals and men, even when nothing really harms them. The idea kills. The thoughts will turn the hair white in an hour if one is sufficiently shocked by some terrible fear or terror. He shows that witchcraft, the jerks, and all such phenomena are mental; that the victim, through belief—through "ideas"—is self-influenced. If thoroughly believing he is bitten by a mad dog or a rattlesnake, the idea will often giv him all the symptoms that a real bite would do. The thousands of experimental tests made by Dr. Sunderland in removing tumors, drawing teeth, and performing other surgical operations upon people while under the influence of the idea that they were rendered by him pain-proof, are proof conclusiv that it is a real fact that, once thoroughly dominated by the idea that you will liv or die, be pained or pleased, the result inevitably follows. He shows that where a patient thought she was inhaling gas it had the same influence as if she had really taken it. The expectation induced the conditions.

The lunatic who thinks he is changed into a glass is for the time, to all intents and purposes, as much glass, so far as the feelings and fancy are concerned, as if he were so.

If the article in the book relating to James Collins be a real fact (and I see no reason to doubt the authorities), it proves clairvoyance under certain conditions to be a fact. Not that the mind leaves the body and wanders around loose all by itself, but that the special senses become so abnormal and acute that seeing and hearing may be extended far away from the individual. The boy James thus describes it: "Ever since I was sick I hav felt as if there was a kind of atmosphere about me extending to a very great distance, growing thinner and thinner near the edges. Beyond it I can't see anything more than anyone else can, but the moment anybody comes into my circle, I see him as clearly as though I had my very eyes on him and was standing right by him."

I hope you will all read this book, and as you read you will be convinced that all phenomena is of and through the living, and not the dead—that we only want sufficient investigation to prove that mediums, ghosts, and materialized forms are all ideas in the mind of the one who sees them as such.

Mr. Sunderland does not deny phenomena, he only denies that a medium can bring up the dead form of your friend or relativ. If the form comes, it is generated in your own mind. Your belief that the medium has this power creates the form in and through your idea. He says: "Nature's order is constant. There is no such thing as chance; all is the sequence of cause and effect in a chain, no link of which has or ever will be broken." This book is the good doctor's legacy to the world. I hope, trust, and believe it will be read, appreciated, and discussed, and the good truths of ideology be made wide-spreading and all-convincing. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

Snowville, Va.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY

BETTER THAN

Eternal Punishment.

BY M. BABCOCK

The subjects discussed in this finely-printed pamphlet are, besides the title above given, Satan and Hades, Some Reasons Why I am Not a Christian, Divinity of the Bible, Theological Logic, Preachers are Not Honest, Preachers Sometimes Differ, Infant Damnation, Prayer, The Cloak of Charity, The Clergy were Afraid, No Fear of Being Damned, But What are We to Do? But Why Should I Be Damned? Why Not Pray for the Damned? Conclusion.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl, New York.

ALL in a LIFETIME.

A ROMANCE.

BY MISS SUSAN H. WIXON.

"The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks. . . . But what pleased me most in this charming story was the unflinching honesty with which its author holds up to the derision of the world the rottenness of average ministerial character, particularly that of revivalist type. I hav not space here to treat, in detail, of the characters of this truly absorbing novel. Suffice it to say that it is safe to predict that anyone who reads its first chapters will be loth to lay it down till the denouement is reached. Miss Wixon has long been doing a noble work in educating our children into the ranks of true Liberalism, thereby robbing the church of hundreds of those who, in after years, might hav become its willing dupes and servil tools, and she certainly deserves the generous and substantial recognition of all Freethinkers. Let everyone send for a copy of 'All in a Lifetime.' It will yield a liberal reward for the outlay."

ELLIOTT PRESTON.

Price, $1.50. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA.

INCLUDING

Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.

Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote; five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR the YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," presenting the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10c.; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29. 1883," 10 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.

The Greatest of all Anti-theological Works

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

WAIFS AND WANDERINGS

A NEW AMERICAN STORY,

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

AUTHOR OF

"GOLDEN THRONE," "PROMETHEUS," "INGERSOLL AND JESUS," ETC.

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cts.

"A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day.—John Swinton's Paper.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 CLINTON PLACE, NEW YORK.

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT

A HISTORICAL SKETCH.

By G. F. RINEHART. Price 25 cts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

Freethinkers will find this, for an outline history, the best for their use, as Professor Cottinger is a Freethinker, and in his reports of the church's actions has stated facts with a truthful freedom not found in ordinary histories. He dates his work from the beginning of historical certainty and not from the mythical Eden, as do most "universal" historians, and brings it down to 1883, with a brief mention of subsequent important inventions and discoveries.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Marriage and Divorce.

By R. D. Westbrook, D D. LL.B,
Author of "The Bible—Whence and What?"

CONTENTS:

The True Ideal of Marriage.
Free Love.
The History of Marriage.
The Old Testament Divorce Law.
The New Testament on Divorce.
Divorce as a Question of Law and Religion.
Rational Deductions from Established Principles;
Objections to Liberal Divorce Laws Answered.
Prevention Better than Cure.

Price, 50 cents. Neatly bound in cloth. For sale at this office.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

A COMMON SENSE

GUIDE TO CORRECT ENGLISH;

IN WHICH THE

DECLENSION OF THE NOUN

AND THE

CONJUGATION OF THE VERB

Are superseded by a few simple rules; and comprising the most rational and progressiv views of the best grammarians of the 19th century.

By J. L. BARKER,
Author of "An Improvement on I. J. Morris's Grammar."

PRICE, - - - - 35 CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."

Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth

TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price, $2. 33 Clinton Place, New York

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. McDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By WILLIAM McDONNELL, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages, $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

MONKS, POPES,
AND
THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.
Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

A NEW BOOK!
By Andrew Jackson Davis
entitled
Beyond the Valley
a sequel to the
MAGIC STAFF
An Autobiography of
Andrew Jackson Davis.
Six Illustrations Picturing what Mr. Davis says he has seen.

"Beyond the Valley" is a record of events and scenes in his private and public career, beginning where the Magic Staff ends, and bringing his psychological and private experiences truthfully up to the present day. This attractive volume will interest thousands who hav never read his preceding works. It will answer the ever-recurring questions concerning remarkable events in Mr. Davis's private life, and fully explains his various public labors for mankind.

"Beyond the Valley" is a companion volume to the "Magic Staff," and resembles it in style of workmanship—in paper, press-work, binding, etc. 408 pages. Price, $1.50.
For Sale by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORKS OF DR. W. F. EVANS.

The Primitiv Mind-Cure. The Nature and Power of Faith; or, Elementary Lessons in Transcendental Medicin. This work is a complete exposition of principles underlying the system of mental healing. It contains a full course of instruction in the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure. Price $1.50.

The Divine Law of Cure. A standard work on the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure, a reliable text-book in all the schools of mental healing. No work has ever been written of more practical value to physicians of all schools. The book is the result of the extensiv learning and research of the author, and exhibits a familiarity with the literature of the subject. It is profoundly religious without being offensivly dogmatic. It has been received with universal favor by all who are seeking light on the subject on which it treats—the cure of disease in ourselvs and others by mental and spiritual agencies. Price $1.50.

Mental Medicin. A Theoretical and Practical Treatis on Medical Psychology. This book contains a full exposition of the nature and laws of magnetism, and its application to the cure of disease. Price $1.25.

Soul and Body; or, The Spiritual Science of Health and Disease. Price $1.00.

The Mental Cure, illustrating the Influence of the Mind on the Body both in Health and Disease, and the Psychological Method of Treatment. Price $1.50.

All the above books sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy
A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.
Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
Author of "Promethens," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."
A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.
PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

TRAVELS IN FAITH,
From Tradition to Reason.
BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.
Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,
WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

Man. Whence and Whither.
By R. B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,
Author of "The Bible.—Whence and What?
About all that can be said for the existence of God and the future life of man, is here pungently presented, with an incidental discussion of many collateral questions, from a rationalistic standpoint.
1 vol, cloth. Price, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

St. Matthew Before the Court on a Charge of Forgery.

BY SECULARIST.

Price, 10 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TO APPEAR IMMEDIATELY.
MOSES BEFORE THE COURT.
By the same Author.

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the BibleExposed.
BY O. B. WHITFORD. M.D.
Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.

SECOND EDITION.

Price, 25 Cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY
John R. Kelso, A.M.

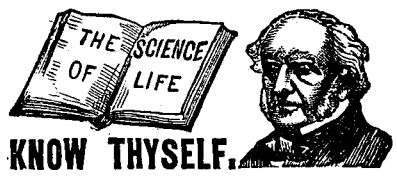
CONTENTS:
The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.
Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.



The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
POPULAR JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.

Headquarters for Fine Goods in the line of Genuin Diamonds; Fine Gold and Silver Watches; Chains; Bracelets; Wedding and Presentation Rings; Jewelry of Latest style; Gold Pens; Silverware; Optical and Fancy Goods; 3 ounce Coin Silver Elgin Watch, $10; 4 ounce, Full Jeweled, Adjusted Pat. Regulator Stem Wind, $22; this same, fine movement, in best gold filled case, $35; with cheap movement, $25. Ladies' Solid Gold Elgin stem wind watches, $20, $24, and $32—14 karat, upward. Watches cleaned, finest work in the world, $1. Springs, $1, and returned per. reg. mail or ex., paid one way. Work for the trade at reduced rates and agents sending work once a week from every state in the Union are making lots of money. Best spectacles in the world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back on demand. Try me! OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Patentee of Wettstein's New Freethought Badge. The most beautiful badge ever placed upon the market. Immense sale. Elegant present for Lady or Gent. Solid gold, $3; $3.50; extra heavy, $4; with diamond, artistically enameled, $10.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. ONLY $1.
BY MAIL POST-PAID.

KNOW THYSELF.
A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14 HEAL THYSELF is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y3

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Seven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.
3tf

WHY DON'T HE LEND A HAND?
AND OTHER POEMS.

By S. P. PUTNAM, Author of Ingersoll and Jesus, Prometheus, Golden Throne, Waifs and Wanderings, Problems of the Universe, etc.

CONTENTS: Why Don't He Lend a Hand? The Golden Age, The Ideal and the Real, Not Dead but Living, Fruition, Hope, Thomas Paine, Nature's Gospel, Address to Deity, Giv us Light (Holdreth's poem often recited by Charles Watts).

PRICE 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

IMMORTALITY INHERENT IN NATURE.
BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.
Price, 60 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

Gems of Thought.

MASTERS frightened slaves wi h the threat of hell, and slaves got a kind of shadowy revenge by whispering back the threat. The imprisoned imagined a hell for their jailers; the weak built this place for the strong; the arrogant for their rivals; the vanquished for their victors; the priest for the thinker; religion for reason; superstition for science. All the meanness, all the revenge, all the selfishness, all the cruelty, all the hatred, all the infamy of which the heart of man is capable, grew, blossomed, and bore fruit in this one word—hell. For the nourishment of this dogma, cruelty was soil, ignorance was r in, and fear was light.—R. G. Ingersoll.

STOPFORD BROOKE declares that many people hav been driven to vice by fearful pictures of the tossing flames of the brimstone lake, and I remember hearing a Jesuit father harang on the bottomless pit, declaring that he saw it actually before him—an extravagance which would inevitably lessen some hearers' confidence in future judgment. Better, as Ephraim Peabody used to say, undertake a little than disgust by gross exaggeration, showing your cause to be a weak one at the best.—Christian Register (Sept. 7, 1882).

IT is not a little strange that our strong desire that a certain occurrence should happen should be put forward as evidence that it will happen. If my intense desire to see the friend from whom I hav parted does not bring him from the other side of the world, or take me thither; if the mother's agonized prayer that her child should liv has not prevented him from dying, experience certainly affords no presumption that the strong desire to be alive after death, which we call aspiration after immortality, is any more likely to be gratified. As Hume truly says, "All doctrins are to be suspected which are favored by our passions," and the doctrin that we are immortal, because we should extremely like to be so, contains the quintessence of suspiciousness.—Huxley's Hume.

ON a visit to his nativ town of Lichfield, long after the hard struggle for fame and fortune was over, Dr. Johnson was missed one morning at breakfast, and did not return till supper-time. Then he told how his time had been passed. On that day, fifty years before, his father, confined by illness, had begged him to take his place to sell books at a stall at Uttexeter. Pride made young Johnson refuse. "To do away with the sin of this disobedience, I this day went in a postchaise to Uttexeter, and, going into the market at time of high business, uncovered my head, and stood with it bare an hour before the stall which my father had formerly used, exposed to the sneers of the standers-by, and the inclemency of the weather, a penance by which, I trust, I hav propitiated heaven for this only instance of contumacy to my father." If the anecdote illustrates the touch of superstition in Johnson's mind, it reveals, too, that sacred depth of tenderness which ennobled his character. No repentance can ever wipe out the past, or make it as though it had not been, but the remorse of a fine character may be transmuted into a permanent source of noble views of life and the world.—Leslie Stephen's Johnson.

ASTRONOMY has put to shame the superb conceit which could fancy this little world the center of the universe, for the convenience of which all things were created, and for the glory of which all is to be sacrificed. The almost utter insignificance of our earth among the myriads of heavenly bodies to which it is as a grain of sand upon the sea-shore makes the human mind realize the littleness of its individual existence, and develops in it some conception of the infinitude of space and time. The discovery of the laws of the indestructibility of matter, and the correlation and conservation of physical forces, hav given a new aspect to speculation, and, in some measure, reacted upon every domain of thought. . . The study of comparativ religion is forcing upon Europe the unwelcome truth that Christianity is but one, and that the youngest, of the great religions of the world, and that its origin can be explained only in accordance with the laws that explain the rise and growth of its great sister religions. Biblical criticism has already established the impossibility of an infallible book, and places the Hebrew scriptures along with the historical writings and religious literature of the past.—Frank Gould (Christian Register, Aug. 31, 1882).

THE more exquisit any good is, of which a small specimen is afforded us, the sharper the evil allied to it, and few exceptions are found to this uniform law of nature. The most sprightly wit borders on madness; the highest effusions of joy produce the deepest melancholy; the most ravishing pleasures are attended with the most cruel lassitude and disgust; the most flattering hopes make way for the severest disappointment. And, in general, no course of life has such safety (for happiness is not to be dreamed of) as the temperate and moderate, which maintains, as far as possible, a mediocrity, and a kind of insensibility in everything.—Hume's Natural History of Religion.

FAIREST flower, behold the lily,
Blooming in the sunny ray,
Let the blast sweep o'er the valley,
See it prostrate on the clay!
Dearly bought, the hidden treasure
Finer feelings can bestow,
Chords that vibrate sweetest pleasure
Thrill the deepest notes of woe.—Burns.

WE are perpetually reminded of the evils produced by wealth, and the sinful love of money; and yet assuredly no other passion, except the love of knowledge, bas been productiv of equal benefit to mankind. To it we owe all commerce and industry; industrial undertakings and trade hav made us acquainted with the productions of many countries, hav aroused our curiosity, enlarged the field of our vision by bringing us in contact with nations of various ideas, customs, and languages, accustomed us to vast undertakings, to foresight and prudence, taught us, besides, many useful, technical crafts, and, lastly, endowed us wi h invaluable means for the preservation of life and the alleviation of suffering. All this we owe to the love of money. Could theology succeed in extirpating it, all their influences would cease, and we should, in a measure, relapse into barbarism.—Buckle's History of Civilization.

To the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York:

The Constitution of our State guarantees that "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State to all mankind." The general principle of American Government is equality of all men before the law. This, as Your Honorable Body is aware, involves the principle, already acknowledged in theory, of the Total Separation of Church and State. But Church and State are now practically united by the following statutes:

1. The law exempting Church Property from Taxation.
2. The laws appropriating Money from the Public Treasury for the support of Institutions founded and managed chiefly by Sectarian Denominations.
3. The law compelling the Observance of Sunday as a religious holy day.

The undersigned, Citizens of the State of New York, do therefore respectfully but earnestly petition Your Honorable Body to repeal all the laws or parts of laws of this State which are violations of the above principles. Our reasons for asking this are:

1. The Churches are voluntary associations properly to be supported by the voluntary contributions of their members. 2. The State is compulsory. Every citizen must pay taxes. And we submit that it is unjust to a large and growing body of voters to be compelled to pay for the support of Churches which they cannot conscientiously attend; for the hire of Ministers in our Legislature and Public Institutions, in whose doctrines they are unable to believe; and to observe as holy a day to them no more sacred than any other. We also submit that the exemption of Churches from taxation, the appropriation of money for the hire of Ministers and the support of Sectarian Institutions, and the Legal observance of Sunday as a holy day, are discriminations in favor of one form of religion, are abridgments of the free exercise of religious preferences, and are therefore unconstitutional.

NAMES.	RESIDENCE.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5	Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17	The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The National Liberal League,	28	The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41	The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45	Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50	Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55	Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62	Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65	A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69	1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardener,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,	Elizabeth Cady Stanton,	J. D. Shaw,

Gottlieb: His Life. A romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written by S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By Mrs. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Odds and Ends.

BOY (who does not appreciate sermons): "Well, I'd just like to know what preaching's for anyway?" Small sister: "Why, it's to giv the singers a rest."

"A BABY'S arms encircle the world," says the proverb man of the Merchant Traveler. We hav noticed that a baby usually gets the earth when its grandmother is around.

LANDLADY: "I wish to say that there will be dessert to-day for everybody. Those who hav paid their board bill will get pudding for dessert. Those who hav not will please desert the table."

THERE hav been answers to the conundrum, Why is a ship called she? We think the proper answer is, Because she is handsomest when she is well-rigged. Wives should cut this out and show it to their husbands.

A PARSON who went out to Congo
Told the heathen that they should not wrong go;—
But when dinner was ready
The priest was so deady
That, though there, he did not hear the gong go.

A WISCONSIN church picnic has been postponed five different times this summer on account of the weather, and yet some incredulous people do not believe that there is a wise, crime-preventing providence which ordains the kind of weather that is dispensed.

"TOMMY," exclaimed Mrs. Fogg, "don't you know it's Sunday? Don't you know that it is naughty to make a kite to-day?" "But, my dear," interposed Fogg, "don't you see he is making it with a religious paper?" "Oh!" said Mrs. Fogg, "I didn't notice that."

SAM JONES says: "One dollar that a boy sweats for is worth one hundred thousand dollars that any boy will win in a lottery." If Mr. Jones thinks a boy can win one hundred thousand dollars in a lottery without perspiring, he only exhibits his ignorance of how such institutions are managed.

"THERE is said to be joy in heaven when a city employer pays his head-tax," according to the Courier-Journal. If it is understood that heaven has a city government, and charges a head-tax, we fear that the cause of religion will suffer considerably among experienced tax-payers.—Puck.

"UNCLE JAMES," said a Boston young lady, who was spending a few days in the country, "is that chicken by the gate a Brahmin?" "No," replied Uncle James, "he's a Leghorn." "Why, certainly, to be sure!" said the young lady. "How stupid of me! I can see the horns on his ankles."

THE Boston Transcript says: "To listen to the marine lingo one hears in the street, one would think we were a nation of sailors." This is just where the Transcript is mistaken. From listening to the marine lingo one hears in the streets he would not think we were a nation of sailors—that is, if he knew a marlin spike from a knot-hole, he wouldn't.

THE Norristown Herald says: Mr. Berry Wall has become a financial wreck by squandering all his cash in pantaloons. He is said to hav owned five hundred pairs of these articles of wearing apparel at one time. He was certainly a pantalunatic, but apparently his trousers were not breeches of trust. It is such statements as these that make the failure of Mr. Wall the national calamity that it is.

"WELL, the fruit-crop might be set down as a total failure," said the superintendent of the largest fruit-canning factory in the state; "a total failure. you might call it." "That will almost close your establishment, then," said the visitor. "Oh, no, no," replied the superintendent. "On the contrary, we will hav to employ an additional force. Years when there is no fruit we turn our attention almost entirely to putting up jellies; and then, later on, if the potato-crop turns out as we expect, we will can about three million pounds of pears." And as the visitor, silent with the great awe that falls upon common people when they stand in the presence of genius, went softly out of the office, he saw a carload of hoofs and horns unloading at the doors of the jelly department.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 41. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, October 10, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

A STARVING laborer took three apples from a garden, and was sentenced by Bailie Hunter, of Dundee, Scotland, to forty days' imprisonment.

REV. JAMES G. TOWNSEND, for eighteen years a prominent Methodist clergyman of Buffalo, N. Y., resigned his pulpit on the 15th ult., because he could no longer adhere to the doctrin of eternal punishment.

FOUR French Canadians were recently overheard discussing the question whether or not Riel should be hanged. They were all old topers, and the unanimous opinion arrived at was that as the insurrection had been the means of raising the price of whisky ten cents per gallon the arch-rebel should be hanged.

MRS. ELLEN FOSTER, of Iowa, a lawyer, and one of the chief officers of the God-in-the-Constitution League, or F. F. F.'s, says: "Prohibition is but the first step toward ingrafting Christianity into the Constitution. We shall keep on until we hav all under the banner of Jesus." By Christianity these people mean doctrinal tests, a test oath, and disfranchisment for all not professing belief according to their standard.

THE Severn tunnel in England, four miles and a half long, was opened on September 5th. The distance was made by five carriages in eighteen minutes. It can scarcely be called one of the great tunnels. These are Mount Cenis, otherwise Frejus, about eight miles long, which took fourteen years to make; St. Gothard, nine miles long, which took eight years to make; and the recently finished (September, 1884) Arlberg, about six miles long, which took only two years to make.

CHRISTIANS with a little knowledge of medicin used to be in great demand as missionaries, but now doctors with a smattering of religion hav the call. The Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society advertises for "doctors who hav some regard for religion, or who would occasionally conduct religious services" in New Zealand. The advertiser says that the people of Wairarapu are prepared to give $1,500 "a year to a young medical man who has a character for piety, or even a regard for religion," and that he would be able to make $2,500 a year out of it.

A TRAMP applied for food at the house of a surburban agriculturist recently, and while he was eating the rations that had been furnished at his solicitation, he was asked, "Why do you not go to work?" "I hav looked for a place that would suit me," he replied, "but hav never found one." "Isn't there plenty of work at harvesting?" asked the interrogator. "Oh, yes," said the tramp, "plenty of it; but you see, sir, I want to find a vinyard where the man who goes in at the eleventh hour is the first to come out and draw a full day's wages. In the olden time they dealt fairly with a man. That is the revised edition treatment, and that is what I am looking for." At the close of the meal he started again in pursuit of that coveted agricultural opportunity.

AN agent of the Pall Mall Gazette, with a view of testing the true inwardness of prison life, caused himself to be committed to a London prison. He relates as follows the beneficent offices of the prison chaplain: "I had a visit from the chaplain after I had been in prison a day or two, and the interesting and edifying interview consisted of these questions, as nearly as I can remember: 'What is your name? What are you? What are you here for? Can you read and write? [Brilliant question to ask a man who had said he was a journalist.] What church hav you been in the habit of attending? What was your father? In how many days did God make the world? What did he do on the seventh day? How many commandments are there? On what mount were they given to Moses? What did our savior come into the world for?' After receiving my answer to the last the reverend gentleman remarked, 'Then how careful we ought to be to avoid sin,' took up his hat, said 'Good morning,' and the interview was at an end."

WHEREVER there is thoroughbred blood, whether in the trotting horse or mule, the animal is bettered by it. A Tennessee farmer says that from his experience a mule from a thoroughbred mare by a good jack will kill almost any other not similarly bred, if the latter is forced to keep up and do the same amount of work. A gentleman in Davidson county once put a thoroughbred horse to the plow to test his endurance in competition with a number of ordinary mules. The day was terribly hot, and the soil deep and heavy. When the mules became exhausted and had to be rested and watered, the horse, though reeking with sweat, did not blow a particle, but went on drawing his plow without the least sign of fatigue.

IN answer to a correspondent the World givs a new version of the life and death of Thomas Paine. We commend it to the notice of the religious press: "Thomas Paine died as he lived—a devout and religious man. He was an Infidel—if an Infidel is one who declines to accept a certain creed as divine and to declare all others diabolic; but no man since the early Greeks had a firmer faith in God as a father in heaven, and none since Paul had a firmer faith in the immortality of the soul. He repudiated the early Judaic conception of God as unworthy and the defenders of that conception spat upon him. Read his will (in which he bequeaths his soul to God, his father, and his writings to his countrymen), and you will see that he was the founder of Unitarianism in this country, no more likely to change his views on his deathbed than his successor, the late Rev. Dr. Bellows."

A MINISTER of the gospel in one of the counties in middle Tennessee, bordering on the Cumberland range, thought that he would try one of the Rev. Sam Jones's dodges on his congregation, and see how it would work. He had seen the Rev. Sam use it with wonderful effect, and he could see no good reason why it should not prove equally as effectiv with him, and he was badly in need of a mucilage of some sort to make his hearers stick until he could reach the "lastly." On the occasion referred to, he ascended the platform as usual, and, after the preliminary services, he slowly removed his glasses, and, glancing over his audience, remarked solemnly that he was going to deal in some plain, unvarnished gospel truths to-day, and would try, the Lord being willing and helping, to expose the hypocrisy of professing Christians; and if there were any person or persons present who did not want to hear it, they had an opportunity right then to "rack out." To his utter surprise and consternation the congregation arose as one man, and "racked."—Nashville American.

IT is rather mean in Jeff Davis to come out in a letter and deny that romantic story of his capture. It has stood for twenty years, with such embellishments as time has given it, and it was just about to assume a shape which would make it as nice reading for the young as the Washington hatchet story, or the one about ringing the old liberty bell, or the thrilling incident in the life of William Tell, when he shot the apple instead of his boy. One by one these pretty stories hav been torn into pieces. Instead of being a boy who could not tell a lie, Washington could swear a big round oath, if he felt so disposed. He did not cut down his father's cherry-tree, because his father had none to cut down. The old man did not wait breathlessly to ring the liberty throughout all the land at a given sign from the little boy. "Ring! grandpa, ring!" was a nice cry, but it had its existence in the brain of some romantic writer, and if there ever was a William Tell, he did not perform a Buffalo Bill feat with a bow and arrow. And now Jeff Davis says he was not trying to deceive the Yanks into the belief that he had become a woman, by rigging himself in the wearing apparel of the opposit sex. The story about the petticoat, and calico wrapper, and straw bonnet, and army boots, he pronounces purely fictitious from beginning to end. He ought to hav kept still and allowed the historians of the future to quarrel over the correctness of the great incident which happened at the close of the war.

THE amount of real property exempted from taxation in this city is increasing rapidly, says the New York Tribune. A report from the tax department shows that the assessed value of such property is now $265,000,000. A similar report a few years ago placed the amount at $205,000,000. These statements, of course, include the property of the city, which is valued at $178,894,060, exclusiv of its interest in the Brooklyn bridge. In ten years there has been an increase of $18,000,000 in the assessed value of exempted church property, while in that owned by schools, asylums, libraries, etc., the increase has been $19,000,000. It is a good thing for the city to promote intelligence, morality, charity, and virtue by exempting property from taxation, but in doing so care should be used to see that no injustice is done to taxpayers. The matter is one that should be governed by general instead of special laws. The Tribune is right, says the Banner of Light. Let us hav general laws, by all means, in regard to taxation. Church property exemption has of late years resulted in immense speculations in real estate.

THE Rev. E. G. Gange, speaking at Bristol the other night, said he believed in careful preparation at home of sermons for the Sunday, instead of "gadding about from house to house visiting." In his early career he was earnestly requested by a deacon to visit a member of the congregation who was very ill, and it was suggested that he should call at 11 o'clock in the morning. He did so, and found the poor woman very much better, but greatly put out at his visit, as she had her hair in curl paper, her sleeves tucked up to her elbows, and was doing a bit of household sweeping and dusting. He begged her not to mind him, as he was "used to that sort of thing." He would hav a short prayer—he would not be long; they knew he never was long about anything. He selected a chair and knelt down; she selected another, and he began the prayer. He heard the door opened once; he heard it opened a second time. He concluded an earnest prayer on the poor woman's behalf, and on looking round—lo! a perfect transformation. While he was praying she had slipped up to her bedroom, washed her hands and face, curled her hair, changed her attire, and there she was in her very best silk, fittingly prepared to receive company, while he had been praying among the empty chairs.

A LONDON dispatch to the Mail and Express of this city says: "The revelations concerning immorality in English society were thought to hav attained their climax in Stead's threat to expose the names of high personages who, he alleges, are implicated in the matters disclosed by the Pall Mall Gazette, but while the editor and his accomplices are still awaiting trial the country is shocked by further developments of social crime which are astonishing in their fulness and directness, and in the character of the persons involved in them. The scene of this latest scandal is Brighton, and Brighton circles are scandalized and indignant beyond measure over the sudden discovery of the most unexpected state of affairs among them. A clergyman has disappeared in a mysterious manner, and has been found to hav run away secretly to avoid the consequences of his acts. He had tampered with the finances of his congregation, applying to his own uses the money intrusted to him. The uses to which he put this dishonestly acquired means seem to hav been the most disreputable. Since his disappearance the proprietors of a disorderly house aver that the clergyman had an account steadily with them which he has not settled. After the departure of this man the curate of another church levanted under a similar pressure of circumstances. The eyes of the community being thus opened to the true condition of things in their religious bodies, fearful immorality has been discovered to be in existence there, surpassing in depravity anything told in the disclosures made by the Pall Mall Gazette. Many domestic circles are enshrouded with gloom and overwhelmed with shame by the despicable excesses of this wolf in sheep's clothing, and his behavior is described as having been of the vilest sort, and almost incredible in the length to which he went in his debaucheries."

News of the Week.

THE Grant monument fund is now about $85,000.

BOSTON reports an increase in population of 27,870 since 1880.

THE Chicago baseball club captured the championship this season.

GEORGE O. JONES is the Greenback-Labor candidate for governor of New York.

IT is reported that boycotting in Ireland will be checked under the law against conspiracy.

THE Mormon church has recently sent missionaries to India, but their efforts there hav proved an utter failure.

GEORGE BANCROFT, the historian, celebrated his eighty-fifth birthday last Sunday. He is still vigorous and in good health.

THE American Institute Fair opened here on Wednesday of last week. The exhibit is said to be more than ordinarily attractiv.

THE Salt Lake court sentenced Edward Brain, polygamist, to six months in jail and to pay a fine of $300 for unlawful cohabitation.

PALERMO, in Sicily, is stricken with the cholera plague. The inhabitants are fleeing, and inhabitants of other parts of the island flee from them.

THE wrecking of a circus train on the North Pacific Railroad, seven miles west of St. Paul, Minn., killed five men and injured thirty or forty more or less.

JOHN SHARP, a bishop of the Mormon church, and a director of the Union Pacific Railroad, was fined $300 at Salt Lake city on September 18th for illegal cohabitation.

THE pope of Rome has been chosen as referee between Germany and Spain in the Caroline Islands difficulty, and the matter will not be settled until his decision is rendered.

THERE is war between the Turks and the inhabitants of Albania, as the southwestern portion of European Turkey is called. In a recent engagement the Turks were defeated.

THERE are a few cases of small-pox in New York. Its origin here is unknown. At Montreal the scourge continues. There were nearly one thousand deaths during September.

THE English yacht Genesta, which came to America to win the international cup, will shortly return to England. She will not carry the cup, that prize being in the possession of the Yankee yacht Puritan.

THERE has been a sale of rare orchids in the city during the past week. Some of the plants sold as high as $900. The scientific interest which attaches to the orchid is supposed to make it valuable.

A TORNADO struck Westwood, N. J., last Sunday. It gathered up roofs of buildings in its course, lifting the village church thirty feet in the air and dropping it on its side a total wreck. It is not known that anyone was fatally injured.

A MAN and a woman shot themselvs to death near the statue of the Pilgrim in Central Park, this city, last Saturday evening. She was another man's wife, but becoming attached to each other, they mutually agreed that the only way out of their trouble was by suicide.

CANON FARRAR, a dignitary of the Church of England, preached at Baltimore on the 4th inst. He took for his text the aged chestnut, "Rejoice with me, for I hav found my sheep which was lost." The New York Sun refers to this man as Cannon Farrar, evidently under the belief that he is a big gun.

LAST week there was a violent row in a church on Staten Island; a Catholic priest decamped from Toledo, O., with $6,800, after having been unduly intimate with a woman, and a clergyman at Chester, Ill., was deposed for drunkenness. These things indicate that the fall campaign against Satan is about to open.

Communications.

The Reaction from Orthodoxy.

Diametrically opposit as orthodoxy and pessimism are in spirit and doctrin, they happen to agree in elevating individual man to supreme importance. In one he is the chief of the universe, the special object of creation; in the other he is the latest, but worst, product of evolution, the most signal and distressing failure to which the innumerable ages hav given birth. In one he is born for happiness, however he may go astray; in the other he is fated to be miserable under any and all circumstances. There his salvation, except in Calvinism, is made to depend on himself; here his fortune, struggle as he may to alter it, leads inevitably to misery. Orthodoxy is obliged to admit that, in this world, things are apt to go wrong; that the best and most faithful Christians often suffer bitterly, while sinners prosper and seem to be content. But orthodoxy, instead of confining itself to this world, proclaims and describes another world, where all the ills of this one shall be compensated, where the mysteries and apparent contradictions of time shall be explained and reconciled. If it did so confine itself, the pessimists, who are hostil to it as the most confident and unreasonable form of optimism, might get the better of it, both in logic and by arguments drawn from actual observation. They are savage against it. They call Christianity the evolution of superstition, worse in many respects than the older creeds from which it has been borrowed, more transparently inconsistent and absurd than various forms of paganism. Looking at it as respects this life, they arraign it rigorously. They declare that there can be no genuin content, much less happiness, in a condition where life is always uncertain, where any pleasure, pursuit, or purpose may be terminated by death, whose baleful shadow darkens and blights every form of existence. And on what terms do the great majority of men hav life? Ninety-nine out of a hundred are compelled to toil without any rational prospect of reward or permanent rest. They work, and fret, and struggle merely to keep breath in their bodies. At the close of the day they are so tired that they lie down to sleep, and rise the next morning to work, and fret, and struggle again; thus verifying the myth of Sisyphus and his labors. In addition to work and worry, there is sickness, sorrow, disappointment, defeat, every kind of woe and pain. No one can escape these: they inhere in human nature and human destiny. Life is not a boon, it is mordant irony to call it such; it is a curse, greater or less, according to circumstances, yet always and irredeemably a curse. Life is not worth having at the very best, as but one in ten thousand may hav it, and life, as ordinarily held, is miserable indeed, but, at best or worst, is not desirable. Nonexistence is preferable to existence under the most favorable conditions.

The orthodox do not and will not concede all this, of course. Much of it they would account as blasphemous, because impeaching the wisdom and goodness of God. They will concede, however, as they must, that there is a great deal of sorrow and suffering in the world, which they explain by the presence of sin, original and actual. Men, they assert, are sinners not individually alone, but also by inheritance from the transgressions of the first pair; their will having no relation to this inherited sin. From original sin evil entered the world, and is allowed by the divine will, while actual sin is the consequence of the wickedness of mankind, who hav set their hearts against God. While learned theologians hav tried through generations to elucidate the knotty questions ever arising about human misery and pain, as often endured by the righteous as the unrighteous, the laity generally content themselvs with the iteration that the ways of providence are inscrutable, and there let the matter rest. In regard to the unequal distribution of the gifts of fortune, and the manifest injustice of things here, reference is usually made to the hereafter. They who complain and rebel are reminded that eternity will rectify the seeming wrongs of time; that man has an immortal soul; that the faithful and the pious, if they suffer in the flesh, will be recompensed in the spirit; that God cares for the humblest, and will ultimately accord to each his due, and, besides, be merciful to all.

Toward this attitude of the orthodox the pessimist is altogether intolerant and condemnatory. He denies that there is, in a philosophic sense, any such thing as sin. The doctrin of original sin he derides as a patristic imbecility; a morbid concoction of monkish brains; a legitimate outcome of maceration of the flesh and stupefaction of the understanding. The story of the Garden of Eden he pronounces the flimsiest of fables, as is, in truth, the entire scheme of salvation. He wonders that, while they were inventing, they did not invent something less grotesque and contradictory. He puts it thus: God created Adam and Eve, knowing, inasmuch as he had prescience, that they would sin, and then damns them for sinning; in other words, for executing his will. He would hav doomed the entire race had not his only son—himself—consented to die as a mediator between mankind and his father. The son perished on the cross to save sinners who had sinned in fulfilment of the divine law, and whom he does not and cannot save, since, according to the Bible, they must save themselvs by faith and good works. But if Christ had not died, everybody would hav been damned. His death simply gave the sons of men an opportunity for self-salvation. What must be thought of such a God or such a father? And yet he is the being we are commanded and expected to honor and to love!

If there be a God, continues the pessimist, without fear or reverence, he could not be such a God; for God means good, and a God of this sort would be a monster of evil. He had, as the scriptures and theologians say, no need to create man, the world, or the universe, being absolutely independent, free, omnipotent, sufficient to himself. Having deliberately and voluntarily chosen, therefore, to create man, it must hav been for the satisfaction of damning him, which damnation, owing to the interposition of his only begotten son, will be but partially carried out. If the ways of providence be inscrutable, why do theologians assume to teach the laity anything relativ to subjects they consider divine? Why do they not acknowledge them to be mysterious, unintelligible, unknowable? Why do they attempt to explain what they virtually allow to be inexplicable? Let each man form, as he really must, his own ideas of deity, and let them abstain from dogmatizing on the incomprehensible.

As to the hereafter, the pessimist goes on, we neither know, nor can know, the least thing. The commonest bumpkin is as wise about that as the profoundest philosopher, and both are totally ignorant. The rectification by eternity of the wrongs of time is simple assertion, evangelic babble, wordy nonsense. Views of the soul are merely speculativ. No one can tell what soul is: it is the figment of a dream; any and every idea of it is subjectiv. Theologians are continually averring that immortality of the soul has been believed in all ages and by all peoples, whether civilized or barbarous, and they put this forward as an irrefutable argument. But the averment is not true. Some of the most widely diffused creeds, like Brahmanism and Buddhism, from which Christianity is largely derived, contain no such doctrin—at least as presented by the orthodox. Every faithful Brahman looks forward to absorption in the universal spirit, to loss of his individuality and consciousness, as his future reward; and the pious Buddhist yearns and strives for Nirvana, or complete extinction. The old Egyptian, Persian, and Greek religions regarded immortality very differently from what Christians regard it. The continuation of the soul after death was with the ancients very vague, and denoted in Materialistic phases. Even the orthodox hav recently changed their method of portraying heaven and the diversions of the blessed. We hear no more of the gold-paved streets of the celestial city, of the long robes and harps of the saved spirits, incessantly engaged in chanting the praises of the Lord, who, for a Supreme Being, must be inconceivably vain, and insatiably fond of the grossest flattery. We are seldom told to-day of the resurrection of the body, on which professors of divinity were so wont to insist that it might hav been thought that they attached as much consequence to the body as did the Egyptians, with their sarcophagi and elaborate embalmings of the dead. The evolution of superstition still evolves. The orthodoxy of the last quarter of the nineteenth century would hav been the heterodoxy of the eighteenth, and the orthodoxy of the twentieth may be the rank Infidelity of the present.

Thus the pessimist speaks, and though he may shock the Christian, he is unconcerned therefor. He is equally unconcerned for the names—such as scoffer, Sadducee, Atheist, enemy of religion—that may be applied to him. He is not amiable: he does not consult the theologic feelings any more than he consults the theologic opinions of others. He believes what he professes as firmly, and perhaps more intensely, than do the orthodox, whom he, mentally, despises as much as they, morally, detest him. They are antipodes in creed; their divergence is about faith, which he disdains; trusting entirely, as he boasts, to observation and reason for his opinions. Nevertheless, they hav, as has been said, one point in common, the sovereignty of individual Man, whom they both consider as the thinking center of the solar system. Each regards the universe as it affects him, and judges of it accordingly. Each is saturated with an excessiv personality. Each is, in a way, a colossal egotist—one because he has formed a habit of putting himself foremost, the other because Christianity, particularly Protestantism, has taught the lesson of individualism. Before Christianity the mass of mankind amounted to nothing. They were slaves either actually or virtually; they lived, and labored, and endured for their masters, the great ones of the earth. They had no ambitions and no expectations; they were more than content if they got enough to eat, and were protected from the weather. They were little else than beasts of burden: they tilled the soil, which yielded them but an unknown grave.

Christianity wrought a revolution. Jesus was the first genuin democrat. He preached to the multitude; he appealed to the poor and the humble; his apostles were from the lowly. The rich and powerful found not favor in his eyes, unless they lowered their haughty crest and were sincerely repentant. All his associations were with the people. The eminent respected him therefor; they reckoned him a dangerous demagog, an enemy of their aristocratic laws, as a false prophet, and they put him to death. The New Testament may be designated as the epic of which Jesus is the hero. It is full of appeals to the great classes that hav always been unrecognized; it judges men by their honesty, their purity, their faith, and by these only. Even Catholicism, which was a later form of Christianity, stood, in the feudal times, between the grasping lords and the common people; stayed the smiting hand and the plundering horde. The Bible addresses itself to the individual, especially to the down-trodden, the persecuted, the friendless, the unfortunate in all ranks. The poorer, lowlier the man, if he be pious, the more acceptable he is in the sight of God. He cannot be too insignificant to be regarded with divine favor, to be near and dear to the Almighty. Even the hairs of his head, as the scriptures declare, are numbered; his lightest word, his smallest act, his most trivial thought, is considered so important as to be recorded above. There can be little doubt that, when Christianity first arose, its recognition of every human creature, its appeal to the humblest individual as a direct object of God's watchfulness, care, and love, exercised an immense influence toward conversion, particularly with those who, before, had had nothing to liv for, nothing to hope. The fiercest persecution, torture, and death could not deter them from embracing, but stimulated them to embrace, the new faith which had inspired them with a zeal hitherto unknown, and exalted them above themselvs. Persecution, torture, and death were transformed and glorified through martyrdom, which, they were taught to believe, delivered them from a world of trial, sin, and trouble to a world of eternal happiness. Thus martyrdom, in any form, became, to their teeming imagination, something to be coveted, to be prayed for, to be joyously endured. It was a dark and dreary portal, beyond which they saw, as they fancied, the celestial light, and heard the angelic choir. No wonder they endured with fortitude, and died with courage. They were doing for Jesus what Jesus had done for them. To be a martyr was clearly an advantage in every way. The path of martyrdom led direct to heaven.

In the latest centuries there has been no physical martyrdom. But Christianity still claims, though its claims are roundly disputed by logic and science, to giv, at least, resignation and mental peace to all men here, and unending happiness to them hereafter. It still offers, if in an altered and modified form, a conscious and blessed immortality, laying special stress on the consciousness. The orthodox often assert that, without consciousness, immortality would not be a true reward for pure faith and perfect living; that the loss of their identity would be a loss of satisfaction; that they must connect this world with the next to hav a full sense of salvation gained. Thus Christianity has, from the beginning, always addressed itself directly and continually to the ego in mankind, pampering it through time, and extending it to eternity. No other creed, not all the creeds together, hav, probably, had a tithe of the influence in arousing, supporting, and strengthening in the human breast self-consciousness, self-love, every shade and import of self. Christianity may be termed the theology of self; it inculcates self by teaching self-denial for the beatification of self. It begins, continues, and ends with the arousal and bestirment of the individual principle in man. All its doctrins bear upon the ego mediately or immediately. Its adherents are enjoined to avoid vice and follow virtue, because they will, in the long run, be better off by so doing. Duties to their fellows are substantially represented as final benefits to themselvs. Everlasting rewards, and everlasting punishments, are offered as the chief incentivs to do good and eschew evil. All orthodoxy is comprised in a kind of selfism. Intense personality runs entirely through the scriptures, and their varied, and often contradictory, interpretations. It is projected even to the deity, who is portrayed as personal, so that, as has been frequently said, instead of his making them after his image, they made him after their image. Christianity never rises above or goes beyond the conscious and the individual; and to this fact the great hold it has taken upon the multitude, notably in the past, must be attributed. Any religion that deals constantly with man's self-love, whether in a high or low form, must hav, for the many, perennial attractions.

Every human being, enlightened, semi-civilized, or barbarous, is naturally and necessarily selfish; otherwise the race would, ages ago, hav become extinct, or, properly speaking, hav ceased to evolve. But it is very questionable if those who esteem themselvs the enlightened would hav grown to be such extraordinary personalists and egotists had it not been for Christianity. This personality and egotism is now, no doubt, natural to the vast majority of men, however it may be with the thoughtful and the studious; but has it not become natural by centuries of consideration and cherishment of the feeling, and by force of long heredity? Has not belief in the perpetual preservation of individual identity after death had special and superlativ causation in this regard? It is hard, if not impossible, to determin what would hav been had something else not been; but it is reasonable to assume that but for the excessiv personality and selfism of Christianity, Christians would today be more reconciled to opinions and creeds indicating that humanity is a means, not an end; that the cosmic system does not depend on, and is not wholly adjusted to, a species sustained and made dominant thus far by a series of fortunate accidents. Any line of thought, any course of study, any pursuit of philosophy, any investigation of nature which diverges from the starting-point and termination of orthodoxy, and criticises the fervid personality of its tenets and conclusions, is in danger of unjust and bitter denunciation, of being branded with all manner of opprobrious names. Such vehemence and passion would denote that what should be the firm, unwavering faith of the orthodox is little different from personal feeling in respect of a personal religion. Notwithstanding the high morality, the beautiful lessons, the precious teachings, contained in the scriptures, it is impossible to hide their inculcation of selfism, which, even though regarded as spiritual, is selfism still. And innumerable commentaries, expoundings, and inferences by professional theologians, from the time of the fathers of the church to the last evangelical thesis, hav only rendered that principle more pervading and conspicuous. Any attempt, therefore, to remove or modify the extreme personality of Christianity, in its present and generally accepted form, would be destructiv of its integrity and its very foundation.

The latest presentment of pessimism is based on precisely the same consideration. Pessimism is older than orthodoxy, and has undergone even more changes; but Schopenhauer, not yet dead five-and-twenty years, is recognized as its modern master and interpreter. His philosophy is thought to hav mirrored his subjectiv experiences; but would it hav been fully formulated except for the irrational, wholly inconsistent, one-sided optimism of Christianity, as commonly expounded? He was a rude iconoclast; he fiercely attacked the principal contemporaneous thinkers of Germany, stigmatizing Hegel as a charlatan, and making will the source of all knowledge and achievement. Orthodoxy he disdained and detested, seldom referring to it; he regarded it as beneath notice, but its claims, often in his mind, provoked his most combativ moods. He looked at the world as the orthodox look at it, as it affects individual man, as it makes or mars his happiness. He also judges of it by the human standard, and by this alone. He does not wish nor care to regard it in any higher or broader relation; his towering egotism seeks to explain all that is worth explaining. He is as subjectiv as a devotee, as self-conscious as a saint. But he is far more reasonable; indeed, he is entirely reasonable, for he rejects and contemns any kind of faith. The orthodox hav recourse to the supernatural for their optimism, seeking to establish themselvs and their position on their acceptance of the Word. Whatever shows as unjust, or malignant, or cruel, they declare to be so only in appearance. Positing that God is good, wise, just, and merciful, they stubbornly maintain that everything needlessly painful and terrible is a mystery which the great future will solve. Their optimism, founded not on facts, but often in opposition to facts, must be sustained by pure faith. Schopenhauer's philosophy, resting on observation, experience, argument, and limited by personality, tends spontaneously to pessimism. Without faith or without understanding of science, pessimism seems natural. To avoid that one must either believe or know; must take things for granted, or must study them conscientiously.

Schopenhauer's conclusions are that we should hope nothing, fear nothing, love nothing, expect nothing; that this is not only the worst possible world that has ever existed, but the worst possible world that could exist; that we should not be satisfied to commit suicide, we should extinguish the desire to liv; that there is no sort of compensation here or hereafter, and cannot be; that the only happy man is he who is unborn; that consciousness is always an unadulterated curse; that the so-called blessings of fortune are veiled evils, and will so reveal themselvs soon or late; that death is the sole rest, and oblivion the sole requital for labor done and suffering endured.

It might be thought that such dismal views must hav sprung from deformity, ill health, continued adversity—from an accumulation of woes. But they did not. Schopenhauer had a good constitution and a sound body; he inherited wealth; he studied, reflected, wrote, and lived beyond seventy-two. His works at first attracted no attention; they were not even abused. This may hav embittered him, but it did not shake his confidence in their merit and originality. What is neglected was, to his mind, a proof of excellence. During his last illness, he was asked where his remains should be placed. "Bury me where you may," was his proud answer, "posterity will find me." And the boast seems to hav been a prophecy. Of late years, his books hav been widely read and translated, and he is ranked by many as one of the greatest philosophers of Germany. His influence has been enormous, and is steadily growing. A movement is now on foot to erect a monument to his memory at Frankfurt-on-the-Main, and many nations, including America, hav contributed to it.

All this shows the rapid growth, at least among the unscientific, of individualism, of self-engrossment, of egotism, fostered and hightened by centuries of orthodoxy, with its dogmas of personal consequence and conscious immortality. It is perfectly logical to pronounce life unremunerativ, and the world profitless, if they are to be considered only from the point of selfism, and as they act on the individual man alone. A loftier view, a broader range, a more generous conception, is needed for our adjustment to the cosmos.

The loftier view is afforded by modern science, by Positivism, by the religion of humanity, of which Comte is held to be the founder. He was the herald and apostle of the new era, and Darwin is his continuator, confirmer, and advancer by his extraordinary investigations of nature, and the discovery of fresh truths that hav revolutionized contemporaneous thought. Comte maintains that the race as well as the individual passes through three stages—the theological, in which all phenomena are ascribed to supernatural causes; the metaphysical, in which the supernatural, as connected with sensible objects, is rejected, and an attempt made to prove the existence of abstract forces, presumed as inherent in substances, to produce phenomena; and the positiv, which discards theology and metaphysics as worthless, along with the inquiry after the causes and essence of things, and concerns itself with the observation and classification of phenomena as determining their laws. Orthodoxy deals with the theological; pessimism, particularly Schopenhauerism, with the metaphysical; rationalism and modern science, with positivism. Darwin has explained by evolution, of which he is the father, the diversities of life on this planet, and the common origin and physiologic kinship of all living things.

Science and modern thought do not regard this insignificant globe as the center of the solar system, nor man individually as the chief aim and end of creation. In truth, they discard the idea of creation for the reasonable scheme of development. Ignoring the supernatural, they cleave to the natural as the only apprehensible thing, as the source of all real knowledge. They embrace the universe, and count its growth by innumerable ages. They recognize the nebular hypothesis, suggested by Giordano Bruno, and definitly formulated by Immanuel Kant and Laplace, as a primary cosmic principle. They trace a direct connection between moneres and the brain of Shakspere, Newton, Emerson; they hav discovered that life is a property of matter; they perceive in everything movement, progress, law. Man as an individual is nothing more than an infinitesimal fragment of a gigantic whole, a grain of sand in Sahara, a drop in the ocean, a sprig in the illimitable mass of vegetation. Nature cares not for him; her concern, if she hav any, is for the race, its continuation and advance. What matchless effrontery for him to try to measure the cosmos by his relation to it, or by its relation to him! He is but a higher kind of molecule, an incalculably evolved atom! Why should he be constantly looking for his own image in externality? Why should he complain if he be not immortal?

There is dissolution as well as evolution, one being born of the other. All scientific deduction is that the time shall come when the earth shall be, like its satellite the moon, incapable of supporting any form of life, vegetable or animal; that even the sun itself will yet exhaust its combustibles, and that out of apparently universal extinction may arise a new vast rotating nebulous disk (as in Laplace's conception), from whose gradual contraction and consequent throwing off of rings, and breaking into globes revolving in the same direction, another solar system may be formed, with another development of man. True, that cannot be for millions and millions of centuries; but the mere possibility, the grandeur of the thought, ought to prevent us from pluming ourselvs on our significance, speculating why we are here or where we are going, and troubling our minds about either orthodoxy or pessimism. Both come from the same source, a superstition of egotism.

We know we are here, and the probability is that we shall, at death, be resolved into our original elements, without further consciousness, continuation, or identity. Shall we not liv again? What matters it? It often seems that those who hav lived best here care least about living hereafter. At any rate, neither our hopes nor our desires will be unavailing. The passion for conscious immortality will run its course; the feverish personality with which so many of us are afflicted, from the cause already named, must eventually be absorbed in loftier views and grander conceptions. The coming man will be, like the thinking individual to-day, cosmic, not tellurian.

JUNIUS HENRI BROWNE.

To the Chief of the Fishers of Souls.

Your forlorn Infallibility has often announced with a flourish of trumpets your purpose to leave Italy. This overture must hav met with an encouraging success, judging by the frequent encores of it.

Adieu blue sky of Italy, he sings, and he tarries to sing this ritournello.

Now, my good Joachim, let me giv you a bit of friendly advice. You hav excommunicated me, but I bear you no grudge. On the contrary, in the holy succession of Saint Peter, there was a certain Felix V. who will make a good model for you. As you are, all of you, infallible, you are sure that what he did was well done, and you may be certain, when you die, of going straight to heaven.

Now this is the record of No. 215, your illustrious predecessor, Felix V. A jovial pontiff he, and a practical man—not to say God. To him we owe the foundation of the monastery of Ripaille, of which he was the abbot before coiffing the tiara. He was also bishop of Lausanne and Geneva.

There were no bilious, peevish, grumbling monks in his convent, Joachim. They were all free livers, those brothers of Ripaille, genuin rip-snorters, and whose memory has endowed the French language with this classic term, which, at first merely a proper name, proves by the prophetic felicity of its derivation that language, like marriages, was made in heaven. Rheo, "I flow like a river," shows its vinous root, suggesting long-necked bottles; but paille is not the straw tied round them. It belongs to the family of paillard, paillardise; for What were Life worth, without Wine and Women?

These confessors of Ripaille improved their chances.

It was the ecumenical council of Bale that, in 1439, promoted Felix to the papal dignity, which he had never coveted, for the good man was not ambitious. The cardinals on that occasion showed their acumen; they could not hav unearthed a better pontiff. When he was led to recieve upon his brow the triple crown, he was as merry as a vine-thrush. There never was a gayer coronation.

It is edifying to read, in the old contemporary authors, how he administered Holy Mother Church. Long did Christendom bless this exemplary pontificate.

His first edict doubled the number of meals upon fast days. This decree, peremptory for the Vatican, elsewhere admitted of local option. He said, "Since God is our creator, he must rejoice to see his creatures having a good time." A cardinal one day reproached him for his slight acquaintance with theology. He replied, with divine logic, "The Holy Ghost is not an ass, is it? Well, it will inspire me. That is its business." His pontificate lasted ten years. At the end of that time, the party of growlers and crotchety cranks, the i dotters and t crossers, plagued him so much that he tossed up his tiara, gave it a kick, and returned to his beloved convent of Ripaille, where he died the year after, of an indigestion, Feb. 28, 1450.

Now, Joachim, I hav not written the foregoing to instil into your mind the treacherous counsel of eating too much. My solicitude is limited to your cheerfulness. You are too prone to catch trouble by the forelock. You dress the world in black. You spend your time in making bad bile, when, on the contrary, it would be very easy to paint life in rose color, after the excellent principles of your amiable predecessor, Felix V. You are the great chief of the fishers of men. It is true that of late the fish don't bite so fast as they used to. The sky is too clear, and, then, science, instead of fastening its electric lamp at the keel of your boat, has stuck it up out of the way, upon the lighthouse of the Polytechnic Institute.

You mourn the schools of gudgeons. They are not dead, but sleeping. If you worry so, you will turn as yellow as a lemon, Joachim. Consider, now; look around for some convent where the nuns hav been amiably trained by holy fathers. There are plenty such. And when you hav discovered another Ripaille, worthy to call the patriarch Noah its patron saint, and the holy Magdalen its patroness, retire thither in peace from care, and end your days at a collation of exquisit bottles, with a bevy of frisky nuns for your Hebes. Finish the series of popes by reëditing Felix V. Then you will bury the institution of the Holy Chair in a fashion that may leave some regrets, and history will write upon your tomb, "He knew enough to stop grumbling, and made a merry end of a bad job."

If, on the contrary, you do not listen to me, Joachim, I prophesy that your idiotic jeremiads will cover your memory with ridicule. Your compeers, one after another, will giv you the slip; even the beadles will twit you with their thumbs at their noses, and posterity will say: "Pio Nono was a famous scoundrel, but Leo XIII. was a fool."—From the French of Leo Taxil.

The National Liberal League.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

CHARLES WATTS, First Vice-President. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Secretary, 33 Clinton Pl., New York

COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

The League Congress, October 9th, 10th, 11th.

The program, as published last week, will be carried out with two exceptions. All sessions of the Congress, including Colonel Ingersoll's lecture, will be held at Cleveland, Ohio, in the PEOPLE'S THEATER, ON EUCLID AVENUE.

Colonel Ingersoll's lecture on Sunday evening, at 8 o'clock, will be about

MYTH AND MIRACLE.

Morning sessions begin at ten o'clock; afternoon sessions at 3:30; evening at 8.

James Ormsby will represent the Milwaukee, Wis., League in the Ninth Annual Congress.

The Newark, N. J., Liberal League will be represented by E. M. Macdonald. The New York Society of Humanity by C. P. Somerby, and the Liberal Club by Mr. Center.

THE TRUTH SEEKER will hav a full line of books at the League Congress, and friends desirous of securing good reading can make purchases there. It will also be a convenient time for renewing subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER. Any of the delegates and attendants not now subscribers are cordially invited to rectify their error. THE TRUTH SEEKER will make a full report of the work of the League at this Congress. Orders for copies containing the report may be handed to the Editor or Business Manager at the Congress, or sent direct to the office.

The Work in Alliance, Ohio.

Sunday, September 21st, was a gala day for your correspondent, the wandering pilgrim of the Secular cause. In the morning he attended the Children's Lyceum at the Independent church, and found quite a delightful company of old and young gathered together for Secular amusement and instruction, and it must be known that no man or woman can be instructed until they are first of all amused. The gratification of the play impulse is the beginning of all wisdom.

This Lyceum is under the superintendency of George W. Thornberg, and we all know what a good worker he is, and his ability for interesting the youthful mind, as well as children of a larger growth. Aided by his wife and others, he is doing much to advance our cause in this quite Liberal community of Alliance. In the first place in the order of exercises there is music, vocal and instrumental, then graceful gymnastic movements, in which all join; then recitations and mottoes, singing, classes of instruction in science, history, politics, etc. I hope the time will soon come when a thousand cities and villages in our land will hav the same means of Sunday entertainment and social growth. Then, indeed, shall we see the beautiful flower of Liberalism, the sweetness and dignity it can put into human life, the nobleness of feeling and the excellence of thought.

In the afternoon C. B. Reynolds came vigorously to the "Defense of the Devil," and I must confess that he made quite a warm place in my heart for that dear old sinner. Considering all the circumstances—that he is the father of human knowledge, that he always spoke the truth, and generally respected the rights of others, and appealed to their reason by a process of wit rather than by brute force—it must be admitted that the devil has made the most of his opportunities, and has been a benefactor of man. He is not so black as the theologians paint him, even when we critically study the Bible itself. Theologians, of course, hate the devil professionally, but practically they stick to him like a brother, for without the devil their occupation is gone. Destroy his satanic majesty, and where oh, where, would be the donation visits, the collections, the snug parsonage, the fat salary, and the trips to Europe, to say nothing of Canada?

In the evening Reynolds discoursed of the heaven of the Bible, verse by verse, with all its imperfections on its head, and such a place of torment, especially for woman, was never before disclosed. Instead of being a place of rest for the weary, it only opens new avenues for toil. The music is by no means first-class, the company is not very good, the menagerie altogether too numerous and noisy, and the dishes, candlesticks, pans, etc., not altogether of the most artistic kind, and requiring too much trouble to be kept in order. The discourse was received with the heartiest applause by the audience from beginning to end. The lecturer closed with an eloquent peroration, depicting the real human heaven that we can hav here and now, by kindliness, by knowledge, by fellowship, and the spirit of progress.

Arthur Tilney's singing is admirable, and well adapted to the work in hand, touching as it does the fountains of romance and joy, with tender and humorous appeals to feeling. He is quite popular with his audiences, and is frequently recalled with enthusiastic plaudits.

When I looked at the big center-pole of this beautiful Tent, my back did ache as I pictured these two dauntless pioneers at work on a hot summer's day trying to lift its ponderous weight in air. How they do it is a mystery to me, but no miracle of course. It's simply muscle. The Tent makes a pretty picture, with its ornaments, etc., especially in the evening, and is quite a bright advertisment of the Liberal work, notably in small communities, where a Tent will create curiosity for miles around and eager questioning. Another year and this white signal of progress shall gem many a landscape and fill hearts with hope and scatter rays of knowledge.

I must speak of the Haines Juvenil Band, which discoursed sweet music Sunday evening. They—seven boys and girls—belong to one family and are thoroughly Infidel. The youngest is about four years old, I guess, or less, and the oldest about fourteen, and Apollo has breathed his genius upon them all. They are born playing some musical instrument, I believe, for they sound the cornet and the drum, etc., as if to do so were a part of their very being. Long life to this happy family, and may they pelt theology with music for many a day until its hoary carcass is buried amid the flowers, never to trouble the world again, even with its wandering ghost.

I am now in Cleveland at the quiet house of J. D. Mallonee, secretary of Cleveland League, who has done much to giv new life to the work here, and who is one of the most thorough and devoted laborers in the field. He is a scientific student, a bright and keen thinker, and his lectures in various places on Secular topics hav been most favorably received, both by the Liberal and general public. He is thoroughly interested in the coming Congress, and, as the representativ of Cleveland Liberals, well displays their generosity, ardor, and faith in Freethought principles. I hav received a most cordial welcome from Cleveland friends—Mr. J. M. Wilcox, Mr. Lucas, Mr. Gilson, Mr. Thomas Lees, and others. I anticipate, indeed, a glorious Congress. The People's Theater, on Euclid avenue, centrally located, seating 1,500, has been engaged for all sessions of the Congress. The program has already been published—a brilliant one indeed. Ingersoll will close the Congress with his great new lecture, "Myth and Miracle." He will be greeted by the largest audience ever assembled in Cleveland.

Railroad rates as per letter from W. H. King, commissioner Central Passenger Agency. Forest City House will be the headquarters of Congress. Those desiring board at $1.00 per day please communicate with J. D. Mallonee, 144 Cedar avenue, Cleveland. Let friends come from every state to this grand gathering of Liberal forces. A power and enthusiasm will be called forth potent for the advancement of liberty. Fraternally yours,

Cleveland, O., Oct. 1, 1885. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The Tent.

ALLIANCE, O.—Despite the political excitement, the ex-governor at the Opera House, great race at the skating rink, wild hurrah of the Salvation Army, and subtle undercurrent of church opposition, the attendance at the Tent has not in the least diminished, while the interest and desire to investigate hav greatly increased.

The Bible, and the claims of Christianity and Secularism, are the all-engrossing topics of discussion in the stores, on the streets, at the railroad depots, post-office, everywhere.

We were agreeably surprised, on nearing the Tent on Tuesday evening, to find our pulse quickened, in spite of the dark, cold, damp night, by the inspiring music of a full brass band. On entering the Tent we found the wonderfully-gifted Haines family brass band giving forth sweet soul-stirring melody.

The band consists of J. C. Haines, his wife, and their six children, all genuin Liberals, and descendants from brave old Liberal stock, J. K. Haines, who did good work for abolition in the perilous times preceding the war, and is still an activ, earnest, outspoken champion of universal mental liberty.

The children range from five to seventeen years of age, and are, one and all, natural musicians. To see little "Ila," only seven years old, play all the variation on the snare-drum, while Baby Herbert, a five-year-old, hardly taller than the drum-stick he wielded with solemn persistency, whanging the big drum, and keeping exact time, was as wonderful and amusing as the music was entrancing.

We all suffered from the fierce, cold wind, but the people, although chilled, listened attentivly, and remained to the end of the lecture.

Wednesday: No change in the weather, and so we removed to the Liberal church.

Our Tent has vindicated its claim to being the best possible means to awake an interest. It is conceded we never could hav aroused such an interest in any building. The novelty of the Tent is a great attraction. Many come long distances, some over twenty miles. Many who are too prejudiced ever to enter any hall to hear an Infidel lecture will go to the Tent.

There it affords the devotees of Mrs. Grundy, and the cringing slaves of priesthood, such a beautiful chance to hear, yet be able to declare they would not go inside such a place. They can and did lie in the grass some distance off, far enough to be safe from observation, yet near enough to catch every word.

Thursday, Sept. 23d: Still cold and damp. Remained in the church.

Friday, the 24th, the weather greatly modified, so we removed back to the Tent, to the gratification and delight of all. Interest steadily increasing; quite a number every night take down proof texts; many stop me on the street and ask for chapter and verse, used in some of my lectures; they had controversy with some Christian who denied there was any such text or teaching in the Bible.

Saturday, we had the delight and honor of introducing our efficient and worthy secretary of the National Liberal League, Mr. Samuel P. Putnam, to the Tent. He was profuse in encomiums on its very neat, clean, and tasty appearance. He delivered a most interesting lecture, sparkling with bright thought and the most beautiful gems of poesy, and was enthusiastically applauded.

On Sunday morning we attended the very instructiv and interesting session of the Liberal church. They hav a large attendance, the ladies and children taking the lead both in numbers and interest in the work. That stanch and true Liberal—the generous, public-spirited citizen, and most enterprising of business men, George Thornberg—who has so ably and bravely piloted the society through storms and breakers to its present haven of success, is in command, and he is ably seconded by Helen Haines, who, full of zeal, devotion to the cause, and sympathy with the children, wields her scepter of love with a benign grace that insures the glad obedience and hearty co-operation alike of old and young.

The order of exercise was: Music, recitation of selected piece in concert, musical calisthenics and march, quotation of mottoes, remarks thereon by the president, select readings and recitations. Classes: Astronomy; teacher, F. C. Woods; German; teacher, Emil Tanner. Infant class: entertained with the "Story Hour;" teacher, Helen Haines. Adult class: Discussion of given subject; teacher, J. K. Haines. Music. Mr. S. P. Putnam made an address to the children, congratulatory and encouraging, which was well received.

Sunday afternoon, Tent crowded with eager listeners; streets lined with teams; large amount of our best Liberal literature sold and given away. We are indebted to Hiram Van Pelt, of Cleveland, Ohio, a noble veteran in the cause of liberty, eighty years of age, poor in this world's goods, but rich in sympathy and love for humanity, who sent us about one hundred TRUTH SEEKERS, every one of which has been distributed with more than ordinary care, and will be read and re-read, awaking thought and lifting honest hearts from the despondency of fear to the bright, joyous possibility of exchanging the dread of future hell for the inspiring and ennobling joy of making for themselvs a heaven here and now. All should save their TRUTH SEEKERS; however old, they never cease to be a power of good.

Sunday evening: A stupendous gathering. All eager to learn the facts of the "Bible Heaven." After our lecture, friend Putnam addressed the vast audience, and, inspired by the vast arena of eager, interested, intelligent faces, he delivered a most grand, soul-stirring speech that thrilled all hearts, terminating with a recitation of his own beautiful little poetic gem, "Why Don't he Lend a Hand?" Some idea of the powerful charm of his impassioned oratory on the occasion may be formed from the fact that our irrepressible Tent-master, Tilney, wrote us a slip, asking if it would not be better to omit his singing, lest it mar or efface the grand impression made.

Continued lectures with unabated interest, and on Wednesday evening, September 30th, delivered our fourteenth lecture in this place, last for this Tent season. We had a glorious ovation. Standing-room under the canvas was unattainable. It was a brilliant, enthusiastic gathering, and a glorious finale to the first Tent effort ever made for Liberalism.

On Thursday we struck the Tent and shipped it to Brockport, N. Y., the nearest station to our home. After Congress we must go home to giv directions about building suitable addition to our barn, so as to preserve the Tent and equipments from damp, rats, and mice.

We hav boarded, while here, at the Bailey House, kept by Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Bailey. They are genuin Liberals, with genial manners and kindly hearts, and thoroughly understand how to make their house a pleasant home for all their guests. Their terms are very reasonable, wonderfully so for the sumptuous table they set, and the excellent accommodations provided. Liberals visiting at Alliance are sure of a welcome and comfort at the Bailey House.

We parted from our energetic and faithful Tent-master, Mr. Arthur Tilney, on Thursday; he has gone to Cleveland to aid in advertising the great Congress; his energy and faithfulness will insure rapid and thorough work.

We go from here to East Rochester. Lecture on Saturday evening, and Sunday afternoon and evening. Thence to Cleveland Congress, and then fall and winter campaign. CHAS. B. REYNOLDS.

The Liberal Club.

By the action of the board of managers a month ago, the first fall meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club was averted until the second day of October. This piece of procrastination was rebuked by providence in the form of a rainy evening. Nevertheless a fair audience attended, and many new faces, particularly those of numerous young ladies, were visible. Not all the old attendants were there, but Treasurer Morris beamed benignly upon all comers as he despoiled them of their nickels; Mr. Eckhart occupied a chair in the northwest corner of the hall; Mr. Alonzo Van Deusen, Mr. Center, and Dr. Foote, Jr., loomed head and shoulders above the rest; the first secretary sold copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER at the humiliatingly low price of seven cents each, and President Wakeman twirled his little mallet in his accustomed graceful way. The man with the badge-pin furbished up that decorativ piece of jewelry, attached it to his person, and, resurrecting a last spring's note book, took a seat where he could observe the proceedings.

This meeting was the occasion of Mr. Wakeman's inaugural address as newly-elected president of the club. He first gave notice of the late publication from THE TRUTH SEEKER office of the book "Rational Communism." Those afflicted with an interest in this subject, he said, would find the work the most valuable of its kind. Dr. Lambert, by request, explained a circular of a temperance meeting which he had been distributing through the audience, having the name of the Rev. Stephen Merritt, Grant's undertaker, near the head, and that of T. B. Wakeman near the foot, as speakers. Dr. Lambert said the little men were put first because it tickled their vanity to be there, and the big ones were placed last because they didn't care. This pleased the audience considerably. Mr. Wakeman then announced that he would address the meeting, and Dr. Foote, Jr., would keep them in order while he spoke.

Dr. Foote, taking the chair, said that the president desired to be introduced to the club, but as Dr. Foote could find no words appropriate to such an introduction, it would be dispensed with.

Mr. Wakeman was received with great applause. He gave first a short history of the Liberal Club. This organization was started by seven persons, the speaker among the number, who met in a little hall in Third avenue, Sept. 14, 1869. Mr. Henry Edger, at present in Hungary, in central Europe, was one of the prime movers. Mr. D. T. Gardner, now in Russia, was the first secretary. Concerning Mr. Gardner, the speaker said that he had married a Russian lady and gone with her to her own country. Nothing had been heard from him for many years, and Mr. Wakeman was apprehensiv that his Liberal views had brought him to that living tomb from which no voice ever returns to civilization—an exile to Siberia.

The first president of the Club was J. D. Bell. Business taking this gentleman away from the city, he was succeeded by Horace Greeley, who accepted the position because he believed that if the people of the church needed clubs, like the Young Men's Christian Associations, those outside the church needed them still more. Mr. Greeley presided at several meetings of the club. Some people, said Mr. Wakeman, think that Mr. Greeley was afflicted with an overmastering desire for office, but he (the speaker) believed differently. He told an anecdote bearing upon that view. The club, when Mr. Greeley was president, had a custom of giving a dinner each year upon the anniversary of the birth of Alexander von Humboldt. One of these dinners occurred during Mr. Greeley's candidacy for the office of president of the United States. Mr. Wakeman wrote to Mr. Greeley saying that if his presiding at the Humboldt dinner, as president of the Liberal Club, would injure his political prospects, the members would readily excuse him upon that occasion. Mr. Greeley replied, "When I accepted the presidency of the Liberal Club, I accepted with it all the obligations it imposed, as well as the honors it conferred." He presided at the dinner. On this occasion Mr. Greeley divulged his opinion of wine-drinking, by turning his glass bottom-side up, thus intimating that no wine could be turned into it.

The next president of the club was W. L. Ormsby, described by Mr. Wakeman as witty and "in every respect cantankerous." A change of residence took him away, but he is still an occasional attendant. Mr. Ormsby gave place to James Parton, the historian, to whom the rising generation, the speaker said, were indebted for more information about the period just preceding this than to all other writers. Mr. Parton eventually moved away from New York, but his name was retained as president until the last annual election of officers, when the club elected Mr. Wakeman.

Having brought the history of the organization down to contemporaneous times, Mr. Wakeman proceeded to set forth its objects, which were a search after truth on the basis of absolute liberty of investigation combined with perfect freedom of discussion; the banishment of superstition, and the substitution of the new trinity, Liberty, Science, and Humanity, for St. Paul's old trinity, Faith, Hope, and Charity. To accomplish these ends practical activity was neccessary. Just now the great work of the Liberals was to oppose the encroachments of superstition upon republican liberties in the form of exemption of church property from taxation, and so-called Freedom of Worship bills urged by the Catholics. On these subjects Mr. Wakeman adopted the grounds and the line of argument upon which THE TRUTH SEEKER stands and moves. We hav two superstitions to contend with, these being the mental superstition embodied in the theological explanation of the world, and the physical superstition that alcohol is in some way beneficial to the human system. Both these were bad spirits which should in no wise be entertained.

Mr. Wakeman concluded by reference to becoming exercises on the occasion of the death of Liberals. These events should be attended by some sort of reasonable service which will impress upon survivors the lessons to be drawn from the life of the departed. The Liberal Club would hereafter be prepared to furnish speakers upon these occasions to all those who might desire their friends to be buried under its auspices.

Upon motion of Mr. E. W. Chamberlain, introduced with a few appropriate remarks, a committee, consisting of Messrs. Chamberlain, Van Deusen, and Wakeman, was appointed to draft suitable resolutions touching the death of the late T. C. Leland, a trustee of the club.

There was no discussion upon the lecture of the evening, though Madam Delescluze dissented from it, and was restrained only by her good nature from giving it a searching public criticism. She, however, intercepted Mr. Wakeman near the door, and gave him a liberal segment of her mind.

A business meeting was held, at which delegates to the Congress at Cleveland were elected.

The card for the remainder of this month—which card the president announced was the most remarkable ever provided—is as follows: October 9th, "Government Reform," by George Chorpenning; 16th, "What to Do in the Mean Time," by James Redpath; 23d, "The Coming Revolution in Social, Industrial, and Political Life," by Samuel Leavitt; 30th, the Bruno Lecture for the benefit of the Bruno Statue Fund—"Giordano Bruno's Philosophy and Freethought," by Professor Thomas Davidson. The admission to this lecture will be by ticket, at fifty cents each. Tickets can be procured at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, or at any meeting of the club. Mr. Wakeman says that Professor Davidson knows more about his subject than any other man, and holds that the club has been very fortunate in securing his services.

The 1885–6 season of the Liberal Club thus opens with great promis, and the invitation to attend its meetings is extended to everybody with impartial cordiality. All it costs is five cents; ladies and Presbyterians, free.

Obituary.

At Brown's Valley, Minn., on September 10th, 1885, Mrs. Rebecca W. Paul and Mrs. Abby Hicklin were drowned in Lake Traverse, by the swamping of a row-boat.

Thus in an hour of social enjoyment and innocent pleasure, with no premonition of the sad fate awaiting them, two loving women, devoted mothers, passed away from their friends and families.

They were both Freethinkers, and in word and deed bore testimony to their belief in free thought, free speech and action.

Mrs. Paul was a daughter of the late Jared Warner, a pioneer of Freethought in and about Patch Grove, Grant county, Wis., whence Mrs. Paul and family had but recently removed to a new home in Brown's Valley, Minn.

There are none who would be missed from our small circle of Liberals more than these two estimable women, of whom all that remains to their sorrowing friends is a loving and ever-green memory. D.

Services at the Grave.

From the Big Stone County Herald.

The following is the address delivered at the grave of the late Mr. A. Kaine, by Mr. E. C. Walker, of Valley Falls, Kansas, who officiated at the burial services:

"With heads uncovered, not through superstitious fears, but in honest respect for him whose feet before ours hav stepped into the Lethean stream, we, the children of nature, hav come here to do the last that man may do for a comrade who has laid down the burden of life.

"This is the end of earth; to this we all must come; it is the inevitable fate that awaits us in the ceaseless processes of the universe. Here, where the songs of the birds are borne upon the summer breezes, where the flowers sparkle in the dew and the skies are alternate smiles and tears, we gather to perform our last duties to one whose eyes hav closed in the final sleep, whose lips are mute in the hush of death.

"This man now lying at our feet I did not know, and none of you knew him as he was known to his own soul; the hidden but powerful influences that molded his life we could in no contingency know but in part. The lessons that we derive from such scenes as this are that the kindly and the helpful deed are to be given by the living to the living; that only in life can we make or mar the happiness of our brother; then, and in these brief moments only can we be of service to those who for a few days or for many walk with us the thorny pathways of this earth.

"The elements which make our being shall be reabsorbed into nature's mighty oneness, and the to-morrow of the centuries shall, perchance, witness the transformation of the atoms which compose this body that we to-day lay reverentially beneath the sod upon the hillside, into the dexterous hands and the flashing eyes, into the thinking brains and the pulsing hearts, of the men and the women who shall then mingle in the toils and turmoils, who shall then taste the joys and the sorrows of this mortal existence. From nature we come, to nature we go back—from her we can never be separated."

After delivering the above address, Mr. Walker, at the request of the friends of Mr. Kaine, read the following beautiful poem:

LAY ME LOW.

Lay me low, my work is done;
I am weary, lay me low,
Where the wild flowers woo the sun,
Where the balmy breezes blow;
Where the butterfly takes wing,
Where the aspens drooping grow,
Where the young birds chirp and sing,
I am weary, let me go.

I hav striven hard and long
In the world's unequal fight;
Always to resist the wrong,
Always to maintain the right;
Always with a stubborn heart
Taking, giving blow for blow;
Brother, I hav played my part;
I am weary, let me go.

Shield and buckler, hang them up,
Drape the standard on the wall,
I hav drained the mortal cup,
To the finish, dregs and all.
When my work is done, 'tis best
To let all my troubles go;
I am weary, let me rest,
I am weary, lay me low.

Bound to Get the Money Somehow!

From the Christian Advocate.

Q. A dance and supper were given by outsiders to aid in building the Methodist church without the knowledge of the preacher in charge of the circuit. The avails, when offered, were claimed to hav been received for the supper. As the expenses were paid out of the receipts for dancing, the preacher in charge declined to receive the avails on the ground of inconsistency with rules of the church against dancing. Did he do right in refusing the money? The church trustees voted afterward to accept the money. Hav they any authority to do so? What should the preacher do?

A. This is a somewhat mixed situation. First, these persons were outsiders. Second, the preacher did not know. Third, the persons recognized the impropriety of offering money raised by dancing, and claimed that the money they had to offer was received from the supper. This, though a very fine distinction, appears to hav been presented in an apologetic way. We incline to the belief that the preacher could hav satisfied the demands of an enlightened conscience by a public statement of our rules, and of his entire ignorance of the proceedings, and by expressing the hope that hereafter any efforts to raise money for the benefit of the Methodist church would not be complicated by any questions arising out of inconsistency with what the Methodist Episcopal church considers proper, and that, having thus borne his testimony, he might, without any impropriety, accept the money.

It looks to us as though this is a direct encouragement to outsiders to lie as to how they obtained the money.

Lectures and Meetings.

W. F. JAMIESON is lecturing in Missouri on Sam Jones and Robert G. Ingersoll contrasted. The Savannah, Mo., Opera House was packed to hear him.

JAMES VINCENT, editor of the Nonconformist, announces that he will take the field this fall as a Liberal lecturer. Mr. Jamieson, who enjoys a personal acquaintance with Mr. Vincent, speaks of him in the highest terms. His address is Tabor, Iowa, and Liberal societies wishing a lecturer can write for terms.

CHARLES WATTS will lecture for the Friendship Liberal League of Philadelphia, at Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., on Sunday, Nov. 1st. Subject, afternoon, at 2:30, "The Nightmare of Theology." Evening, at 7:30, "Unbelief: Its Nature, and Services to Humanity." The public is cordially invited. Seats free.

LIFE is a battle. Agitation is the life of a nation; and when that is sapped by luxury, or suppressed by civil, or still worse, by ecclesiastical tyranny, healthy existence ceases, and its unburied carcass breeds only pestilence and corruption. There was greater vitality in the Roman Republic when the Grachi demanded the distribution of the land than when Julius Cæsar gained the battle of Pharsalia; more real health in Greece when Demosthenes thundered against Philip than when Alexander of Macedon sighed for more worlds to conquer. But the true warriors of the present age are not the destroyers, but the regenerators of mankind. Science has conquered brute force, and even in army life the skill of the mathematician is more honored than the sword of the gladiator. The true heroes and heroins of modern times are those who are battling to establish not only the freedom of a nation or race, but the liberties of mankind. The causes they are fighting for are nobler, and the theaters of operations more extended. The encounters and tournaments of the past are beggared into insignificance by the importance and grandeur of the contests of the present age. Of yore, gatherings for war or for sport rarely comprised more than tens, or at most hundreds, of thousands of human beings, but the intellectual giants of the present time hav for their audiences the peoples of the civilized world. In former times the blows given and taken in honor of chivalry could only be witnessed by the few, but now the true words uttered by the champions of human rights and human liberty resound through continents, and the names of Ingersoll and Darwin, of Bradlaugh and Bennett, of Phillips and Victor Hugo, of Davitt and Castelar, are household words with the foremost peoples of the earth.

Selections and Communications.

The Dyaks of Borneo.

A RACE WITHOUT A RELIGION.

From a Review in the N. Y. Sun of W. T. Hornaday's "Two Years in the Jungle."

The Dyaks of Borneo (by the nativs pronounced Dyah) are, to ethnologists, the most interesting of all aboriginal races; because, on the one hand, they hav raised themselvs under indigenous conditions to a high moral and mental as well as physical level, and hav, on the other hand, effectually resisted the most strenuous efforts of missionaries—Protestant, Catholic, and Mohammedan alike. With regard to the Dyaks of the north, partially Mongolized by Chinese influence, and the Kyan Dyaks of the interior (to whom, as the most savage representativs of the race, cannibalism has been imputed), Mr. Hornaday is forced to rely on the assertions of other explorers, which, however, he was at much pains to probe and verify by oral inquiry. His knowledge of the Sea Dyaks and Hill Dyaks, who present in all respects the highest types of Dyak capacity and character, was gathered at first-hand, and is so exhaustiv as to justify us in drawing definit conclusions regarding the place of this interesting people in the scale of humanity. From the facts here made known to us it certainly seems doubtful whether commerce, education, or religion could in anywise increase its happiness.

The Dyaks, it seems, are free from the besetting vice of almost all barbarous races that hav been brought into contact with the commercial side of civilization. Far from being habitually intemperate, or drinking to excess upon the slightest pretext, the Dyaks allow themselvs to drink intoxicating beverages only upon great occasions, such as the gathering of a harvest, the marriage of a person of note, or the visit of some European of distinction. The materials for feasting which are then provided include a liberal supply of palm toddy (which the Chinese taught the islanders to manufacture), and, after the women hav taken from the men all their weapons to avert accidents, they go to work deliberately to make their husbands, lovers, and masculin friends drunk. A Dyak girl, it seems, considers it the greatest fun in the world to coax a redoubtable warrior into drinking until he is unable to stand. But so rare are these festiv indulgences that during the whole period of his wanderings in Sarawak Mr. Hornaday never saw a Dyak feast, or an intoxicated Dyak, or even a drop of the palm brandy that lays the warriors low. Mr. Frederick Boyle, who was present at one of the Dyak feasts, has recorded his amazement that extreme inebriation could not make a Dyak dream of violating the laws of decorum and good temper. In other words, a Dyak, even when drunk, is a gentleman. The gentleness which coexists in these reputed savages with the most dauntless bravery is signally demonstrated in their treatment of women. Among the Sea Dyaks, who, until the suppression of piracy by Rajah Brooke, were the veritable Vikings of the Malay Archipelago, woman, from the cradle to the grave, is considered man's equal except in the vocation of hunting and fighting. Her opinion is received with serious consideration, and her advice is always asked in all matters of importance. Mr. Hornaday recognized one cause of the high social position occupied by women in the fact that Dyak parents are too fond of their children to make them marry against their will, or for mercenary motivs. The Dyaks believe in strict chastity, both before and after marriage, and lapses from virtue are considered highly shameful. The author evidently has in view the discrimination made by the English law of divorce when he adds: "Strangely enough, these simple-minded savages, without written law, and wholly without religion, hold that in cases of unchastity or infidelity to the marriage relation the man in the case is equally guilty with the woman, and the same disgrace and punishment are meted out to both participants in the offense." The author also notes that "under no circumstances does a Dyak woman attempt to produce miscarriage, the common and unpreventable crime of civilization in its highest state." Monogamy is almost universal, only one wife being allowed, except in rare instances where a chief is permitted to take a second. Consanguineous marriages, including the wedding of cousins, are absolutely prohibited. The marriage ceremony is devoid of any solemn vows and protestations, and destitute of even a spark of religious sentiment, but it is indispensable that the intention of the parties should be unmistakably made public. Divorce is not uncommon, but the party dissatisfied with the conduct of the other may pay over a fine to the original offender, after which both parties are free to marry again.

Mr. Hornaday is so astonished at the universal observance of the rights of property among the Dyaks that he repeatedly refers to their phenomenal honesty. In all civilized countries, as we are reminded by the author, men who hav portable property are careful to put it out of a stranger's way, and many of those careful to avoid statutable theft will steal by wholesale through contracting debts that they hav no power to pay. The Dyaks, on the other hand, though they hav no written language, and no social laws except the customs and traditions handed down from their ancestors, are absolutely guiltless of every transgression against property. "I hav never," says Mr. Hornaday, "heard of a single instance of theft from any European, Malay, or Chinaman committed by a Sea or Hill Dyak. Where else," he continues, "but among the Dyaks will a traveler dare to trust a cart-load of boxes and packages, none of them securely fastened, all filled with scores of trifles, any one of which would be dear to a nativ's heart, in the center of a village of fifty strange nativs, with no one to watch for thieves? You can do this among the Dyaks, and lose not one cent's worth. Even the empty tin cans I threw out of the house were brought to me and shown before they were appropriated." An equally astounding Dyak trait is their inflexible probity in the payment of debts. "If the people of a village want goods, a foreign trader will giv them his whole cargo, if he can get them to accept it in exchange for a promis to pay in jungle produce to be afterward collected. The day for full settlement is named by the head man, and by that time the debts are all paid.

Such are the Dyak virtues, and the reader will be surprised to hear that neither the Sea nor the Hill Dyaks, who are most conspicuous for them, hav any priests or creeds, or even the faintest notion of religious observances. They believe, indeed, that the dead go below the earth, and they hav a faint notion of a supreme spirit, but they do not attribute to it the inculcation of any ethical rules or the requirement of any form of worship. Of religion, therefore, in the practical meaning of the term, they are entirely destitute. Their moral laws are the product of their own indigenous evolution, for we see in them no reflection of the religious customs of any of the peoples that hav thus far come in contact with them, either Hindoos, Javanese, Chinese, Malays, or Europeans. Savage nations usually acquire all the vices, and but very few of the virtues of the civilization which touches them; but so far the Dyaks of Northwestern Borneo hav gone through the fire unscathed.

What deductions are drawn by Mr. Hornaday from his enviable experiences among these unwarped sons of the mountain and of the sea? When he seeks to convey the general impression made on him he speaks with an enthusiasm that he is careful to repress in his recital of observed facts. "We see," he says, "in these strange children of nature all the cardinal virtues without a ray of religion, morality without ministers, the Christian graces without Christ or gospel. They keep no Sabbath, pray no prayers, build no temples, worship nothing and nobody, and acknowledge no higher tribunal than the bar of public opinion, on the one hand, and the Sarawak government court upon the other. The Dyak is perhaps the most happy and contented human being under the sun. His wants are few, and his nativ jungle supplies nearly all of them. . . . In hospitality, human sympathy, and charity the Dyaks are not outranked by any people living, so far as I know, and their morals are as much superior to ours as our intelligence is beyond theirs. If happiness be the goal of human existence, they are much nearer it than we. In this instance, at least, it is not the highest civilization that has evolved the most perfect state of society, and, to this extent, the fundamental theories of theology, of sociology, and human evolution are utterly at fault. Borneo is no field for the missionary, for no religion will giv the Dyak aught that will benefit him, or increase the balance of his happiness in the least."

Giordano Bruno.*

The General Council of the Seine, willing to associate itself with the homage of the youth of Italy to Giordano Bruno, the martyr of Freethought, burnt at Rome Feb. 17, 1600, and to recall the memory of his teaching at Paris, has subscribed two hundred francs to the monument raised to his honor this year, 1885, upon his birthday.

It is nearly three centuries since Bruno paid with his life the crime of seeking to emancipate consciences, of combating the narrow and tyrannical dogmas of the church.

His statue fronts the Vatican, a monument of reason facing the papal palace.

In 1550, the cradle of Giordano Bruno was rocked at the foot of Mount Vesuvius. His ardent soul developed under a glowing sky.

At first a Dominican monk, he soon outgrew the dogmas of the church and flung his frock after them. Thirst of knowledge quickened in him the presentiment of eminence. He quit Naples for Genoa, passing on to Nice, Milan, and Venice, daring without patronage to attack the established authorities and brave the church's thunders.

The pope then ruled supreme in Christendom. At Rome, wrote Ulrie de Hutten, three things were absent, . . . conscience, truth, and faith in oaths; three were in the market, loyalty, women, and church dignities; three were dressed finely, prelates, mules, and strumpets; three abounded there, pride, debauchery, and poison.

Driven from city to city, Bruno had to leave Italy. He was young, handsome, and eloquent, with delicate features and pensiv expression. Lightnings played in his eyes. Geneva, Lyons, Paris, successivly welcomed him.

The rector of the University of Paris authorized him to challenge the divers schools of philosophy to a public discussion. He spoke with conviction. His vibrant tones aroused young minds from the sleep of credulity. He called himself the awakener.

The clergy soon became uneasy, and caused him to be expelled from Paris. Suspected everywhere, he tarried nowhere; he passed as a knight-errant of Freethought from university to university, replacing the doctrins of the past by ideas of the true and just in human relations.

After visiting England, he returned through Paris and repaired to Germany, where his principal works were printed. He next turns up at Venice. There the tragedy begins which was completed by the fire of the Inquisition.

Bearding in his den the papal lion, he was arrested by order of the Inquisitorial Father (always paternal, this solicitude for the welfare of mankind) in 1592, just a century after the discovery of America, when began that other martyrdom by the same fiendish power of the most amiable races and the happiest societies of mankind, in Hispaniola, Mexico, and Peru. The council of Venice interfered to prevent the delivery of Bruno to the Inquisition, which from Rome watched the prison of its victim and prepared its tortures. Ignorance and fanaticism will not be balked of their prey. After six years of this confinement, Rome prevailed, and Bruno was transferred to the City of the Popes.

His trial was prolonged. Fifty times, he underwent the "question extraordinary," by tortures, the last of which endured forty hours. [Consider how numerous the experiments in torturing, and what subtle calculations upon physiological endurance, had been needed, to proportion this long series of cruelties to the vital resistance of the victim, leaving him enough for the contemplated public execution!]

"Retract," they urged, "confess your errors."

"How," answered Bruno, "can a few hours' suffering undo a life of studious research?"

The tribual then condemned him to be burnt alive.

"I suspect," said Bruno, facing the assembled priests, "that you pronounce this decree with more fear than I listen to it." The funeral pyre was raised in a public square of Rome. The condemned ascended it with courage unflinching.

He would hav addressed the crowd of spectators. A monk opposed: "You hav not been brought here to indoctrinate the people but to be burnt."

"That is true," replied Bruno.

When the fagots were piled as high as his head, the executioner, moved by his fortitude, would hav lighted the fire from behind, that Bruno might not see the act, but, like Jerome of Prague, he called out, "Come to the front, set the fire before me. Had I feared it, I should not be here."

As he was about to die, a monk held out a crucifix toward him. Bruno turned away his head in disdain. Some of his writings had been tied to his body, that they might be burnt with it. He cried out, "Wood, more wood; increase the fire!"

The assembled crowd broke into sobs and wept. The martyr's lifeless trunk, hanging to the stake, had not burnt. They threw it down upon the coals, adding fresh wood, the fire was rekindled, the servants of the Inquisition poked after the bones with great tongs, and broke them, to make them burn the better. The head, in which such noble thought had bred, they broke in two and cast into the flames; so with his clothes, to prevent the people from keeping them as relics; then his ashes were collected and thrown into the Tiber.

"To burn is no answer," Bruno had said to his judges. The church thinks otherwise. Now, Bruno's monument rises upon the spot where his burning head had cast a sinister light upon the background of triumphant fanaticism. Feeble Protestant reaction! The Juggernaut church rolls on the the same, crushing human reason and right under the wheel of its papal infallibility. Authority wedded with fanaticism and cupidity, tottering a little at Rome, reinforces itself at St. Petersburg, at Tammany Hall, and the capitals of Anglo-American capitalism. Still the Inquisition sits in permanence, condemning thought in books, while biding its time to seize their authors. Its magnificent cathedrals at New York and Washington prepare and forebode the Catholic vote, the requiem of Freethought in the United States. Already it seizes on the schools by the "Freedom of Worship bill." In Belgium it expels Protestant teachers, and, as in Ireland, educates the people to subjection. Is the czar of all the Russias less infallible, less obscurant, less cruel, than the papacy of Rome?

Is a Bismarck tariffing grain and sugar, calling emigration an evidence of prosperity, and preparing so abundantly for war as to leave no comfort in peace, a minister of anything except oppression? Is Freethought compatible with obedience to such subjection?

*Adapted from the French of Jean Frollo in La Revue Anticlericale.

Is Secretary Manning, at the center of a contractil gold ring that squeezes the life out of debtors to aggrandize bond-holding creditors, less a papist at heart than his English namesake, Cardinal Manning? All these tyrannical and prohibitory state despotisms only prepare the funeral pyre of liberty, and then build mausoleums in which the church may re-enthrone itself. Una fides una domus.

It might be more curious than flattering to Liberalism if we knew how many of the francs that paid for Bruno's monument were earned by honest work, or how many of the subscribers are not actually conspiring in some governmental or capitalist scheme against the liberties and rights or their fellow-men.

Just as Jew has become, but too justly, among many people a term synonymous with crafty speculation, so all doctrinal falsifiers, all cruel despots and their willing slaves, all the enemies of science and humanity, are Catholics at heart. EDGEWORTH.

Donn Piatt and Sich.

In a late issue of John Swinton's Paper we find a letter from the brilliant but queerly gifted man of Mac-o-cheek. Piatt is a magnificent madman, soaring in his crankery infinitly above the ordinary run of jug-handle mortals. His madness is the madness of the moon. And Swinton's admiration of the lunatic's lucubrations is a species of idolatry entertained only by literary necromancers toward each other; affecting to find in the charmed pot they dance around the subtle merit out of which all excellences of rhetoric and philosophy are elaborated, but of which the world snappishly says, "I'll none of it."

From the cloud-land loopholes from which they survey the seething hell-broth of life, they gage all lengths, breadths, and thickness of theories, and spitting upon this, rubbing out that, and pooh-poohing the rest, sweep all claims aside not agreeing with their own; as 'tis said did the early Christian philosopher and warrior, Constantine, with the manuscripts submitted to him to decide their genuinness, or otherwise, as "inspired writings;" drawing his sword through the masses of verbiage loading the table, he pronounced which was which.

And as it is with Swinton and the Donn, so is it with the great majority of the contributors to the paper, toward the glittering editor. And well is it for the existence of the plucky hebdomidal that it is so. Well is it, I repeat, for it is undeniably the most needed kind of journal known to our era. Needed, and yet nothing but the most pronounced crankery could keep it alive. That sounds odd enough, and yet none the less true. With an utterance for reaching and alarming, it sounds its brazen tocsin; the tolling, telling vibrations warning the toilers among the social breakers to keep manfully to their boats—the unions—for on the shore stand the wreckers—the bosses—ready to despoil them should they trust themselvs to their heartless confidence.

In the mad turmoil raging all around, a common man may well feel bewildered. With the old faith fast snapping into fragments like rotten cordage in the whirling grasp of the tempest, there is little to the ordinary man-before-the-mast to guide him "on life's stormy main." He knows but little of the reliances of the men who tread the quarter-deck. What is there to him in John Swinton's ignis-fatuus "science?" A mere will-o'-the-wisp from the spunkwood of hopes that flicker; now with a flimsy promis, then flaming a lambent beam; anon threatening extinguishment. There is little beyond a misty chaos. "Man is now the same selfish brute he was thousands of years ago," writes Piatt. "In prehistoric times," he continues, "men lived on each other; the marks of teeth on human bones attesting the horrible facts of cannibalism. Now, all the difference is, the cave is a gilded palace, but the man-eater is still the same. No prehistoric cannibal, with his stone hammer, ever sucked the blood out of the heart of his fellow-man with more avidity and greed than the Vanderbilts and Jay Goulds." And if the millionaires mentioned, why not the lesser capitalists? A dreary horror shuts in the ocean line of life. No anchorage, no sea-room but in the depths, the shore-stretch lined with man-eaters gloating over victims who ventured to land.

"God is no longer a factor in the discussions of society," said a working shoemaker to me the other day. "The word refers to a played-out myth," he added. "Don't talk of Gods and faith; they are wiped out. As the German said: 'There is no father!' Our women only cling to the old delusion—our women, who 'suckle fools and chronicle small beer.'"

Shakspere never came across such a shoemaker; so, at least, may we infer from his Roman mobs.

"In truth, sir, I am but a mender of old soles," says his trump speaker among the men of the streets of Rome.

My shoemaker takes two copies of John Swinton's Paper. He is a stickler for trades unions, is a member of the Knights of Labor—going twenty miles to attend their meetings and pay his dues. He is, besides, a good father, a loving husband, and is deeply interested in all questions affecting the best interests of both local and general society.

I cannot dismiss this article without saying there is a broad line to be drawn between Swinton and the Donn. Of the former it has been written, and truthfully:

He is honest, he is able;
Place him in the general plan
As an intellectual cable
Running between gods and man;
A telegraph or telephone,
Such as no millionaire can own.

On the other hand, it was written of the Donn:

Alone, alone, with oriflamme
O'er radiant crest with plume afloat,
What matters it a single clam
Whether leading saint or bloat?

Le Roy, N. Y. M.

Two Suggestions.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The organized Freethinkers of this country, in my humble opinion, should be as practical as possible as to their aims, and do everything in their power to realize the several planks of their platform by legal enactment.

The District of Columbia, the seat of the national government, over which the Congress of the United States, according to the American Constitution, exercises exclusiv legislation in all cases whatsoever, has a very strict Sunday law that should be repealed. Cannot the Freethinkers who will meet at Cleveland, Ohio, on the 9th, 10th, and 11th of next month in the Ninth Annual Congress of the National Liberal League (why not "National Freethinkers' League?") draw up a petition to Congress, asking for the repeal of the obnoxious and unconstitutional law stated, and hav this petition signed by as many names as possible? The Congressional Library and the National Museum, two of the noblest national institutions in the city of Washington, are also closed on Sunday. Could not the suggestion be embraced in the petition referred to, that Congress would do a most excellent thing by ordering the institutions named to be opened to the public on Sunday? Reformers of every kind of this country are petitioning Congress to hav their reforms applied to the District of Columbia. Why should not the Freethinkers of this country do likewise?

Furthermore, it may be stated that Washington is the favorit city nowadays where scientific and similar associations of this country hold their annual conventions. Why cannot the National Liberal League, after the convention at Cleveland, hold their next annual congress at the beautiful national capital? But as the president of the National Liberal League, Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, has his home in this city, he is the competent man to speak on this subject. Very respectfully yours,

JOHN GEO. HERTWIG.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 24, 1885.

Catholics and Public Schools

ST. LOUIS, MO., Sept. 21st.—The Rev. Father McCaffrey, of St. Patrick's Catholic church in this city, created a sensation yesterday morning by announcing from the pulpit that the Catholic children of his parish who attend the public schools will hereafter be barred from the celebration of the holy communion. "What I mean is," said the priest when questioned, "that we hav no time to prepare children who attend public schools for their first communion. We hav a large school here, and all the teachers necessary. We can teach every child that is brought to us, and no one can get away on the plea of poverty, for we will teach them free. They must be taught in the parish schools if they are to become Catholics. They are in no way prepared to receive the sacrament in the public schools.

"Now we don't propose to permit our children to attend the public schools, and then come here and get a special preparation for their first communion. The children who go to public schools are not fit to receive their first communion. They hav received no religious training at all, and what I say now is that they shall not be given their first communion in this church."

Vicar General Brady has been appealed to, and seems to side with Father McCaffrey. Father Joyce, a leading priest, says: "We are doing all that we can to prevent our children from going to the public schools. This evil is great. There is a large number of children in St. Patrick's parish who go to the public schools. There is a large number in every parish in St. Louis. The evil is not confined to St Louis. It is in every large city in the country. The Catholic clergy must do everything they can to overcome it. We must educate our own children. They are educated in the public schools merely as an animal would be educated. Their souls are not attended to."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The above, taken from a morning paper of this city, proves conclusivly that the power of priestcraft must be overcome, or, through its machinations, the liberties of the people will be jeopardized. Our public schools are democratic in their influence, hence a bulwark to free institutions, while a Catholic school is a priestly demi-gorgon enemy to every republican government. The coercion these Catholic priests propose to practice upon the community, if successful, will be the commencement of a sedition which will eventually sap the liberty of our people. The question to be decided by the inhabitants of this vast domain, for themselvs and their children, is, shall we forego priestcraft or freedom, a stereotyped catechism or Freethought? When kingcraft could no longer hold the populace, then the man tyrant issued a manifesto which afterward proved to be his own burial permit. When the iron bands of human slavery were dampened by the breath of freedom, they crumbled away from the limbs of the slave and the grasp of the master. Now the third tyrant in the godhead of human oppression, priestcraft, demands that the bud of liberty and freedom shall be blasted while in its cradle of hope and promis—the public schools of America. W. W. JUDSON.

Kansas City, Mo.

A Box of Presbyterian Blacking.

The Christian Intelligencer copies from the Presbyterian this Christian insult to a generous and practical Secular charity:

THE WILL OF STEPHEN GIRARD.

The late Judge J. S. Black had an emphatic way of expressing his sentiments which left no doubt of what he meant. He once put on record his views on the unchristian feature in the will of Stephen Girard. The letter, which was addressed to Rev. Dr. Niles, of York, Pa., has lately been made public, and here are a few sentences: "Girard excluded Christianity by a fundamental statute—made it an offense for one of its ministers to come within the walls, or even on the grounds, of his college. It is a monumental declaration that the religion of the New Testament, as taught by its professors, is pernicious in its influence on the minds of men. To proclaim this falsehood the accumulated millions of his thrifty life were expended on a building which, by its magnitude and the pomp of its architecture, overshadows all that is near it. The enormous structure, like a tall bully, lifts its head and lies."

If the religion of the New Testament is a religion of honesty, its professors are false thereto and pernicious when they steal the orphans' gift to propagate their claims. Not content with stealing the children's bread, they foul the dish from which they filch it. Girard was not bound to giv his wealth to any cause, and those who hold it in trust should resign their charge if unwilling to accept and fulfil its conditions. The American Secular Union must find law to make them do one or the other, or Secularism will continue in contempt, whilst Christianity steals its honor and brags of "whipping the devil round a stump."

PRESBYTERIAN HORSE RACING.

Here is what the editor of the Baptist Watchman has to say of Bonner of the Ledger, and of his Presbyterian horse racing:

Mr. Bonner does not allow his horses to trot for money, but for glory. And Mr. Bonner is a generous supporter of a Presbyterian church. And Mr. Bonner allows his best horse to be lashed on the track in a way that would disgrace a drunken truckman. Here is an account of the last exploit of his wonderful horse in "breaking the record:"

"Bair called the mare by name twice, and then gave her the whip. The maid, as well as her driver, knew that the record was being beaten. Bair gave her a dozen sharp, heavy strokes with the whip.

"The writer who reports this is an admirer who perceives nothing of the savage cruelty described in it."

I would ask, in the name of Thomas Paine and all that is humane, Where is the S.F.T.P.O.C.T.A., or cannot its officers see beyond a coal-cart, or has Brother Bonner's generous support of the punkrotten church anything to do with his immunity?

Perhaps Bonner is trying to "whip the devil round a stump," as they do at Girard College.

JOHN P. GUILD.

Was Jehovah an Unclean God?

I regret to see in the editorial paragraph on Spain in THE TRUTH SEEKER of September 5th an impeachment I think undeserved of the domestic habits of the Hebrews, who alone can be affected by the slur upon Jehovah's cleanliness. Several of the Mosaic regulations look to cleanliness, and contrast very favorably with the extensiv butchering and canning of diseased beasts at Chicago. It is rather general besides, among the peoples of warm climates as regards the person, and it is traditional in most Hebrew families. Their brother Semites, the Arabs, are generally a cleanly race, and where either are otherwise, it may be traced to the pressure of local circumstances. I should not say a word in defense of Jehovah's moral character, but had not his sumptuary habits been decent we should not find him intimate with Abraham, for Abraham was a gentleman, and that was long before the old-clothes shops had made his posterity acquainted with strange bed-fellows.

M. E. LAZARUS.

Governor Hoadley's Religious Views.

From the Daily Ohio State Journal.

The introduction to the constitution prepared by the convention of 1873 and submitted to the people began as follows:

We, the people of Ohio, grateful to almighty God for our civil and religious liberty, and invoking his blessing for the future in order to secure and promote our common welfare, do establish this Constitution.

Governor Hoadley was a member of that convention, and immediately on the reading of the above he said: "As one man who is not ashamed to avow such to be his religious principle, I protest against the right of this convention, or the people of Ohio, to place in this constitution a religious doctrin which is proposed to be placed here, that I and mine do not believe to be true religion, and therefore I most sincerely deprecate any mention of it in the constitution."

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - OCTOBER 10, 1885.

Priests in Irish Politics.

It has been the policy of the Romish Church for many years to conceal her interference in political affairs of the various countries in which she is a power, loudly asserting that only with the souls of men is she concerned. That she has for a moment been really "out of politics" in any place where she has priests, no one who is informed in affairs believes.

In Ireland, at least, this Jesuitical policy is now to be thrown aside, and Rome steps forward as a political "boss." Archbishop Walsh, who has just succeeded McCabe in the archbishopric of Dublin, sent circulars to the parish priests throughout Ireland, advising them in regard to the electoral campaign. He cautioned them to beware of surprises at the coming conventions for nominating candidates for seats in parliament, and called upon them to resist any attempts to stampede the conventions in favor of any outside candidate. He advised them especially respecting a convention to be held on October 5th; warned them against supporting other than tried men, and directed them to oppose the overthrow of known for unknown candidates. The archbishop stated also that if it should be necessary to secure their object, the priests should endeavor to obtain an adjournment, and if that was not possible, that they should withdraw from the convention.

This order to the priests of Ireland marks an epoch in Irish politics. It is a return to medieval times, when kings consulted Rome in the selection of officials, and the pope was really the ruler of all Catholic countries. The instructions to the priests to keep an eye on seekers after parliamentary seats, and to order their parishioners not to vote for "pretenders," is simply an order for the priests to see to it that none but those favorable to Rome are elected.

This is a shrewd move on the part of the papacy. Home rule for Ireland cannot be delayed many years. It is possible that the next English parliament may concede it. The pope knows this, and has laid his plans accordingly. Under instructions from the priests, the Irish people will elect no members of their home parliament but Catholics. Irish politicians, therefore, will be but the tools of the church, and will grant every favor she may ask. The pope will hav more power to his elbow and more pence in his pocket.

In this is also seen the proverbial wisdom of the serpent. Always has the church opposed every reform, but when the reform has been an accomplished fact, she has stepped to the front, claimed the credit, and reaped the benefit. Rome has stood aloof in the struggle for home rule made by Parnell and his followers, but now that they are likely to succeed in obtaining legislativ independence the anaconda of the Vatican reaches out to gorge upon the spoils.

Who is in Error?

The Independent of August 20th had this:

"We welcome with great delight the Congregationalist to the position which we hav long defended, that women should not be shut out of the pulpit in those exceptional circumstances when she seems called to be a public religious teacher. It says well:

"'The religion of the New Testament is a religion of common sense, and it is to be so interpreted. Where and whenever God brings his people into extraordinary straits and exigencies, he no doubt givs them dispensation to adjust themselvs as best they can to their conditions; and in some cases thus arising, where no better thing can be done, he may admit women to the place of man in the pulpit, as in the field, warehouse, or ship.'

"Under the 'natural conditions' of society, which, we suppose, means family duties and cares, our contemporary holds, AS DO WE, that 'the teachings of church, as well as the best interests of all concerned, do forbid women to preach."

THE TRUTH SEEKER of August 29th said:

"The orthodox Independent holds that 'the teachings of church, as well as the best interests of all concerned, do forbid women to preach."

The Independent of September 3d commented:

"THE TRUTH SEEKER should change its name. We can pardon it for its careless ignorance in calling the Independent a 'Congregational' paper, but when it says that we hold that 'the interests of all concerned do forbid women to preach,' it wilfully misrepresents us. But that is what this paper, which is always boasting of its coarse Infidelity and obscenity, does whenever it thinks it can make a point against the church."

Naturally the Independent can pardon us for calling it Congregational, for it was begun as a journal of that sect, and though it has for a long time claimed to be independent, it has never thoroughly succeeded. It has a decided leaning toward its youthful love, and we hav never heard that the Congregationalists had repudiated it.

As for the charge of misrepresenting the Independent, we leave that to our readers, and would to the Independent's readers, if the editor were fair enough to reprint the whole of the foregoing quotations. The Independent's position in this matter of female preaching is that in exceptional circumstances women should not be shut out of the pulpit; but under natural conditions, "the teachings of church, as well as the best interests of all concerned, DO FORBID women to preach."

Either the remarks quoted from the Independent were written by two men holding different opinions on the subject, or one writer tried his best to straddle the fence. It grieves us to pull him down from his elevated position, but in the interest of truth it has to be done. Mr. Bowen should instruct his editors to consist. We do not see how a journal can be truly called an advocate of women preaching when it refuses them the privilege under natural conditions of society. Natural conditions are what may be expected most of the time.

Prayer as a Prophylactic.

The archbishop of Montreal recently told his followers that the small-pox epidemic from which that city is now suffering was a curse sent by God upon the people because of their wickedness in holding a carnival last winter. His remedy for the disease was more frequent and fervent prayers to the saints and greater generosity toward the church. The archbishop's sermon set the song for the priests, and they sung it diligently.

These teachings hav borne their legitimate fruit. The provincial board of health issued an order making vaccination compulsory. The board also adopted sanitary measures, procuring large quantities of sulphur, carbolic acid, chloride of lime, etc., to be used for disinfecting the houses and streets of Montreal. This action of the board incensed the Roman Catholic population, and they proceeded to demolish the health office. They then broke the windows of the civic health officer's residence, of the government buildings, and of the houses of such English officials as were in any way identified with the sanitation of the city. Several of the voters were shot by the police, and a few policemen were badly injured. Troops were called out and kept under arms for several days.

When the doctors of Spain and Italy went among the peasantry to endeavor to check the ravages of cholera, they were assaulted and defied. The ignorant clodhoppers held up the relics of some saints, and affirmed them more efficacious than all sanitary precautions. These "Canucks" of Canada are even wilder than the ragged hordes of Spain, and the priests are directly responsible for their conduct. Among the Protestant population of Montreal, chloride of lime and carbolic acid are considered better disinfectants of dirty houses than the aroma of a saint, and burning sulphur more powerful than prayer. The result is that up to last week, while the mortality from small-pox among the Catholics was nearly one per cent, the mortality from the same cause among the Protestants was a trifle short of one-tenth of one per cent. This, remarks the Times, "is an application of Professor Tyndall's famous 'prayer gage' which its propounder would not hav ventured to make. He was too humane to suggest that physical maladies should be dealt with by spiritual remedies alone, and proposed to giv the patients who were chosen to be prayed for the additional advantage of secular remedies. The test has been made much more complete in Montreal, inasmuch as the obstinacy of the patients who hav relied upon spiritual remedies has prevented them from receiving this advantage." Looked at in this religious light, it is also a measure of faith of the respectiv sects. Ostensibly believing in God, and that he cares for all his children, the Protestants weaken when a practical issue is presented, and call in medical skill. As a prophylactic they hav no faith in prayer. The reason is, they are educated. The Catholics, on the contrary, are consistent. They hav faith enough to move mountains, if mountains were movable by faith, and though God slays them yet will they trust in him. Such confidence is beautiful, but misplaced. Better than prayer and images of saints against contagious diseases are frequent baths, clean houses, well-drained cities, and good air. But it is useless to hope that the Canucks will learn this until they first learn that their religious teachers are frauds.

All accounts agree in placing the responsibility for the riots upon the teachings of the priests. It is for their interest to keep the people ignorant, and it is not too harsh, judging them by the actions of their predecessors, to say that they would rather see half Montreal in the grave and the other half still their willing serfs, than to see all Montreal healthy and emancipated from their priestly domination. If the Canucks once learn that prayers and the exhibition of images of saints are of no avail, while disinfectants are; that plagues are not sent by any supernatural being as a punishment for sin, but may come as results of violated sanitary laws, their fear of the priests would be lessened, and their reliance upon their offices shaken. As a matter of business, therefore, the priests cannot afford to teach the people that disease is natural, and that the remedies must also be. And though ecclesiastics are supreme in their control of the plague-stricken population of Montreal it is useless to expect them to stop their frantic nonsense about the small-pox having been sent as a punishment for sin. The opportunity of tightening their grasp upon the superstitious populace is too good to be lost. Besides, most of the priests are as badly bedeviled as their parishioners, and no doubt believe what the archbishop says. If he also be given credit for honesty, the blame must be placed upon his religion. And that is where it properly belongs. The Montreal victims are as but a drop in an ocean of unfortunates sacrificed to religious stupidity, craft, and cruelty.

Now We Hav It!

In quoting the comments of the secular press upon the Albany Convention, we remarked upon "an absence of slander and personal detraction which it will be vain to expect in the comments and editorials of the religious press." We spoke prophetically, but not inspirationally. Past experience was our guide. In the Christian Advocate of October 1st, we find a letter from D. R. Lowell, of Albany, N. Y. He says:

"The much advertised and self-lauded Convention of the self-styled 'Freethinkers' is passed. It may be all summed up in two words—sublime nothing. It was a cheat from beginning to end. It promised to giv us something substantial, scientific, intellectual, overwhelming. Instead it was most pueril and shallow in all its utterances.

"I hav never seen a convention of any kind where there was so little real scholarship shown as in this. Even its friends must hav felt chagrined on account of this very marked disappointment. The highest ambition that any of the speakers seemed to hav was to raise a laugh; everything seemed to converge to this one end—to make the people laugh. The deepest impression at any time made upon the audience was of their own insincerity. When Colonel Ingersoll lectured in New York city, the editor of the Spirit of the Times, the leading sporting paper of the country, said: 'We listened attentivly to his lecture. So completely did Colonel Ingersoll overshoot his mark that we felt like saying to him, as Agrippa said to Paul: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian."' The spirit of the whole Convention was flippant, narrow, intolerant of differing opinions; it was coarse, repulsiv, beastly, often indelicate, and even vulgar. I hav never seen in any gathering, not even in the worst political caucuses, so much of insincere motiv, bigotry, dogmatic declaration, blatant ignorance, brazen cheek, and disregard of facts and truth as in this Convention. And yet, when I came to look over the make-up of the Convention, and to study their faces, I did not so much wonder at it. It is said that the countenance is the window of the head. So it is, and we may add that it is the picture gallery of the life as well. I never had a stronger conviction of this truth than when I studied the faces of the delegates and their sympathizers in this Convention. I could plainly see them in those faces—passion, lust, selfishness, cynicism, insincerity, lager-beer, rum, wine, and women. They looked just as vinegar tastes, and as though they were unhappy and wished everybody else could 'enjoy the same blessing.' The impression made on all outsiders certainly was not favorable to themselvs. Christianity has nothing to fear from this kind. It is too coarse and repulsiv to accomplish results.

"Sunday evening, to the disgrace of Albany, the hall was crowded to listen to the prince of Infidels and blasphemers, Colonel Ingersoll. What a shame that professed Christians will, on the holy Sabbath, go to a theater, and pay one dollar each to hear their religion ridiculed, and their Christ blasphemed! It certainly could not be more demoralizing to the individual or community to witness one of the vilest theatrical plays on a Sabbath evening, than the ranting ribaldry of this son of perdition. How professed Christians can so surrender their conscience, and compromise themselvs, is a mystery to me; yet they do it. Individuals may suffer from this Infidelity, but Christianity at large has nothing to fear from it. Let no Christian halt or grow uneasy, but let him keep steadily at his work, faithful to his duties, teaching and living the gospel, and confessing his experience before men. Their whole object seems to be to tear down what has been building for these ages. Their guns, such as they are, are all loaded at Christianity. They deny immortality, man's sinful nature and need of help, divinity of Christ, inspiration of the Bible, heaven, hell, even the existence of a God. What low scoundrelism, to rob crushed humanity of their only hope and help, and then laugh at their misery! It is more villianous than horse-thieving; more treacherous than slander; more detestable than highway robbery; more beastly than stealing virtue. May it receive what it merits—the silent contempt of an outraged humanity, and the grave where the darkest infamy sleeps! God rules, and soon these Infidels will yet be made to drag the car of God's salvation through this world to its ultimate and complete victory. In the mean time let Christians work and wait."

Whatever else the Convention may hav done, it evidently has disturbed this writer, who is probably some Methodist itinerant temporarily located at Albany. But, in locating him, the Conference made one error. They put him in charge of a church, when they should hav put him under the charge of the warden of the institution on the hill.

It is surprising to what sublime hights of vituperation a Methodist can rise upon occasions. By his flow of billingsgate we should judge that this fellow had run up against some argumentativ Freethinker and been "downed," and takes his revenge upon us all by sticking his tongue in his cheek and calling names.

It will probably pain Mr. Parton to know that his opinion of Victor Hugo is insincere, as it will Colonel Ingersoll to learn that he is a son of perdition. Mrs. Krekel and Miss Gardener, we feel sure, will grieve, now they know it, that their lectures were indelicate, even vulgar. It is a great pity, too, that Elizur Wright's gray hairs are brought down in sorrow to the grave by his insincerity, bigotry, dogmatism, ignorance, "cheek," and general depravity of character. We expected better things of Mr. Wright. And the attendants upon the Convention—how shall we sufficiently sympathize with them, poor victims of passion, lust, selfishness, lager beer, rum, wine, and women! And Wakeman, too, what a wretch he is to deny the sinfulness of man's nature and the existence of hell! And the rest of them, who seek to rob crushed humanity of its fond belief in the Bible, what punishment is sufficient for their monstrous crime! Really, we are sorry for them all, and sorry for the people of Albany, who for three days had in their beautiful city a host of men and women more villainous than horse-thieves, more treacherous than slanderers, more detestable than highway robbers. Surely, the police ought to hav jailed the whole Convention.

It is the conviction of Mr. Lowell that a denial of immortality, the divinity of Christ, the inspiration of the Bible, the existence of "God" and heaven, is worse than stealing virtue. From the number of fallen Methodist ministers during the past few years we judge his brethren of the pulpit share his opinion.

Editorial Notes.

THE post-office department has adopted the civil service regulation that the carriers to be appointed to distribute the letters specially stamped for quick delivery shall be able to read and write. This is supposed to be a mean Protestant scheme to keep Catholics out of the post-office.

Puck says that the average New York police justice signs commitments with one hand and with the other signs the prisoners' release to satisfy the ward politicians. This is the first time we ever heard that the average New York justice could write with both hands. The average justice selected by the Catholic church is supposed to be well educated if he can write with one.

THE religious paper which received this called it the "instruction" of a fool:

"pittsburgh. pa. August 18, 1885. independent.
How do you feel on faith cure. all the devils in this world cant stop it. no faith no healing. God does the healing. we simply obey Him.
He who refuses to heal the sick rejects the Healer which is Christ.
Hav you Jesus in you, if so, praise the Lord.
Yours in Jesus, Pindar."

We should say it was written by a genuin Christian. "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise" (1 Cor. i, 27), and "Men are fools for Christ's sake" (1 Cor. iv, 10).

THE Pall Mall Gazette, which has spread more nastiness over England than all the dirty books ever printed, has attacked Captain Burton's translation of the "Arabian Nights" for its pruriency. An old English writer once denied that a drab was the best judge of curses.

A CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE SOCIETY lecturer, after telling his audience how Messrs. Foote, Ramsey, and Kemp were prosecuted and sent to prison for blasphemy, exclaimed: "Then they went to prison, the lazy hounds, and I had to help keep them all the while they were there!" Surely, this man is doing his master's work!

THE following reasons why Catholic girls should not promenade the streets after dusk are given by a Romish journal: "Because they are called to be saints, as St. Paul says; because they are members of the sodality and children of Mary; because they receive the body and blood of Christ; because they must not only avoid sin, but also the occasions of it. Therefore, as they are bound to Jesus, they are not free—not free to do as they please, not free to do as other girls do."

MR. B. F. HALDEMAN, private secretary and stenographer to the general passenger agent of the Vandalia Line, with headquarters at St. Louis, and who has also been connected with the Olympic Theater since its reconstruction, has been appointed treasurer of the new Grand Opera House at St. Louis. Mr. Haldeman is a former Altoonian, and was a firm friend of D. M. Bennett, and also takes great interest in THE TRUTH SEEKER.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Evangelist spent a "Sabbath" in Geneva. The church services, he writes, were thinly attended. "But in the evening the whole town seemed to be on the streets to witness a display of fireworks as elaborate as Americans are given to on the Fourth of July. What would John Calvin hav said to all that? Looking from our window upon the beautiful Leman, whose waters were gleaming under the bursting rockets, and recalling the work done on that ground by Farel, Vinet, Calvin, Malan, D'Aubigne, it was not easy to believe that we were in the midst of the Geneva of 1535. But Voltaire, Rousseau, and Gibbon too, had there planted seeds. Rationalism is said to hav a strong hold in the university."

WE noted a few weeks ago that Saladin, of the Secular Review, intended to publish, in parallel columns, in Latin and English, the passages in Dens and Lignori which are used as authoritativ guides for the priests in the confessional. But the translation, though toned down as much as possible, is still too filthy for print in English, and Saladin contents himself with printing the Latin. He says: "Rome has nonplused me this time; in the breach she has put a dung-hill, reeking with defecation, cataplasmal with offal. She holds me at bay; I admit that I hesitate to leap to the neck into micturation in order to dash my battle-ax against the side of a midden. The Christian skunk has interposed her stench between her and me; and I stand at a safe distance, baffled but grim, and let her enjoy her malodorous triumph." He offers, however, to send a manuscript translation for a guinea.

H. H. HUTCHESON, of Leavenworth, Kan., writes: "Some time since you bestowed upon Hon. A. B. Bradford, of Pennsylvania, ex-consul to Japan, the honor of first suggesting the propriety of changing the name of 'National Liberal League' to 'American Secular Union.' Now, if I am not much mistaken, that honor belongs to Kansas—the far west banner state in the cause of intellectual progress. Pennsylvania is a good state, but not near so 'previous' as Kansas. We took in the situation, as regards name, years ago. My fellow-townsman, Hon. S. R. Shepherd, ex-secretary of state of Kansas, wrote a short article advocating reorganization and change of name, and suggested that of 'American Secular Union,' which appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER of July 5, 1884, page 421. How is that for priority of date?" We admit the priority of date, and overlooked Mr. Shepherd's suggestion because the former writer said 1883 instead of 1884.

IF ever the sectional feeling between the North and the South is to be thoroughly allayed some politicians will hav to get a little common sense. The following sentiments, given utterance by General Beatty, of Ohio, are outrageous. They are in reply to a question of a reporter of the Voice as to the proposed policy of the Republican party should it again obtain control of the national government:

"Yes, sir; there are at least three ways out of the matter: (1) National control of elections when Congressmen or presidential electors are chosen. (2) Congress could declare that a republican form of government no longer exists in the South and undertake to remodel their state governments. (3) Or the representation of Southern states in Congress and in the Electoral College may be reduced to correspond with the colored vote not counted in the elections. And I would like to say that a little SHOT AND SHELL might help matters."

We should be sorry to think that shot and shell are the arguments-believed in by Republicans generally. Probably Mr. Beatty is a Rip Van Winklean relic of the late unpleasantness. He should go to sleep again.

UNDER the title of "The Law and Practice of the Church of Rome in Cases of Heresy," by R. C. Jenkins, Messrs. Kegan Paul and Company, of London, hav published a pamphlet showing the actual authorized laws of the Catholic church against heretics. Heretics are defined as "those who believe otherwise in matters of faith than the Roman church believes." Among these laws it is stated "that a sentence of acquittal in the case of heresy can never exempt a person from a second trial on the same charge;" "that a person may be tried anywhere for heresy, at whatever distance of time or place;" "that no faith is to be kept with heretics, either by private persons or by public authorities;" and "that cities or states falling under a general charge of heresy may be destroyed or alienated." The process of trial for heresy is also a mere travesty of justice. Even known enemies might accuse a heretic. "Neither the place nor the time at and during which a crime was committed are to be stated, lest the accused should discover who are his accusers." Torture may be used as long as the accused assert their innocence, and "when the truth cannot otherwise be elicited." "No one is allowed to plead on behalf of the heretic," and "no appeal is allowed after sentence." "It may be urged," says the London Freethinker "that this infamous system, even if it had never been set aside or repealed, has at least become obsolete, but Mr. Jenkins shows that these laws are still recognized by the highest authority, and that the doctrin is declared to be unchanged and unchangeable. So would the Roman practice be the same if only the church could re-establish its throne upon the ruins of civilization."

THE Mt. Olivet crematory is expected to go into operation this week. The building is situated on a hill within walking distance of the Fresh Pond station on the Long Island Railroad. A carriage road, connected with North Second street, Brooklyn, E. D., at the city line, runs along at the foot of the hill. The grounds on which the building stands are two hundred feet square. This will allow for the enlargement of the crematory. At present it is only forty feet by fifty in extent, one story in hight, constructed of brick, iron, and stone, with twenty feet above ground and fifteen feet below. The basement under the furnace is to be used as a storehouse for fuel, and mortuary vaults are also in course of preparation for the keeping of bodies prior to incineration. The furnaces, retorts, preparation rooms, auditorium, and other apartments are all on the surface. The building is thoroughly fire-proof. The superintendent thus describes the furnaces and method of incineration: "The furnaces and retorts are strongly constructed. Seventeen thousand fire-bricks were used in building it. These are exclusiv of the bricks employed in the erection of the building. The two furnaces, semi-circular in shape, are at the back under the retorts. They are constructed near the ground or flooring. The upper part when in operation is closed with strong iron doors, leaving the under part open to secure a good draught. The arches of the furnaces are made of fire-brick and iron, and are capable of sustaining a very great heat. Coke is to be used in the fires, and at each cremation about two caldrons will be used. The retorts are on the opposit side, with the fronts toward the auditorium There are two of them, constructed of stone with perforations. Through these holes the heat will be admitted. They will also permit the moisture from the body to escape. All the gases will be consumed in the process of cremation. When the body is placed in the retort, the iron doors are closed, and the heat admitted. There is a separate flue to each furnace, connected directly with the large chimney on the outside. They can be used either together or separately, dampers shutting one or the other off if necessary, or allowing both to be used for one retort. The heat can be generated as high as 4,000, and will never be less than 2,500 Fahrenheit. The body will be brought in a coffin by the undertaker. When the system is popular no doubt undertakers will keep coffins for the purpose. It will not damage a coffin much to use it for a short time and it can be employed thus several times. This will of course cheapen the cost of the funerals. The body will be taken to the preparation room, and wrapped tightly in about thirty yards of linen, saturated with alum. It will then be placed in an iron cradle on a car, which will be moved to the front of the retort. The friends in the auditorium witness these proceedings. As the bottom of the cradle will be about half an inch above the flooring of the retort, it can be easily slid into it and the iron doors closed. The process of incineration will occupy about forty minutes, when a body of about one hundred and fifty pounds weight will be reduced to, say, three pints or two quarts of ashes, weighing about four pounds. These will be placed in an urn and delivered to friends if desired. In preparing the bodies, before being brought to the crematory, we would prefer that only linen should be used, and no woolens. But if woolens must be used, then the retort will consume them. As the work goes on, and cremation becomes popular, we shall hav cases constructed in the auditorium, where friends can hav the ashes placed in urns properly labeled. The style and value of the urn will depend on the friends, who will pay a fee for storage. Handsome urns for the parlor mantel will no doubt be made. The Germans are already anxious for the crematory to be ready. There are several bodies in vaults outside waiting incineration. It is not intended, however, to make a public show of disposing of the dead. At present the fees will be about $35, for it will be costly to maintain the furnaces going constantly, but the cost will be reduced to perhaps $10."

THE author of the little book, "How to Purify the Blood Without Medicin" (which is principally directions for using hot water), printed by the Truth Seeker Co., writes us that he has permission to use the names of Judge Pierce, of Philadelphia; Professor Zimmerman, of Pittsburgh; Mr. Porter, of Harrodsburg; Mr. Beardsly, editor of the Philmont, N. Y., Weekly Sentinel, and others, in commendation of his method of cure.

THE series of papers on "The American Secular Union: Its Necessity, and the Justice of Its Demands," by Charles Watts, completed in THE TRUTH SEEKER of September 26th, hav been printed in pamphlet form, and can be obtained on remitting ten cents to this office. The little work is an exposition of the League's Demands, and will serve to inform the general public upon the political principles of Freethought. The pamphlet should be widely circulated.

LAST week we made a note of the attention paid to O. B. Whitford's "Bible Fabrications" by a Rhode Island deacon. The pious man burnt the book, and expressed a charitable wish that somebody might burn the author. An old lady in the same section of country has "gone him one better." She was presented with a copy of "St. Matthew Before the Court." She looked at it just long enough to find out its heretical character, and immediately consigned it to the flames, with the remark that she would like to put the author in the same stove, as well as the gentleman who gave her the book. The old lady must be awarded the palm for simon-pure Christianity.

Letters from Friends.

BUTLER, PA., Sept. 23, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: On the 21st John E. Remsburg lectured at Renfrew, a town six miles from here. Last night he lectured here. At both places the lectures were well attended by an intelligent, liberty-loving audience, principally made up of a floating population that follow the oil business from one field to another. They are a class of people whose opportunities for observation and acquaintance with the world hav laid deep the foundations of Liberalism. Our old settlers, as a general thing, vie with each other in bowing the lowest to the imaginary God of their fathers, and in telling the biggest falsehoods as regards their great faith and firm belief in the snake story, the deluge, the fiery furnace, Aaron's rod, Jacob's ladder, and the unfortunate Mary, who couldn't tell who was the father of her child. Mr. Remsburg lectured at Renfrew on "Sabbath Breaking," When he offered $100 for any passage of scripture in favor of the first day of the week, some old heads went home to look at the Bible, but they never came back. The Sabbath day is kept here by burning gas; we are not compelled to "gather sticks.' No person has been stoned to death here, but the Rev. Mr. Jones, who went to the penitentiary for forgery; the Rev. Mr. Townsend, who went for horse-stealing, and the Rev. Mr. Brough, who went West and didn't pay his debts, were all at a loss to see why the death penalty should not still be visited on Sabbath breakers.

Rev. Smith of the Methodist Episcopal church spoke disrespectfully of Thomas Paine on the Sabbath evening before Mr. Remsburg's lecture here, in alluding to the life and services of that dead patriot. I was in church. I gave him twenty-five cents for a free ticket, and invited him to come and hear, but he did not put in an appearance. I advise all Leagues that can do so, to hav Mr. Remsburg's lecture on "Thomas Paine" delivered in their neighborhood. He is a noble man. He has a small pair of scissors he carries with him; one blade is made of kindness, and the other of truth, and with these he clips the scales from the eyes of the blind, and behold they see.

Christianity has been the great curse of this neighborhood. Men contract debts, legally rob their fellow-beings, take a Christian bankrupt law, dress their wife and children, and sometimes a mistress, in silks, sit in the front pew of the church, and look down on the poor ragged children in the shadow of that temple, and sing, "Jesus, lover of my soul." We want no vicarious religion, but let every man meet his God face to face. SIMEON NIXON.

YORKSHIRE, N. Y., Sept., 28, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to giv an account of Mr. Remsburg's recent visit here. There are a few families of Liberals among us, some Spiritualists, some Agnostics, and, during the past four or five years, we hav had reading and conference meetings, with an occasional lecture from some able speaker. George Chainey, while Agnostic, gave us two lectures; Mrs. Colby has given four; Lyman C. Howe, two; Charles Watts, one (he prolonged his visit, however, at the request of a Baptist minister, whose zeal for debate was decidedly less after an encounter with the English Secularist); and upon the evenings of September 24th and 25th, John E. Remsburg gave his "Sabbath-Breaking" and "Bible Morals," these being the third and fourth lectures from him before our circle.

Our early meetings were held in the Advent church, which we had helped to build, and whose subsequent repairs and belongings we had been foremost in procuring; but after Mrs. Colby's first visit, our Methodist neighbors, without scruple, and in very questionable ways, obtained possession, and allowed us no longer within its "sacred" walls. Now we meet, ordinarily, in our own parlors, and our lectures hav been given in halls until the last, of which I am to tell you.

At first we found our pocketbooks pretty thoroughly depleted after one of these entertainments, but we never felt discouraged, and friends of the cause, in neighboring towns, becoming interested, we circulated a subscription paper, and enrolled over twenty names of persons each pledged to pay his or her pro-rata share of expense of lectures.

We concluded to make the occasion of Mr. Remsburg's coming a sort of "house-warming" of the new residence of our energetic fellow-workers, Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Clough. Three rooms, with seating capacity for one hundred and fifty people, were thrown together in such a way that nearly everyone in the audience could see as well as hear the speaker. The meeting had been well advertised, and the weather was perfect. Mr. Remsburg came on the noon train, and as evening approached, friends from ten and fifteen miles away began to arrive. Mr. Bernager Warner, for many years an indefatigable worker for reform, came from Strykersville. Mr. Ira Adams and wife, of North Java, appeared with friends and neighbors of their own, who had come forth to learn Freethought lessons from the lips of the Kansas orator. Sardinia and Holland, Arcade and West Yorkshire, were represented by friends "strong-hearted and true," while neither Sandusky nor Yorkshire Center were without a witness of this gathering of the Secular forces. Lights streamed from every window, bright flowers and autumn leaves bestowed their silent beauty, and music lent an enlivening charm to an atmosphere already genial with the presence of friendly faces and hopeful hearts. Mr. Remsburg spoke in his usual temperate and dignified manner, and was heard with earnest attention, and our first evening's success gave good promis of the next. On Friday our home friends went forth in the lovely autumn weather with their guests, and other good things, and met at the always hospitable board of the aforesaid D. W. Clough and wife, where all partook of needful refreshment, and enjoyed several hours of happy intercourse. Our old and valued friends, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Henry, of Farmersville, contributed their presence, and the last evening opened joyously. "Bible Morals" were treated to a searching investigation, which roused the feelings a Christian brother. He asked what we could hav in place of the Bible, and broke forth into a wild vindication of the Bible, churches, and Christianity. The audience was amused, but the speaker responded in a kindly and candid manner, answered the excitable gentleman's queries, and left the matter in the best possible shape. Surely he is doing a much-needed work, and doing it well

Plin and Tommy McArthur gave with happy effect several cornet sólos with organ accompaniment, and cordial satisfaction was manifest on every hand.

As we dispensed parting hospitalities to our guests, we felt a stronger sense of the truth and value of universal brotherhood, and that so to act our part as to leave behind "a better and bonnier world," must bless each and all.

Yours very truly, OLIVE DALEY SHERMAN.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., April 28, 1885.

MR EDITOR: Having read your valuable paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, for some time, I feel it a duty, as well as a very great pleasure, to express my approbation to you for the noble work you are performing in this world in redeeming it from the oppression of priestcraft. I do really wonder that everyone not connected with the church does not embrace Freethought at once, as its truths are as plain to me as the noonday sun. I was born in England and brought up by Christian parents until I was twenty-one years of age. There was in me as good material, I believe, as ever graced the Christian church, had its doctrins been true. I thought and said, when I came to Grand Rapids, thirty-five years ago, I would like to marry a lady out of the Methodist church. It was my intention, if possible, to fit myself for what I supposed was the holy ministry. I heard Thomas Paine spoken of in the Methodist church for the first time in my life, I believe. I thought, if he was such a bad man as the preachers described, I would know for myself, and at the first opportunity I got the "Age of Reason," and read it. The lies and misrepresentations the ministers made against that great and good man and his noble work made a lasting impression on my mind. I hope I shall be a truth seeker all the rest of my days. CHARLES SACH.

GENESEO, ILL, Sept. 9, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $5, for which please credit me for another year for THE TRUTH SEEKER; 75 cents for "The Godly Women of the Bible," and 30 cents' worth of "Modern Balaam." Balance please hand to Mr. Reynolds, the Tent man.

Excuse me for being so dilatory in sending the money. I hav no excuse to offer except pure negligence. I am well pleased with THE TRUTH SEEKER, and the way it is run, and hope ere long to get a little time to devote to the cause so many noble men and women are working for. All I can do is to hunt up subscribers and scatter THE TRUTH SEEKERS that I get. Well, you will say, we need workers in every part of the field, so I will take the part I am best fitted for. I would like to be at Albany, and shake hands with you and all the brave, good workers who will be there. I would come (and wife, too) if we could leave. L. G. BARNES.

MONTEZUMA, N. Y., Sept. 28, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Having seen it announced in your paper that J. E. Remsburg would lecture at Waterloo on the 27th of September, Brother Chas. Traver, myself, and families, determined to hear Mr. Remsburg once more from the rostrum. Waterloo (the home of the sophistical, quibbling, evasiv, insulting Father Lambert) is about fourteen miles from Montezuma in a southwesterly direction, and we accordingly started at 11 A.M. of that day, and arrived at 2 P.M. at the "Old Quaker Church," located four miles northwest of Waterloo, making our journey eighteen miles in all, something over the Sabbath day journey of the Bible. We found that Mr. Remsburg had delivered his lecture "False Claims" in the forenoon, and had been speaking about one hour on "Bible Morals" when we arrived. We were surprised at the large, enthusiastic, and appreciativ audience Mr. Remsburg was speaking to. The house was well filled, many of them veterans in the cause, conspicuously Mr. Bonnell, Mr. Mitchell, and, above all, Mr. Smith, our celebrated $300 (Tent Fund) man from Geneva, whom we almost shook the shoulder from, so glad were we to see him whose heart and purse go hand-in-hand in the cause of humanity and universal mental liberty. People came from miles around, bringing lunch and lunching on the ground, in which Mr. Remsburg heartily joined. It did Mr. Remsburg, as well as myself, great good to see old, gray-haired men and women, middle-aged, and young, eagerly listening to the sledge-hammer blows administered to orthodoxy. Distinctly noticeable was the absence of that bigotry and hatred of the ghost and god worshipers which so characterized our meetings last winter, and Mr. Remsburg was pleased for such absence and the warm reception given him, and it will be a visit long to be remembered. Mr. Remsburg, at the close, at once took cars for Belleville, Canada, where he is billed for lectures. He should be encouraged in his work because of his telling blows against orthodoxy, which are fast decimating their already thinned ranks.

This old Quaker church was built in 1817, and since that time its walls hav resounded with and the community listened to our country's greatest emancipators; the revered and intrepid Garrison and Phillips hav here made some of their mightiest efforts for human liberty, and the old church to-day is revered only for its former historic associations, and the manifold good done within its walls for human happiness here below. During our short stay we enjoyed the hospitality of our genial and respected friend Mr. Bonnell, and in the evening returned home doubly repaid for our trouble and fatigue.

Now for some Montezuma items. I find that Liberal ideas are fast gaining ground here, and a harvest of Infidelity will be reaped. Two churches are practically closed, one the Baptist and the other Free Methodist, and the Methodist Episcopal is following fast. This whole community is leavened with a spirit of inquiry and searching after truth, honeycombed, as it were, with doubt about the ghost and Bible business.

The Baptist is condemned as being desecrated since C. B. Reynolds delivered Baby's address, and its doors hav been closed since—that is the Christian charge. But the prime cause is, no members, no pay. And so with the Free Methodist, fighting over possession and title; and while I write report comes (and it is true) that Sunday evening every member whose name was on the Methodist Episcopal church book was dropped, and all thrown out again into the world, into and around sin and Infidelity; and if they ever get back, it must be through the doors of repentance, contrition, credulity, and fear, or they will be forever and eternally damned, as they think we shall be—alas, poor wretches! And all because they will not, and cannot, liv in peace and harmony in the church.

And if not in the church, how can they out of it? Only by becoming true and consistent Secularists, cleaning themselvs of the dust of superstition, ignorance, and fear, and casting their old Bible (a pagan relic of the past) behind them. How would it do to work some of these churches in the cause of Freethought and humanity for a while and let the people see the contrast? Cover the walls with the pictures of Paine, Ingersoll, and others, and the choicest gems of their thoughts. Well, we shall hav some of these churches for walls this winter, and you may expect trouble at Montezuma from now on; for we know no stop, no fear of threats from man ghosts or Bible ghosts. Our course is onward, for love of truth, justice, and knowledge in this world, and, battling for these sacred principles, like Banquo's ghost we will not down.

EDWARD ROSS.

CEDAR FALLS, IOWA, Sept. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: A few weeks ago we had the pleasure of having the Infidel and Agnostic, Brother Jamieson, with us for a few days, during which time he delivered five able and eloquent addresses. Brother Jamieson fortifies his positions by making liberal quotations from the Bible, and in the kindest and most inviting manner he uniformly asks to be set right if he is wrong, and courteously challenges the clergy or others who hold opposit or different views to meet him in public oral debate.

There are twelve organized churches here, with a population of 3,400 people. The nearest approach to Liberalism that any of these churches come is Universalism. Hence you perceive that the place is hedged about with orthodoxy. These churches flatter themselvs that this little city is impregnable, that they hav a chattel mortgage on both the souls and bodies of all within its (to them) sacred precincts, and they fail not to set their faces against all and everything that has any appearance of progress, or that may not strictly agree with their accepted ideas about religion and immortality, etc. Their notions about God and religion hav been thoroughly instilled into them, hence they are obtuse and obstinate.

Thus it becomes apparent why all good Spiritualists extend the hand of fellowship to such noble teachers as Brothers Jamieson and Col. Robert G. Ingersoll. They are needed in the moral world to break up the fallow ground of fallacious and false religious teachings and systems, just as the great prairie-breaking plow is a necessity to the farmer to break up the toughened and hard prairie sod and expose it to the mellowing and pulverizing influences of the atmosphere, the elements of light, heat, and moisture. They are a necessity, and are perhaps not the least useful among all classes of public teachers. Therefore we hail them and bid them goodspeed in their noble endeavors. J. C. N. ABBOTT.

BERLIN, N. J., Sept. 25, 1885.

MR EDITOR: It is surprising to me how women can think so much of a Bible, and do so much for a religion that has made them slaves. Man has robbed women of nearly all their rights from the time of the earliest history. Though the wife works more hours each day than the husband, her earnings go into his purse, and if she wants a little money even to buy comfortable clothing, she must go to her husband and ask, not for what she has earned, nor yet for a small part of it, but must go like a cringing slave or a beggar asking for a gift. If she works for wages she is allowed only about half as much as a man for doing the same work, and doing it just as well. She must be subject to the same laws that men are, and if she owns property must pay taxes to support the government, yet is not allowed to vote nor hav any voice in making the laws that govern her. The liar, the thief, and the drunkard can vote for the teachers of her children, but she cannot.

These are only a few of the outrages committed against the rights of women, and the Bible, and most of the religions, sanction these and other outrages, and the clergy, who should be the first to advocate the rights of women, are really their worst enemies.

Probably no other man ever lived who has done women so much harm as St. Paul has. He forbade their speaking in church, though the same Bible says male and female are all one in Christ. If that is so, then women hav the same right to speak in church, and the same right in all things that men hav.

A year or so ago three or four hundred Methodist bishops and clergymen held a great conference in Philadelphia. When it commenced one of the city clergymen arose and welcomed the strangers of the city. The minister who replied to him warned the people that they had come to occupy all the soft beds and eat all the good food and luxuries the city could supply. Rather cheeky for men who had come to be lodged and fed without paying for it, and still more cheeky for men who pretended to be the followers and servants of one who never asked for soft beds and good food, and could make a dinner of raw corn after preaching without money or price.

But the women took the hint, whether they needed it or not, and went to work to provide soft beds, good food, and luxuries; and after they had fed and waited on the indolent, greedy louts about four weeks, the question came up in the conference whether women should be allowed to preach or exhort, and was voted down, thus placing women on a level with idiots, and the words of old Paul and other scripture were quoted in support of the outrage. Had I been in the place of one of those women I would hav gone home and written, "No more soft beds, good food, nor luxuries for priests in this house forever," and would hav pinned it to their satchels or baggage, put them out on the doorsteps and locked the door, and never again would hav entered a Methodist church. But the poor, silly dupes, who had been so long hoodwinked by those worthless drones, pocketed the insult as the voice of God and hav gone on preparing soft beds and good food for them, and holding fairs and festivals to pay the salaries of the lazy, impertinent louts the same as before.

Women are very nice to support churches, very nice to work fancy slippers and morning gowns for the priests, very nice to prepare soft beds, good food, and luxuries for them, very nice to get up fairs, feasts, and festivals to raise their salaries, but when it comes to competing with them in the pulpit they must be put down and smothered. They know women are quicker witted when not smothered, and hav a greater gift of gab than they hav, and do not dare to giv them a chance to compete with them, for in that case their occupation would soon be gone; so they keep them in ignorance and subjection, as old Paul has commanded. But the tide is turning; women outside of the church are getting their mouths open, and ere long the clergy will hav to put on feather-stuffed breeches and go to hatching goslings, for they are good for nothing else.

J. Hacker.

Yuba City, Cal., Sept. 18, 1885.

Mr. Editor: I hav been a subscriber of your valuable paper for more than a year and a half, and hav never given my opinion, but will endeavor to giv you a few lines to insert in the grandest and greatest expounder of truth on this continent.

God created or made everything that was created, both good and evil, and pronounced them good not only, but very good. He also foreordained all things and knew all things before the foundation of the world. And because man did precisely what God foreknew and ordained he should do, he must send him to a place of torment, which the Methodist exhorter calls "hell." God and the devil, it seems to me, are in league together; God, in the outset, selected a part of the human family for his chosen people, and he has been busy ever since to keep them with him.

He would first be elated over the sweet, savory smell of some barbecue; second, he would curse, or kill, or threaten to exterminate them, then he would repent of the evil he thought to do. Then his satanic majesty would get jealous, and he and God would hav a round or two. God would compromise with him for a few souls that God would transport, because they had done what he (God) had ordained they should do. His dearest ones were Noah, who got drunk and divested himself of clothing; Abraham, who was a common liar; Isaac, I remember, also told an untruth, likewise his wife. Jacob deceived his uncle. Moses was a murderer; he also broke the Ten Commandments that God made for the chosen few. David was a man after God's own heart, and he committed adultery. Solomon was the wisest man living; God endowed him with superior wisdom, yet he was the greatest polygamist that ever lived. It is stated that he had innumerable wives, which is more than the modern Brigham Young possessed.

His satanic majesty has been quiet for some time. But the Christ is born, and he takes the man Christ into a mountain and shows him all the kingdoms, tells him that he would giv them all to him if he would fall down and worship him. Seems as though that Satan had something invested; one would think the controling interest. At another time he flies to the top of the pinnacle of the temple with this self-same Christ. His satanic majesty flying with Christ, the worst enemy he had—just think of it! God first created the devil to tempt and torment his creatures, then brought in a "Christ" after four thousand years to be killed, probably by his own diciples or followers, to finish the story that had been continued from time to time.

There are no subscribers for The Truth Seeker but myself in this county that I know of. Colonel Ingersoll was in this vicinity once, but it was impossible for me to go and hear him.

P. W. Rowe.

Altoona, Pa., Sept. 26, 285.

Mr. Editor: It seems to me that the question, How can we remedy the sufferings produced by poverty and want? is one of the most complicated that ever engaged the attention of philanthropists and statesmen. When we observe the condition of the poor in foreign countries, as well as in our own, it is quite enough to dishearten us, and lead us to the conclusion that pessimism has at least some semblance of truth. It is very true that we hav some good and noble leaders in the cause of the toiling millions, conspicuous among whom is the invincible giant and master mind, Charles Bradlaugh, of England.

But it seems to me that much of the trouble lies with the toilers themselvs, especially in our country, where they are not thoroughly organized, for without strong organization their efforts are a hopeless task. Then, again, as long as poor people surrender their independence to an imaginary being, and contribute a portion of their earnings to keep in power an army of lazy priests, they can never expect to succeed. Then there is another matter that needs consideration. There must be reform and economy within the ranks of the workmen themselvs. There are thousands to-day that are loud in their denunciation of the wrongs inflicted on laborers who neglect their wives and children and deposit their monthly earnings in lager beer and rum shops. We certainly must reform our ranks, and divest them of all such persons, before we can expect to make our influence potential in the world.

Now, in this country there is an aristocracy that is rapidly growing from year to year. It is only a question of time for it to become identical with its contemporaneous oligarchy in the Old World. It was this that made Anarchism, Communism, Nihilism, and Socialism possible in the lands beyond the sea. But when we look at the condition of Russia, where to express one's love of liberty is a crime; where the poor are crushed beneath the iron feet of despotism; whence amid Siberian wastes thousands end their lives in weary exile; where many noble men and women hav passed their lives in the gloomy dungeons of St. Petersburg; where a despotic tyrant is clothed with a power by which he makes ninety millions of people subservient to his will—how, then, can we censure the Nihilists? For if they cannot obtain their rights by peaceful means, then welcome Nihilism ten thousand times.

In this our own boasted land of freedom we can, if we will, reach the desired result by persistent effort, untiring energy, and unfaltering self-devotion. We also need individual reform. Men must become more independent, more self-reliant, and more solidified. Then we hav the ballot box. There we are a power if we only choose to execute it. We must not allow ourselvs to be carried away by the melodious strains of brass bands, oily-tongued orators, or angel-smiling, chronic office-seekers. But with brave faith and manhood, and an unflinching devotion to the principles of right, we may yet liv to see the elevation of labor in this our own favored land.

William J. Burns.

Burr Oak, Mich., Sept. 29, 1885.

To Mr. Malcolm: I think you are real cruel to expose my "ignorance of history." My reputation as veracious historian is all mangled, mutilated, mashed into mince-meat, as it were. You hav spoken and the world now knows who the Bourbons were. They were kings of France. I thought all the time they were kings of Kentucky, but please forgiv me, and I won't do so again. Probably I became confused while thinking about those great folk. Then I was wholly bewildered when I tried to follow the course of your peculiarly ponderous (and probably patented) logic in The Truth Seeker of Sept. 26th. My head aches. But this may be caused by the bad air resting on my "large tract of vacant lands in Michigan." You want me to "confine myself to the argument." I had not learned that there was any argument between us. You unintentionally made some statements that were false and misleading. I knew they were. I corrected them and gave a true statement of the situation, and that was all there was of it. There was no chance for an argument. I hav not said that you falsified, but if you are determined to place yourself in the position of a falsifier by repeating what you said, I am not to blame. I cannot change my statement of Aug. 22d. Of course there is no law to "compel" you to accept anything of mine; not even a present of a million acres or so of my "vacant land" that I am, "for aught you know," keeping "out of use." When I first corrected your gross absurdities, I said that I had no hope of infusing any light into your cranium. I was not addressing you. I was speaking to those who were likely to be misled by your statements. I refer other readers of this paper to my former articles on Michigan lands, published some months ago.

N. G. W.

Ballston Spa, N. Y., Sept. 27, 285.

Mr. Editor: By the time this reaches you, you will hav received a case of High Rock Spring water.

The Convention was a season long to be remembered, on account of the outpouring of, not the spirit, but common sense. Myself and wife would not hav been absent for any amount of money.

I received the two books. I think they are immense. I am letting my orthodox friends read "Why Don't God Kill the Devil?" and we are having a sheol of a time.

Yours for truth and humanity, Wm. Thorpe.

[Again Mr. Thorpe is entitled to the thanks of the Truth Seeker people for his favor. He seems to liv to perform kindnesses.—Ed. T. S.].

Utica, Minn., Sept. 15, 1885.

Mr. Editor: I see by your paper that our friends in the Liberal ranks are having lectures and meetings in different parts of the country, and it givs me pleasure to record the fact that we, too, hav been favored with some lectures by E. C. Walker, of Kansas. Saturday evening he spoke in St. Charles to a fair audience—subject: "Popular Objections to Freethought Answered." Sunday, at 3 p.m., subject: "Christianity vs. Civilization." He dealt Christianity some sledge-hammer blows, which made some of the good Christians wince perceptibly, but it remained for him to do the crowning act at our place (Utica) Sunday evening. His subject was, "Divine and Human Providence," and he held the audience spellbound for one and a half hours. If the Christians present havn't got some new ideas, I am very much mistaken. One woman who went there very much prejudiced against Infidels said she wished we could hav another lecture of that kind, and also she didn't see why they could not hav as good order in their meetings.

I think these lectures will do much good in this section—set people to thinking.

B. Peabody.

Oregon, Mo., Sept. 28, 1885.

Mr. Editor: Why do people so strive to accumulate wealth and build up rich families? My life has been a constant witness of the growth of small communities to empires; of regions where we hunted wild beasts, and where wild men hunted us, becoming dense settlements with great and growing cities all around; of plain, common immigrants becoming, in some cases, powerful citizens of world-wide fame, and the embassadors to emperors or companions of princes. During this time, I hav seen simple enterprising men by the practice of austere economy and self-denial, grow into millionaires. A rage for building up families, such as they had looked up to in the East, possessed them like some disease. In every instance, without one single exception, I hav seen this wealth become a curse in the hands of its inheritors. Ah! the simple, industrious, careful parents who looked with horror on the vices and dissipations of the wealthy whom they knew in youth, little suspected that they themselvs were working to hav their own descendants re-enact the very same scenes of debauchery. Three states hav I seen grow up from rude beginnings into empires. Three generations hav I seen amassing wealth that cursed their descendants.

Holt.

Planetary Formation.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 25, 1885.

Mr. Editor: There being a multiplicity of contradictory theories on the subject of planetary formation that are promulgated in the name of science and divine revelation, I think it best to dispense with those authorities, and trust to self-evident facts that are within the domain of every man's observation, and so clear and prominent that even fools, if moderately sane, should comprehend their logical import without difficulty.

Those who observe the operations of nature, however casually and superficially, can hardly fail to note the fact that vegetable and animal formations are reduced to vapor and fine dust by the process of decomposition, and that no matter can be assimilated by vegetable or animal formations unless reduced to fluid.

Moreover, it is a practically demonstrated fact that no intelligent attempt at formation can be made until an imaginary conception of the form is obtained, nor then, except by cooperation of reason and will, and these, being inherent properties of matter, could not hav acted upon matter until evoluted into activ being, and no formation of matter being possible without their action, it should logically follow that all matter was primarily formless and void.

Furthermore, chemical analysis demonstrates the fact that all formations of matter are compounds of gases that are susceptible of being reduced to impalpable vapor, and should necessarily hav been fluid when compounded, and no condition of matter being elementary, except the lowest to which it is susceptible of being reduced, it should logically follow that all matter was primarily formless vapor, thoroughly confounded and indistinguishable.

Planetary matter, being subjected to the frigidity of ether, was necessarily dead, until the subtil fluid that occupies the center of our planetary system, by the force of its superior density and consequent gravitation, extricated itself from the mass and assumed its present position at the center, from whence it acted upon planetary matter as it now does, producing warmth, vitality, and action that made its separation from ether a physical necessity. Its separation from ether being impracticable, except by its concentration in masses by itself, planetary formation was also a physical necessity, and was effected by the affinities of planetary matter and repulsion of the ether; their action being superinduced by the action of the central fluid upon planetary atmosphere or in conjunction therewith.

Now, planetary matter being separated from ether, and concentrated in masses by itself, its chemical affinities should make its rapid formation into all the forms of matter that planets are composed of a physical necessity; for the conditions that then existed were absolutely necessary to such formation, and cannot recur. Therefore, all subsequent formations, if any, are but the incidental results of alluvial deposits and their petrefaction, incidentally effecting a transmutation of original formations.

Now, it appears to be an absolute necessity of nature that all animal formations should hav originally grown out of the earth on the same principle that vegetables do, and it appears that mother earth, with her usual prolificacy, brought forth an abundant crop of animal formations of every variety, and, with but few unimportant exceptions, a liberal percentage of every variety hav escaped all the calamities that hav been visited upon the earth; their annihilation by a deluge to the contrary notwithstanding.

It is generally well known that animal formations cannot be produced except in a steady temperature about equal to the average blood heat of animals. Therefore the earth and atmosphere should hav been, and evidently were, superheated when animal formations were produced. The violent friction to which the particles of matter were subjected by the process of planetary formation, should hav moderately superheated the planets from center to circumference. But when planetary formation was completed, the superheat should hav been rapidly radiated into, and assimilated by, the atmosphere, and the present temperature established. Then all animal formations should necessarily hav been produced within a few months after our planet was formed; and if any species of animals should become extinct, they cannot be reproduced, for the simple reason that the conditions necessary to their reproduction cannot recur, unless all matter should be relegated to formless vapor, and the whole process of formation be repeated.

Now, imagination, reason, and will, being inherent properties that cause and control the actions of all matter, I should say they evidently constitute the God of nature, by whom we liv, move, and hav a being. These properties being all that appear to be discoverable in man, that make a man of him, it should logically follow that man is created in the image of God, unless, peradventure, man was in being before these properties were.

Mammon is the only man-made God who has been revealed to my view. Millionaires and so-called self-made men are the creations of this man-made God, and they are usually vain of their creator, and honor him as the God of our salvation, and would fain persuade all men to fall down and worship him.

The basic principle of our civilization makes us all the slaves of mammon, whom we serve for the crumbs that fall from his table, and for which we eagerly scramble like a flock of barn-yard fowls for the handful of corn thrown to them from the well-filled garner. Such a civilization may be the best that dunghill fowls are capable of appreciating, but it evidently does not fill the bill of human aspirations. Therefore so long as human intelligence is capable of devising and establishing a higher and broader civilization for man, and men hav not the honesty and courage to accept it, we should hav cause to regret that we are men, and to blush for human ignorance, knavery, and poltroonery. Were we asses, we should possibly find a reasonable excuse for such stupidity though, in justice to the ass, I think we should reserve the privilege of a doubt.

J. A. Tuttle.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Lady Golden-Rod.

"O pretty Lady Golden-rod,
I'm glad you've come to town!
I saw you standing by the gate,
All in your yellow gown.
No one was with me, and I thought
You might be lonely, too;
And so I took my cardcase
And came to visit you.

"You're fond of company, I know;
You smile so at the sun,
And when the winds go romping past,
You bow to every one.
How you should ever know them all,
I'm sure I cannot tell;
But when I come again, I hope
You'll know me just as well.

"I love you, Lady Golden-rod;
You are so bright and fine;
You never hav a rumpled frock,
Or tangled hair like mine.
I think your mamma comes at night,
When we are all away,
And dresses you in green and gold,
Fresh for another day.

"How tall you are, dear Golden-rod!
You're taller most than I;
cannot grow so very fast,
Although I try and try.
Oh, here's mamma, dear Golden-rod!
I'll ask her please to stop;
And she shall say which one of us
Comes highest at the top."

The lovely Lady Golden-rod!
She surely understood;
For when wee Margie turned around,
She bent down all she could;
Until the fluffy yellow heads
Upon a level came,
And Margie's mother, smiling, said:
"Your hights are just the same!"

Three Little Fishers.

Three little fishers trudged over the hill,
Over the hill in the sun's broad glare,
With rods and crook'd pins to the brook by the mill,
While three fond mothers sought for them everywhere!
For boys will go fishing, though mothers deny;
Watching their chance, they sneak off on the sly,
To come safely back in the gloaming.

Three mothers waited outside of the gate;
Three little fishers, tired, sunburnt, and worn,
Came into sight as the evening grew late,
Their chubby feet bleeding, their clothes all torn;
For "boys will be boys"—hav a keen eye for fun,
While mothers fret, fume, scold, and succumb,
And welcome them home in the gloaming.

Three little fishers were called to explain—
Each stood condemned, with a thumb in his eye,
They promised never to do so again,
And were hung up in the pantry to dry!
Three mothers heaved great sighs of relief,
An end had been put to their magnified grief,
When the boys came home in the gloaming.
—Frank H. Stauffer.

Silent Influences.

"I don't see as little children are good for anything," said Uncle John Lovering. "I don't see why they were not allowed to come along already grown up."

"O Uncle John! Think of the little babies!"

"Little cares! Little troubles! Little nuisances!" said he, sneeringly.

No, Uncle John did not realize what he was saying. He did not know what a vast amount of influence a wee toddler is all the time exerting. It is the little silent influences that sometimes accomplish the greatest amount of work. In the old countries of the East, where stand pile upon pile of stone, old ruins, castles, and mansions built of hardest rock and whose masonry was so solid that time has had no effect upon it—storms, tempests, earthquakes even, all hav left these ruins undisturbed. But a close examination reveals the stones separating, breaking away from each other and preparing to drop and crumble. On the gentle summer breezes hav been borne the seeds of clinging vines. Gently hav they been deposited within the wide cracks and seams of the granit walls. The warm sun, the soft dews and rains hav awakened them to life, and their little rootlets penetrating the tiniest crevices, creeping beneath the lichen on the rocks, hav at length pushed them apart. Hence may be seen that these little forces are accomplishing what the battles of the storm-king, the thunderbolt, had not power to do, and gradually beneath the power of the clinging vines, the old castles and towers of medieval ages are falling asunder. And thus, the little ones, the babies, the children, are sending warm, clinging tendrils of affection around the storm-scarred hearts of men and women, breaking the stony structures of avarice, greed, selfishness, and vice, and covering humanity's cares and sorrows with the green leaves and budding flowers of love and tenderness. S. H. W.

A Crow Story.

Dear Miss Wixon: When you first started the Children's Corner I wrote a little for it, but soon found that others, better qualified than myself, were ready and willing to help the thing along. I lay back and read while they wrote, until I read a crow story in the Corner, and then I thought I must write my own experience in the crow line.

When I was a boy some one found a crow's nest with two young crows in it. They gave one to me, and the other to a neighbor's boy. We took good care of them, and soon the crows felt themselvs as much at home as we did ourselvs, and grew up to be very large, and very mischievous. Now, to be as brief as possible, I will tell you some of his mischievous tricks. My father once returned from a peddling tour in the then far West (Ohio), and brought home a quantity of pocketknives. At that time I was going to school, and in that day all the writing was done with quill pens, and the teacher had to make and mend all the pens in school, and in a large school it was a large job, so the teacher advised all the larger scholars to get knives of their own and he would teach them to make and mend their own pens. As my father had lots of them I told him what the teacher said, and he willingly gave me a penknife, but in a few days my knife was lost. I told my father, and he willingly gave me another, but in a short time that knife was lost. My pockets were examined for holes, but no holes found. I was charged with carelessness, but, at last, my father gave me another, making three; and as usual, my third knife was lost. My father refused to giv me any more, and, for a spell, I went without a knife. Then I coaxed my mother, and she got me a knife, which made the fourth; but, somehow, this one got lost as mysteriously as the others. My mother finally gave me one more, making five, but that also disappeared. My father, being very strict about the Sabbath, obliged me on Saturdays to provide wood for over Sunday. I had worked the wood-pile over and over, and now found nothing but hard knots and logs that I dreaded, and on looking around I saw an old stump that had been rolled up against the fence, and looked as though I could split it to pieces easier than the old logs. I pulled it over, and under some of the roots lay all five of my knives, where the crow had left them! He had been sly enough to take them when I was not looking, and had hidden them all in one place.

At another time, my sister undertook to wash out her heavy head of hair, and took from her hair a very large high comb (the style of combs then was large and high) and laid it down, got her head over the tub and hair loose. She thought she heard a noise, and looking around she saw the crow with the comb going away; she went after him, but could not get near enough to touch it before the crow would pick it up and fly off a little distance, and laying it down would walk round and round it, peeking under it and constantly jabbering to himself, but was careful to not let anyone come near enough to get it before he would pick it up and fly away. She then called to me to come and help her, but neither of us could get the comb, so we concluded that we would watch him; that when he got tired of it he would leave it, and then we would get it; but after he got tired of looking at it and talking to it he laid it down, and putting one foot on the comb to hold it down he took one of the long teeth in his bill, gave a jerk, and out came a tooth. That alarmed us and we tried again and again to get the comb, but all to no purpose; he never left that comb until every tooth was out, and it was quite an expensiv comb, costing somewhere between two and five dollars. At another time my mother went into the garden to pick some early beans, and as few of them were large enough, it was difficult to find enough for dinner. The crow was with her, and seeing her pick beans, he went at it and picked all he came to and dropped them on the ground, the most of them not an inch long. My mother thought he would destroy all the beans and ordered him to stop, but he would pick; so to save the beans she gave him a slap, which made him very angry. In a moment all his feathers pointed to his head and he looked as large as a pail; he gave a fierce yell and flew over the fence into a peach-tree loaded with green peaches, and began tearing off the peaches as fast as he could, screaming all the time with rage. After a while he got over his pet and came to the house with his feathers all the right way, and a more gentlemanly crow you never saw. No one would think by his looks that he had ever done a naughty trick in his life; he tried his best to be sociable and friendly, and we had of course to forgiv him.

Another trait he had peculiar to himself, and that was to take care of whatever food was given him more than he wanted for the present. After he had finished his meal, if there was any left, he would hide it away and watch it until he got hungry again; he would fight anything that came to it, and save it, too. I hav seen him whip a large old sow many a time. He would catch hold of one her teats and hang on; the hog in turning around to catch him only swung the crow out of her reach, and finally would run away as hard as she could, squealing as though a dog had hold of her.

He finally got to stealing the hens' eggs, and my father said I must kill him or giv him away. I could not kill him, because he went everywhere with me. He would go to school with me and then return home again, and when I went with the cows to pasture or after the horses he was sure to go along, and would keep talking all the time as though I could understand him. He was my constant companion, and I could not kill him, so I gave him away to one of my chums, and he took him home, but soon he was caught stealing eggs and the father of the boy threw a club at him and thus put an end to him.

Now I will relate what the other crow that came out of the same nest did. He lived with a family about a mile from us that was pretty well off in those days. They had silver spoons, which was not common, the common people usually using iron or pewter spoons. All at once one of the silver spoons was gone, and everything from the table to the hog-trough was searched, but no spoon was then found. Soon another spoon was gone, and another search was made, but all to no purpose. Another and another went, but no one suspected the crow till all were gone but one. One day the women were washing, and it being harvest time, the men must hav their dinner exactly on time, because the days were long and weather warm, and, not being quite done washing, the women set it aside to finish after dinner. After that meal was over, they thought they would finish the wash and do the dishes later. They stepped into the wash-room, but one of them immediately returned, and saw the crow leaving the house with the last spoon in his bill and fly away with it. They watched him fly across an open space about half a mile to a tall oak-tree in a neighboring wood, that had a dead, dry top, and there the crow lit. After a while he came back, as innocent-looking as a crow could look. At night the women told the men what they had seen. The men got permission to cut the tree, and when it fell the dead and dry top broke all to pieces and out fell all the lost spoons. Now, one characteristic of the crow is to hide all the articles of one kind in one place, as you will see by the place where I found my knives and where they found their spoons.

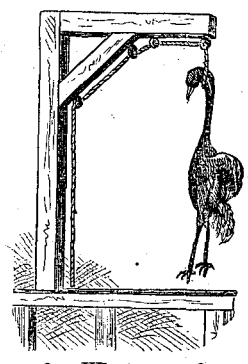
One more freak of my crow and I hav done. One day I saw him take some of his dinner to hide away; he followed a path made by the hens through some tall weeds, and when he came out he took hold of a very large chip and tried to carry it, but could not. He then took hold of a chip and went backward along the path among the tall weeds, jerking it about two inches at a time. He finally came out, and I thought I would see what he had done with the chip, so I parted the weeds and followed the path about two rods and found the chip placed nicely over his extra dinner; so you see how careful crows are about what is their own. Hiram Van Pelt.

Cleveland, O., Sept. 18, 1885.

[We thank our venerable friend for his contribution to our Corner, and all the more because it was written beneath the burden and infirmities of years. May age rest lightly upon him, and may his declining days be cheered by kindness and affection.—Ed. C. C.]

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—porphyritic puzzle.



Upon this page before your wondering gaze,
Dear puzzlers, find what I shall call my whole.
Now raise your keen-edged sword of thought
On high. Cut me in twain. Then find a stream
Whose limpid waters ever roll beneath
A bright and cloudless sky.
My other half sounds like a name
Sometimes applied to one whose charms
An ogler oft can see. Inversed,
It is myself, as sure as three times one are three.
Now with your keen-edged sword once more
Curtail my whole. And pray what do we find?
A poet, sure; an able man; and one of Mighty mind. He had a foe whose sickle keen
Ofttimes the good will reap; which to the grave
Our poet brought, to that land of dreamless sleep.
Now to the gentle poser who solves my puzzle first,
Or one that poet lovers their mind to rapture turns,
I shall send by early mail a book right nicely bound,
Written by nature's poet, the immortal "Bobbie" Burns.

Alloona, Pa. Wm. J. Burns.

2.—inversed charade.

Six letters spell my fearful name
When starting at my head;
But start behind, you then will find,
That I am partly red.
To find my most devoted friend,
Inverse or else transpose,
And also see, with letters three,
Something to stain your nose.

Alloona, Pa. William J. Burns.

3.—What poem?

4.—"catch" puzzle.

The upper picture represent an object.

Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 show certain things which that object possesses.

Nos. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 show what that object can do.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, SEPT. 26, 1885.

1.— WATER
ATINA
TISRI
ENROL
RAILS
WATER RAILS.

2.—Hav pity for the poor and aged. 3.—Pointer. A pointer (dog) has hair, tongue, nose, tail, teeth. He can snarl, point, track, bark, and play.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN!

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS;

A STORY OF THE RIGHTWAY ALMSHOUSE.

BY JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE.

Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"APPLES OF GOLD."

A story-book for the young folks. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellen work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles.

Price 20 cents.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

By Prof. H. M. Kottinger, A.M. Price, $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE
PROBLEM OF THE UNIVERSE,
AND
Its Scientific Solution,
WITH SOME
CRITICISMS OF UNIVERSOLOGY.
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.
Price 20 cents. For sale at this office.

N. D. C.

How to Become

A MEDIUM

IN YOUR OWN HOME.

A 16-page pamphlet, containing full instructions and a letter designating all your phases of mediumship, and a copy of the Riddle of the American Spiritual Sphinx, or the Lost Key Found, sent FREE upon receipt of three two-cent stamps to cover expenses of mailing, etc. Address, JAMES A. BLISS, 121 West Concord st., Boston, Mass. 39tf.

Something New!

Every Liberal should hav one of our beautiful

MOTTO CARDS,

(7x22), ready for framing, for their homes.
Twenty-five cents per copy.
Also Large Cards (14x22), and expressing the NINE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.
Thirty cents each.
Circulars sent FREE. Address all orders to
LIBERAL MOTTO SUPPLY CO., Troy, N. Y.
40tf

POCKET ATLAS

Of the

WORLD.

Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE.

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-page colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents, by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N. Y.
40

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:

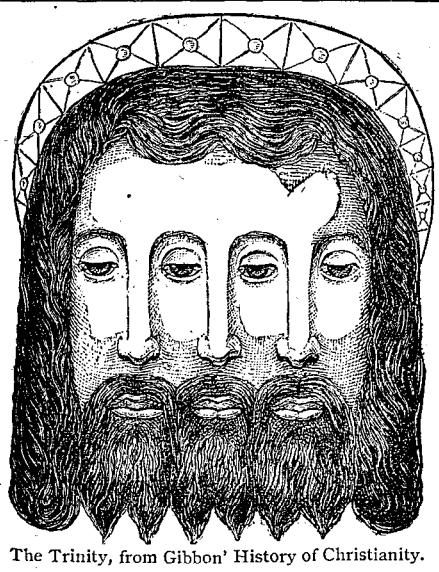
OR,

MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who have helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.



PRICE, ... $1.25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

EVOLUTION:

A SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE.

By Robert C. Adams.

Paper, 25 cents. For Sale at this Office.

The Trinity, from Gibbon' History of Christianity.

History of Christianity

AND

A VINDICATION

of some passages in the "History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" by

EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With a Life of Gibbon, preface and notes by the editor, including critical notes by Guizot, Milman, Wenck, an "English Churchman," and other scholars.

1 vol. 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With 65 engravings. $2 00

This book shows when, where, and how Christianity originated, who were its founders, and what were the sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

"I know of no book that contains more real and valuable information upon the origin of Christianity."—R. G. INGERSOLL.

"One of the most learned and interesting books ever written and published."—Boston Investigator.

FOR SALE AT TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

JUST OUT.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

DR. SUNDERLAND'S LAST AND GREATEST WORK.

IDEOLOGY.

Mental Anesthesia Self-Induced, Miraculous Cures Self-Made, Involution and Evolution in the Human Mind as in the Whole of Things.

By DR. LAROY SUNDERLAND,

(Foundation Fellow of the Society of Science, Literature, and Art, London).

CONTENTS:

Vol. 1: Chapter I.—Selfhood. II.—Experimental. III.—Mental Anesthesia. IV.—Miraculous Cures. V.—Ideology. VI.—The Highest Laws. VII.—No "Royal Road." VIII.—Mentality. IX.—Idiocrasy. X.—"Christian" Science. XI.—The Bible Idea of Inspiration. XII.—The Bible Idea of Its God. XIII.—The Bible Idea of Witchcraft. XIV.—The Bible Idea of Mediums. XV.—Bloody Ideas, All Besmeared with Blood. XVI.—Barbarian Lies. XVII.—Humanity Forever.

Vol. 2: Chapter I.—Gullibility. II.—Mental Epidemics. III.—The South Sea Bubble. IV.—The Mississippi Scheme. V.—The Crusades. VI.—The Trance Epidemic. VII.—Fascination. VIII.—Religious Revivals. IX.—Clairvoyance. X.—The Witchcraft Madness. XI.—Modern Witchcraft. XII.—Mediumship a Wide-spread Epidemic. XIII.—Psychometry and "Deadheads." XIV.—The Contagious Dance of Death. XIV.—And What Then? XVI.—Science.

TWO VOLUMES IN ONE. PRICE $1.50.

Published by J. P. Mendum, Investigator Office, Boston, Mass.
4t41

Ingersoll Catechised:

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies $1; 100 copies $3. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

THE MAGNIFICEN

COLORED LITHOGRAPHS

—OF THE—

D. M. BENNETT MONUMENT.

PRINTED IN SEVEN COLORS ON THE BEST LITHOGRAPH PAPER, SIZE, 22½ x 28½.

THE BRONZE MEDALLION

PRINTS AS LARGE AS A CABINET PHOTOGRAPH, THUS GIVING NOT ONLY A PICTURE OF THE MONUMENT, BUT AN ACCURATE

LIKENESS OF D. M. BENNETT.

The lithograph is designed for framing, and will be a treasure for all Liberals.

Sent, postpaid, and securely wrapped, to subscribers to the Monument Fund for 30 cents; to others, 50 cents. Address this office.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, with Sixty-seven Engravings, Preface, and Notes.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.
Zadig; or, Fate.
The Sage and the Atheist.
The Princess of Babylon.
The Man of Forty Crowns.
The Huron; or, The Pupil of Nature.
Micromegas.
The World as it Goes.
The Black and the White.
Memnom the Philosopher.
Andres Des Touches at Siam.
The Study of Nature.
A Conversation With a Chinese.
Plato's Dream.
A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.
An Adventure in India.

I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find nothing in it trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all, that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observation of the vulgar.—Voltaire.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, 4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail:

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study, the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy. The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

The BIBLE—WHENCE and WHAT?

BY RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B,

A Book of Hints and Suggestions Concerning the literature contained in the Old and New Testaments. 12mo. 232 pages. Price, $1.

THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

Wanted—Lecture Engagements.

The city of Cleveland failed to convict "Gorsuch, the Anarchist." He is again free, and open for lecture engagements. Address,

W. J. GORSUCH,
4t38 107 Fifth Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

A New and Useful Work.

WEDLOCK, OR, THE RIGHT RELATIONS OF THE SEXES—Disclosing the Laws of Conjugal Selection, and showing Who May and Who May Not Marry. A Scientific Treatise By SAMUEL R. WELLS, One vol., 12mo, 250 pages; plain muslin, price, $1.50; in fancy gilt binding, $2.

Among the subjects treated are the following: Marriage a Divine Institution; Qualifications for Matrimony; The Right Age to Marry; Motives for Marrying; Marriages of Consanguinity—of Cousins, when Justifiable; Conjugal Selection—Affinities; Courtship—Long or Short; Duty of Parents; Marriage Customs and Ceremonies of all Nations; Ethics of Marriage; Second Marriages, are they Admissible? Jealousy—Its Cause and Cure; Causes of Separation and Divorce; Celibacy—Ancient and Modern; Polygamy and Pantagamy; Love Signs in the Features, and How to Read Them; Physiognomy; Sensible Love Letters—Examples; The Poet's Wife; The Model Husband and the Model Wife—the Mutual Obligations, Privileges, and Duties; The Poetry of Love, Courtship, and Marriage—Being a Practical Guide to all the Relations of HAPPY WEDLOCK.

The book is handsomely printed and beautifully bound It was intended more especially for young people, but may be read with interest and with profit by those of every age. Copies will be sent by post to any address on receipt of price.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

REPLY

TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S

"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."

By B. W. Lacy

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

GOLDEN THRONE

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

TRAVELS IN FAITH,

From Tradition to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

Poetry.

The March of the Liberals.

O'er the surging human tide
Of earth's cities in their pride
Spread the light!
Wheresoe'er men may be found
Let them hear truth's trumpet sound,
Spread the light!
From the sun of Science high,
See the clouds of error fly,
As man's freedom draweth nigh,
Spread the light!

For the sorrow and the crime
Of this dark and evil time
It shall fall;
And the shams shall pass away
That so long hav held their sway
Over all;
Then the gods that vex the world
They will be in chaos hurled
When truth's banner is unfurled
At our call.

For the day it is at hand,
When the worthy they shall stand
For the right.
And the moment it is near
When their triumph shall appear
In its might.
Then for all the truth stand firm
That 'tis given you to discern,
Or a martyr's glory earn
In the fight.

With a magic and a power
Never known until this hour,
Beat our drum.
And the people in the world,
When they see truth's flag unfurled
They will come.
Then away with doubt and care,
For there's music in the air,
And the time to do and dare
Has begun.

O'er the south and o'er the north,
Speed the glorious message forth,
Spread the light!
From the east unto the west
Bear abroad the tidings blest,
Spread the light!
And, till all the nations heed,
And the sons of men are freed
From the priest, and god, and creed,
Spread the light!

ROBERT W. HUME.

Many New Books.

Nos. 10 and 11 of Professor Knoflach's admirable little pamphlets, "German Simplified," are out. Price 10 cents per number.

"Why Don't He Lend a Hand? and Other Agnostic Poems," by Samuel P. Putnam, is the title of a little volume of poesy, every line of which breathes a love of the true and the beautiful. Price 10 cents.—San Francisco Universe.

Anyone wishing to learn shorthand should send to D. L. Scott-Browne, 23 Clinton place, and get his pamphlet containing "Information for the Inquirer on Phonography, Books, and Positions." It is sent on receipt of stamp.

H. S. Brown, M.D., of Milwaukee, some time ago wrote and published a book entitled "The Bible of the Religion of Science." He now sends us a compendium of the work in pamphlet form, price 50 cents. Copies will be sent to any address upon receipt of price.

Professor W. Seymour, president of the Pennsylvania State Liberal League, has published in attractiv pamphlets his two able lectures, "Are the Doctrins of Christianity Rational?" and "Mesmerism Explained." The price of the former is 10 cents; the latter 115 cents. They are good reading.

"The Climax" is what Mr. Charles Sidney calls a little pamphlet he has published on the finance question. He promises that if the directions therein laid down are followed, the worst cases of poverty may be cured. He will mail the work to those who send him ten cents at 111 Fulton st., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"The Religion of Humanity Better than Eternal Punishment," by M. Babcock, is a book of thirty-six pages. It tersely points out the difference between the Religion of Humanity and orthodox religion, and clearly shows the superiority of the former. Published by the Truth Seeker Company. Price 10 cents. —San Francisco Universe.

In a 97-page pamphlet entitled, "That Which Has Been, That Which Now Is, and That Which Is to Come," Mr. W. W. Simkins, M.G., of Pella, Iowa, givs a history of the past, describes the present, and givs away the future in a religious sense. He claims to hav had a remarkable revelation. Two gentlemen from heaven gave him the title of the book, instructed him what to write, and were kind enough to look after the printing of the same. The result is about what might be expected. What the pamphlet sells for we are not informed, but it would be dear at any price. All inquirers are referred to Mr. Simkins, M.G., at the above address.

The Sun is a bi-monthly publication issued in Kansas City, Mo., and devoted to co-operation. It appears to be in sympathy with religious reform, publishing unsolicited a handsome advertisment for THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is a well-printed magazine. Ten cents per number. Address C. T. Fowler, 16 West Fifth street, Kansas City, Mo.

"Light on the Path," a small but handsome book in large type, is "written for the personal use of those who are ignorant of the eastern wisdom, and who desire to enter within its influence." It tells the reader for fifty cents how to conduct himself in a manner becoming a good Theosophist. Cupples, Upham & Co, Boston, Mass., publishers.

In "Warning Words to Doubters Culled from the Scriptures," David A. Andrade calls the attention of numerous people, mainly Christians, to the error of their ways. Such doubters as chance to hav been "culled from the scriptures" and desire to be warned can be accommodated by sending five or ten cents to Mr. W. C. Andrade, 120 Swanston street, Melbourne, Australia, whence this tract emanates.

Although dead, Mr. Samuel Bowles, late editor of the Springfield Republican, still keeps up habits formed while alive. According to a pamphlet issued by the Star Publishing Company, he has interviewed numerous distinguished spirits, and has given their words to this world through the mediumship of Carrie E. S. Twing. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Postage, 5 cents. Star Pub. Co., 332 Main st., Springfield, Mass.

Mary E. Tillotson, of Vineland, N. J., has published a "History ov the Woman's Costume Reform in the United States ov America. Including Thirty-five years." Her researches are embodied in a pamphlet of 120 pages. The spelling is reformed after the rules of the American Philological and Spelling Reform Association. Those interested in the interesting subject of female dress will find this pamphlet entertaining and instructiv. Price 25 cents.

"Kosmon Almanac. The New Calendar. Based on the Movements of Our Solar Phalanx. Also, an Account of Shalam, the first community of the kind in all the world. Faithists in Jehovih, the Creator. Their Solid Front against War, even if forced to the Front of Battle. A People of Peace. Kosmon 37." The foregoing is on the title-page of a pamphlet which we hav received. Shalam is a community at Las Cruces, New Mexico, with the religious foundation furnished by Oahspe, which is Dr. Newbrough's revelation. The pamphlet contains a calendar, some extracts from Oahspe, and other inexplicable things. We hav no information as to either price or publisher.

We hav not of late given as many notices as they deserved to the monthly issues of the Popular Science Monthly, conducted by E. L. and W. J. Youmans, and published by the Appletons. The October number is at hand, the contents of which are as follows:

New Chapters in the Warfare of Science. By Andrew Dickson White. I. The Doctrin of Comets.
The White Ant: A Theory. By Prof. Henry Drummond, F.R.S.E. (Illustrated.)
The Early Study of Plants. By Eliza A. Youmans.
On the Solar Corona. By Wm. Huggins, F.R.S.
The Relations of Railway Managers and Employees. By Dr. W. T. Barnard.
Tommasi-Crudeli on the Reclamation of Malarious Countries.
The Energy of Life Evolution. By Prof. E. D. Cope. (Illustrated.)
"The Metaphysical Society." By R. H. Hutton.
A Study of Recent Earthquakes. By M. A. Daubree.
The Trading-Rat. By Mrs. E. D. W. Hatch.
Tissue-Selection in the Genesis of Disease. By W. Henry Kesteven, M.R.C.S.
Sketch of Prof. H. A. Newton. (With Portrait.)
Editor's Table: Official Science at Washington.
Literary Notices.
Popular Miscellany.
Notes.

The Popular Science is among the best of our monthlies, and no one can keep abreast of the progress of science without reading it. Single numbers, 50 cents; yearly subscription, $5.

"ST. MATTHEW," "TRUTH," AND "BIBLE FABRICATIONS."

We are indebted to the New York Truth Seeker Company for these pamphlets, all of them in the interest of truth and for the elimination of the errors which, like wild mustard, Canada thistles, and other weeds among the crops of the husbandman, hav corrupted every religion and enervated the human mind.—Worthington Advance.

We hav received from the publishers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York, three pamphlets, as follows: "St. Matthew Before the Court," by Secularist; "Bible Fabrications Refuted," by O. B. Whitford, M.D.; and "Truth, a Poem in Three Parts," by Edwin N. Kingsley. The price of the first is 10 cents; of the second, 15 cents. We hav lost our card stating the price of the third, but we think it is 25 cents. We hav not space, or we would make extended extracts. We may in some future number, but the name of the publishers is a warrant for their quality.—Foundation Principles.

The Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York, sends us these pamphlets: "Bible Fabrications Refuted and Its Errors Exposed," by O. B. Whitford, M.D.; "St. Matthew Before the Court," by "Secularist;" and "Truth, a Poem in Three Parts," by Edwin N. Kingsley. The Truth Seeker Company is constantly publishing interesting and instructiv matter in various forms, and its weekly journal is the leading Freethought paper in America. Send to the company for a catalog of their books. For the three pamphlets named the publishers will please accept our thanks.—Winsted Press.

BIBLE FABRICATIONS REFUTED: THE BIBLE'S ERRORS EXPOSED. A neat pamphlet of 47 pages. Price 15 cents. Published by the Truth Seeker Company.

As indicated, a radical discussion of certain passages and events recorded is made and same very effectivly for the investigators in that direction.—Light for Thinkers.

This is the most complete expose of Bible nonsense we hav ever read, and should be in the hands of all religionists, because they surely would like it.—Nashville (Tenn.) Liberal.

This work, by O. B. Whitford, M.D., is the most complete expose of Bible fabrications we hav seen for some time. The pamphlet ought to be added to the library of every Liberal and placed in the hands of all religionist.—Pittsburgh, Truth.

This book is a restatement of many of the numerous errors there are in the Bible. To those who hav read little on the subject it must be entertaining. It is gotten up in the good style in which the Truth Seeker Company always does its work.—New Thought.

This little work is written in the style of Thos. Paine, Robt. G. Ingersoll, and other modern disbelievers. There are, however, some new arguments, facts, and data touched upon, which it would be well for the Bible exegetics to peruse.—The Occident.

"Bible Fabrications Refuted and Exposed," by O. B. Whitford, M.D. The writer assumes the prerogativ of examining "sacred" books with the same glasses he studies "profane" writings, and givs the result of his investigations in this little book. Lightning had not struck the author up to the time of our going to press.—Sunday Gazetteer.

TRUTH. A poem in three parts. By Edwin N. Kingsley, Truth Finder. Dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Freethinkers, Liberals, Skeptics, Reformers, Practical Atheists, and Impracticable Christians. Published by the author. Price 25 cents.

"Truth," a poem in three parts, addressed to the people of a hundred years to come, forcible and logical.—Sunday Gazetteer.

This brief work is a terrible onslaught in poetry on the biblical errors and accepted dogmas of all churches.—The Occident.

This is a most interesting work, and whoever gets it will not stop reading until he reads it through, unless his house should be on fire. —Nashville (Tenn.) Liberal.

This is a work of an original thinker and a poet of pronounced ability. It is dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Liberals, and Reformers.—Maurepas Gazette.

This is a pamphlet of 23 Cantos; the same being radical rhymes which will help any Liberal or Christian who reads them. To the latter especially are they to be commended, if they dare to read.—Light for Thinkers.

This is the second edition, revised and enlarged. In the first edition the poem was addressed to the people of a hundred years to come, but in the second edition the poem is addressed to all mankind, and givs a clear and comprehensiv view of the universe. It should hav a large sale, which it doubtless will, as "Truth will take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the earth." —Pittsburgh Truth.

ST. MATTHEW BEFORE THE COURT. By Secularist. Published by the Truth Seeker Company. 12mo., 38pp., price 25 cents.

The following notices of this book hav been received:

This is a pleasant report of an imaginary trial by jury of the author of the gospel according to Matthew. It is a good campaign document.—Light for Thinkers.

St. Matthew has been indicted by the grand jury and arraigned before the court, charged with forging a certain book called a gospel. The witnesses in the case are Mark, Luke, and John. Secularist, with his unanswerable charges, puts St. Matthew in an embarrassing position. The style of the work is new and queer, and will take. "St. Matthew Before the Court" ought to be read by thousands.—Pittsburgh Truth.

Copies of "St. Matthew Before the Court" hav been received and distributed. Accept our thanks, and extend them to our unknown donor.—JOHN R. KEMP for Altoona, Pa., Liberal League.

This singular little pamphlet presents in brief the legal investigation and trial of that evangelist. It is quite humorous, and presents some features touching upon our present era. —The Occident.

I hav attended the trial of "St. Matthew Before the Court" from beginning to end. The prosecution by Secularist has been ably and honestly conducted, and the jury's verdict is just.—J. E. REMSBURG.

The ten pamphlets received and distributed to League members last evening, and in behalf of the League I return thanks for the same. Allow me to say I consider it one of the most ingeniously written satires on the whole orthodox religion-authority idea I hav ever read. It will do great good.—DR JULIET H. SEVERANCE.

This is a clincher, and our Rev. Sam Jones could not do better to draw a crowd than to proclaim the reading of it to his next audience. In this Sam could do some good, for his hearers would never believe in Bible folly again. They would be damned first. Send orders to THE TRUTH SEEKER. —Nashville (Tenn.) Liberal.

Allow me to thank Secularist, through you, in behalf of our League, for those elegant pamphlets ("St. Matthew Before the Court"). I hav just read it, and I am proud to say it's just grand. It is a splendid eye-opener for Christians; also good, large type, adapted for both old and young. Would that every Christian in the land should read it. I shall do the best I can to push this work.—GEORGE LONGFORD.

This little pamphlet is a crusher against the divine inspiration of the writers of the four gospels, and that of St. Matthew in particular. It is a graphic and somewhat humorous description of a court scene, wherein Matthew is questioned concerning the getting up of the book that bears his name. It has more sound, historical facts concerning the origin of the gospels than one would deem it possible to crowd into so small a space, considering the colloquial character of the book. The ridicule, satire, and masterly array of proofs of the spuriousness of the whole story are inimitable. I wish every preacher in the land was presented with one and urged to read and comment upon it, and every layman had it for a text-book. It goes deep into facts, and I trust Liberals will circulate it far and wide. Knowledge is not only power, but it is safety. —ELMINA.

No publishing house in America is getting out more neat and tasty looking books than the Truth Seeker Company. Beside that the matter of some of their books is excellent. In the pamphlet before us the author, evidently a lawyer, gets up a court scene. In the court room, where are assembled the judge, the accused, the jury, sheriffs, constables, lawyers, etc., St. Matthew is accused of forging a book in the New Testament, called, "The Gospel According to St. Matthew." He pleads not guilty. Then the trial proceeds, witnesses are examined, lawyers hav their bouts, the judge settles many questions, and Matthew is proved guilty. This is followed by an appendix, which interested us more than the report of the trial itself.

The price of this book is ten cents. It will pay for the money spent on it and the time spent on its perusal.—New Thought.

This purports to be the trial of St. Matthew on the charge of "forging a certain book called a gospel." The witnesses for the prosecution are the Evangelists, Mark, Luke, and John. The attorney for the defense is "Jesuiticus." The prisoner is convicted by the jury, but there is attached to the verdict this request: "Considering that the accused has voluntarily turned state's evidence and unfolded with precision the dark mysteries of that monstrous forgery, the jury recommends the accused to the mercy of the court." The judge discharges the prisoner with this reprimand: "We do not believe that punishment repairs in any way an evil already done; we take compassion on criminals, and treating them as erring brothers, we warn them to take proper steps against their relapse into the same faults; but we require and exact reparations when they are possible. In your case the court enjoins on you to write no other gospels or other books dangerous to humanity, and desiring you to repair as far as practicable the mischief done by your book, orders that you shall publish this trial at your own expense, mail a copy of it to each of the eighty thousand preachers living upon money obtained under false pretenses, so that they may see that their frauds are uncovered, that their trade is at an end, and that the best thing for them to do is to be honest in the future, take their families west on farms and grow up with the country."—Sunday Gazetteer, Denison, Tex.

A PHOTOGRAPH

OF THE BIBLE'S FLAT EARTH AND SOLID HEAVEN.

A Picture of the world as described in Genesis, with the texts of the Bible teaching the doctrin, and the passages from profane writers supporting it. Price 25 cents,

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00 In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality,' and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25 Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois,' "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark,' "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy,' bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

MONKS, POPES,
AND
THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.

Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.

Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1 00
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

A NEW BOOK!
By Andrew Jackson Davis.
entitled
Beyond the Valley
a sequel to the
MAGIC STAFF
An Autobiography of
Andrew Jackson Davis.
Six Illustrations Picturing what Mr. Davis says he h s seen.

"Beyond the Valley" is a record of events and scenes in his private and public career, beginning where the Magic Staff ends, and bringing his psychological and private experiences truthfully up to the present day. This attractive volume will interest thousands who hav never read his preceding works. It will answer the ever-recurring questions concerning remarkable events in Mr. Davis's private life, and fully explains his various public labors for mankind.

"Beyond the Valley" is a companion volume to the "Magic Staff," and resembles it in style of workmanship—in paper, press-work, binding, etc. 408 pages. Price, $1.50.
For Sale by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORKS OF DR. W. F. EVANS.

The Primitiv Mind-Cure. The Nature and Power of Faith; or, Elementary Lessons in Transcendental Medicin. This work is a complete exposition of principles underlying the system of mental healing. It contains a full course of instruction in the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure. Price $1.50.

The Divine Law of Cure. A standard work on the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure, a reliable text-book in all the schools of mental healing. No work has ever been written of more practical value to physicians of all schools. The book is the result of the extensiv learning and research of the author, and exhibits a familiarity with the literature of the subject. It is profoundly religious without being offensivly dogmatic. It has been received with universal favor by all who are seeking light on the subject on which it treats—the cure of disease in ourselvs and others by mental and spiritual agencies. Price $1.50.

Mental Medicin. A Theoretical and Practical Treatis on Medical Psychology. This book contains a full exposition of the nature and laws of magnetism, and its application to the cure of disease. Price $1.25.

Soul and Body; or, The Spiritual Science of Health and Disease. Price $1.00.

The Mental Cure, illustrating the Influence of the Mind on the Body both in Health and Disease, and the Psychological Method of Treatment. Price $1.50.

All the above books sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,
WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

Man. Whence and Whither.
By R. B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,
Author of "The Bible.—Whence and What?

About all that can be said for the existence of God and the future life of man, is here pungently presented, with an incidental discussion of many collateral questions, from a rationalistic standpoint.
1 vol, cloth. Price, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

St. Matthew before the Court on a Charge of Forgery.

BY SECULARIST.

Price, 10 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TO APPEAR IMMEDIATELY.
MOSES BEFORE THE COURT.
By the same Author.

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the Bible Exposed.
BY O. B. WHITFORD. M.D.
Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.

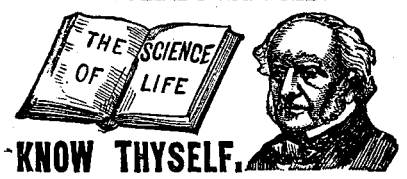
SECOND EDITION.

Price, 25 Cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Bible Analyzed.
BY
John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.



Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
POPULAR JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.

Headquarters for Fine Goods in the line of Genuin Diamonds; Fine Gold and Silver Watches; Chains; Bracelets; Wedding and Presentation Rings; Jewelry of Latest style; Gold Pens; Silverware; Optical and Fancy Goods; 3 ounce Coin Silver Elgin Watch, $10; 4 ounce, Full Jeweled, Adjusted Pat. Regulator Stem Wind, $22; this same, fine movement, in best gold filled case, $35; with cheap movement, $25 Ladies' Solid Gold Elgin stem wind watches, $20, $24, and $32—14 karat, upward. Watches cleaned, finest work in the world, $1. Springs, $1, and returned per. reg. mail or ex., paid one way. Work for the trade at reduced rates and agents sending work once a week from every state in the Union are making lots of money. Best spectacles in the world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back on demand. Try me! OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Patentee of Wettstein's New Freethought Badge. The most beautiful badge ever placed upon the market. Immense sale. Elegant present for Lady or Gent. Solid gold, $3; $3 50; extra heavy, $4; with diamond, artistically enameled, $10.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. ONLY $1.
BY MAIL POST-PAID.

KNOW THYSELF.
A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14 HEAL THYSELF is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humpug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y3

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collins, Smithville, Jefferson Co., N.Y.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.
3tf

WHY DON'T HE LEND A HAND?
AND OTHER POEMS.

By S. P. PUTNAM, Author of Ingersoll and Jesus, Prometheus, Golden Throne, Waifs and Wanderings, Problems of the Universe, etc.

CONTENTS: Why Don't He Lend a Hand? The Golden Age, The Ideal and the Real, Not Dead but Living, Fruition, Hope, Thomas Paine, Nature's Gospel, Address to Deity, Giv us Light (Holdreth's poem often recited by Charles Watts).

PRICE 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

IMMORTALITY INHERENT IN NATURE.
BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.

Price, 60 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

ACTINA BATTERY.
Patent applied for

The Wonder of the Nineteenth Century!

Do you wear Glasses,
and wish to do without them?
ACTINA CURES DISEASES OF THE EYE AFTER OCULISTS FAIL.
Are you suffering from that most common of all diseases,
CATARRH?
Are you troubled with
Deafness, Neuralgia, Hay Fever, or Severe Headache.

If so, WHY NOT Investigate ACTINA? this will cost nothing.

☞ A General Agent wanted for every city and town in the United States.

Send for Catalogue Containing all Information.

Remit Money by Registered Letter, Check, Draft, or P. O. Order to "ACTINA" COMPANY
SOLE PROPRIETORS
88 FIFTH AVENUE, near 14th Street, N. Y.
Please mention this paper. 3 40

Gems of Thought.

EVERY mother ought to hav the intelligence to safely govern the number of the family she is able to properly rear, and none ought to add to the incomputable number of wretched human beings to starve, suffer, and die, or at best eke out a miserable existence.—D. M. Bennett.

IF we would hav our yea yea, and our nay nay; in short, if we would speak as honest, upright men, we must acknowledge that we are no longer Christians.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

THREE of the most eminent men with whom Johnson came in contact in later life had also been students at Oxford. John Wesley, his senior by six years, was a fellow of Lincoln College whilst Johnson was an undergraduate, and was learning at Oxford the necessity of raising his countrymen from the religious lethargy into which they had sunk. "Hav not pride and haughtiness of spirit, impatience and peevishness, sloth and indolence, gluttony and sensuality, and even a proverbial uselessness, been objected to us, perhaps not always by our enemies, nor wholly without ground?" So said Wesley, preaching before the University of Oxford in 1744, and the words in his mouth imply more than the preacher's formality. Adam Smith, Johnson's junior by fourteen years, was so impressed by the utter indifference of the Oxford authorities to their duties as to find in it an admirable illustration of the consequences of the neglect of the true principles of supply and demand implied in the endowment of learning. Gibbon, his junior by twenty-eight years, passed at Oxford "the most idle and unprofitable" months of his whole life, and was, he said, "as willing to disclaim the University for a mother as she could be to renounce him for a son."—Leslie Stephen's Johnson.

HUME is undoubtedly correct in his assumption that mankind hav originally been led to religion, not by the disinterested desire for knowledge and truth, but by the selfish craving for material welfare, and that pain has contributed more potently than allurement to the propagation of religion. For, if man had all he wished; if his needs were always satisfied; if no painful lessons of experience constrained him to regard the future with apprehension, the notion of a higher power would hardly hav arisen within his breast. He would hav thought that thus it must be, and accordingly he would hav accepted his lot with stolid indifference.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

"BOOKS will speak plain when counsellors blanch" (i.e., are afraid to open their mouth), therefore it is good to be conversant in them, specially the books of such as hav been themselvs actors upon the stage,—Bacon's Essays.

NOT in any attitude of body, or platitudes of language, is man's true worship, but in brotherly service of our fellow-men. Atheist, Theist, Pantheist, Christian—the name is nothing. He who serves his fellows most wisely and devotedly knows most of God, though he call himself an Atheist. The fact of loyal and devoted service to mankind is all in all. Not they who say, "Lord! Lord!" but they who liv in accord with the highest manifestations of the infinit life in their ethical relations, are the ones who are invited into the fellowship of the rational religion of the future. Can we do nobler work or seek a greater salvation than will come to us through striving to be worthy of this invitation?—Lewis G. Janes.

IT is not sufficient for me to desire anything; if there be no better reason for believing it than that, I cannot believe it. Thus I reject all religions, while I love and revere goodness and truth, whether clothed in religious or unreligious forms.—Waters's Through Rome On.

THE descent of Jesus Christ into hell is not attested by even one evangelist. On the other hand, they all bear testimony to the resurrection, but not one of them was an eye-witness, and it is described in a different manner by all; in short, attested like any other event that we are compelled to regard as unhistorical. And what sort of an event? One so impossible, in such direct antagonism to every law of nature, that it would require a testimony of tenfold reliability to be so much as discussed, not scouted from the very first. Then comes the ascension into heaven, where we know are the heavenly bodies, but no longer the throne of God, at whose right hand it would be possible to sit; after that the return to judgment on the day of doom, a thing which we can form no idea of, as we admit either no divine judgment, or only a judgment that fulfils itself hour by hour and day by day.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

ONE of the later schools of the Grecians examineth the matter, and is at a stand to think what should be in it, that men should love lies; where neither they make for pleasure, as with poets; nor for advantage, as with the merchant, but for the lie's sake. But I cannot tell: this same truth is a naked and open daylight, that doth not show the masks, and mummeries, and triumphs of the world half so stately and daintily as candle-lights. Truth may perhaps come to the price of a pearl, that showeth best by day, but it will not rise to the price of a diamond or carbuncle, that showeth best in a varied light. A mixture of a lie doth ever add pleasure. Doth any man doubt, that if there were taken out of men's minds vain opinions, flattering hopes, false valuations, imaginations as one would, and the like, but it would leave the minds of a number of men poor shrunken things, full of melancholy and indisposition, and unpleasing to themselvs?—Bacon's Essays.

FEW men think, yet all men will hav opinions. —Berkeley.

ALL I hav had to do I hav done in kingly fashion. I let tongues wag as they pleased. What I saw to be the right thing—that I did.—Goethe.

BUT howsoever these things art in men's depraved judgments and affections, yet truth, which only doth judge itself, teacheth that the inquiry of truth which is the love-making or wooing of it, the knowledge of truth, which is the presence of it, and the belief of truth, which is the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature.—Bacon's Essays.

To the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York:

The Constitution of our State guarantees that "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State to all mankind." The general principle of American Government is equality of all men before the law. This, as Your Honorable Body is aware, involves the principle, already acknowledged in theory, of the Total Separation of Church and State. But Church and State are now practically united by the following statutes:

1. The law exempting Church Property from Taxation.
2. The laws appropriating Money from the Public Treasury for the support of Institutions founded and managed chiefly by Sectarian Denominations.
3. The law compelling the Observance of Sunday as a religious holy day.

The undersigned, Citizens of the State of New York, do therefore respectfully but earnestly petition Your Honorable Body to repeal all the laws or parts of laws of this State which are violations of the above principles. Our reasons for asking this are:

1. The Churches are voluntary associations properly to be supported by the voluntary contributions of their members. 2. The State is compulsory. Every citizen must pay taxes. And we submit that it is unjust to a large and growing body of voters to be compelled to pay for the support of Churches which they cannot conscientiously attend; for the hire of Ministers in our Legislature and Public Institutions, in whose doctrines they are unable to believe; and to observe as holy a day to them no more sacred than any other. We also submit that the exemption of Churches from taxation, the appropriation of money for the hire of Ministers and the support of Sectarian Institutions, and the Legal observance of Sunday as a holy day, are discriminations in favor of one form of religion, are abridgments of the free exercise of religious preferences, and are therefore unconstitutional.

NAMES. | RESIDENCE.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17
The National Liberal League,	28
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73
Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardener,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,	Elizabeth Cady Stanton,	J. D. Shaw,

Gottlieb: His Life. A romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written by S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By Mrs. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Odds and Ends.

"WHERE are you going, my dear?" "I'm going shopping, hubby." "Did you see what Sam Jones, the evangelist, said about women who go shopping?" "No, what was it?" "Well, he said hell is full of women who spend their time shopping." "Did he? Why, I had no idea it was so delightful a place."—Chicago Times.

"SAY, boss, how does yer work dis hyah out?" said a Bath avenue negro to his employer. "Work what out?" "Well, yer see, laist night when I kyim home kinder suddin' like, I found my wife a sittin' on der same cheer wid der Revrund Cronic Kyoter, an' day wuz so close tergedder dat yer couldn't a driv a wet flax-seed in twix' em wid er sledge hammer. Now what's I goin' ter do 'bout it?" "Why go to a lawyer." "Y-yas, but I'se done bin dar." "Get any satisfaction?" "N-no. Yer see I tole him about it an' he axed me what m'wife done fur a livin'. I tole him she was a laundruss, an' he said dat I couldn't do nothin', 'cause cleanliness shud allers be nex' ter godliness."

IT is a difficult matter to impress upon the mind of the rural man of Arkansaw the necessity of paying immediate attention to the heathen. During a camp-meeting in Saline county a preacher from Little Rock made an eloquent appeal in favor of the poor wretch who eats harmless missionary instead of eating hurtful bulk pork. When the preacher had concluded an old exhorter arose and said: "Brethren, I've been might'ly interested in this 'lectioneerin' for the heathen, an' I would now like to know something about him." Then addressing the minister, who had just taken his seat, the exhorter said: "Brother, I would like to ask you a few questions. The boys all say that they are waitin' to see what stand I take, so you won't object to a few questions, will you?" "Certainly not." "Thankee. Wall, now, how's politeness in the heathen's country?" "He knows nothing of politeness." "Ah, hah. Wall, how's the question of capital an' labor?" "There's no capital, no labor." "No strikes?" "No." "Got no canderdates?" "No candidates." "Don't hav to wear no clothes, if I understand the situation." "They hav no clothes." "No lawyers there, I reckon?" "No lawyers." "Wall, parson, that's the country I'm lookin' fur, an' ef a emegration agent was to come here he'd ketch every sensible man in Saline county. Boys, I don't think we can giv Mr. Heathen anything. It would be as foolish as haulin' water an' pourin' it in the river."—Arkansaw Traveler.

WHAT A BABY CAN DO.

It can wear out a $1 pair of kid shoes in twenty-four hours.

It can keep its father busy advertising in the newspapers for a nurse.

It can occupy both sides of the largest-sized bed manufactured simultaneously.

It can cause its father to be insulted by every second-class boarding-house keeper in the city who "never takes children," which in nine cases out of ten is very fortunate for the children.

It can make itself look like a fiend just when mamma wants to show "what a pretty baby she has."

It can make an old bachelor in the room adjoining use language that, if uttered on the street, would get him in the penitentiary for two years.

It can go from the furthest end of the room to the foot of the stairs in the hall adjoining quicker than its mother can just step into the closet and out again.

It can go to sleep "like a little angel," and just as mamma and papa are starting for the theater it can wake up and stay awake until the last act.

These are some of the things that a baby can do. But there are other things as well. A baby can make the commonest home the brightest spot on earth. It can lighten the burdens of a loving mother's life by adding to them. It can flatten its dirty little face against the window pane in such a way that the tired father can see it as a picture before he rounds the corner. Yes, babies are great institutions, particularly one's own baby.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 42. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, October 17, 1885. {33 CLINTON PLACE.} $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE assessed value of untaxed church property in New York city is $40,211,500.

THERE are said to be 750,000 more Methodists than Baptists in the United States.

PROF. R. A. PROCTOR says: "I regard even the doctrin of a future life as open to scientific discussion, and not necessarily a religious doctrin at all."

"HE died willingly in the hope of salvation." It may be thought that this refers to a clergyman who had served God for half a century, but it does not. It refers to a murderer who chopped up his wife.

IN a recent article by the assistant bishop of Mississippi, a religious contemporary makes the author say: "That the Bible is the genuin one as it was given rests on the testimony of 'primitiv iniquity.'" This is a good deal nearer the truth than religious papers are in the habit of getting.

IN 1863 the Rev. Newton Chance, of Texas, killed an editor in Sherman, and moved to Mississippi. At that time he was a lawyer, but becoming converted, he entered the ministry. Recently he returned to Texas, and while on a visit to Sherman was arrested for the murder committed twenty-two years ago.

REALLY, it is too bad! ejaculates Brick Pomeroy in his Democrat. Now comes the report that Captain Figley of the Salvation Army, operating in the kerslews and kerslums of Bridgeton, N. J., has eloped and taken with him all the funds of the Army and the best-looking late female convert, as they go marching on. They all do it, soon as the little bird opens the gate.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL scholar was asked, apropos of Solomon, who the great queen was that traveled so many miles to see him. The scholar—in fact, the whole school—looked as if a little help would be liked, and the teacher therefore said, "The queen's name began with an S." "I've got it, sir," exclaimed the delighted scholar. "Well, who was it?" "It was the Queen of Spades, sir!"

GENERAL BOOTH, who comprises within himself the whole central organization of the Salvation Army, advertises in the Warcry that he is prepared to furnish Salvation Army soap, with his portrait on each cake, Salvation Army china, glassware, sheets, table-covers, towels, cutlery, and window-curtains, Salvation Army tea newly imported, and "Salvation Army serges to be inspected at the tailoring and dressmaking department."

THE legacy of £2,000 which Victor Hugo left in one of his wills to the poor of Paris has the curious informality of lacking his signature, although the clause is written entirely with his own hand. The executors and heirs will, of course, treat it as a legalized bequest. A remarkable sign of the rapidity with which the poet's work was increasing in money value is the fact that of the £200,000 to which his fortune amounted £44,000 had been produced in 1884 alone by his author's rights.

IT is stated that one of the speakers at the late Freethinkers' Convention at Albany entered into a minute calculation to show how much energy and money had been used in revising the Bible. It was "sheer waste," he said. It would be hard to say how much time Freethinkers hav spent in their work; but they hav wasted little money and less brains in it. —Independent. It is cheering to thus receive assurance from this high religious source that the money and brains devoted to the work of Liberalism are not wasted.

FRANCE is hoarding all the gold and silver she can get into that country in exchange for her products. She carries on business with legal tender paper money and when her people get hold of precious metal they salt it away. A money census has lately been taken in that country, twenty thousand persons being employed to do it quickly. They find that France has a total of $2,400,000,000 worth of gold coin and bullion, and $1,000,000,000 worth of silver coin at market rates for silver. In these two totals are included $250,000,000 worth of foreign gold coins and $250,000,000 worth of foreign silver coins. Thus France holds fully one-half of the gold in the world.

THE Church Standard says: "What is said to be a printer's error occurs in the Revised Version of the Old Testament. It is to be found in Ezekiel xxxviii, 16, in the words, 'I will bring thee against my land, that the nations may know thee,' in the place of the latter word Me. It is God who speaks through his servant the prophet to Gog, predicting that the nations are to know God through his being sanctified in Gog before their eyes." Which shows that the printers of any work ought always to be in communication with the author, which in the instance of the Bible seems not to hav been the case.

A HINT of alliance between the Catholic church and the woman's ballot movement: A movement was announced from the pulpit of one of the Catholic churches of Charlestown, Mass, a few weeks since, to enroll its women voters for the election of school committee men. Father Supple said, in making the announcement: "The women of our faith hav never taken any interest in woman suffrage, and probably it will be hard to bring them to it now; but when once they understand that they are needed to counteract the votes of other women who lay out their course on denominational lines, they will not hesitate."

THE Christian Leader calls on the churches to stand their ground against the insidious assaults of their Secular enemies. It says: "We know of few things more pitiful, at the same time having the character of a sad disclosure, than the wail which comes from the churches that the railway excursion, the ride to park and seashore, and the Sunday paper hav stolen away large parts of the congregation. Certain it is that the churches must hav done very poor work, must hav shown themselvs sadly deficient in edifying the people, if entertainments so essentially superficial can, almost at a breath, draw large numbers of the people from the sanctuary." Perhaps the Christian Leader is leading Christians dangerously near to the truth.

"I THINK the Texas liar must hav removed to Nebraska," said one-legged General Robert Avery, U.S.A., to a Tribune reporter. "He professes to hav discovered the soul of man by examination of one-limbed people through the microscope. Now, I hav but one leg. I will admit that when I lost it sensations appeared to be transmitted to the brain from apparently the same places where the knee, toes, or other parts of the leg should be. But after a time the cords healed up at the stump, and gradually a change came. To-day I hav no sensations from an imaginary foot or leg, but all come from the tip of the stump in such a way that I can accurately locate them. I am a practical illustration of the fact that the Texas liar still livs, and works off his annual sensation on the press."

THE Chicago Standard (Baptist) having said: "We know of nothing which sounds a louder call in the ears of American Christians than the fact that the form of religion which is the cherished faith of prize-fighters, of saloon-keepers, of those who crowd our penitentiaries, of the lowest and most vicious classes of our population; that this form of religion, which assures to its devotees, though guilty of the worst crimes, eternal salvation at the price of a priest's absolution, and which is the worst enemy American institutions of every kind hav to dread, is also so sleepless in its vigilance, so tireless in its activity, so rich in money, and so unscrupulous in its use;" the Freeman's Journal responds: "Suppose any journal edited by Catholics should hav printed a paragraph of this kind written from the other side; suppose it had been possible for a Catholic writer or speaker to crowd so much bitterness, devilish malignity, uncharitable slander, and evidence of wilful unreasonableness into a few lines, can anybody suppose that Catholics would read it with patience? If a writer for Catholics should so far forget himself as to insist that American Protestant Christians are dangerous to the community because they are Protestant Christians, he would find no sympathizers. And yet the fact that some of the sects preach the efficacy of faith without works might giv some color to the charge."

IT is learned from the Duquoin, Ill, Press that at the recent conference of the M. E. church of that district charges were preferred against Rev. T. S Houts, now chaplain of the Chester Prison, for heresy. The specifications charge: (1) Mr. Houts rejects the doctrin of the Trinity (three in one); (2) he denies the dogma of justification by faith; (3) he repels belief in a vicarious atonement, and (4) he declines to preach the theory of resurrecting our earthly body. For holding these heterodox notions Mr. Houts is placed under a ban, and a committee has been appointed to investigate him. Mr. Houts is said to be a learned, able, and well-read gentleman, and is probably the intellectual superior of a large majority of his brother ministers.

A WESTERN paper contains this notice: "At high mass, Sunday, in the Roman Catholic Cathedral, Rev. Father Emard read the papal decree, which is considered as applying to the epidemic in Montreal, and which was issued by his holiness Pope Leo XIII., under date of the 20th of August last. The decree alludes to the ravages of epidemics among the faithful throughout the world last year, and impresses upon Roman Catholics the efficiency of prayer in crushing these regretable calamities." What shall be said of the Catholic conception of a God who can control a plague among his creatures, and yet allows its ravages to go on unchecked. Perhaps a touch of the small-pox in heaven would arouse the dormant generosity of this more ornamental than useful deity.

ACCORDING to scripture, "the wages of sin is death." According to the Church Press, the wages of preaching in the Protestant Episcopal church is starvation. The editor of that paper tells of a clergymen who was induced to relinquish a mercantil position worth $4,000 a year, and during ten years of ministerial life has never received more than $500 a year, and now he has a wife and four children; yet he is strongly indorsed by his bishop, and approved by his parishes. Another case taken as an example is that of a man earnest and devoted to the work, a good reader, and a fair preacher. He has a wife and six children. He is promised $500 a year, and furnishes his own house. In point of fact he received last year less than $400 salary. He has parishioners now at summer resorts who hav not contributed one dime to their minister's support.

THE Christian at Work, a pious paper generally read by the truly good, says: "The Princess Beatrice of England is so pious that she had several verses of the Bible beautifully embroidered on the linen of her much-mentioned bridal trousseau, for her wedding with the Prince of Battenberg. It is an excellent idea for pious brides to adopt." We can readily imagin that the princess had embroidered on her hankerchief, "It is not good that man should be alone," and that one of the interior skirts was ornamented with, "The wife of thy bosom," whilst some of the little addenda that Clara Belle so well describes are labeled, "For I am fearfully and wonderfully made," and upon the band of her nightcap appears, "For the fashion of this world passeth away;" and possibly the dressing-sack reveals, "Behold, now is the accepted time." This may all be, and yet there may be a reserve supply, and on the second evening she may elect to use a robe upon which is embroidered, "For it is given you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven." Or the fine lace-work may be stamped, "The spirit indeed is willing but the flesh is weak," and should the anxious husband comment thereon may she not possibly flaunt another garment with this legend, "Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own?" These are bad enough, but what must be his feelings when he finds the richly embroidered counterpane with this on it: "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther?" —Ex.

News of the Week.

FOREPAUGH'S big elephant Empress killed an attache of the circus at Philadelphia on Sunday last.

A HEBREW-CHRISTIAN church has been dedicated in this city. It is the first one of the kind in America.

TWO more convictions of polygamists for unlawful cohabitation hav just been secured in Salt Lake City.

THE cholera has broken out anew in Spain. In one village 113 cases and 28 deaths were reported on the 9th.

THE car-drivers' strike in St. Louis, Mo., has taken the form of a mob. Street cars are overturned or derailed, regardless of the safety of the passengers.

A CALL has been issued for a convention of representativs from all the Labor Leagues in the country to meet at Cooper Union in this city on October 9th.

THERE was a row at the Salvation Army services in Brocklyn on the 10th instant. A worshiper drew a pistol and fired four shots, one of which wounded him in the leg.

THE Progressiv Cigarmakers and the Picnic Committee of the Central Labor Union announce that their financial secretaries hav run away with all the cash in their possession.

CARDINAL JOHN MCCLOSKY, the head of the Catholic church in America, died in this city, October 10th, aged seventy-five years. He is said to hav been a man of fair intelligence and of average moral character.

BENJAMIN LITTLE, colored, was taken from his cabin on a plantation at Mount Pleasant, Texas, last Sunday, and hanged to a tree by citizens of that place. Little's crime was "the slandering of a respectable white family."

THE Rev. Stephen Merritt is candidate for senator from a district in this city on the Independent ticket. Gospel temperance meetings at the Masonic Temple on Sunday are turned into political mass meetings for the Rev. Mr. Merritt.

THE Rev. R. Heber Newton said in his sermon last Sunday that prayer for material things was of no avail, and should not be practiced. This, says the Herald, would take out of the Lord's prayer, "Giv us this day our daily bread."

DOMINIE SPELLMAN, the darky preacher at the Abyssinian African Baptist church in this city, has been crowded out of the pulpit by the congregation, who allege immoral things against their pastor. The dominie threatens to sue his rebellious flock.

THE Rev. Mr. Talmage was obliged to excommunicate one of his Sunday-school teachers last Sunday. The young man was charged with criminally assaulting one of the sisters of the church, and had "deceived" numerous others. His name is Fred Dodge.

JUDGE HOADLY, Democratic candidate for governor of Ohio, and Judge Foraker, Republican candidate for the same office, had a two-night's debate on political matters last week. Judge Hoadley's objection to God in the Constitution was urged against him by his opponent. Foraker was elected governor Tuesday.

THE Catholics of Montreal had a procession last Sunday. The object of the demonstration was to express their dissatisfaction with God for having sent the small pox. There were some five thousand persons in line, and a statue of the virgin which had formerly been carried in an anti-cholera parade was borne by the processionists.

FLOOD ROCK, a dangerous obstruction to navigation in the East River between Long Island and New York, was successfully blasted last Saturday. Nearly 300,000 pounds of dynamite and rack-a-rock were used, and the shock of the explosion was felt for many miles. No serious damage was done. The work of drilling Flood Rock had occupied nearly nine years. A year's work dredging out the shattered stone over an area of about eight acres will be necessary to clear the channel.

Communications.

"Constructiv Liberalism."

This is the specious phrase used by those who express their dislike of destructiv Liberalism. While there is no difference of opinion between these two classes of reformers as to the desirableness of removing the old structure of superstition which for eighteen hundred years has been occupying the ground where the new temple of Freethought is to be erected, there is a difference as to the best method to be adopted for that purpose.

To pull to pieces an old house where a new one is to be erected, and remove the rubbish by cart-loads, is always a very unpleasant business. The lime dust blown by the wind enters the eyes, ears, nose, mouth, and clothing of the workmen, and is extremely annoying. Prying up old floors with a crowbar, and dislodging from their nests, made foul by long occupancy, the cockroaches, the mice, the rats, and other unmentionable vermin, is by no means an esthetic, or even safe, employment. Sometimes, in this process of demolition, a partition, or an outside wall, will tumble down upon the laborers, and kill some of them. But the builder does not stop work on that account. He understands his business, and summons others to take their places; and they go on working in sweat and dust till the ground is clear for the foundations of the new structure.

Now, Radicalism—for I prefer this term to the tame and apologetic one of "Liberalism," which was born of the spurious form of Christianity called Unitarianism, that has always been under cow to orthodoxy—proposes to erect the temple of Freethought and humanity. But this temple is not to be a building like a meeting-house, composed of bricks and mortar, but a society of human beings made up of free, truth-seeking, and truth-finding souls, in sound, healthy bodies; a society of persons redeemed in mind and conscience from the false standards of right and wrong set up by superstition, and, therefore, leading contented and useful lives. The ground on which this grand structure is to stand is now occupied by the church, and has been for eighteen hundred years. By this long possession the presumption is that the title is good, and will last forever in defiance of all opposition.

It is impossible therefore to construct until you first destruct. To pull down the church, and make a scatterment of popes, cardinals, bishops, priests, monks, nuns, Inquisitions, synods, general assemblies, associations, consociations, conferences, boards of missions, Bible societies, tract societies, publication societies, and all the other props of the old superstition strengthened by the annual expenditure of millions of money, is a very tedious and dusty job, I admit; and no wonder people of taste, who are timorous in their nature, hate to undertake it. But if this building occupy the ground on which the new structure must stand, or not stand at all, there is no other way of it. These mountain piles of mere rubbish; these accumulations of long centuries of ignorance and crime; these charnel-houses full of dead men's bones and pestilential odors; these nests and hiding-places for all species of vermin, must be removed.

And this is just the difference between the two classes of reformers. The destructivs think that, as only one thing can be done at a time, their mission is to pull down the fabric of superstition—not with fire and sword, but with the peaceful, the revolutionary, enginery of argument and ridicule—and thus clear the space it occupies so as to construct that grand temple over whose ample doors are inscribed these talismanic words of the nineteenth century, "Free thought, Free Speech, and Free men." The church has played her game so successfully during the past centuries that, although in this country she is numerically in a small minority, she is, by dint of organization, long disciplin, and sleepless vigilance, a potential and practical majority, riding down the provisions of the national Constitution, asserted in our Nine Demands, and laughing to scorn all efforts to destroy her power. She raises millions of money every year from her dupes to lengthen the cords and strengthen the stakes of her influence. She controls the public sentiment to such an extent that thousands of people who hav had their eyes open to see the falseness of her claims are yet compelled, from fear of her social power, to suppress their honest opinions, and become trembling slaves. Only a short time ago, at the seat of the national government, and under a Constitution which recognizes no God, and no religion whatever, an American citizen of unimpeachable character had his testimony thrown out of a court of justice, as if he had been a liar and a scoundrel, because, in answer to an attorney's question, he was honest and modest enough to say that he neither believed nor disbelieved in the existence of a God, since he had no proof satisfactory to his mind either one way or the other. Society is honeycombed with hypocrisy, and no man knows the opinions and real character of his neighbor because of the omnipresent espionage of the church and her overshadowing influence, which taboo a Freethinker, and punish his presumption by injuring him in his business and destroying his social standing. Armies of Sunday-school scholars, many of them the children of half-and-half Radicals, their minds poisoned, and in fear of the bugaboos of hell and the devil, are rising up to carry out the policy of the church in future years.

I admit that the earthquake of science has shaken the church all over the world, and made a breach in her foundation walls. But earthquakes which convulse whole continents are soon forgotten, and men repair the damage, and rebuild their houses on the very tombs of buried cities. The church, in point of truth and argument, has not a leg to stand on, and, if she were as unorganized as the Radicals, could not but feel that the time of her dissolution had come. But her organization is complete. Her treasury is full of money. She has eighty thousand men educated as priests and clergymen, salaried, devoted for life to their calling; and, coming in contact with the people twice every Sunday in the year, they keep them in ignorance of what is going on in the world of mind. New untaxed churches are constantly lifting up their spires toward heaven; and all the agencies of this vast ecclesiastical machine are constantly activ in strengthening and perpetuating its power. It would be amusing, if it were not so melancholy, to listen to the thrasonical speeches of the gushing class of Liberalists, who amidst the cheers of a Convention or a camp-meeting fancy that the veteran armies of the church, led by eighty thousand officers who practice the tactics which centuries of warfare hav made perfect, are about to surrender to a little squad of unarmed and undisciplined Freethinkers, with no plan of a campaign, and no commissiarat; as if it were still the age of miracles, and the walls of Jericho could be laid flat by the blowing of rams' horns, instead of a long and patient siege. And it is equally amusing to hear the other class of Liberals censuring the rough work of iconoclasm, and talking of constructing their vast temple when they hav not a foot of ground to stand on, and scarcely a wheelbarrow-load of materials out of which to construct it.

But now I maintain that, in the case we are discussing, every destructiv blow we giv to the citadel of superstition is equal in value at least to a constructiv one. Hav you done nothing for humanity when you smite down a lie which has been hoodwinking millions of people for long generations, and reveal the opposit truth? When you uncover a den of counterfeiters, destroy the base coin they hav made and circulated for years, and seize the crucibles, the dies, and other machinery by which they hav carried on their iniquitous work of plundering the ignorant and unsuspicious, hav you done no service to good money? Well, the church is a grand system of counterfeiting. She puts her imprimatur on base coin, and forged paper, and on account of her "respectability" they circulate as good everywhere among the masses who hav not skill enough to distinguish between the true and the false. The innocent people hav worked hard for this kind of money, and countless thousands hav laid it up for use in old age, believing it to be genuin. Is he not a constructiv benefactor who, like Ingersoll and his associates, shows them the "mistakes" and roguery by which they hav been cheated, and induces them to throw the spurious coin away, and accept the pure gold, or, what is better still, the note, or the bond, with the government security stamped upon it, and made as permanent in value as the government is in existence?

The down-stroke of the iconoclast destroys, it is true, but the up-stroke constructs. This was illustrated on a large scale in our late civil war. The money value of the slaves in 1860 was at least a thousand millions of dollars. It was destroyed in a moment by a dash of Lincoln's pen. The cost to the North of the work of destruction amounted to two thousand millions of money, to say nothing of lives; and to the South, in opposing it, as much more. But the South is richer to-day for that very destruction; as is seen in the manufacturing and other industries of her people now, in contrast with the stagnation and idleness produced by slavery. The late Senator Hill, of Georgia, saw this clearly when he said that the South fought with all her might, and he himself would hav given his life, to prevent the abolition of slavery, but that now the South would fight harder than ever, if possible, against having the curse reimposed. War is but another name for destruction; but, paradoxical as it may seem to be, it is nevertheless true that our civil war, while it was as destructiv to life and property as a thousand cyclones, built up the prosperity of the nation, North and South, to a degree that astonishes the world. In our war against the church we do not make desolate. If we carry the ramparts of the citadel by a successful attack, we immediately set the masons to work to erect the gable end of the temple of humanity. The moment after we dig up the roots of the upas-tree of superstition, and burn them, we occupy the ground with the oak, and the vine, and all the rest of the fruit and food bearing plants.

Yes, when Galileo and Copernicus taught the heliocentric doctrin of our solar system, every fact and argument for its truth was a death-dealing blow given to the opposit false theory, and prepared the way for the universal acceptance it ultimately met. And so every effort made by editors and lecturers to destroy the authority and prestige of the church in the minds of the people is so much clear gain to the truth, and also to the happiness of mankind. For who that has ever had his mind enlightened by the new truth, and has at length broken the shackles of the old superstition in which he was educated, and has tasted the sweets of intellectual liberty, would exchange the conscious happiness of his experience for all the wealth and popularity the world could giv him?

In military warfare, one of the most foolish things a commander can be guilty of is to undervalue the strength and tactics of the enemy. So in moral warfare. Melancthon, at the time the Reformation of the sixteenth century began, when he got his eyes open to see the errors and corruptions of the Catholic church, thought that he could make a representation of the case that would convert his fellow-priests by the thousand, but his failure to do so was complete. Other timorous souls, like Erasmus, thought that the church could better be reformed by the Protestants staying in it, and working from within outwards; as if a handful of salt could save a whole barrel of meat from putrefaction. But Luther, who was constructed out of coarser materials, and had more common sense, saw that war—incessant and uncompromising war—must be waged against the embodiment of mental and moral corruption called the church, and so drew the sword and threw away the scabbard. As long as he stuck to his original idea of the natural and inalienable right of the individual private judgment, which is the very essence of what is now called "Infidelity," he carried all before him. Protestant nations were born in a day. But when, with wonderful inconsistency, he imitated the Catholic church itself, and embodied his private dogmas in a cast-iron creed, and made its acceptance obligatory on all his followers, he sheathed his sword, the Reformation stopped, and has never advanced an inch from that day to this.

This tampering with the church by imitating her principles and her ways in reformatory work, which I hav observed to be the case with a class of the Spiritualists, is fatal to all progress. Shrewd Jesuit priests and clergymen may giv taffy to the simple ones by leading them to believe that the church is going to accept the new light, but it is only a trick to neutralize the influence and to gain time. It is only gudgeons that can be caught by such a bait. He takes a narrow and false view of the case who thinks that we differ with the church only as to some of her dogmas and ceremonies. We differ with her in the whole theory and philosophy of the universe. We differ with her as to what constitutes the standard of right and wrong. We differ with her diametrically as to the source of all authority and power in civil government, we believing that it is in the people, she believing that is in God, and that she is the expounder of his will. Oil and water can no more mingle in a calm state than can Radicalism be on good terms with religion in any or all of its sectarian forms. The sooner we understand this, and lay out our accounts accordingly, the better for the cause we advocate.

Robert Dale Owen wrote his book called "The Debatable Land" mainly to induce the church to accept the facts and philosophy of Spiritualism, and thus save herself from the incoming tide of Materialism. But, as he might hav expected, the effect upon the church was only to excite her derision at the idea. The bulwarks of the church are her written creeds, formed centuries ago; and are accepted on oath by her clergy, who promis to preach them without fear, favor, or modification. These creeds never change, although the clergy, as they grow in knowledge, see their folly and falseness. Heber Newton, when he comes into court, swears by the "Thirty-nine Articles." Out of court he laughs at them. Men die, but the creed remains, to enslave or embarrass other souls in time to come. The church, therefore, as a corporation, is incapable of reform. It is an obstacle in the way, and progress is bound to make perpetual war on her claims.

We are struggling to erect a temple within whose walls science and ethics—nature's two teachers of truth and morals—shall enlighten the minds and reveal the secret of health and happiness to our children's children to the latest generations. But we must not attempt to build those walls with the untempered mortar of compromise. Science says that if you wish to put up a building that shall last a thousand years, and be as good as ever, you must use a cement composed of certain proportions of fresh-slaked lime, and sharp coarse sand, not humus or clay, which would make it incapable of a bond. These materials, well tempered together with water, will harden with time, and make the work increasingly solid. What a herculean task we hav before us, and how honest and wise our Radical work ought to be! In ancient times, when our language was being formed, the artificers in wood sometimes would deceive their customers by filling the cracks and other defects with wax. Therefore, honest joiners would advertise their work as being "sine cera"—without wax and solid. This is the etymology of our English word "sincere"—without wax, real, true, as it seems to be, without dissimulation. That the walls of our temple may stand, therefore, and bid defiance to the ravages of time and frost, our Radical work, I repeat, must be thorough. As we eschew all the theological doctrins and ceremonies of the church, and justly regard them as vamped-up paganism taken wholesale and retail from the old mythology of Greece and Rome, so let us eschew her ways of propagating her influence, for in our vocabulary half-truths are whole lies. If this policy requires us to go more slowly than we like, we shall at least go surely, and our children will not hav the mortification of seeing our mason-work disintegrating and tumbling down under the weight of the superstructure on account of the poor mortar we used in laying the foundation stones.

To change our figure of speech, the mission of this generation of Freethinkers is to clothe with the forms of state law the principles of the national Constitution embodied in the Nine Demands of Liberalism, and to reform or remove those judges who, in in defiance of the Constitution which they promised to support when they took took the oath of office, dare to insult a citizen of the United States by rejecting his testimony in a court of justice unless he professes a theological creed. We expect to hav a long and bitter contest before these ends are attained. But it is only a question of time. No one denies that our demands are strictly constitutional. If, therefore, the Constitution stands as supreme authority in the land, our principles sooner or later must be victorious. A. B. B.

Enon Valley, Pa., Sept. 25, 1885.

"If I Believed as You Do."

The old cry, "If I believed as you do," is perpetually dinned into the ears of the Materialist and the Atheist. The pious Christian says, "If I believed there was no God, and no future, I'd lie, steal, murder, and do just as I please." Well, pause for a moment, my friend, and ask yourself who you will murder, and how you will go about it, and what possible good could come of it, even here and now? Who will you rob? How will you feel with stolen property on your hands? How can you lie, knowing you will thereby forfeit your right to belief in the future? It is not religion that hinders you from committing these crimes. It is your moral education, combined with heredity and environment. Suppose your intended victim lay bound and helpless before you, could you plunge the knife in his bosom, though you knew it would hav no effect upon your future happiness in another world? You know you could not. Nor could you steal or commit other crimes that are foreign to your nature and training. A Spiritual friend says: "If I believed as you do—if all is blank after death—then suicide is wise."

But I hav yet to learn that believers in a future are any more ready to giv up the hopes and joys of the present life than we Materialists are. Even Spiritualists, who hav no hell, and think the body only a clog and a hindrance to progress, and that death opens the door to a higher life and a happier one, are no more ready to die than others are. We all cling to life, and all strive to win the honor, good will, and respect of our fellow-beings. We liv to be happy and to win love and all that is attractiv to us. It is only when all hope of these is gone, and the future seems to promis only misery and suffering, that "suicide is wise." If I had an incurable cancer that I was sure would make me a burden to myself and others, then "suicide would be wise," and chloroform enough to put me into an endless sleep would be a blessing.

There is not, as many think, an "instinctiv dread of the future." There is a dread of dying. To cling to life is natural and wholesome. If life is worth having it is worth loving and clinging to and preserving. Instinct is only heredity, moral training, and education. It is like conscience—it is created by circumstances, and not instinctiv. If taught that death was only an endless sleep, and that there could not possibly be any suffering after death, and that probably not one in a hundred really feels a tithe of the pain in dying that he does with an hour of the neuralgia, toothache, or sick headache, few would dread it as they now do.

"Oh, but," says another, "I don't see the use of being born at all if we only liv as plants and animals do, and hav no higher mission than they do." This has nothing to do with the facts. We are here. We came just as a blade of grass comes, or a fly, or a worm. We came because circumstances evolved us from the elements.

The male and female germ-cells united, and a new being was the result, just as the pollen falling upon the corn-silk created the grain of maize. We hav no "mission." We liv; we are endowed by our natures with certain powers, faculties and feelings, and in seeking happiness we perform our life-deeds of good or ill, as circumstances seem to lead or compel us.

A handful of clover-seed falls upon the ground. No designer givs a mission to each seed. It simply sprouts and grows, if environments are favorable; or if unfavorable, it dies. "Oh, what's the use?" has nothing to do with it. A drop of rain falls upon a rock in the wilderness. "What's the use?" It simply evaporates and falls again and again, and perhaps some of the same drop falls upon vegetables, and some in the sea, and some once more on the rocks. There is no "design," no "mission," no asking, "What's the use?" It is simply blind matter acting under laws inherent in itself.

So all we hav to do is to make the most and the best of the now and of what is here, thinking only of the future of the race as regards this world, which is its birthplace and its home. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

Snowville, Va.

An Open Letter to Mgr. Capel.

REVEREND AND DEAR SIR: I understand, from high Catholic authority, that the advisability of having the mortal remains of some martyr deposited under the main altar of the great cathedral in New York has of late been the subject of serious consideration. My informant also states that a certain high ecclesiastic advocated secrecy as to the movement, claiming that the American people were not prepared for this blessing.

Although I hav not the pleasure of your personal acquaintance, I take the liberty of addressing you this letter, and, as I am not aware of your present whereabouts, I also increase that liberty to the extent of asking Mr. Macdonald to publish it in THE TRUTH SEEKER, feeling that it will thereby be brought more quickly to your notice, as I hav no doubt that you peruse its columns.

If there be anything, sir, that we Yankees love, it is a genuin article, and being a practical, matter-of-fact set, we are inclined to investigate anything which we do not readily understand, or which bears the slightest semblance of fraud.

The success of your undertaking will most certainly be the dearest wish of all true Americans, and as you are a foreigner, I hope you will not take it amiss if I giv you a few kindly suggestions. If a misstep be made in the start, all may go wrong, and the good people of New York would most certainly feel terribly annoyed.

It is a common, and possibly true, saying that history repeats itself, and I hope, reverend sir, that you will not feel annoyed at my requesting you to keep that saying constantly before your mind and the minds of your reverend co-laborers.

In the Barbarine Library there is an account of a negotiation between some Spaniards and Pope Urban VIII. in regard to the bones of St. Viar.

This saint was much revered in Spain, and a magnificent cathedral had been reared in which to deposit his bones. The whole country was alive with the many miracles, cures, etc., performed either through his intercession or by touching his relics. People had even gone so far as to testify, under oath, that these relics had restored life. Of course, you know as well as I the great excitement which pervaded the entire Spanish Peninsula when the Archbishop of Toledo announced that a "special embassy of holy men" had been deputized to wait on the "holy father" and plead for "special indulgences for all votaries worshiping at this shrine."

The holy see called for the proofs of these miraculous cures, and they came in such great quantities from all parts of the country that when the "holy men" who had charge of the tombstone of the saint arrived in Rome, "the infallible one" declared that the proofs were so convincing that he could not gainsay the prayers of the faithful, and by special bull the Spaniards were granted even more than they asked.

A solemn high pontifical mass was celebrated, and the broken tombstone of the saint, which contained his name, S. VIAR, cut in antique letters, was duly exhibited for the inspection and reverence of the faithful.

But, unfortunate to relate, after the deputation had returned to Spain the balance of the tombstone was found, and on being joined together formed the legend, Præfectus Viarum—or overseer of the highways—evidently showing that it belonged to an official during the occupancy of Spain by the Romans.

You may remember, reverend sir, reading of the consternation which seized the holy college on receipt of the news of this very unlucky find. The most eminent theologians claimed that the devil, envious of the honor paid to genuin relics, had broken the stone in that curious manner and contrived, in some mysterious way, to palm it off on the faithful. The holy college gave its assent to these views, and the gentleman "who never errs in matters of faith" indorsed them also.

History fails to record any account of the authenticity of the miracles having been disputed, but as they did not come from the right side of the house, the worship of St. Viar gradually grew into disuse, and thus, by not being careful in the start, Spain lost a saint.

In a Catholic paper of August last I find the following, which goes to prove the goodness of heart of the "holy father," and should be proof positiv that he is never unmindful of the needs of his children:

The annual festivities in honor of St. James were on the point of terminating on Sunday, July 27th, at Santiago, in Spain, when a telegram was received from Rome by the archbishop announcing that the Sacred Congregation had declared the bones found about four years ago under the high altar of Santiago Cathedral to be truly those of the apostle, Spain's patron saint, ineffectually sought for hitherto since they were concealed, from fear of Moorish raids, in the foundations of the cathedral in the year 1100, by Gelmirez, the first archbishop. New and magnificent festivities are being prepared at Santiago to commemorate the event.

Let us hope, reverend sir, that there may be no unlucky find in this case, at least, and that St. James, by his prayers and intercessions, may be able to mitigate the evils of the cholera which is now devastating that unhappy land. And what a pity it is that the "Sacred Congregation" did not discover these bones before! Possibly they might hav prevented that earthquake from demolishing the Cathedral del Pilar, which was ruined only the other day, while high mass was being celebrated and the Holy Host in the very act of elevation.

Mayhap the devil, most envious of the honor of God, and aware that these holy bones were shortly to be deposited in this shrine, took time by the forelock and brought about this catastrophe, thereby not only destroying the temple of God itself, but even desecrating the very body and blood of his only son, our Lord and savior Jesus Christ.

While here, a theological question arises. If the bones of St. James could hav stopped this hellish work of destruction, why could not the body and blood of our savior hav performed the same work? I know you will pardon my asking the question. I knew all along that it was a mystery, but it blurted out as a natural outcome of the situation. Yet I can not help thinking that for one slight fault I may be condemned to pass an eternity in company with this same devil, while he, having committed such a crime against the very godhead itself, has, for his punishment, the privilege of torturing men and women who considered that three-make-one, or one-makes-three, to be a mathematical impossibility.

I might go on indefinitly, reverend sir, but I am afraid lest our good brother Macdonald may imagin I am taking up too much space, so I will not encroach further on either his space or your time. But this subject is of such vast importance to New Yorkers, most of whom, I hav no doubt, are impressed with the absolute necessity of having a miniature cemetery on almost every corner in their city, that I feel to do all in my power to help you start aright.

The late lamentable fiasco in Lachine, Canada, is most certainly to be deplored. No doubt the "Holy Congregation" has determined that a legion of devils took possession of those miserable Lombard Jews and caused them to substitute the bones of felons for those of our blessed martyrs.

Therefore let us start aright; let us try to avoid this S.VIAR and Lachine business. As I observed before, we Yankees are a peculiar people. We want the genuin article and will pay liberally for it.

I do not know if it be permissible for me to offer a suggestion, but if so I should be pleased to nominate a candidate.

In my choice, I will keep in mind the absolute necessity for martyrdom, and name only him who, in my judgment, should enjoy that distinction, and feel that the chosen one, in view of the honor, would be willing to emulate the conduct of Quintus Curtius, who sacrificed himself for his country's good—for, surely, that which a pagan would do for his country I am certain my candidate would do for his church.

Therefore, I most respectfully nominate you for the position.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, consistent with its name, will second the nomination, and all its readers will heartily indorse, and, if permitted, vote the ticket.

Many respectable, nay, most of the intelligent portion of your co-religionists, who hav read your lectures, will fall into line, and we will hav a fair show for success.

If the "holy father" should object, simply tell him you are "in the hands of your friends."

Respectfully yours, MCARTHUR.

Will He Obey God?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In your issue of Sept. 26th, Mr. E. H. Heywood assures us that Seward Mitchell is "too intelligent, brave, and sincere" to promis obedience to anybody but "God."

Mr. Heywood has, in time past, given not a little evidence of being possessed of a good share of mental acumen. I am for this reason surprised that he should now be making this important distinction in favor of the distinguished personage referred to, who is, we are assured, at present engaged in the obscenity business. The inference is, according to Mr Heywood's view of the case, that if "God" should tell Mitchell to stop distributing his paper, he would stop right away. And if told to distribute Bibles in place of the World's Reformer, he would do that! It really seems to me that it is Mr. Heywood's duty to "rise and explain." FRANCIS BARRY.

ANY coward can fight a battle when he is sure of winning; but giv me the man who has pluck to fight when he is sure of losing.—George Eliot.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1885.

The Ninth Annual Congress.

The Forest City House at Cleveland was full of brass bands and Knights Templar when some dozen or so of delegates to the Ninth Annual Congress of the National Liberal League endeavored to register on Thursday afternoon, the 8th inst. One band stood at the head of the stairs leading to the hotel office, and blared away as though their lives depended on the noise they raised. Another band occupied the raised lobby and made more racket than the one at the head of the stairs. On the street corner fifteen feet below stood a third band outdoing both the others. Through the streets bands at the head of Commanderies marched and countermarched. Drum majors were plenty as drummer boys in the army, and each one was more gorgeously attired than all the rest. Knights Templar in uniforms covered with epaulets, gold lace, and white crosses filled all the hotels and crowded the streets, while the sidewalks were monopolized by their wives, sisters, and perhaps sweethearts, who had accompanied them to the city. An ordinary mortal with no white cross on his cap or coat lapels had in their eyes no earthly business to exist. A list of the members of the different Commanderies used up a solid page of fine print in the big dailies. It was a great day for Cleveland, and she was proud and happy. Friday the Templars went home, and the delegates to the League Congress took their turn at being happy.

The People's Theater on Euclid avenue is a big, barn-like structure. Two thousand people can sit and stand around in it without treading very hard upon each other's toes, and the three hundred people down in the front rows at the opening of the Congress did not seem to be a great many. The three hundred were mostly out-of-town Liberals, some of whom had come many hundreds of miles. The strongest delegation from any one place came from Alliance, O. They numbered forty. Pittsburgh was next, with twenty. The others came in twos and threes, or solitary.

The stage was set with tasteful scenery, and, with the flowers in big green tubs loaned by Mr. J. H. Wade, looked like a garden. Thomas Lees was the chairman of the Cleveland Committee on Decoration. He was aided by Mesdames Smith and Scovell. The illumination of the footlights was tinted blue by the painted windows, giving the effect that stained glass in church windows does. If there had been any advocates of the "blue glass theory" present they could hav found in the stillness that reigned another proof of the quieting effects upon the nerves of sky-blue light.

At 2:30 Charles Watts, the first vice-president, rapped upon one of two columns that served as desks, and called the Convention to order. He regretted that he was obliged to take the place of Colonel Ingersoll, but that gentleman was engaged upon a big law case in New York, and it was therefore out of his power to open the Congress. When he should come, however, Mr. Watts thought he could safely announce that the Congress would hear from him. The absence of the president of the League need not prevent the transaction of business, and the presiding officer was ready to hear motions. The first business in order was the appointing of a Committee on Credentials. How should that be done?

C. B. Reynolds moved that the chair appoint a committee of three. The motion being seconded and carried, the chair appointed C. B. Reynolds, C. P. Somerby, and G. W. Thornberg.

J. E. Remsburg moved that the chair appoint a committee of five on Business and Nominations. The motion resulted in the chair's selection of J. E. Remsburg, E. M. Macdonald, William Algie, E. A. Stevens, and Harry Hoover, as such committee.

The next business was the appointment of a Committee on Resolutions. J. M. Wilcox, the maker of the motion, was chosen chairman, with J. D. Shaw, C. W. Stewart, Frank Bacon, and E. M. Macdonald associates.

As no further business could be transacted till some of these committees reported, Mr. Watts would offer to the Congress a few suggestions on organization. He said:

"Secularism in the States and Canada is now passing through one of the most important phases of its American history. After years of persistent toil, self-sacrifice, and heroic resistance to theological and priestly domination, the Secular pioneers of mental freedom hav discovered, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, Freethought elements sufficiently numerous and potent to be consolidated into one grand Secular organization, whose power should be made to exert a marked and beneficial influence upon the advanced thought of the nineteenth century. All great movements capable of enhancing the liberties of a people, and the welfare of a nation, are the result of gradual growth and intellectual activity. For years the mental force of America has been vigorous in its endeavors to destroy that most aggressiv ecclesiastical monopoly which sought to control the mind and to fetter the thought of this inquiring age. That the stupendous and unrivaled efforts of Colonel Ingersoll; the earnest propagandist labors of D. M. Bennett, Horace Seaver, B. F. Underwood, and a host of other brave and undaunted workers, hav been successful, no one will deny who compares the manifestation of public opinion toward us now with what it was even half a century ago. Great, however, as these achievements were, beneficial as undoubtedly the results are, the record of such noble toil and devotion would hav been much greater had such an organized force existed in the past as we can now hav at our command. It may be truly said to the thousands of Freethinkers on this vast and progressiv continent, 'Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.'

"In accepting the chief office of this association our president remarked: 'It occurs to me that we can do something to unite the Liberals of this country.' No doubt a similar thought has struck many others, and, in my opinion, a Convention is just the place where it should be discovered what that 'something' is. The real object of such gatherings as the present should be considered, in my humble opinion, to be fourfold: 1. To record the progress made since last we assembled. 2. To note defects with a view of removing them as far as possible. 3. To decide upon future action. 4. To giv publicity to our principles by addresses and lectures. At all our Conventions the aim should be to decide what to do, how to do it, and why it should be done.

"From the standpoint of the American Secular Union there is but one answer to the question, What should be done? and that is, Organize into one united body for the purpose of consolidating the skeptical elements so extensivly existing on every hand. There are two principal classes of skeptics in our midst; the one class is composed of men and women who are disciplined in their unbelief, and who liv and act as if they thought that to reject the popular creeds is not the 'be-all and end-all' of their duty; the other class is made up of those who are thoroughly careless and indifferent as to anything beyond their mere skepticism to existing theologies; having become free themselvs, they are practically indifferent about the emancipation of their still slave-bound brothers and sisters. Now the task which this Union sets itself is to seek to bring both these classes into one earnest, working association, and to impress upon each member that Secularism is something more than mere Freethought—it is the utilizing for individual and general good the mental liberty secured by that very Freethought which may be termed a kind of John the Baptist, preparing the way for the Secular savior—the teacher of the necessity of positiv constructiv work as well as negativ and destructiv advocacy. Our business is to obtain the Nine Demands, based, as we think they are, upon liberty, necessity, and justice, and also to oppose to the bitter end whatever interferes with the obtainment of these demands. Further than this, as I understand it, the Union does not at present propose to go. The great want, then, is the united efforts of men and women who will work in unison for this laudable and desirable purpose. As the poet has said:

> "'Wherever wrong is done
> To the humblest and the weakest 'neath the all-beholding sun,
> That wrong is also done to us, and they are slaves most base
> Whose love of right is for themselvs, and not for all their race.'

"If what is stated should be done, how is it to be accomplished? The basis of all our success must be personal effort and the fixed determination of each to do his part to strengthen the Union. The language of the New Testament is applicable here: 'For if a man be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass. . . . But whoso looketh into the perfect law [of virtue] and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed.' It will not be disputed that to do good often involves self-denial, but we should not forget that had it not been for the self-sacrifice of the Freethought heroes of the past, probably our mental freedom never would hav been purchased. Their principles were confirmed and witnessed by their works, and so will all true and honest convictions ever continue to be demonstrated. 'We are not born for ourselvs only,' said Plato, 'but for our friends and for other men.' Let all Secularists take this truth to heart, and resolve to do something for the general good, however limited the circle in which they move. We cannot all be men of talent, orators, statesmen, or great philanthropists. We cannot all possess the transcendent power of an Ingersoll, a Howard, a Lincoln, a Clarkson, or a Garrison, but we can all do something to add to the potentiality of life and to widen the liberty and increase the happiness of the human race. Let us each and all awaken to the proper sense of what is involved in the profession we make. Our boast is the desire to extend a knowledge of Secular principles and to develop their organized forces throughout the States and Canada. This can never be done by talk only. It will require the impetus of noble lives and activ co-operation. Without this it is impossible for Secularism to let the light of its philosophy 'shine before men' with that brilliancy which under proper circumstances it can command.

"Without presuming to lay down any fixed and unalterable rule for our Secular propaganda, the following brief suggestions may be worthy of consideration:

"1. Firm and persistent adherence to engagements entered into and promises made. Some persons only work under the excitement of transitory enthusiasm. For instance, after listening to some inspiring lecture men avow their readiness to organize and to perpetuate the work begun by the lecturer. But after a short time these very men 'grow weary in well-doing' and nothing more is seen of the promised aid. Avowal of intention must be supplemented with constancy of purpose to render any movement an organized success.

"2. Due respect should be shown for the opinions of our honest opponents. The force of the Golden Rule here comes in. Let us separate in our condemnation the opinions from the persons who hold them; and above all, as Secularists we must avoid dogmatic denunciations. Truth is limited to no one country nor confined to no one sect or school of thinkers. All honest searchers can find some portion of it, and our search and discovery should be governed by three things: earnestness of investigation, sincerity of discovery, and justice to those who hav been less fortunate than ourselvs.

"3. Music and singing should be indulged in wherever it is possible at our Secular meetings. Music is the sweetest and highest response to the emotional yearnings of human nature, and it is among the most potent attractions to women and children, whose society and co-operation are so desirable to the success of our movement.

"4. Branches of the Union should be formed wherever say a dozen good and earnest men can be found. Having formed themselvs into an association, they should meet regularly and study the constructiv elements of Secularism with a view of strengthening the disciplin of personal conduct. Such meetings should be conducted in proper order, with method, punctuality, and with a due regard to the rules of public assemblies. This would inspire outsiders with the earnestness of those engaged in Secular exercises. New branches would do well also to hav lectures as frequently as possible, and at stated times, so that the general public may know when to expect them. At all lectures Secular and Freethought literature should be judiciously circulated.

"5. Good-will and mutual forbearance should characterize all our proceedings. We know uniformity of opinion is impossible, and therefore the right to differ should always be recognized. Many a young society has been choked in its usefulness because some one or two of its members could not hav their own way upon some particular questions. To refuse to work with colleagues unless one can hav all he desires after his own heart is an exhibition of weakness which a more strict adherence to Secular teaching would probably remove. Jealousy of position and despotism of government are deadly enemies to societarian progress, and should be discountenanced in the great Secular movement.

"6. Personal integrity and home cultivation should be regarded as being among the first duties of every member of the Union. 'By the fruits shall ye know the tree.' The world to-day estimates a man more than ever by his actions. No man who ignores truth, pays no attention to the excellence of character, neglects his wife and family, and takes no pride in his home, can be a Secularist, however much he may condemn the prevailing theologies of the world. Men honest in business, faithful in their engagements, and who seek to make their homes abodes of happiness and joy, win respect from opponents, liv down petty opposition, and vindicate the power of practical Secularism.

"Delegates on leaving this Convention should resolve to put into force the good they hav witnessed here. Do not let it be discovered that the seed has been sown on stony ground. Call your friends together and commence practical work. If it be asked why this should be done, the reply is, the improvement of man and the triumph of our cause demand it. We intend making Secular principles known and felt throughout this entire Continent. As in the past philosophy brought to Greece an illumination which rendered her the light of the world, and made her children the pride, envy, glory, and admiration of all who knew them, so, we are confident, will the ever-advancing light of knowledge and Secular truth continue to increase until the uttermost corners of the earth shall be enlightened and emancipated from the nightmare of theological domination. When we banish mental darkness, when we shed around the light of knowledge and true wisdom, we prepare the way for the blessings which follow in the train of that wisdom and knowledge. One by one the phantoms of superstition are being exiled, and we believe the time will yet arrive when mental darkness and physical misery shall be known principally as a heritage of the past, and when mental freedom and the truths of science shall beam on the heads and gladden the hearts of the sons of men.

> "'O first of all the tribes of earth,
> Wake to the knowledge of thy worth,
> And mark the ills of human life,
> And heal their woes and quench their strife;
> Tyrant and slave, art thou, O man,
> Thy world, thyself, thy fellow scan,
> Nor forward cast an unxious eye—
> Who knows to liv should know to die."

At the conclusion of Mr. Watts's remarks, Mr. J. M. Wilcox said that some people in the audience would like to know what the Nine Demands of Liberalism were, as across the hall, on a streamer some seventy feet long, was printed, "Our Object: The Nine Demands of Liberalism." The chair replied that during the Congress the Demands would be read, and explained and defended. The order of business called next for the secretary's report. Mr. Putnam came forward with an enormous roll of manuscript, which was described by the reporters in the morning papers as an exhaustiv report. Exhausting would hav been a better word. But it was strictly business, necessary to be heard, and the audience seemed to possess the requisit patience. It was a detailed account of the work performed during the past year, epitomized from the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, with suggestions for the ensuing year. The readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, therefore, hav had all of it except the following summary and accompanying suggestions:

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

"Your secretary has visited over fifty different cities and villages, and lectured from one to three times in each place. He has traveled nearly 8,000 miles—over a territory 1,800 miles long and 1,200 miles wide. He has entered into correspondence with several hundreds of Liberals from Maine to California, and Canada to Texas, and he has written every week from one to three columns for THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Investigator. Your vice-president's record is as follows:

SUMMARY OF LECTURES DELIVERED BY MR. WATTS.

"September and October, 1884, thirty lectures at following places: Toronto, Hamilton, Simcoe, Oshawa, Lindsay, Dunnville, Welland, Meaford, Owen Sound, Walkerton, Gananoque, and Montreal.

"Note.—Attended Toronto Convention and secured the amalgamation of the Canadian Societies with the American Secular Union. Formed several local societies—the most at Hamilton and Owen Sound.

"January, 1885, delivered nineteen lectures in Canada, Toronto, Hamilton, Thorold, Owen Sound, Bradford, Listowell. March, 1885, seventeen lectures at Toronto, Bradford, Alton, Parkhill, Hamilton, Dunnville, Montreal, and Welland. Lectures since my return: Albany, Toronto, Hamilton, Welland, Waynesburg, Pittsburgh. Total, seventy-seven lectures and debates, besides the fifty-six he gave when with your secretary. Total, from Convention to Convention, 133.

"Such is the bare outline of the work that has been done during the past year by your officers. It is not so great as expected; with more experience greater things might hav been done. When, however, we compare the New York State Freethinkers' Convention and Liberal League Congress at Cassadaga last year with the Convention this year at Albany, and the Congress here in Cleveland, it will be admitted that a most wonderful advance has been made in interest, in enthusiasm, and in power. This is largely due to the fact that Robert G. Ingersoll is our president, and that his overflowing generosity givs new hope and courage. He reaches a thousand hearts with the flame of his eloquence where the other officers of the League can reach but few. Inspired, however, by his brilliant leadership, encouraged by his noble fellowship, aided by valiant co-workers like Remsburg, Mrs. Krekel, Helen H. Gardener, C. B. Reynolds, and the magnanimous support of THE TRUTH SEEKER, Investigator, and other Liberal journals, it will be granted that the labors of the vice-president and secretary hav contributed somewhat to the splendid results of this hour. It is for the Congress to judge of the value of the performance, which, whatever its outcome, has been a reward in itself for all disappointments and painful struggles.

"The hardship, the difficulty, the inevitable failure which must oftentimes come, can only be understood by those who hav themselvs been in the very front of the pioneer service.

"Six new Leagues hav been formed. There hav been added four life memberships and thirty-five annual memberships.

"It may be asked why this small number of additional societies and individuals? To this natural question your secretary replies: First, the small number of activ Leagues in existence a year ago. These may be counted almost upon your finger ends. Had the officers been backed up in the advance work by two hundred and fifty activ Leagues instead of ten, with the remainder dormant, a far better showing of organized Liberalism could be boasted of to-day. As it is, the most necessary thing to be done is to infuse life into what is already established, and then the work can be pushed forward with accumulating force.

"In many places visited by your officers it was not thought best by those who fully understood the local situation to form an organization. In such cases the judgment of your officers must defer to the judgment of those who are better informed.

"It will not do to organize until there is sufficient impulse and knowledge upon which to carry forward a constant movement.

"The fundamental work of your officers in the field of advance labor is, first, to create an impulse; secondly, to spread information; thirdly, to organize. In some places only the impulse can be given; in others, only the impulse and the knowledge; and only in a few choice localities, already well prepared, can the life be furnished whereby an organization would be justified. Paper organizations will not do. They must be organizations sparkling with life.

"The two grand difficulties in the way of permanent organizations are:

"First, the indifference of many Liberals. They are Freethinkers, but not Secularists. They are individual, but not humanitarian. The welfare of the race touches them not. They themselvs are happy; why should they sacrifice for others? This spirit largely prevails. The remedy lies not in theology but in science. Knowledge will inevitably make for humanity. Orthodox selfishness of heart still abides with those who are free in mind, but the preciousness of liberty is this, that it creates life, and life in essence is love, and must go forth in fountains of fresh effort.

"Secondly, the subtle and immense ecclesiastical tyranny which still pervades the length and breadth of our land, especially in small places—a tyranny which shapes itself into social ostracism, and is indeed the most fearful and tremendous power which the church possesses to-day. There are thousands of business men who are in sympathy with the cause of mental freedom who dare take no open part, for the reason that they would suffer financially and their families socially. This power will be wielded by the church as long as it is exempt from taxation and receives the favor of the state, for it thus remains an aristocratic institution. Let it stand upon its own merits, be a part of the democratic life of society, and its prestige is gone, and the Freethinker will attain his business and social rights. Then the Secular Hall will flourish side by side with the cathedral, and some day overtop its highest spire with its signals of hope and progress on this green earth itself.

"As to life-membership, very few Liberals can afford $25 for such an excellent privilege. It is worth the money ten times over, but though the will is present the pocketbook is absent.

"In regard to annual memberships, your secretary thinks they had better be abolished, or be made a living part of the national association. There are many communities where there are only three or four Liberals. They cannot form a local organization, yet they would like to be in vital connection with the national Union. An annual membership does not now make any such living relation. It does not make one a member in full standing, that is, it confers no voting power—except by consent of Congress. Many therefore do not care for it. A large number of those who hav contributed to the Fund hav not called for a certificate, because the certificate confers no power; it is only an ornament. Make him who contributes a dollar and upward a voter in the Congress—not by consent of the Congress, but by the Constitution itself; bring each annual member into a living relation with the Union to be formed; and without doubt there will be a thousand annual members, where now there are but a hundred. Under proper regulation, there can be no danger in such a thoroughly democratic arrangement as this. As it is now, hundreds will contribute their dollar, but they will not ask for the certificate. It seems wise that in addition to the local organization in those choice communities where they can flourish there should be a national association for those tens of thousands of isolated individuals who cannot thus come together in neighborhood work, yet who would like to feel the thrill of the universal movement of American Liberalism. The annual membership can be used for this purpose, but the certificate, while beautiful as an ornament, should represent a vital connection between the one individual and the whole brotherhood. The annual member may not come to the Congress and vote, but the fact that he can do so if he wishes makes tenfold his interest in the cause. Giv power, and with it springs enthusiasm.

"In regard to some methods that might be adopted in the future advancement of the work of Secularism, especially in new communities, your secretary would say,

"1. That a series of lectures should be given rather than one. More solid advancement can be made by a week's course of lectures in one place than by a lecture each evening in six different places. One lecture advertises another. Between the two lectures there is time for talk, time for acquaintanceship, and for organization. Better progress can be made the coming year by each lecturer selecting twenty-five different points, and laboring a week or two in each, than by lecturing one night only in two hundred different places, coming and going with railroad speed.

"2. That part of the funds for the coming year should be used for the publication, the purchase, and the distribution of Liberal literature. Especially should there be documents prepared setting forth our aims, our methods, our reason for being, our history, and our hope for the future. Most effectual service can be done by this various instrumentality. What is spoken upon the platform will be repeated again and again in the silent hours of thought.

"3. The increase, the doubling up, if possible, of the circulation of Liberal papers, THE TRUTH SEEKER, the Investigator, and others. This is most important. The service which THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator hav rendered the National League is incalculable. After the adjournment of the Congress at Cassadaga, it was only by the generous assistance of these papers that your secretary could reach the masses of Liberals throughout the country and continue the work begun. Through them a call was made to tens of thousands of Liberals from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and their unselfish cooperation made that call of noble effect, and gave victory where otherwise there might hav been defeat.

"Your secretary finds the ground prepared, the audience larger and more enthusiastic, and the results more fruitful where there are subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator. Indeed, it is difficult to hav a lecture unless there is the nucleus of a few readers of these papers, who are in constant sympathy with the movement at other points.

"In many places your secretary believes that half a dozen subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator would be better than an organization of that number only. These would constantly form a committee for work, while an organization without this weekly impulse from our able journals would assuredly die. The work of this association must be based upon a reading public, upon intelligence and sympathy with Freethought movements throughout the country and throughout the world. Therefore, to increase the circulation of THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator is to increase the fundamental source of power to grow and influences to advance.

"Your secretary would also suggest that in order to giv increased vitality to our movement, or rather to preserve its vitality, political action on the basis of the Nine Demands must be begun; legislativ action must be induced, in order that the barbarism of the past may no longer insult our rights. Liberals should not submit to these political outrages. Some one asked a man how much he weighed. 'Ordinarily,' said he, 'I weigh one hundred and fifty pounds, but when I'm mad I weigh a ton.' It's time for Liberals to be mad; then they will weigh something, and their influence be felt far and wide in the politics of the day; not party politics, which is but a reflex of the theological squabbles of the past, but fundamental politics, which touches what is deepest and dearest to human life, which makes for human brotherhood, human welfare, and liberty for man, woman, and child. Practical work must be done; petitions must be circulated; candidates questioned; bills introduced; arguments made before committees, and agitation kept up until the question is settled rightly. The Nine Demands express the American idea, and the Declaration of Independence will not be fully vindicated until our platform is incorporated into the Constitution of the United States.

"Your secretary respectfully presents these facts and suggestions for the consideration of this Congress, with the hope that the mistakes of his individual judgment will be remedied by the united wisdom of this vast gathering, whose good will and appreciation is to him the noblest reward that it is possible for your officers to receive."

J. M. Wilcox moved that the secretary's report be accepted. The motion prevailed.

C. B. Reynolds, chairman of the Executiv Committee, then read the following report:

REPORT OF THE CHAIRMAN OF THE EXECUTIV COMMITTEE.

"MR. PRESIDENT, OFFICERS, DELEGATES, AND MEMBERS OF THE NINTH ANNUAL CONGRESS OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE: Immediately after the adjournment of your last Congress, I prep. red and had printed blanks for the secretary of each Local League to fill out and return, giving such particulars and information as would enable me to lay before the Board of Directors the exact condition of every League. With copy of this blank I sent a personal letter to each secretary, urging prompt response, the careful filling out of the inclosed blank, and to write me what in the secretary's opinion was most needed to build up, encourage, and increase the usefulness of the League. Failing to receive any reply from the secretary in any case, I inclosed another copy of the blank, with personal letter to the president of such League. In this work alone, without counting additional correspondence, answers to questions, etc., I wrote and mailed four hundred and thirty-three personal letters. It is much to be regretted that the responses were not more encouraging. Local Leagues in earnest, activ life were the rare exception; those holding regular weekly meetings, and those making any regular payments to the National Liberal League, few and far between. I sought diligently for available persons, to appoint as members of the Executiv Committee, desiring to select only those who would self-sacrificingly devote themselvs to the work of organizing and building up Local Leagues in their several states or territories. But, in harmony with the judgment of my colleagues, I refrained from making any appointments until the public announcement by our distinguished president, Colonel Ingersoll, of his acceptance of office; immediately after which, in compliance with the authority vested in me by the resolution of last Congress, I appointed the following persons members of the Executiv Committee:

EXECUTIV COMMITTEE OF THE LEAGUE.

ALABAMA.—E. W. Smith, Massilon.
ARIZONA.—S. C. Rogers, Charmingdale.
ARKANSAS.—J. Victor Pedron, Camden.
CALIFORNIA.—Dr. J. L. York, San Jose.
COLORADO.—Jervis Joslin, Leadville.
CONNECTICUT.—Byron Boardman, 63 High st., Norwich.
DAKOTA.—N. S. Johnson, Sioux Falls.
DELAWARE.—James Dykes, 2 E. 7th st., Wilmington.
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—W. H. Burr, Washington.
FLORIDA.—Evald Hammar, Grahamville.
GEORGIA.—A. A. Bell, M.D., Madison.
IDAHO —A. Ervin, Murray.
ILLINOIS.—F. F. Follett, 302 State st., Chicago.
INDIANA.—J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
IOWA.—M. Farrington, Denver.
KANSAS.—J. E. Remsburg, Atchison.
KENTUCKY.—D. B. Cozine, Lexington.
LOUISIANA.—R. Glennon, Arbroth.
MAINE.—Albert Lewis, 11 Jefferson st., Bangor.
MARYLAND.—C. Garwood, 103 Fairmount ave., Baltimore.
MASSACHUSETTS.—Horace Seaver, Paine Building, Appleton st., Boston.
MICHIGAN.—J. H. Burnham, Saginaw City.
MINNESOTA.—W. F. Jamieson, Lake City.
MISSOURI.—Mrs. Mattie Krekel, Kansas City.
MONTANA.—Thomas Burk, Salesville.
NEBRASKA.—A. Jacobson, 2022 Harney st., Omaha.
NEVADA.—G. L. Green, Eureka.
NEW HAMPSHIRE —N. Monroe, North Walpole.
NEW JERSEY.—J. W. Frankel, Press Club, Newark.
NEW YORK.—C. B. Reynolds, North Parma.
NORTH CAROLINA —Joseph Fritts, Highlands.
OHIO.—W. I. Irvine, 243 Superior st., Cleveland.
OREGON.—Lee Laughlin, North Yamhill.
PENNSYLVANIA.—Wm. Seymour, 231 Vine st., Philadelphia.
RHODE ISLAND.—L. L. Northrup, 25 Page st., Providence.
SOUTH CAROLINA, J. S. Thomason, Pacolet.
TENNESSEE.—W. S. Bailey, Nashville.
TEXAS.—Jas. D. Shaw, Waco.
UTAH —Wm. Reynolds, Wanship.
VERMONT.—John Belknap, St. Johnsbury.
VIRGINIA.—Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.
WASHINGTON TERRITORY.—S. F. Albert, Cathlamet.
WEST VIRGINIA —C. Ornold, 748 Main st., Wheeling.
WISCONSIN.—Dr. Juliet H. Severance, Milwaukee.
WYOMING.—Albert Meredith, Rock Spring.
CANADA.—J. A. Risser, 9 Opera House Building, Toronto.

"I wrote to each person so appointed a personal appeal, urging their prompt, activ co-operation and soliciting correspondence as to the present condition and needs, and asked for a statement of what in their opinion would be the best method of carrying on the work, and advancing the aims and objects of the National Liberal League in their state or territory. I hav had considerable correspondence in compliance with this request, and hav published some of the more important letters to and from members of the Executiv Committee in THE TRUTH SEEKER. And I would now respectfully report and offer the following facts and suggestions for the consideration and action of this Congress:

(Continued on page 664.)

Communications.

The Annual Idler.

DEAR BROTHER: 'Tis autumn, and the leaves are dry and rustle on the ground, and chilly winds go whistling by with low and pensiv sound. I hav just finished a five-weeks' vacation in New England. It is a great country. I suppose I need not say anything about the time the boat I went on "left the dock," or other particulars of that kind. The boats leave the dock this season about the time they start, and rarely take the dock with them. My ticket called for one first-class passage from New York to Keene, N. H., and I could tell when I was nearing the latter place by the way the conductors and railroad employees increased in size and importance. The New York conductor is a humble individual, who enters the car quietly and takes your ticket and answers your questions as though he were a fellow-sinner with you. The New England conductor cheewallops through the cars with a noise that is heard above the roar of the train. You know when he is coming; the door flies open as though struck by a battering-ram, and closes with a bang that scares your hat off. He swaggers down the aisle with a tough professional swing, takes up the tickets with the air of a man doing a duty that belongs to some one else, and answers inquiries in the most incomplete and unsatisfactory manner. The brakeman is even more surly than the conductor, the depot employees eclipse the brakeman in the same direction, and the manner of the ticket-seller makes you feel like inviting him out where you can lick him. The civilest official I met was a policeman at Springfield, Mass. He was really polite. I had your infant son with me, and I pointed that man out to him and told the boy to regard him well; he might never see his like again.

Keene is a city in Cheshire county, New Hampshire, which state is chiefly noted for the men who hav left it, and the present resident will admit, if you put him on his honor, that it is a good place to get away from. I learned up there that the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER had just struck his tent at Long Pond, in the town of Stoddard, where he had been camping for two weeks with some jovial friends. I heard no good of him.

In going from Keene to Surry I passed over the three miles of road that you and I walked twice a day, in the winter of 1869, on our way to and from school, carrying our dinner-pails loaded with large chunks of gingerbread. The road seemed shorter, going over it in a carriage, than when we measured it with our sesquipedalian legs; nevertheless it is quite a considerable distance. School was keeping in the little school-house in the pine woods, and, as the song has it, "the boys were playing some old game beneath that same old tree." They were children, I suppose, of the boys and girls who went to school with us, and busy themselvs enlarging the notches we cut in our desks.

From my observations, it seems to me that the land of this state is not as fruitful as it must hav been years ago, at least on the hills in the parts I hav visited. Old cellar-holes that once held great bins of potatoes, bushels of winter apples, and eke the fervent cider-barrel, now lie uncovered, their walls falling in, and their bottoms grown up to grass. Huge piles of stone and miles of wall, enough to build a hundred pyramids, and whose builders are now forgotten dust, are crumbling back to earth with the action of frost and rain. These things are calculated to make the beholder realize the transitory nature of his stay, and to think of the time when this form wherewith he treads the ground shall hav pointed its toes toward the eternal stars. Graveyards, and tombstones whereon are recorded the virtues of those who lived, died, and were long unremembered before we were born, seem rather to detract from the importance of our individual part in this endless drama. Still the people are activ. They go on marrying, and giving in marriage—which amounts to the same thing; children grow up and grow old, and the cattle rub their noses against the flinty ground and crop the grass as industriously as their progenitors may be supposed to hav done. Things here meet the vicissitudes of time with a rocky barrier, yet I can see that great changes hav taken place within the past twenty years. Some of the old folks, it is true, appear to me to look exactly as they did that length of time ago, but the majority of them hav crept into their graves. The boys and girls we knew are mostly married now. Those not married begin to be suggestiv of beautiful autumn leaves.

There are many curious and historic people living in Cheshire county. The old lady livs or did liv here who prayed that it might rain nights and Sundays so the hired men could rest. Up in Marlow resides the ancient female who rejects the labors of the revision committee. Your new-fangled gospel she will hav none of. She wants nothing better than the "good old Bible that God wrote." Here also pursues the even tenor of his way the man of great natural curiosity who is said to hav taken his barn down to see how it was made. This man deserves more than a passing notice. His name is Perry—George Joseph Perry. Although, as he expresses it, he "pursues, substantially, the business of farming, giving attention, mostly, to stock growing, with its incidental crops derived by tilling the lands, through this fructifying source," Mr. Perry is none the less an author. He has written and published a "memoir of the life, with subject matter, of the author," and two "Dissertations on Government, with its Popular Advancement," which is the most remarkable book I ever saw. Mr. Perry has traveled. He went West, when he was young, by way of a canal. He stopped over awhile at Washington, which he says was at that time capital of the United States, as well as a "widely extended theater of political concerns." Here he was so fortunate as to listen to a speech by Henry Clay, who, it may surprise some to learn, had "in a high degree the rare gift of eloquence." He also saw the "Capitol edifice," and was "readily affected by the glow, thus present, of American pride and veneration for these living and accompanying evidences of its real and potential character." His notes on the war explain that this event produced ultimately great unpleasantness, and had reference to "freedom as respected a race of African descent." In religion, Mr. Perry says, "his own Christian profession partook of the nature of that of the Congregational church." He closes his biography with the modest statement that "Mr. Perry possesses the qualities of a ready writer, together with those qualities which unite to form the requirements essential with the orator and speaker." Years ago I heard this man deliver a political stump speech in Surry. It was these same "dissertations on government, with its popular advancement," and lasted so long that those who had watches wound them up and went to sleep. I met Mr. Perry. He is well educated, and can spell quite a number of hard words. He deludes himself with the idea that he is the father of many great thoughts, and I expect he will die in that belief. There are many like him.

A new institution has sprung up in this vicinity since I left off farming. It is called the Silo. You see fields of great corn from eight to fourteen feet high; it is ensilage corn for the Silo. You see the door yard strewn with lumber; the farmer is putting in a Silo. You see a gang of eight or ten men around the barn, and hear the clatter of horse-power; they are filling the Silo. I worked a few days helping to construct one of these things. It is a great tank with double-boarded sides and a cement bottom. I worked two days helping to fill two of them. There are numerous positions connected with an ensilage cutter where a good hand can make himself useful. After trying most of them, it was discovered that my strongest hold was "treading." I shoveled the cut-up fodder for a while one day, and then a hearty but brainless idiot took my place, and they found he discharged the office more satisfactorily than I was able to do. Even at treading I did not excel. They told about a man who put a fourteen-hundred-pound bull into his Silo, and found him worth a half-dozen like me. I do not desire any more competition of that sort. The knowledge which a man may gain by being in communion with books and listening to learned men does not qualify him in the least to help fill a Silo.

I attended divine service once while in New Hampshire. The meeting was held in a little district school-house, and people came several miles to attend, though I was unable to understand what they got to repay them for their trouble. I entered the place of worship after almost everybody else had arrived. The men occupied one side of the room, the women the other. My first bad break was to get into a seat among the girls. This seat was evidently made for me when I was quite small, as I found it impossible to take my legs in out of the aisle, and had to sit between two seats on a piece of board laid from one to the other, and which was in momentary danger of breaking. The preacher, a superannuated minister of the Christian church, sat behind the teacher's desk, and a man I take to hav been a deacon teetered about on tiptoe between the parson and a couple of girls who, together with the deacon, composed the choir. Preliminary to the musical exercises, the preacher, by a skilful application of the thumb and forefinger, blew his nose in two directions on the floor, did a double blast with his handkerchief, and read the seventh chapter of the gospel according to St. Matthew. This chapter dealt largely with hypocrits, and seemed to afford a kind of malicious consolation to some of the hearers, who, you could see, "knew a number of people in the neighborhood that it applied to." The singing of a hymn that followed was accompanied by a broken-winded organ, the strength displayed in blowing the same being much greater than the skill wherewith it was played. The usual prayer succeeded in its turn; then a hymn, the voices of the singers totally failing to rise above the wheezing noise made by the organ. The sermon was an every-day sort of performance, but I listened to it attentivly, and was rewarded by catching the eye of the pastor, and having the heft of the discourse delivered directly at me. Perhaps the old chap recognized me, as I had heard him preach the same sermon several times, in another town, a dozen years ago. The "experience" meeting, with which the exercises closed, consisted of miscellaneous remarks from different quarters. An aged sinner with trembling hand and voice declared himself in a state of mind because he had failed to let his light shine before men, and, as a consequence, an acquaintance had died unrepentant. He thought it would require nothing less than infinit forgivness to pardon him for that offense. The thought that he might hav passed by on the other side when some deserving person needed his aid did not seem to disturb this gentleman. Furthermore he didn't believe in probation after death, and would not encourage it if he did. Another man said, "I thank God for the assurance that Jesus loves me. I praise his holy name." And the minister said, Amen. A young woman popped up long enough to offer this invitation: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will giv you rest." Said the minister: "Thank God for that blessed assurance." "Praise the Lord!" ejaculated another man. "I feel it's good for my soul to be here to-day at this meetin'. Praise the Lord!" The hymn, "Take it to the Lord in Prayer," completed the exercises. There was no collection, and it is as much a question with me how the minister got his reward for preaching, as how the audience got their reward for listening to him.

I am glad to be able to state that there is one man in this district who, without being especially learned in law, knows enough of the nature of secular government to realize that the holding of religious exercises in a building built by public money is illegal. He is also courageous enough to express his views of the subject openly, and has entered his protest against this unlawful proceeding. Though not claiming to be a public speaker, he stated in the course of some vigorous remarks at a late school meeting that those persons in the district who wished to enjoy the consolations of religion should provide a place for it to be preached at their own expense.

This meeting which I attended was probably a type of the thousands held in the country that day. And of what good are they? An evening at the Liberal Club is worth more than all of them. The sermons contain nothing of value; the singing is often feeble and uninspiring; the "testimony" has the appearance of being forced and insincere. It is discouraging to a hard-working man to be told that all he has bought and paid for is an undeserved donation from the Lord, and that it is only by a dangerous stretch of divine mercy that he is even permitted to enjoy "a tolerable degree of health." If the Lord really intended to be generous to his creatures, why didn't he make the soil of New England easier to work and more productiv? Why didn't he make rest profitable instead of labor, and endow him with the most good gifts who should invent the largest number of innocent pleasures?

I listened in vain to hear a word about the gospel of health or recreation, which the people there so much need; about kindness to women and children, or even dumb beasts. The New Englander should hav little apprehension about his soul. If he wins a living in this world, provides for his family, and educates his children, he has bought all the blessedness there may be in store for anyone in another world, and has paid a good price for it, too. Imagin land where you cannot drive a stake without first preparing a hole with an iron bar; conceive of a field with stone enough on its surface to build a wall around it; call to mind a climate with frost in June and a snowstorm in September—a summer across which spring and autumn shake hands; estimate farm produce as worth nothing, and commodities which must be bought as costing everything; think of long days' work, no evenings, and short nights' rest, and you will hav in your mind a fair picture of farm life on New Hampshire hills. It is wonderful how these people can be so good-natured and hospitable. There must be a great conflict forever waging between their pocket-books and their generosity, and the conflict can end only in disaster if generosity get the upper hand. The New England farmer knows that his farm is not worth so many dollars this year as it was a year ago, and that next year the price of real estate will probably be less than it is now. Eggs will be cheaper before they are higher. He must sell his beef for six cents per pound and buy it back out of the butcher's cart for twice that price. Oleomargarine has made butter hardly worth carrying to market. He cannot raise corn with profit, nor will his income justify him in buying it. The only thing that will bring in anything is hay, and yet every ton of hay sold subtracts so much from the value of his land. To keep his farm up he must return to the soil as much as he takes off, and he must pay out for fertilizers the money which he receives for his hay. It looks to me as though the New England farmers were getting into tolerably close quarters.

I had the good fortune, while in New Hampshire, to hear a lecture by Colonel Ingersoll. He came to Keene on the 23d of September and talked about "Myth and Miracle." I had heard all his other lectures, but this is a new one. There were hardly three hundred people present, and these were not demonstrativ, though they could not but be interested. The old minister I had listened to the Sunday before was there, and had a front seat. The lecture was more argumentativ and philosophical than any I hav heard from the same source, but it abounds in beautiful passages and sentences such as the hearer is likely to remember and take home to think over. The colonel draws a distinction between a myth and a miracle; the one is a fanciful explanation of phenomena that really do take place, while the other is an account of something which never did, and could not possibly occur. Myth was harmless fiction; miracle deliberate falsehood. I don't know how the people of Keene take these things, but I guess that deep down in their hearts they know that the colonel is right.

Perhaps I hav written enough for one week, yet I hav been altogether unable to do full justice to my subject. I hav had various experiences, and made numerous notes and observations. It shall be my pleasant duty in another letter to lay these before your readers. I cannot close without expressing my gratification on observing that during my absence you hav kept THE TRUTH SEEKER up to the high standard at which I maintained it while you were away. The calm serenity with which you lean back in your chair and assimilate the undeserved commendation bestowed upon my humble editorial efforts during that period, and the way you shoulder the responsibilities thereby incurred, are also refreshing. These things add a new charm to the tender recollections which I bring home with me from my trip to New Hampshire.

Your affectionate brother,

GEORGE E. MACDONALD.

Biblical Absurdities.

Absurdity number one is found in the very foundation of all religions based on a reputed revelation. I refer to the reputed inspiration of certain books, the claim that they emanated from God himself. In order to investigate the subject we must start with some idea of a God and his attributes. In order to avoid complications, I will start with the Christian definition of deity. This definition is not drawn from the Bible. So contradictory are the statements, as well as the inferences, of this book that it would require a volume to contain the various attributes accorded him, and we would still hav no definit idea of a God. I will, however, ascribe to him the character usually given him by Christians. I do not mean to go into the mysteries of the trinity and godhead; but, to use a local phrase, I will size him up and lump him off. His personal appearance they appear to know nothing about, since the only person who ever saw him got only a vanishing glimpse of his back. As to his general character, any minister can tell you more in five minutes than you can glean from the Bible in as many years. They will tell you that he is a being omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent; just, patient, loving, and merciful; unchangeable, and transcendently perfect; that he has existed throughout the past eternity, and will exist through time and another eternity—"when time shall be no more." They will all agree on about this much. Farther than this you cannot go without arousing the suspicion of being an Infidel (investigator). But this is enough, and I shall bend this (the Bible), and the various doctrins having it for their foundation, to this idea of divinity. If there be an unchangeable God, who has made regulations that man must obey or be d——d, it is only in accordance with justice that there should be a medium of communication between God and man, and to accord with his reputation for justice, that medium should be as immutable as that God and his decrees.

The question naturally arises, does artificial language present this advantage? A very little research will convince the most obstinate that the opposit is true. Words are constantly changing in orthography and in meaning. We are constantly throwing aside old words and coining new. It would surprise some to find that they must hav either inspiration or translation to enable them to read the productions of their own ancestors. These changes may be witnessed in our own country. All hav noticed the different dialects of the various sections. A listener can tell, from a man's conversation, whether he came from the east, west, north, or south. I hav no doubt that I could be placed pretty accurately. Yet these oddities are caused by the same gradual change. It is owing to the mutability of artificial language that we hav so many different languages, and not to a miraculous Babel. Yet it is through this changeable medium that the Christian God givs his laws to man. If the language changes, God will damn the man of his own creation for not obeying the original law. How does this accord with the much-vaunted infinit justice? I hav only strained once and the rotten fabric begins to break.

Again, these laws should be revealed to all alike. "For the sake of argument" we will admit that God may hav revealed his laws to some man or men, or even that he did write part of these laws himself, and supervised the publishing of the remainder. These men would doubtless accept them as divine. If God told them to write the laws or to teach them orally, they might do so in good faith; but they would not be inspiration in this instance. It would not be God saying so, but some men claiming that God said so, and their acceptance would depend, not upon his reputation for veracity, but upon that of its ministers. If, in addition to this, many of the laws are unjust, frivolous, or degrading, and many of their statements false or unreasonable, we will reject them, especially if their supporters and propagators are noted prevaricators; and by doing this we would reject, not the word of God, but that of man. In this way we might reject much that we would accept if God would just take the trouble to affirm its authenticity. Yet God will damn us for disbelieving these men, when all history proves that they could not be trusted as far as you could throw a feather against the wind! But let me illustrate. You hav two neighbors. Neighbor Jones is a man of undoubted veracity. Neighbor Smith is, to say the least, doubtful—a man who will lie for nothing and tell the truth for a quarter. Smith tells you that he was over to Jones's to "borrer a paper," and Jones said that while out hunting the day before he loaded his gun hurriedly to shoot some turkeys and forgot to remove the ramrod after ramming the charge home. He fired into the flock and strung two of the birds on the ramrod. You don't believe it, but, happening to meet Smith as you come from mill, you mention the story to him, and he corroborates the story, or, perhaps, says that there were five birds instead of two. You now believe a more unlikely story, because you know that Jones will vouch for it, not that Smith said Jones said so. Apply this to the Bible, or to any of the so-called revelations. Satisfy yourself that God is their author, if you can, but don't risk your eternal welfare on a story that had a dozen suspicious or notorious characters between you and its divine author. No, we must hav a medium of communication between God and every individual; but that medium must be a perpetual revelation. Without this man is not responsible, and a God that would hold him accountable would not make a decent devil.

His laws must be accessible to all alike. Not one of the books for which divine authorship is claimed has been translated into all languages, or preached to all peoples; and you know the justice in punishing a man for not believing a story he never heard. I am not assailing Christian doctrins in particular, but that condition of affairs that will save the few who hear and damn the many who do not.

Another objection to a written word of God is its liability to forgery. Again, for the sake of illustration, we will admit God's authorship in one of the many books bearing his signature. There are many such, and all but one are forgeries, and, as such, are simply side doors to hell.

How are we to decide which is true and which are false? Are we to decide by their strength? Will you be willing to decide this in face of the fact that no one of the religions of the earth enrolls more than one-fifth of the human race, and that any one you may accept will damn the other four-fifths? Are we to decide it by the intelligence of their adherents? We will find the wisest of the earth in the ranks of each. Attempt to decide by the merits of the books, and you will find that each contains many grand truths and noble sentiments, and also much that is a direct outrage of justice, decency, and virtue. They all appear to agree upon but one point. You must decide, and a mistake means damnation.

We will now admit that you hav chosen the original word. You will still be harassed by the reflection that it has, perhaps, been changed in many vital points. Almost all books of this class hav been, at some period of their existence, wholly in the hands of certain classes, who alone were permitted to handle and study them. All others received their knowledge second-hand. You know that it would be no difficult matter for such men to change them, and also that the character of these men was, in many cases, anything but reassuring; that they lauded as virtuous the lie spoken in support of their religion. How do you know that the idea of creating a corner on the real estate market of New Jerusalem, by giving the wrong books, did not enter the minds of these crafty priests? Rest assured that if these priests hav deceived you, they hav effectually sealed the gates of heaven against you. If the Bible demon can damn us for Adam's mistake or sin, he is quite capable of this. This class of men alter the books in their keeping for the sake of honor or power. Another class, good, honest, whole-souled people, who do not believe them, and are not of the stuff from which martyrs are made, change them from a different motiv. They hope to render salutary what they cannot eradicate, and, not having the force, they substitute craft.

I will notice briefly one more objection. Had we a universal language, most of those already given would apply equally well. Instead of this, however, we hav hundreds of different languages. You must surmount all these difficulties, and still jeopardize your eternal freight among the rocks of translation. Our Bible will serve as an illustration. Hundreds of years' work had succeeded only in securing a book which, at its last revision, contained no less than forty-two thousand mistakes.

Now, in conclusion, I wish to ask you if you are going to attempt to wade to heaven through this bog of superstition? Are you going it blind in this way, or will you rather follow the light of reason? I hav, in this, made only such objections as would apply to any one of the many books for which the claim of inspiration is made. In the following I will notice the Bible more particularly. W. H. PETREE.

A Comparison.

Stephen Girard, James Lick, Peter B. Bingham, John Redmon, William McClure, Robert Owen, all Freethinkers, donated and appropriated more money for benevolent and charitable objects than all the Catholic clergymen that the United States has produced. Put the deeds of these men alongside of those of Bishop Purcell, who is said to hav embezzled $4,000,000 from poor, confiding Catholics, which act caused the death of 137 persons, if the newspapers properly inform us. And Bishop Purcell is only one in a list of 114 Catholic clergymen who in the space of eleven years, in this country, hav been charged with every crime in the criminal catalog, from embezzlement to murder. And so far as the founding of hospitals, asylums, and other charitable institutions is concerned, these institutions are run and paid for by money appropriated out of the public treasury. Take the city of New York alone. The Catholic church has obtained donations of public city lots valued at $3,500,000.00. It has also received from the public treasury in eleven years for the support of Catholic institutions $6,043,626.45. Total, $9,543,626.45. It is now drawing from the public treasury annually $700,000.00

If this amount of money has been purloined from the pockets of the people, irrespectiv of religious proclivities, Freethinkers as well as others, for Catholic institutions in the city of New York, what is it costing the people of this country, outside of the Catholic church, to sustain these institutions in the whole United States? Now, if we Freethinkers are selfish and sordid because we don't want to be taxed to support institutions which were founded mainly for the purpose of proselytizing or holding people or children to the Roman Catholic faith, we are determined to continue selfish and sordid in this respect, and we will never pool our issues with you as some Protestant patriots did during the Tweed regime, and are still doing in various parts of the country.—J. J. McCabe.

Investigating Ghosts.

From the Phrenological Journal.

The learned and progressiv gentlemen who constitute the working factors in the Society for Psychical Research in London are embarrassed much in the way that an unsophisticated youth would be who had suddenly come into the possession of great riches. They hav been investigating hypnotism, the divining rod, and thought-transference, and appear to hav reached some definit conclusions in regard to the production of the phenomena connected with these subjects. They hav latterly taken up the much more occult phenomena of Spiritism, and almost in the outset of inquiry hav been overwhelmed with stories and accounts of apparitions more or less supported by respectable testimony. London itself is found to be richly supplied with ghosts, so that there is material enough at hand to employ the time and wits of the investigators. These gentlemen of S. P. R. aim to be candid and impartial: they hav a most difficult nut to crack, and evidently know it. The eyes of the world scientific and unscientific are upon them, and mistakes even of caution or discretion will receive little mercy. They must, to use the words of a writer, "be just to an apparition as well as generous to a molecule," "must use the eyes of the soul as well as the lens of the microscope." They find that some of the many cases submitted to their analysis cannot be relegated to hallucination, disturbed mind, overwrought imagination, fear, or expectancy, and to apprehend the true nature of these seems like clutching at a shadow; theory here has no basis; and must therefore be placed in abeyance until some positiv data may warrant its revival.

We do not look for a solution of the phantasm problem. If there are supernatural phenomena we do not expect to be logically satisfied concerning their character. Scientific research may settle the question of the occurrence of such phenomena in the affirmativ, and may go so far as to classify, or differentiate peculiarities of expression—we think that it will; but to disclose their cause and manner of production seems to us beyond the reach of physical machinery. We are much in accord here with Miss Phelps, who has said that "no investigator is qualified to pass judgment upon psychical phenomena who is not equally ready to admit, if admit he must, in the end, that he is dealing with the physiological action of cells in the frontal lobes of the brain, or with the presence of a human soul disembodied by death." He must be "hospitable to a hallucination, or to a specter. He must be, if necessary, just to an apparition as well as generous to a molecule."

(Continued from page 661.)

"Our first great need is more thorough and efficient organization, including systematic payments by every member.

"Justice demands that all should help in the work to the extent of their ability, and not leave the willing workers and self-sacrificing devotees of the cause to bear all the burdens, while many selfishly go free, having no financial interest (at least of their own investing), confine their efforts to fermenting discussions, finding fault with and impeding the efforts of the self-sacrificing, zealous workers. It is respectfully suggested that in harmony with the avowed principles and rallying cry of Secularists, 'Justice,' every member, independent of voluntary donations or contributions, pay a specified amount every month in advance. Before the aims and objects of the American Secular Union can be accomplished, the people must be educated to a knowledge of the justice of its claims, and how its success will promote the best interests of all classes, securing for all equal civil and religious rights, regardless of religious faith or the lack of it.

"We hav a most unequal conflict to wage, a powerful enemy to overcome, no less than the mighty devil, the real, terrrible devil, Ignorance. Fortunately our trust is in a real redeemer, not a myth of the imagination, but the most practical of all practical realities—our savior is the Liberal printing-press. We shall hope in vain for salvation unless we prove our faith by our works. Not by profound scientific lectures that are ruinous costly, heard by few, and understood by less, but the judicious circulation of our best Liberal publications must be our chief dependence. When the Liberal publications (in distributing which all can take part and help on the good work) hav prepared the way, then the able lecturer will be listened to, understood, and supported.

"How to most promptly and surely provide the needed supply of suitable Liberal literature, and secure its judicious distribution, is a question of vital import, and entitled to the most earnest consideration of this Congress.

"Very many persons in almost every town in the United States are fully convinced of the fallacies and absurd claims of Christianity, are disgusted with the arrogant dictation and exactions of the church. They would gladly connect themselvs with a Secular society, and, with their children, attend the science school on Sundays, if any such existed in their vicinity. But they continue members of the church, giving to it of their means and influence, because to avow themselvs Secularists, and to withdraw from the church, would result in their ostracism by church society, and there is no other provided.

"Children and youth love to assemble together; the church realizes this, and givs her best efforts and attention to the promotion of sociability. If our children and young people hav no science school on Sunday to invite their Christian companions to, they will accept the invitation, yield to the persuasion of their Christian friends, and go with them to church and Sunday-school.

"And it is pretty much the same with the older folks. Hence the imperativ necessity of organizing local Secular societies in every school district—a herculean task, but the success of the American Secular Union, the liberty and best interests and happiness of our fellow-creatures, demand it.

"Great ability, untiring energy, persistent devotion to the work, despite all obstacles or discouragements; hard work three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, good part of the time half, and very often the whole, of the night, will be required on the part of the officers to whom the work shall be entrusted. And while it is right the officers should set the example of self-sacrifice and self-denial, and we expect them to be actuated by more eager desire to advance the cause than to accumulate dollars for themselvs, yet such ability and devotion as this work requires commands in all other fields, and should receive from us, liberal remuneration. How to obtain money with which to carry on the work and pay such officers, without depending on the charity of the wealthy, or making constant begging appeals, always unsatisfactory, and at best a most precarious dependence; how to equitably render the Society independent and self-supporting, is a question demanding solution by the Congress.

"With a full sense of the difficulties in raising 'ways and means,' with all due respect for ancient usages, but impressed with the truth that there are some customs more honored in the breach than the observance, I respectfully suggest that at the time of forming a little struggling Secular society, the you-must-help-me-first of the big Society, the your-money-or-your-life demand of $5 or $10 for a charter fee, for the bare privilege of being just on a list as a subordinate society, has not tended to encourage, nor proved the best possible incentiv, to start such organizations, nor has it proved a very prolific source of revenue to the National League. Therefore the advisability of the American Secular Union remitting or abandoning all claim to any charter fee is respectfully recommended to the consideration of your honorable body.

"I would earnestly recommend that Secular societies, within a given tendency of twenty to twenty-five square miles be organized as a district Secular Union; that all such district unions hold regular quarterly meetings, so that all Liberals within such territory shall be afforded opportunity to form acquaintance, compare methods of work, and by means of such frequent large and spirited meetings, gain greater courage, and be inspired with a spirit of emulation to redoubled effort.

"Would it not be advisable that the district unions should elect officers of the state union, and that the president of each state (or territory) Secular Union should by virtue of such election become a member of the Executive Committee and vice-president of the American Secular Union?

"No society can retain the confidence of its members unless all its transactions are conducted on sound business principles. The practice indulged in by some societies of permitting persons to receive money for or in behalf of the society, and instead of paying over such money to the treasurer, sending a voucher or receipt for some claim in lieu of the cash, thus usurping the office both of the board of auditors and the treasurer, is unbusinesslike and pernicious The Executiv Committee therefore recommend to your honorable body the passage of a resolution that no person or persons, under any plea or pretext whatever, be permitted to retain, pay out, or use any money received by them on account of, or for the use and benefit of the American Secular Union. But that all money earned, donated, contributed, paid to, or received by any person for the use of the American Secular Union must be forthwith paid to the treasurer; that no money of the society be paid out by the treasurer unless on the order of the Board of Directors; that no order on the treasurer for the payment of money shall be issued by the Board of Directors for or in payment of any goods, merchandise, or article, unless such goods, merchandise, or article hav been actually delivered and inspected, and found to be in all and every respect in accordance with the order given for such goods, merchandise, or article; that the Board of Directors shall not issue any order on the treasurer for the payment of any work or service rendered the American Secular Union, nor for the payment of the salary, or any part thereof, of any officer of the society until such work and service shall hav been well and faithfully performed, to the satisfaction and full approval of the Board of Directors, nor for the payment of any expenses incurred by any officer or other person in the performance of any work or service for the American Secular Union unless an itemized account of such expenses shall hav been first rendered in writing, and shall hav been audited and approved by said Board of Directors. And that an itemized account, giving amount, date, and full description of articles purchased, or nature of service rendered, and expenses incurred and allowed, together with full name of the persons to whom any and every such amount shall hav been paid, be published in THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator the first week in January, April, July, and October.

"Your Executiv Committee suggest that the chairman of the Executiv Committee be instructed to procure soon as possible, and submit for the consideration of the Board of Directors, articles on the aims and objects of the American Secular Union, carefully written, giving the facts and arguments in such a spirit of frankness, gentleness, and candor, as will awake thought but lull prejudice, yet be of such real interest as to insure being read again and again by all classes—articles especially adapted for leaflets or small tracts, suitable for new fields, that would incite discussion, and help all to understand the justice of our demands."

E. A. Stevens moved that Mr. Reynolds's report be referred to the Committee on Resolutions. Carried. The Congress then adjourned.

EVENING SESSION.

The evening session opened with about five hundred present. The secretary read two letters. The first was from Vice-President Elizur Wright:

"MEDFORD, MASS., Oct. 8, 285.

"SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, My Dear Sir: Imperativ duties keep me here, while I desire to be with the friends of justice in Cleveland. But however individuals fail, justice will finally prevail. Nature always finds the right track—always hits on the right point of attack at last. The Christian church has, for thousands of years, claimed that the theology which it stole from the Hebrew is the only real light and salvation of human life. Let it giv us the proof by honestly paying the taxes on its ecclesiastical or theological property. That is the first thing for it to do, if it would achieve its own salvation here or hereafter. That done, it would be easy to bring the almost continental republic to a more just, simple, and economical system of taxation than that which now prevails as to national revenue, which was in fact borrowed from kingcraft, when it was the ally or slave of priestcraft.

"Yours for reason and liberty, ELIZUR WRIGHT."

Helen H. Gardener sent the following greeting:

"ST. LOUIS, MO., Oct. 7, 1885.

"MR. COURTLANDT PALMER, Dear Sir: I send my greetings to the Congress of Freethinkers assembled at Cleveland, and regret, more than I can express, that I am unable to be there and hear all the good things you will hear, and see all the earnest workers you will see.

"The Freethinkers of America ought to be a very proud and enthusiastic body, when they hav in their presidential chair the ablest orator of modern times, and the broadest, bravest, and most comprehensiv intellect that has ever been called 'Mr. President' in this land of bravery and presidents. Washington was a patriot of whom we are all justly proud. He was liberal in his religion and progressiv in his views of personal rights. And yet, he had his limitations. To him liberty and personal rights were modified by the words, 'free, white, adult, males.' He got no farther. He who fought for freedom upheld slavery! And yet, we are all proud and glad to pay honor and respect to the memory of Washington.

"Abraham Lincoln we place still higher on the roll of honor; for, added to his still more liberal religious views, his conception of freedom and justice had at least two fewer limitations than had the patriot of 1776. He struck both 'free' and 'white' from his mental black list, and gave once more an impulse to liberty that thrilled a nation and gave fresh dignity to the human race.

"But what shall we say of our president—Ingersoll? A man who in ten short years has carried mental liberty into every household in America—who is without limitations in religion, and modifies justice by no prefix. A man who, with unequaled oratory, champions Freedom—not the 'free, white, adult, male' freedom of Washington. A man who has breasted a whirlwind of detraction and abuse for Justice—not the 'male, adult' justice of Lincoln, but the freedom and justice, without limitation, for 'man, woman, and child.'

"With such a leader, what should not be achieved? With such a champion, what cause could fail! If the people ever place such a man in the White House, the nations of this earth will know, for the first time, the real meaning of a free government under secular administration.

"'A government of the people, for the people, by the people,' will be more than simply a high-sounding phrase, which, read by the light of the past, was only a bitter mockery to a race in chains; and, read by the light of the present, is a choice bit of grim humor to half of a nation in petticoats.

"But so long as the taste of the voter prefers to place in the executiv chair a type of man eminently fitted for private life, whom, when you want to find him, you hav to shake the chair to see if he is in it, just so long will there be no danger that the lightning will strike so as to deprive the Freethinkers of one man in America who could fill the national executiv chair full, and strain the back and sides a little getting in.

"Once more I send greetings to the Convention, with the hope that you may hav as grand a time as you ought to hav, and that Freethought will receive a new impulse from the harmony and enthusiasm of this meeting.

"Sincerely, HELEN H. GARDENER.

"My ticket is: R. G. Ingersoll, president (first, last, and all the time); Courtlandt Palmer, treasurer (ditto); S. P. Putnam, secretary and chairman of executiv committee; C. Watts, first vice-president and debater (the two latter to be paid for their work). Together with a list of vice-presidents that will fully and fitly represent the cause to the general public.

"H. H. G."

The remainder of this report of the proceedings of the Congress will be given next week in full, including Colonel Ingersoll's address. Time for its preparation, and space for printing it preclude its completion in the present issue. It may here be stated, however, that the name American Secular Union was adopted by a unanimous vote, and officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

President.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Vice-Presidents.

CHARLES WATTS, HORACE SEAVER,
JOHN E. REMSBURG, PARKER PILLSBURY,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, WILLIAM ALGIE,
MATTIE P. KREKEL, ROBERT C ADAMS,
ELIZUR WRIGHT, TITUS L BROWN,
JAMES PARTON, HELEN H GARDENER.

Secretary.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Treasurer.

COURTLANDT PALMER.

Chairman Executiv Committee.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS.

Chairman Finance Committee.

EUGENE M. MACDONALD.

Editorial Notes.

"ANXIOUS INQUIRER" sends us this query: "Will you please inform me if Thomas Winter, familiarly known as the 'buckeye boy,' is still a Materialist?" We believe that Mr. Winter continues to remain tolerably near the ground.

MR. L. DEWITT GRISWOLD, of Auburn, N. Y., has just engaged the editor of the Auburn Morning Dispatch in an argument on the Nine Demands of Liberalism. This is a good way to get these Demands before the public, and is particularly effectiv when they are so ably sustained as they hav been in this instance by Mr. Griswold.

A CORRESPONDENT has kindly furnished us, during the past week, with the St. Joseph, Mo., daily Herald, containing the so-called "sermons" of the Rev. Samuel Jones, revivalist. We hav not read them all—life is too short—but we hav read enough to be able to say that so far as we are concerned the people of the wild, wild West are welcome to monopolize Mr. Jones. The effete East will try and struggle along without him.

IN "The Fact Divine," a Catholic history by Joseph Broeckaert, of the Society of Jesuits, translated from the French by Edmund J. A. Young, and published by McGowan & Young of Portland, Me., the author excuses the dragonnades, the Albigensian and Waldensian persecutions, and the proceedings of the Inquisition generally, excepting the Spanish Inquisition, which, after some ineffectual attempts to throw overboard, he at last takes up and apologizes for, like the rest. As to Pope Gregory XIII. and the massacre of St. Bartholomew, he says that the mass was not celebrated at Rome for the destruction of heretics, but for the escape of the French king. He asserts that the prisons of the Inquisition were healthier than others, that the Holy Office was in general mild, and that, even in Spain, the autos-da-fe "were often edifying spectacles of retraction and penitence;" and he defends the Inquisition generally against the modern theory of toleration.

THE New York Herald, of September 29th, says: "There were high jinks at the South Baptist church in Tottenville, Staten Island, on Sunday night. The regular religious exercises were varied by such episodes as one deacon boring auger holes in the under side of the baptistry to let the water out, and prevent a baptism, while other official church-members rushed out, drew off their coats, and squared their fists in front of one another's noses, the throng looking on meanwhile, and hooting at the combatants." THE TRUTH SEEKER cannot spare space to enter into the particulars of the affair, which, as Sir Lucius O'Trigger says in the play, "is a very pretty quarrel as it stands." Some idea of its intensity may be gleaned, however, from the words of Pastor Bott, the Achilles of one of the parties, who is reported to hav said: "If Jesus Christ were to come to the pulpit, I believe that some of these people would crucify him, and kill him!" It is melancholy to see such a tendency to the doings of what they call the old Adam, among those who parade themselvs to the world as the followers of one who is termed by them the prince of peace. It is still more singular that the nations who profess to be guided by his teachings should be the scourges of all other countries, and the most scientific, most bloodthirsty fighters in creation.

Mr. T. J. Dove, of Alpine, N. Y., has shipped to this office a barrel of Tompkins County King apples, and the same has been duly received. From the beauty and flavor of the fruit we are inclined to believe that it was not the Tompkins County King that caused all the trouble in the Garden of Eden. It must hav been some other variety of apple. We are authorized by all here concerned and employed to thank Mr. Dove for his kindness and to wish him well.

There is something in the following item, which is clipped from the New York Sun of Sept. 29th, that is worthy of the attention of our readers:

"The pope has desired the chapter of Franciscan monks to suppress the numerous breweries belonging to that order in Bavaria, which produce the famous "Franziskanner Brau," highly esteemed by all beer drinkers in Germany. The personage who will most deeply regret (and resent) this step will be Prince Bismarck, who was a large consumer of this particular brew, of which he is exceedingly fond."

Let us trust those pious brewers hav not neglected matins and vespers in pursuing their extremely secular avocation. But why should Leo XIII interfere with their work? That is an important question. The beer seems to hav the sanction of the laity as well as the prayers of the clergy, for it is impossible to doubt that any barrel of it ever left a monastery without having a blessing inserted into it through its bunghole. What will Prince Bismarck and the pious tipplers of Germany do without their regular daily allowance of holy beer?

We learn with regret that the author of the "Pyramid of Gizeh" has abandoned literature for the law, and instead of further enlightening the world, he will help those litigious characters who can get into a fight but not out of it. This is the letter that grieves us:

"New York, Oct. 1, 1885.

"E. M. Macdonald, Esq., Dear Sir: To all the brethren who are engaged in setting the world right in their opinions, whether upon politics, religion, or philosophy, a last and long farewell. My humbler aim must be to help set them right in their property contentions. Permit me, therefore, to inclose my card. Yours truly, Van Buren Denslow."

This is the card:

"VAN BUREN DENSLOW,

"ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

"167 BROADWAY,

"ROOM 9, NEW YORK."

Mr. Denslow is no novice in the business, for he has impartially divided thirty activ business years between law practice and teaching and journalism and literature.

The Liberal Club.

The 383d regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club was well under way when the man wearing Mr. Wettstein's emblem of science and liberty entered the hall. Mr. Wakeman was making some complimentary remarks about the literature for sale by the secretary, and was being attentivly listened to by a large number of contented-looking people who wore the good clothes and cheerful expressions that come with prosperity and a clear conscience. The proprietors of the hall, who are always slicking things up, had furnished a new reading desk for the speakers. This was varnished so that those in the forward seats could see their faces in it. The front of the desk bore these letters in bright gold: "G. M. T. Ash." The significance of this legend is unknown, but it is supposed to hav some connection with the worship of the Great Jubellum, which is the deity of the Free and Accepted Masons who own the building.

Mr. Wakeman said that the Club's sixteen-dollar donation to the Pedestal Fund for the statue of Liberty had been acknowledged by the committee, of which Senator Evarts is chairman, in a very kind and appreciativ letter. The committee also sent a picture of the statue, and the same now adorned the wall in the northwest corner of the hall near Mr. Eckhart.

The lecture of the evening was to hav been delivered by Mr. George Chorpenning (which name is pronounced the same as it would be if it had no h in it), the subject being "Governmental Reform." Mr. Chorpenning did not come, and the chairman decided that Mr. Levy, who was in a measure responsible for Mr. Chorpenning being announced, would hav to take his place and talk about the same subject. Mr. Levy thereupon took the platform, and showed that he was sufficiently acquainted with the question to make an interesting speech. The central object of governmental reform, he held, was the abolition of the United States Senate. This body in nowise represented the people, being chosen by the legislatures of the states. The people themselvs should elect their senators by a popular vote. This government was modeled too closely, Mr. Levy thought, after that of England, and the Senate was as useless here as the House of Lords is there. Besides, senators are very corrupt. He had seen their votes openly bought and sold. Mr. Levy's address was short, and contained no superfluous matter. He requested John Swinton, there present to continue the discussion.

The chairman seconded Mr. Levy's request, and on behalf of the club invited Mr. Swinton to speak. Mr. Swinton made a weird and hocus-pocus speech. The Senate, he said, was the most hopeless body in the world, profligate, unscrupulous, and totally corrupt. There was but one remedy—abolish it. He had seen the votes of senators corruptly sold in jobs, making the people's will of "none effect," to borrow an ungrammatical phrase from St. Paul. How to effect the abolishment of the Senate heaven only knew. Mr. Swinton had been in the English House of Lords, and watched its proceedings. Two or three old paralyzed peers were there, and mumbled speeches that none of the other peers could hear. The Senate must likewise be paralyzed. The way to do this was to expose them as King George was exposed, as African slavery was exposed, and as Editor Stead of the Pall Mall Gazette had exposed the maiden tribute to the aristocracy of London. Mr. Swinton once heard Wendell Phillips deliver a lecture under a banner inscribed, "God bless the commonwealth of Massachusetts." Mr. Phillips read it and then said, "God damn the commonwealth of Massachusetts." Mr. Swinton would not like to say "damn," because it was a wicked word, and he did not know what word the Liberal Club used for "God," but he would say the opposit of God bless the United States Senate.

A city missionary had up to this time occupied a chair near the door, but when she heard the word damn she shook the dust of that hall off her feet and went away.

Mr. Wakeman said that the case was not hopeless. He was not prepared to despair of the ultimate destiny of this republic. The people were too jealous of their power to let it be taken from them. The way to do away with the United States Senate was to pledge our state senators to vote for its abolition. Until that was done, no Socialistic reforms could be achieved. The people should elect their representativs to Congress, and Congress should choose the president of the United States. Machine politics and political conventions could thereby be gotten rid of. State legislators should elect the governors of the states.

Madam Delescluze put in a plea for our revolutionary sires, who had been lightly spoken of by previous speakers. Theirs was the age of faith; this the age of inordinate greed. She believed the men who founded this republic were great men, and did the best that could hav been expected of them. The people had now become corrupt, and legislators in that respect represented their constituents.

Mr. Sutherland stood up to defend the United States Senate. He believed it to be the only shield between himself and despotism, because it confirmed the appointment of the supreme judges, who were the only men we could rely on for honesty. He did not believe Cleveland was honestly elected, and would giv any man five dollars who would prove that he was. The Senate was to the political machine what the regulator is to a steam engin.

Mr. Beaumont said that he had seen all sorts of champions, but Mr. Sutherland was a kind he had never met — the champion easily-satisfied man. Mr. Beaumont knew the Senate was corrupt and should be exposed by the voters. But the people were also corrupt, and why should not the Senate expose them? The great defect of this government, the speaker thought, was the secret ballot. The fathers of the republic laid the foundation of all our political troubles when they established the secret ballot. Mr. Beaumont said that our laws and rights were different things. He had heard that these started from England in two ships, and the ship with our rights aboard never got here.

A gentleman who was a stranger then offered some remarks. He agreed, he said, with nobody, and the chairman intimated that he was just the kind of man the club was looking for. This speaker agreed with the others as to the existence of evils, but not as to the remedy. As long as the people were poor, he held, their votes could be purchased. Purity would come only with prosperity. We must look to the material welfare of the people first.

Mr. Levy replied briefly to the previous speakers. He was still of the belief that the Senate should be reformed or abolished.

Mr. Wakeman remarked on the interest of the meeting just closed, and said it was only another proof that when outside speakers failed it, the club was capable of entertaining itself in a satisfactory manner.

Biding the accomplishment of governmental reform, Mr. James Redpath will tell the club, at its next meeting, "What to do in the Mean Time," which the same The Truth Seeker will rise to explain in its next issue.

A Mythical Adam and a Mythical Christ.—Three years ago the great Congregational preacher of Brooklyn declared his disbelief in hell and the atonement. Since then he has expressed his contempt for the greater part of the Old Testament, and said that only three or four of David's Psalms were at all edifying. More than ten years ago he spoke of the story of theGarden of Eden as a parable, and now he boldly says that "Adam never existed." Now let Mr. Beecher giv his careful attention to the question of the historical Jesus, and see whether he can find any more evidence of Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate than of Adam's fall in the Garden of Eden.—Antichrist.

What the Enemy Has to Say.

Contemplating the possibility of disestablishment, which is being urged with considerable vigor at present in England, the Bishop of Rochester (Dr. Thorold) has written a letter arguing against it. We quote some of his most bitter remarks:

Roughly analyzed, the advocates of what is called disestablishment may be ranged under three classes. The Secularists, bitterly disliking revealed religion of any kind, clearly perceive that to deprive the great English Church of material resources for exercising her functions would be to strike a blow at the Christian religion throughout the world. Certainly the destructivs would be the gainers. The political class, enamored of a specious theory of religious equality, and resenting the obstacles which the church in former times is alleged to hav continually opposed to salutary and indispensable reforms, would punish her for the past by crippling her for the future. Some religious Nonconformists (perhaps the most formidable of all) honestly believe that alliance with the state means subservience to it, resent that the Anglican disciplin and formularies should be recognized as the national ideal of the truth and rule of God, and seem able to persuade themselvs that were we sent into the wilderness of a wholesome poverty we should, after an interval, no doubt, emerge into a higher level of goodness and a loftier idea of duty than the world has seen since Constantine. I say "some," for there is a strong minority the other way. It is true that few thoughtful persons would care to deny that a free church has advantages and opportunities. But do they preponderate over those of a national church, and what would happen until the tribulation was over?

What is being forced on us with a fierce eagerness means a religious war, which will penetrate every home, set class against class, neighbor against neighbor, in a kind of strife which, as history tells us, is wont to be far more bitter than a mere civil dispute, and perhaps much more protracted. The responsibility is not ours, but theirs. Also, we hav a word for the neutrals, that large body of undecided bystanders who will look on in cynical indifference at what, though pastime to them, is almost death to others. The church, if she falls, will not fall alone. A good deal else is sure to come sooner or later out of her destruction, which those who let her fall may not particularly care for. When the dust and smoke of the battle clear away, there may be found other ruins than hers.

Some things will assuredly come to pass. In many of the rural districts the church organization, from want of material support, must disappear; and, as our Nonconformist neighbors are in no instances asking for a share of the alienated endowments, it is hard to see how, even if they wished to do so, they could take up our dropped labors. In country towns the effect might be less severe, but in the great centers of labor, such as Liverpool, or Leeds, or Leicester, or Bristol, the church's framework would be utterly submerged; and just at the moment when she was beginning to overtake the neglect of a past generation, and was earning the gratitude of all good Christian souls by her sacrifices and devotion, she would be struck down with paralysis. With disestablishment paganism would soon recover its ancient and sinister significance; the church's work would hav to be done from missionary centers of celibate clergy, who, if they could supply in some degree the public ministrations of the church, could in no sense be the pastors of the people. The sick would be left to die without consolation, the poor and afflicted would no longer hav the power of claiming or receiving the tender sympathy and personal instruction of their own authorized clergymen; the best and cheapest kind of police for the masses would be suddenly dismissed about their business, and it is no exaggeration to say that the entire country would suffer.

Nor is this all. Very quickly, indeed, all our church-schools would go; and there would be free, perhaps Secular, board-schools, everywhere in their place. The church, indeed, would liv and work on as best she could—tested and purified by trouble. Bishops and clergy would not be the least likely to forget their duty to their nativ land, nor their faith and duty to their divine head, nor their care for the poor, nor the great privilege of still being the ministers of a historical church, which has, with all her faults and shortcomings, done good service to England for more than 1,200 years. But they would be working with lessened numbers and straitened revenue, and (being men) with a very sore heart. It is to be doubted if she could remain as wide and deep and catholic as she is now. Her tendency would be to sectarianism. She would be in danger of imperfect sympathies with the intellectual movements of the time, and of isolation from the outside national life. While the conflict lasts, if I know anything of Englishmen, it must mean a real passion and tumult of warfare. When it is over there is likely to linger on for years a very bitter resentment; and Christian folk, so far from being brought nearer to each other, as some fondly hope, would certainly be more alienated than before. For while we should absolutely trust the wisdom and love of God, and be assured that his providence designs for us, though in a way we understand not, an eventual and perhaps adequate recovery, as honest men we could hardly be expected to show an enthusiasm of gratitude to those who hav been the eager intruments of our fall.

Lectures and Meetings.

E. C. Walker lectured at Patch Grove, Wis., Oct. 4th. He will remain in Iowa through October and November. From reports received Mr. Walker is doing good work. He will accept calls to lecture. Address him at Valley Falls, Kan.

Mr. Charles Watts lectures next Sunday, Oct. 18th, at Greenwich, Mass.; Sunday, Oct. 25th at Boston, afternoon and evening; Sunday, Nov. 1st, at Philadelphia; Sunday, Nov. 8th and 15th, at Pittsburgh; Sunday, Nov. 22d, at Kansas City. All friends in the neighborhood of these places desiring lectures will please communicate at once for dates and terms with Charles Watts, 33 Clinton Place, The Truth Seeker office, New York.

Section III. of the Social Science Institute, organized for the consideration of "Practical Humanities," holds its third regular meeting, Thursday evening Oct. 15th, at the College of the City of New York, corner of Lexington avenue and 23d street. The subject for discussion will be: "High License vs. Prohibition." Pro, Mr. Robert Graham, Hon. Judge Arnoux. Con, Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, Hon W. Jennings Demorest, prohibition candidate for lieut.-governor.

An English Freethought contemporary says that in an article on "The Co-operativ Commonwealth," in Our Corner, Annie Besant appears to proclaim herself a thorough-going Socialist.

Letters from Friends.

SERMONET NO. 2.

Text; And when he waz kum out ov the ship immediately ther met him out ov the tooms a man with an unkleen sperit" (Mark v, 2).

Brethren and sisteren, tu da i shal tel u about one ov the grateest feats ov equestrianism that ever hapend. it hapend also when our lord wuz yet in the wurld. Infidels boste ov ther sience, but they kant beat the devil riding hogs, eny wa. Now, my frenz, u see our lord waz out taking one ov his morning walks and he kum akros a man hu had the devil in him very bad, and akkording tu the narativ he must hav ben well akquainted with the devil, for the devil knu him on site, and begged him tu let him be, and told him by God he dident want him to torment him (Mark v, 7). He asked Jesus a favor and Jesus granted it on the spot. So tha must hav ben very intimate frenz. U see Jesus konkluded he wude hav sum fun, and he sent the devil after the hogs, and the devil rode two thousand down a steep hill intu the sea. Now let all the wurld bring on their great riders and tha kant beat that. Remember he rode two thousand all tu wuns, and anuther thing I don't want u tu forget, he rode inside, while your circus riders in riding four horses stan on their bax. The devil rode two thousand hogs, and rode them all at wuns, and rode outside ov all ov em. How he dua it u nedent giv yourselvs eny trubble about. It is in the inspired wurd and that is suffishent fur us tu beleve it. Matthew saze there wuz tu men, but Mark and Luke saze there wuz only one. Therefore we will beleve the tu witnesses and kno the story is tru. At the same time we kant giv Jesus eny credit fur letting the devil droun his nabor's hogs by the thousand. That pork wud hav fed a good meny poor gentiles, and the men hu owned them must hav been broke up. If it wuz a great feat of equestrianism, it wuz a mean trik for God's son to du. But he wuz young and wanted to see sum fun, and I suppose the old man dident like him for it. But the old man made the hogs and tha wuz his own, and his son thot he had a rite to droun them if he seen fit to du so. So we shant find fault with him, for he is his father's only heir, and if his daddy dident find fault with him doing so, we mustn't either. But then the scriptur is so hard to understand. It mite hav ben the man had tu much likker in him wot made him act so bad. Yu kno, my frenz, that likker is often kolled sperits, and the man mite hav went to the tooms to morn for sum of his fokes that had dide lately, and ther mite hav ben sum ole sous ther wot had pigs, and the man got sik on bad likker, and spued, and the ole sous eat it an got drunk, which made them run down to the sea tu get sum water. U kno when a man drinks bad likker it makes him mity dry for water, and the pigs would follow ther mothers and get drouned. Also in them daze peple dident kno much about arithmetik and gest at the number. God's waze ar not our waze, and ar past finding out. But i am glad tu tel u that Jesus tuk the man tu the klothing store and bot him a nu sute of klothes, for the scriptur saze he waz klothed and in his rite mind after he had got the bad likker out ov him, or whatever it waz that made him sik. The rest ov the story u wil find in the inspired buke, in the fifth chapter of Mark. Let us pra.

REV. TIMOTHY TUGMUTTON,
Pastur ov the Church ov Tru Belevers.

MEMPHIS, TENN., Oct. 1, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: No more important or significant name can be found than that which this journal has carried at its head since its first issue. It expresses profoundly the noble sentiment, the end and the aim of the great head and heart of its founder. The credulous and the superstitious spent tedious months, worse than wasted their time and vast sums of money in Westminster Abbey to work themselvs into the belief that man's chief end is to glorify God and enjoy him forever. D. M. Bennett and all sane thinkers learned readily and easily that our chief end was to seek and find truth whereby to purify, elevate, and happify humanity. If an imaginary God must be made, let us first prepare ourselvs honestly to make him. Accepting the worn-out proposition that "an honest man's the noblest work of God," it is far more certain and important that an honest god is the noblest work of man. Since like begets like, it takes an honest and a wise man to make an honest, wise God, no less than such a God to make a good man. That the God of the Bible has signally failed in this momentous work is self evident from the book itself, as it has him to acknowledge the fact, then to flood them all to death—babes, boys, girls, mothers, and all but six souls in the ark, who come out, the main one getting drunk and again peopling the world, worse rather than better. Here is set forth in the holy book the most shameful, short-sighted, and stupendous failure, directly from the God of the Bible, to be found in the universe. Napoleon's defeat at Waterloo, Cornwallis's surrender at Yorktown, the lost cause of the Confederacy, were nothing compared to the Lord's failure in trying to make good men and drowning the bad ones. If in this, the greatest of all his undertakings, he has shown us the best he can do, then it is clear that we had better undertake to make a better God. Surely it were wiser to hav none than a bad one. Our most eminent scientists and most profound thinkers hav got on so far quite well without stopping to make a God, while those making and worshiping their various gods hav endured the saddest failures, quarrels, bloody conflicts, massacres, and multitudes landed, according to their own creeds, where there is weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth, where the worm never dieth and the fire is never quenched.

Is it not, then, infinitly wiser and in every respect better to discontinue the God-making business, and the creation of another life and world, simply attending the best we can to the one we already hav. Of this life and this world we are sure; of others to come, saying the least, we must stand in doubt. Such as vociferate that they know it all are snch as will be found to know the least. Reckoning a future life and world among the possibilities, it is no less wise to liv right on the strict line of common sense and truth, that we may die right and be prepared to start right in that second life. To do this we must be unshackled. We must either never put on, or resolutely put off, as did Mr. Bennett, the strait-jacket of the Bible, priestcraft, and superstition. If, indeed, David could not fight Goliath in Saul's armor, we never can the Bible hosts, daily diminishing, with Bible armor.

Let us never forget that truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth can make us free. This is an affirmation attributed to Christ.

However many errors are found in his four biographies, we are glad to find some truths and good behavior. He seems to hav lived in more childlike simplity and purity than the interminable sects claiming to be his disciples. Nevertheless, from even these a little good may be learned. They hold their meetings and contribute to build houses and support preachers to this end. Freethinkers can do and should do likewise. We need more halls and more free, investigating schools of instruction for the young and the old. Our means beyond our needs for food, raiment, and shelter cannot be more wisely used than for this purpose. Our liberties, our safety, and our progress depend upon eternal vigilance in the use of appropriate means, of which the knowledge and dissemination of truth is chief.

Allow me to add that it were well to know each other better, enjoy and improve our social relations. In this regard, however objectionable religious parties and sects may be, the social union they foster has decided influence for their life and growth. This social union may be and should be used for a better and nobler cause. Let us put it to work for common sense, for practical social science, and ourselvs and the world around us will grow better, wiser, and happier. It will afford me much pleasure to read from the pens of truth-loving Freethinkers, including the gentler sex, such letters as they may find time to write, and I shall certainly find time to answer.

W. PERKINS.

ROCKFORD, ILL., Sept. 23, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The year has been rather a hard one with me on many accounts, particularly the loss of a dear son by a railroad accident in May, and the heavy expenses incident thereto. These hav delayed my annual payment beyond the usual time, but my fourteen years' experience as a newspaper editor and publisher taught me that this period in the year is the most trying, financially, of any other; hence, though late, I trust the inclosed will be none the less welcome.

THE TRUTH SEEKER continues to giv excellent satisfaction. The only objection I see to it, the articles are growing more lengthy from year to year—a misfortune common to all long-established papers—and it seems to me not as well adapted as a pioneer in the hands of inquirers with little time to read A large majority of your readers, however, hav long since ceased to be inquirers merely, hence, perhaps, all things considered, it is better as now conducted.

With kindest regards, I am, very truly yours,

G. W. BROWN, M.D.

CLEVELAND, O., Sept. 24, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Having carefully studied the Nine Demands of Liberalism, and feeling particularly interested in the taxation of church property, and having indirectly heard that Governor Hoadley was of the same mind, I wrote him on the subject a few days ago and got a letter from his secretary, stating that the governor had instructed him to send me a paper published in Columbus, containing some marked pieces, as his press of business would not allow of a more definit answer. If he really is in favor of taxing all property alike, I shall vote for him for governor, although I hav always voted the Republican ticket. Hereafter I am determined to support those who favor the Nine Demands, let me find them where I may, until I see the churches become honest and willing to pay their own way without forcing me and others to bear their own burdens. I shall support anyone who will work for the equal taxation of all property. I herewith send you the paper referred to, so that you may comment on it as you see fit.

HIRAM VAN PELT.

[Governor Hoadley is in favor of taxing churches and all church property. If we were a voter of Ohio, Governor Hoadley would get our vote, regardless of previous party affiliations. The Demands of Liberalism are burning questions, and are coming rapidly to the front.—ED. T. S.]

MAYNARDVILLE, TENN., Sept. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: My uncle's funeral was preached a few months ago by two Baptist preachers of the predestinarian stripe. He died an unbeliever, and I was anxious to know how they would get him in the kingdom, so I went to hear them. They preached election and predestination before the foundation of the world, and floundered and fluttered around, and said if he was one of the "elect" he was saved, whether he made a profession or not. And so my Uncle John was proved to be one of God's peculiar ones before all worlds were, and he walked right in the kingdom. After one of them had gone on in his discourse, he told how Jehovah had led the children of Israel, by the hand of Moses, from Egypt over into the land of Canaan, and settled them permanently, but he did not tell the people how much blood it cost, and that it was wrong to rob the Canaanites of their land and property, and slaughter them as though they were wild beasts of the forest. No, they will never do this until they become Infidels; then they will see their wrong.

The preacher next spoke of Jesus Christ dying only for those who were predestinated and chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, and the remainder were left out of the covenant of redemption, and he liked the plan so well that he would not alter it to save one of his own children, if he could.

I thought to myself he did not care anything for his children. Just think of a clergyman, ye tender-hearted Christians, seeing one of his children roasting in the lurid flames of an orthodox hell, and not pulling him out when he could. What a heart, black as his hell; not fit to raise a child! But did he tell the truth? No; he uttered a terrible falsehood just for the sake of maintaining a false religion, an old superstition. The clergy of our country hav not heard of evolution yet; they don't know that the revisionists hav discovered that hell has burnt out, and is not now in existence, and that evolution has slowly done the work. They are, of course, behind the time, but Beecher is beginning to discover it, and, finding no place for the wicked, annihilates them. Orthodoxy is on the improve up East. I wonder what kind of a heaven Beecher thinks he will splash into, whether water, fire, or hailstones? We read in that old superstitious volume, which Beecher is trying to harmonize with evolution, of several transitions to heaven caused through the slow work of evolution: First, water, that God used to drown the world to get rid of his enemies. Second, had some water left that evolution converted into hailstones, which God piled away in one corner of heaven to hurl at his enemies, to help Joshua against the five kings. Third, fire and brimstone were plentiful in heaven at one time, which proved too hot up there for the inmates, and God, to get rid of it, poured it on his enemies below. Fourth, insurrection broke out, whether from drowning, freezing, burning, or what else, Beecher, I suppose, can tell, as he is at work just now harmonizing superstition with evolution.

T. H. BUTCHER.

DAVID CITY, NEB., Sept. 28, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Please mail to me one copy of "The Bible of Bibles," by Graves. I hav read with great satisfaction his "Sixteen Crucified Saviors" and if the missionary societies would devote their efforts and money to disseminating the information contained in this book, and your other publications, among our own people, and let the foreign heathen take care of themselvs, America would begin to advance into daylight, but while they continue to teach the infamous and beastly doctrins claimed by Christ's followers to be divine, found in the Christian Bible, just so long will they retard our civilization, and put off the day when they will be looked upon by intelligent people as overgrown squabs, who will, when told to, shut their eyes and open their mouths. Such childish credulity is supreme proof that the people are simply infants. No state but infantil innocence and credulity would gulp down such monstrosities in the intellectual domain. Inclosed please find draft for $2 to pay for the book ordered. Would I were financially able to place those works in the hands of the million.

Very truly and respectfully, E. R. DEAN.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Oct. 2, 1885.

MR EDITOR: I hav recently received from an unknown person a letter from Florida, asking me to giv him some knowledge of the "mystery of Spiritualism." A strange request, surely, but I think, with your permission, I should like to say to this gentleman, through the medium of your paper, that I know of nothing in all my reading which will giv him so much information on that subject as the reading of Dr. LaRoy Sunderland's last work, "Ideology," recently published by the Investigator Co., Boston, Mass. I am sure any earnest inquirer about that much-talked-of ism cannot but be enlightened upon the subject, and I unhesitatingly recommend it as a book worthy the perusal of all persons interested in mental phenomena. Had this letter asked for an exposure of the frauds practiced upon people by unprincipled wonder-workers in dark circles, I should hav recommended him to read "Bottom Facts," by John W. Truesdell, of my own city. In a copy of the Boston Index, circulated in Albany at the recent Freethinkers' Convention by an agent of that paper, I noticed an article by Professor Gunning which interested me upon this subject. It was ably written, and exposed the folly of listening to "spirit guides" as exemplified in the recent annulling of a marriage of thirty years (or thereabout) standing, of one of the teachers of the Spiritual philosophy, this marriage taking place by the approval of a guide who had become a spirit. I would rather trust human guides than spiritual, though I acknowledge to a disposition to trust my own conception of right rather than the guiding of mortal or immortal.

With the best wishes, LUCY N. COLMAN.

BELLEVILLE, ONT, CAN., Oct. 3, 1885

MR. EDITOR: We hav just had a course of lectures by John E. Remsburg in this city, and are much pleased with the results. It was a hard struggle to obtain a hall, but Mr. Jacob Landsburg (our worker) at last obtained the Opera House, which had been before denied us, and on Monday evening, September 28th, Mr. Remsburg lectured to the largest audience ever gathered at a Liberal lecture in Belleville. His subject was "False Claims," and he handled it in an able manner. On Tuesday evening, "Sabbath Breakers" was his subject, and was by many held to be the best of the course. Wednesday evening "Thomas Paine" was shown to be a true reformer and patriot, instead of the drunken pauper whose awful death is alluded to by thousands of priests every year as one of the greatest proofs of their religion. Allen Pringle, the ablest champion of our cause in Canada, was present on Tuesday evening, and was greeted with applause on moving a vote of thanks to the lecturer. Hundreds of tracts, TRUTH SEEKERS, and pamphlets were given away, and we all agree that these lectures hav done more to awake discussion than all previous ones delivered in Belleville. Although they were specially invited, and several had recently given to understand that they were ready to defend the faith, no regular preachers were in attendance, and the local, or lay, brothers would not take a fall out of our champion. He will be fully answered by several who did not hear him, however, as usually happens. We intend challenging, through the press, one or all of these cowards (who wait till a man is gone and then cry, "Hear me answer the Infidel") to debate these or similar subjects on a free platform, before an intelligent and fair audience. This is the way to silence this kind of creatures—it is an insult to call them men (we hav one or two of them in this city). Quite by accident, of course, the Methodist church got up lectures across the road from ours the same nights, but we had a large number of young men every night and number of ladies. We hav, unfortunately, not got a paper worthy to be called a newspaper, and did not get any notices in the two party organs published here. This is no loss, however, as their opinion and praise are bought and sold very cheap. Mr. Remsburg won golden opinions from those who heard him, and made many warm friends during his short stay. Liberals cannot do better than to obtain his services for a course of lectures to arouse from apathy in their midst. We intend that he shall deliver more lectures in Belleville and vicinity ere long. Yours fraternally, JOS. TEMPLETON.

GREENPOINT, L. I., Oct. 6, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The gentleman signing himself T. Winter, Materialist, seems to me to be a most remarkable production of nature. He is certainly well named, and when he adds the term Materialist, it is singularly appropriate. Being Winter by name and winter by nature, he must be composed of winter material, and therefore it's no wonder that frost, snow, and chilling, congealing blasts characteristically come from his icy pen, unmercifully pelting those of his fellows who happen to be differently constituted from himself. Does he suppose that hurling upon them such mercilessly cold blasts as, silly people—hypocritical fanatics—disgrace to civilization, etc., ad infinitum, will raise them to the standard of his intellectual greatness, or crush them into smithereens?

Yet, forsooth, he talks about "persuading and clearly showing these mistaken (?) people that real (?) happiness (?) can only be secured by shunning these unwise and cranky ways, and having a well-balanced brain to guide us daily in the path of solid truth and genuin sense, for our individual benefit right here and now." Now, I appeal to Brother Winter, occupying, as he does, such a high "standpoint of reason and common sense," from which he appears to look forth over "large portions of the community on the verge of lunacy," that if he has discovered a method whereby an unbalanced brain can be remedied, he forthwith disclose the secret to suffering humanity so afflicted. If the weak parts can be taken out and an improved, strong, and healthy part put in, it is his duty to make it known. Possibly he has such a superabundance of brains he will spare a small portion, and then, maybe, the rest of mankind will think as he does, and meekly agree to his dogmatical declarations and cheerfully follow his lead. If he cannot take out some of other people's brains and put some of his own in, isn't it wasting time to abuse them? Nay, isn't it positivly cruel to be continually abusing them for not possessing that which Mother Nature refused to bestow upon them? Has he been very successful in making converts by such a course? Perhaps he knows that the Salvation Army lunatics are happy after their kind, and the spookites also after their kind, and because he is such a cold, wintery kind of chap he doesn't like to see other people enjoying themselvs.

Now, unless Brother Winter comes down from his frozen pinnacle, and admits that a very large portion of these people he so bitterly denounces are men and women of fair intelligence, and some of them are just as likely to be right as he is, he might as well freeze up and stay frozen all the rest of his life, so far as his effort to benefit humanity of that class is concerned by abusing them. But he seems so exceedingly discontented with these people that I doubt if ever the winter of his discontent will be made glorious summer, so long as they exist, even though he does possess such a well-balanced brain; else why should he say, "Sir, whenever persons are in so deplorable a state of mental aberration, it is a painful experience to the minds of those who stand free from such religious frenzy." And then he adds, "Pitiful, indeed, is the state of those," etc. Well, now, just imagin a winter, with bowels of compassion, capable of exercising warm-hearted pity, for any thing it could freeze up. Still, there may be some hope for Brother Winter, for I've heard of winter lingering in the lap of spring, and possibly this is why Brother Winter keeps hanging around, instead of going into winter quarters for good. He may really want to get thawed out. I've also heard of winter getting a black eye, but that, you know, is meant metaphorically. That is to say, I suppose, that summer, closely following up spring's advantage in her assault upon winter, who had lingered in her lap too long, put on the finishing touches by blackening his eyes, and, in so doing, brought forth life again, which had been only asleep in the cold embrace of winter, and life, arousing from her lethargy, completely knocks winter out, because of the fact that she still continued to exist, notwithstanding winter had supposed her dead for all time. He could not endure to behold the genial sunshine of life surviving the grave in which he fancied he had eternally buried her. Life appeared to him a "ghastly ghost," and he fled in dismay. He never could hav known that ghosts were ghastly in any other way. R. M. ROBINSON.

QUITMAN, Mo., Sept. 27, 285.

MR. EDITOR: The 15th, 16th, and 17th inst., Prof. W. F. Jamieson lectured in Quitman to large and appreciativ audiences. The second and third nights the hall was filled to overflowing, many not being able to get into the hall. Professor Jamieson is about the ablest and most interesting speaker it has ever been our fortune to listen to. He has an abundance of magnetism that would hav made him a good revivalist, had not his good sense and cool logic turned him into a nobler work. He is very logical, but enlivens his lectures with witty illustrativ anecdotes that actually make a gloomy theologian laugh.

Mr. Jamieson is one of the most genial and courteous gentleman I hav ever met. His winsome ways make you feel at once that in him you hav a warm friend. He strikes very hard and telling blows, but has the happy faculty of leaving his audiences in the best of humor.

The Liberals of this country are keeping him busy, and we hope that he may hav all the lecturing he can do, for he is doing a grand work as a Liberalizer.

I must not finish without remembering the kind services of Professor Kuhn and daughter, who contributed much to the success of the lectures at Burlington Junction and this place, by rendering some beautiful instrumental music, for which they are noted.

I would suggest to the Liberal public to hav good music of some kind, if it can be had, at all Freethought gatherings, as it helps to draw an audience and givs an air of sociability about it that just the lecture alone does not hav.

Will the editor please answer, through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, where the first temperance papers were published, and by whom, and whether or not they were Infidel? And also giv the names of Infidels who hav given their means to the founding of charitable and educational institutions?

Yours for the up-building of humanity, GEO. H. DAWES.

[To the first question we are unable to reply; perhaps some one of our older readers can. The answer to the second question is found on page 66 of the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1884.—ED. T. S.]

GRAND COULEE, WASH. TERR, Sept. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Thinking some of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER would like to know how the Liberal cause is progressing in the far Northwest, I would say, to begin with, we hav given women the right of suffrage in this territory. At our election last fall we voted a tax on church property, by a large majority, so you can see it isn't healthy for black-coats here. They say the only curse this country has is good health. J. H. LAFOLLETTE.

"DE WORLD DO MOVE."

BURR OAK, MICH., Oct. 6, 285.

MR. EDITOR: A few weeks ago, I happened to be staying a few days at Lagrange, a thriving village in northern Indiana. A Teacher's Institute was in progress and experienced instructors from abroad had been procured to assist. Lectures were delivered on three or four evenings of the week. I heard two of the lectures and both were good; one was good for the instruction it imparted, and the other was good for—nothing. A Mr. Thomas lectured on "Manners and Morals." This Mr. Thomas is superintendent of the schools of Wabash, Ind. He is not at all like the Thomas who formerly hung around Jerusalem. The ancient Thomas was a natural-born Infidel. He wanted evidence for his belief, not somebody's say-so; but this Wabash Thomas takes in Jonah and his whale and gourd, and Noah's menagerie and the resurrection, all without difficulty. He said that Plato favored lying and Cicero upheld fornication, therefore neither of those great men could be chosen as a model of morality, but Christian morality is the kind that should be taught in the schools. He said that the Bible is the great text-book of morals; that the Bible is the foundation of science and "the source from which our modern civilization has sprung." When I heard that I was overcome with emotion, or joy, or surprise, or something, and fell into a large trance that some one had left in the hall, and was carried away back through the ages. I saw Mr. Thomas in a schoolroom teaching several boys, but no girls. The walls of the room contained no blackboards nor geographical chart, but were covered with scripture verses and pictures of Bible scenes. There was a picture of Adam naming the animals, and another showing how he looked when he woke up and rubbed his eyes after the excision of the rib. There was Cain, just starting off to find his wife, and Jacob playing his little confidence game on the old man. Moses was also represented, standing in a cleft in the rocks, awaiting the approach of the Lord, and there was the noble soldier Joshua, standing with a human head in one hand and a long sword dripping with blood in the other; and there were many other pictures of a like instructiv and refining nature. The teacher wore a monkish gown, and his breast was adorned with a golden cross. He picked up a little four-legged stand and told the boys that it represented the earth, and that they must never think of traveling far from home, or they would be likely to fall off the edge of the world before they were aware. The legs of the stand were the pillars of the world. He then gave the boys a lecture on the firmament, showing how it divides the waters, etc. A burning candle at one end of the room represented the sun. The teacher told the pupils that a stone falls to the ground because its "heft" pulls it down. One boy, who seemed brighter than the others, began to ask why the stone did not go up as well as down, but Mr. Thomas hurled an inkstand at his head and knocked him flat on the floor, remarking, as he did so, that such questions were offensiv to the Lord and always brought punishment. He then ordered the other boys to kneel down and count their beads rapidly while he stood over them with a large whip. After a while I came to. That is, I came to a conclusion. My conclusion was that Mr. Thomas was unfortunately born several centuries too late; that he might be of some use as a representation of a fossil in a lecture on paleontology, but otherwise I could see no earthly use for him. But the next evening all was changed. The gowns and cowls and crosses and texts and all the musty trappings of antiquity were removed, and science and common sense were brought to the front. Professor Bevens, of the Chicago schools, lectured. He completely annihilated Mr. Thomas's position. He spoke of the scholasticism of the Middle Ages and its pernicious influence, and stated that we are not yet entirely free from that influence. He told the teachers about the immigration of the Arabs into southern Europe, and their introduction of arts and sciences, but that they were driven out and the country left to the darkness and degradation of priestcraft. He spoke with evident satisfaction of Thomas Paine, and quoted some of Paine's words. I could scarcely believe my ears when I heard such discourse in such a place. He spoke of Darwin as one of the "noble thinkers of the world," and advised the teachers to read Herbert Spencer's works without fail, and Tyndall's and Huxley's and Haeckel's. "Don't be afraid of him [Huxley] because he is a heretic," said he. Not a word was said in praise of the Bible, but, on the contrary, the lecturer said that much of the Sunday-school literature was "as pernicious as dime novels," that it was namby-pamby, good-for-nothing stuff, and advised a complete change in the literature provided for children. In fact, Ingersoll could not hav given a more emphatically Infidel lecture.

When I came out I weighed nineteen pounds more than I did twenty-four hours before. This last statement is copyrighted and not transferable. Even ten years ago it would hav been impossible to find a popular educator in this country sufficiently courageous to stand up before a convention of teachers and even mention the name of an Agnostic scientist. The world must be moving a little. N. G. W.

TAPPAN, O., Oct. 2, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I want to ask those that condemn us for not setting up a substitute when we tear, or try to tear, down what we consider impediments in the highway of progress, would they be so silly, after untying the grass that some thoughtless or malicious chaps had bound across their neighbor's path, as to substitute for it a trip-rope? SIMEON SMITH.

NEWPORT, ME., Oct. 7, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I owe you for one TRUTH SEEKER, and inclose stamps for the same. I also inclose money ($3) to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1886, and earnestly wish this letter had $997 more with it. I also inclose stamps for copies of the last TRUTH SEEKER of October 3d.

Brothers Macdonald and Somerby, go forward, for yours is a grand work for the uplifting of humanity sunk in crime by blighting Christianity. From the depths of my warm, loving heart I bid you, not a Godspeed, but an honest man and woman speed. Your friend, SEWARD MITCHELL.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Sept. 30, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Last Sunday, while looking about the city for something of a liberal religious nature to read, I happened upon a copy of your paper. In reading it I noticed an item referring to a dispute between the Rev. Sam Jones and some other sanctimonious Hercules, as to who held, or should hold, the championship as soul-saver.

His godly highness, the Right Reverend Samuel Jones above referred to, three days since opened a grand soul hospital in this city, and the papers here are publishing his sermons. Not knowing whether you had ever read any of God's ideas, as expressed through the mouth of this one of his agents, and believing there might be something of interest to you in these sermons, I hav ordered the Herald sent to you for one week. The published expressions of this imperial bower will giv you an idea of what Samuel Jones is.

The grand opening took place Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., and I attended. I had a bad seat for observing the main attraction closely, but will describe the Jumbo as he seemed: About thirty-five years of age; nearly six feet high; dark or sallow complexion; black or very dark hair; dark eyes; weight about 175 pounds; rather slender form; nervous and bilious temperament; wears mustache, and is a man of fairly fair appearance. He speaks the purely Southern dialect, and his delivery is easy and voice clear and strong.

The meetings are held in a grand tent, which is said to hav a seating capacity of between five and six thousand. The pavilion is lighted by electricity. The attendance is large, many at times not being able to obtain seats. The expenditure in preparing for this revival I cannot estimate. The divine is a member of the Methodist church and an ex-lawyer. He preaches straight hell, and that ain't half hot enough. Nothing, religious or irreligious, sect, creed, or society has received from this biblical Oscar Wilde an expression of sympathy. Surely such a constituted being, though ever so sincere in his cause, must be miserable. To him there can be no sunshine on earth; all is cloud. Such a belief deserves the sympathy of unbelief.

These meetings naturally cause much talk about the city, and so far I hav heard no church people express opinions, but the prediction of the average citizen is that the cause of Christ will be little benefited. But the cradle of superstition is still rocking, and though the infant of knowledge is growing, the child is still a prisoner to its youth, and many may yet "leave the world to sing," "What a friend I hav in Jesus!"

JOHN L. POWER.

P.S.—Not a convert made so far.—J. L. P.

LEXINGTON, Mo., Sept. 29, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: In your last paper, a correspondent from this state mentions that under the old regime he knew men to beget children by slave mothers, and then sell mother and children both. There is no question that this frequently happened.

If I had time I would like to write a book under the title, "The Epitaph of African Slavery in the United States," and make it different from most epitaphs, in being strictly true. I wish that the world could know just how much badness and just how much goodness there was in slavery—could see it as it was. I fear it will never be truly known.

Your Missouri correspondent showed what the unlicensed passions of men did under the former condition of things in the South. Did he ever think what the corresponding wrong is in the North? In the North the same class of libertinism is responsible for the seduction of white girls who work for their living in families, in factories, and elsewhere. Sometimes the life of the mother is sacrificed in trying to prevent the birth of a child; sometimes the child is born and is murdered after its birth and thrown into an ash-barrel or sink.

There are the two manifestations of the same form of vice—the results of it—one in the free North, the other in the slave South. Which does your correspondent think the worse? I do not justify one by comparing it with the other, nor justify it at all. I am quite willing, though the descendant of slaveholders, that all the vileness and brutality that ever existed in connection with slavery be laid bare. But I would ask this: Now that men can no longer sell their own flesh and blood in the South, cannot something be done to prevent men and women murdering their own children in the North?

GEORGE WILSON.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

A True Story.

"Where is the baby, grandmamma?"
The sweet young mother calls
From her work in the cosy kitchen
With its dainty whitewashed walls.
And grandma leaves her knitting,
And looks for her all around;
But not a trace of baby dear
Can anywhere be found.

No sound of its merry prattle,
No gleam of its sunny hair,
No patter of tiny footsteps,
No sign of it anywhere.
All through house and garden,
Far out into the field,
They search each nook and corner,
But nothing is revealed.

And the mother's face grew pallid;
Grandmamma's eyes grew dim;
The father's gone to the village;
No use to look for him.
And the baby lost! "Where's Rover?"
The mother chanced to think
Of the old well in the orchard
Where the cattle used to drink.

"Where's Rover? I know he'd find her!
Rover!" In vain they call,
Then hurry away to the orchard;
And there by the moss-grown wall,
Close to the well, lies Rover,
Holding to baby's dress,
Who was leaning over the well's edge
In perfect fearlessness.

She stretched her little arms down,
But Rover held her fast,
And never seemed to mind the kicks
The tiny bare feet cast
So spitefully upon him,
But wagged his tail instead,
To greet the frightened searchers,
While naughty baby said:

"Dere's a 'ittle dirl in the 'ater;
She's dust as big as me;
Mamma, I want to help her out,
And take her home to tea.
But Rover, he won't let me,
And I don't love him. Go
Away, you naughty Rover!
Oh! why are you crying so?"

The mother kissed her, saying:
"My darling, understand,
Good Rover saved your life, my dear—
And see, he licks your hand!
Kiss Rover!" Baby struck him,
But grandma understood;
She said: "It's hard to thank the friend
Who thwarts us for our good."

—Baldwin's Monthly.

A Halloween Party.

"What is Halloween? What does it mean?" and little Agnes was a perfect picture of perplexity, as she looked up from her reading.

"I'll tell you," said Uncle Harry; "it is an old-time festival, and occurs the last night in October, the 31st. It is supposed, or was in the old ignorant times, that all the witches, spooks, ghosts, fairies, sprites, and hobgoblins of every name and nation were out in full blast on that particular night, dancing, jumping, flying about, and having a high old time generally, making mischief wherever they could. It used to be thought that the fairies particularly held a grand anniversary on that night, and that they would come and tell who loved certain people and who did not."

"Will you tell more about Halloween?" asked Tom Jinks, who sat with the other children, mouth and eyes wide open.

"Did ever you read any of Burns's poems?" questioned Uncle Harry. "He tells in the poem called 'Halloween' about the way the Scotch peasants used to observe it. The poem begins like this:

"Upon that night, when fairies light
On Cassilis Downans dance,
Or owre the lays, in splendid blaze,
On sprightly coursers prance,
Or for Coleon the route is ta'en,
Beneath the moon's pale beams.
Then up the cove to stray and rove
Among the rocks and streams
To sport that night.'

"Halloween was supposed to precede 'All Saints' Day,' when all the angels and saints in heaven were thought to hav a great jubilee. The next day after all 'All Saints'' is called 'All Souls' Day,' when the Catholics say masses or prayers for the departed. In Germany it is the custom to lay flowers on the graves of the dead friends on that day. But all these festivals were originated by popes, priests, or men in power; they are all of human origin, having their birth in a very superstitious age, and are of no value to us who should be better employed than in following the fanciful customs of our ancestors."

"But, darling old Uncle Harry," said Mary, who, being of Scotch descent, was always called "Highland Mary," "don't you think there are any fairies at all?"

"Yes, indeed, right here are two," answered Uncle Harry, patting the two girls on their lovely heads.

"I'm a spook, I guess," exclaimed Tom Jinks. "But, say, fairies or no fairies, let us hav a party on All Hallow's eve, and see if the sprites and things will come. It will be fun, anyway."

"Oh, yes; do let us," said the girls together.

And so it transpired that all the girls and boys in the neighborhood came to Uncle Harry's house on All Hallow's eve, and such a gay time as they did hav.

It was a very dark night, and no moon—the moonshine, Uncle Harry said, was all with the spooks and sprites!

Besides the children there were grown-up boys and grown-up girls, the uncles and aunts, and the two grandmammas and one grandpa at that party on All Hallow's eve.

The kitchen was a big one, and the biggest wash-tub from the cellar was in the center of the room, almost full of water, on the surface of which floated handsome, rosy-cheeked apples. You would hav screamed with laughter to see all the antics of the company in trying to catch the apples with their teeth, as the lovely fruit bounced and bobbed about the water.

You think it is easy to do!

Just you try it. Aunt Mattie lost her false teeth four times in the tub, and little Minnie Weeks got very red in the face in her frantic efforts to catch an apple. Mr. Romberg, the schoolmaster, lost his wig overboard, and Roy, the three-years-old baby, went head over heels into the tub, and clutched an apple in each hand, instead of his teeth, as he was pulled out.

Oh, it was such fun, you can't think! Everybody laughed till they cried. Grandpa had his spectacles on, and when he made a dive for an apple down to the bottom of the tub they went, but he was the first to get the apple, and the grandma said it was the smallest of the lot, and that was why he succeeded.

While some were catching apples in the tub with their teeth, others were trying to catch them in the same way, as they hung suspended by cords in the open doorway, and found it just as difficult a job one way as another, for the apples would swing away every time.

Then, when little Agnes really caught one with her teeth she pared it carefully and threw the long paring over her left shoulder, to see if it would take the form of the letter beginning the name of one she loved best.

"It's an H," she said, soberly, "and it stands for Uncle Harry, I know."

"Then come here, sweetheart," and Uncle Harry lifted her upon his knee and they ate the apple together. Uncle Harry picked out all the seeds, one by one, and repeated in a deep, hollow voice, "One, I love; two, I love; three, I love, I say; four, I love with all my heart; and five, I fling away; six, she loves; seven, both love; and eight, both hate—what!—just eight seeds!"

"O Uncle Harry! it isn't true, is it?" and Agnes began to look grieved.

"Certainly not. You should know better; let reason work," he replied, laughing.

"I hav a whole lot in my apple," said Tom Jinks; "say the rest of it, Uncle." And Uncle Harry proceeded: "nine, he comes; ten, he tarries; eleven, he courts; and twelve, he marries!"

And then all commenced to count apple-seeds, grandpa, the two grandmas, and all, first naming the apple for the one most beloved. At the same time the nuts were placed upon the hot stove and each one named for a particular individual. If the nuts snapped, hissed, and spluttered, and then hopped off the stove, it was, in accordance with the ancient customs, regarded as a sign that the dear one didn't like us very well; but if, on the contrary, it just simmered away slowly, we would be loved forever and a day.

Jenny and Emily made little round cakes of meal and inclosed in each slips of paper with the names of their admiring friends written on them. They then put them in a basin of water, and watched to see which would split open first—that one would contain the name of the best lover.

"Highland Mary" in her plaid dress stood peeping shyly in the mirror to see whose face would appear beside her own. Robbie Stuart held the black cat up over her shoulder, and his great green eyes glared at "Highland Mary" in such a way that she burst out laughing.

All the tricks and games that were ever thought of on All-Hallow's eve, I should think, were played that night by old and young, and everyone laughed so heartily that his sides ached. I can't begin to tell half the enjoyment of the evening, for it would take too much space.

Presently there came a rap on the door, which was quickly opened, and there stood such a queer little old woman with a catskin on her head, a bumblebee on her nose, and a broomstick in her hand.

There was a dead silence in the room and nobody spoke a word. She looked at the company a moment, then shook the broomstick at them, turned around three times, and made a "cheese" by sinking down in the middle of her immense skirts. Then she snatched an apronful of nuts, buzzed like a bumblebee, and fled out of doors.

"A witch!" gasped Minnie.

"I'll hav her!" exclaimed Uncle Harry, starting after her, followed by Agnes, Tom Jinks, Kate Ford, Brownie Wilson, Madge Peterson, and a half dozen others.

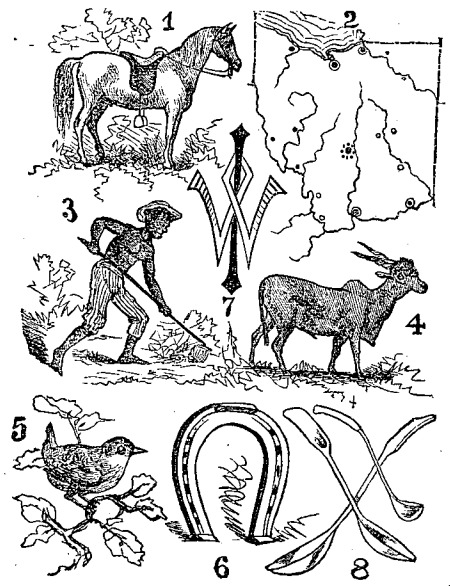
They all returned shortly with the "witch," which was none other than Joe Wilson, Brownie's brother, dressed up for the occasion.

"It's all right," said Grandma Fiske; "it shows our young folks what witches are, and how silly it was for people to ever believe such beings existed."

"Ah ha! you can't fool us on witches," said Tom Jinks, breathless, after the chase.

After that they played blind man's buff, and then the party broke up, and all agreed that they had had the best time imaginable. Uncle Harry explained a little more about the customs and practices of All-Hallow's Eve, and said, although we had outgrown in this age, he hoped, any such childish follies as to believe in such nonsense as real, yet there was no harm in having a good time out of it. He said we should laugh and hav all the innocent fun and amusement we could in this world.

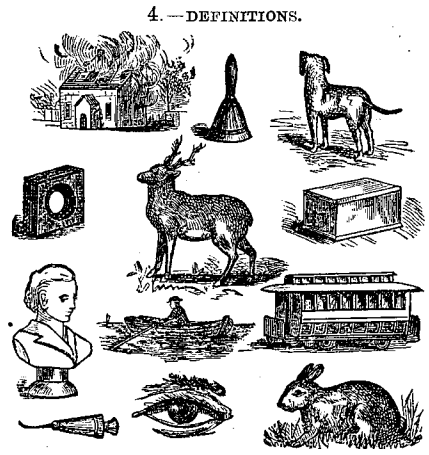
And finally, he asked me to tell you about it, and say that if you wanted to nearly split your sides laughing to get up a Halloween party.



S. H. W.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—A fish's head is seven and one-half inches long; his tail is as long as the head and one-half the body; the body is as long as the head and tail together; how long is the fish, and what is the length of each part?



2.—Three men are traveling; one has three loaves, one five loaves of bread, the other has none; they eat the bread, and the man who had none gave the others eighty cents, and told them to divide it equitably between them. What was each man's share?

3.—PROVERB ACROSTIC.

Write the name of each of the objects represented above in their order. The initials and finals will giv a common proverb.

4.—DEFINITIONS.

First write out the names of all the objects represented above. Then arrange these names in pairs so as to form words of two syllables each, and with the following meaning: 1. A song. 2. An affection of the stomach. 3 Hardy. 4. A farming implement. 5. A thought. 6. Something trodden under foot. 7. A flower. 8. A nut.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, OCT. 3, 1885.

1.—QUOIN.
PATER.
REBEL.
MELEE.
LYONS.

BATCH OF RIDDLES.

1.—A sleeping car. 2. Cauliflower (call-eye). 3.—Sewing machine needle. 4.—A cane.

ANSWER TO CONUNDRUM IN PUZZLE BOX SEPTEMBER 19th.

Because it is full of craft.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN!

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS;

A STORY OF THE RIGHTWAY ALMSHOUSE.

BY JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE.

Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"APPLES OF GOLD."

A story-book for the young folks. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXON. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellen work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles

Price 20 cents.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Price, $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE

PROBLEM OF THE UNIVERSE,

AND

Its Scientific Solution,

WITH SOME

CRITICISMS OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Price 20 cents. For sale at this office.

The Missing Link

—IN—

MODERN SPIRITUALISM

By A. LEAH UNDERHILL, of the Fox family.

This book purports to be a truthful account of the phenomena occurring at Hydesville in the house of Mr. Fox, and since to various members of the Underhill family, especially the author, who has had a good offset to "Bottom Facts," being essentially controversial, and will be used for offense and defense by believers in Spiritual manifestations. Mrs. Underhill contends that the exhibitions of an occult power, as narrated in her book, demonstrate beyond doubt the reality of the survival of man's spirit; that death is but birth into another stage of progressed and progressiv life; and proves what has hitherto been but a dogma of an unproved and unprovable faith, the immortality of the soul. PRICE, $2.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY

BETTER THAN

Eternal Punishment.

BY M. BABCOCK

The subjects discussed in this finely-printed pamphlet are, besides the title above given, Satan and Hades, Some Reasons Why I am Not a Christian, Divinity of the Bible, Theological Logic, Preachers are Not Honest, Preachers Sometimes Differ, Infant Damnation, Prayer, The Cloak of Charity, The Clergy were Afraid, No Fear of Being Damned, But What are We to Do? But Why Should I Be Damned? Why Not Pray for the Damned? Conclusion.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

THE RISE OF

INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY

From Thales to Copernicus.

By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $3.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

N. D. C.

How to Become

A MEDIUM

IN YOUR OWN HOME.

A 16-page pamphlet, containing full instructions and a letter designating all your phases of mediumship, and a copy of the Riddle of the American Spiritual Sphinx, or the Lost Key Found, sent FREE upon receipt of three two-cent stamps to cover expenses of mailing, etc. Address, JAMES A. BLISS, 718 Washington st., Boston, Mass. 39tf.

Something New!

Every Liberal should hav one of our beautiful

MOTTO CARDS,

(7x22), ready for framing, for their homes.
Twenty-five cents per copy.
Also Large Cards (14x22), and expressing the NINE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.
Thirty cents each.
Circulars sent FREE. Address all orders to
LIBERAL MOTTO SUPPLY CO., Troy, N. Y.
40tf

POCKET ATLAS

Of the

WORLD.

Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE.

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-page colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents, by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N. Y.
40

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:

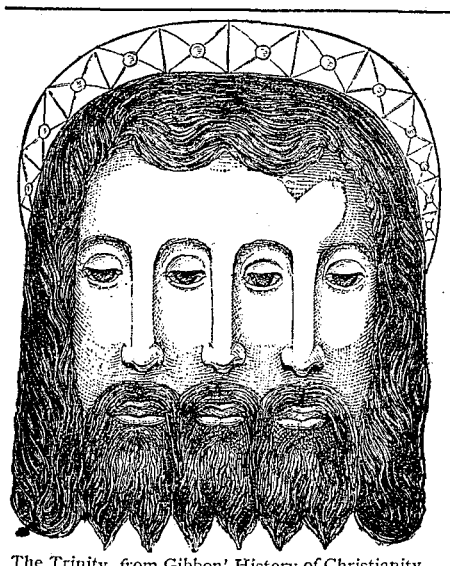
OR,

MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who have helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.



PRICE, - - - - - $1.25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

EVOLUTION:

A SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE.

By Robert C. Adams.

Paper, 25 cents. For Sale at this Office.

The Trinity, from Gibbon' History of Christianity.

History of Christianity

AND

A VINDICATION

of some passages in the "History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" by

EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With a Life of Gibbon, preface and notes by the editor, including critical notes by Guizot, Milman, Wenck, an "English Churchman," and other scholars.

1 vol. 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With 65 engravings. $2 00

This book shows when, where, and how Christianity originated, who were its founders, and what were the sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

"I know of no book that contains more real and valuable information upon the origin of Christianity."—R. G. INGERSOLL.

"One of the most learned and interesting books ever written and published."—Boston Investigator.

FOR SALE AT TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

JUST OUT.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

DR. SUNDERLAND'S LAST AND GREATEST WORK.

IDEOLOGY.

Mental Anesthesia Self-Induced, Miraculous Cures Self-Made, Involution and Evolution in the Human Mind as in the Whole of Things.

By DR. LAROY SUNDERLAND,

(Foundation Fellow of the Society of Science, Literature, and Art, London).

CONTENTS:

Vol. 1: Chapter I.—Selfhood. II.—Experimental. III.—Mental Anesthesia. IV.—Miraculous Cures. V.—Ideology. VI.—The Highest Laws. VII.—No "Royal Road." VIII.—Mentality. IX.—Idiocrasy. X.—"Christian" Science. XI.—The Bible Idea of Inspiration. XII.—The Bible Idea of Its God. XIII.—The Bible Idea of Witchcraft. XIV.—The Bible Idea of Mediums. XV.—Bloody Ideas, All Besmeared with Blood. XVI.—Barbarian Lies. XVII.—Humanity Forever.

Vol. 2: Chapter I.—Gullibility. II.—Mental Epidemics. III.—The South Sea Bubble. IV.—The Mississippi Scheme. V.—The Crusades. VI.—The Trance Epidemic. VII.—Fascination. VIII.—Religious Revivals. IX.—Clairvoyance. X.—The Witchcraft Madness. XI.—Modern Witchcraft. XII.—Mediumship a Wide-spread Epidemic. XIII.—Psychometry and "Deadheads." XIV.—The Contagious Dance of Death. XIV.—And What Then? XVI.—Science.

TWO VOLUMES IN ONE. PRICE $1.50.

Published by J. P. Mendum Investigator Office, Boston, Mass.
4t41

Ingersoll Catechised:

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies $1; 100 copies $3. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

THE MAGNIFICENT

COLORED LITHOGRAPHS

—OF THE—

D. M. BENNETT MONUMENT.

PRINTED IN SEVEN COLORS ON THE BEST LITHOGRAPH PAPER, SIZE, 22½ x 28½.

THE BRONZE MEDALLION

PRINTS AS LARGE AS A CABINET PHOTOGRAPH, THUS GIVING NOT ONLY A PICTURE OF THE MONUMENT, BUT AN ACCURATE

LIKENESS OF D. M. BENNETT.

The lithograph is designed for framing, and will be a treasure for all Liberals.

Sent, postpaid, and securely wrapped, to subscribers to the Monument Fund for 30 cents; to others, 50 cents. Address this office.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, with Sixty-seven Engravings, Preface, and Notes.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.
Zadig; or, Fate.
The Sage and the Atheist.
The Princess of Babylon.
The Man of Forty Crowns.
The Huron; or, The Pupil of Nature.
Micromegas.
The World as it Goes.
The Black and the White.
Memnom the Philosopher.
Andres Des Touches at Siam.
The Study of Nature.
A Conversation With a Chinese.
Plato's Dream.
A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.
An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, 4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00

A PHOTOGRAPH

OF THE BIBLE'S FLAT EARTH AND SOLID HEAVEN.

A Picture of the world as described in Genesis, with the texts of the Bible teaching th doctrin, and the passages from profane writer supporting it. Price 25 cents

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail:

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study, the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy. The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

A New and Useful Work.

WEDLOCK, OR, THE RIGHT RELATIONS OF THE SEXES—Disclosing the Laws of Conjugal Selection, and showing Who May and Who May Not Marry. A Scientific Treatise. By SAMUEL R. WELLS, One vol., 12mo, 250 pages; plain muslin, price, $1.50; in fancy gilt binding, $2.

Among the subjects treated are the following: Marriage a Divine Institution; Qualifications for Matrimony; The Right Age to Marry; Motives for Marrying; Marriages of Consanguinity—of Cousins, when Justifiable; Conjugal Selection—Affinities; Courtship—Long or Short; Duty of Parents; Marriage Customs and Ceremonies of all Nations; Ethics of Marriage; Second Marriages, are they Admissible? Jealousy—Its Cause and Cure; Causes of Separation and Divorce; Celibacy—Ancient and Modern; Polygamy and Pantagamy; Love Signs in the Features, and How to Read Them; Physiognomy; Sensible Love Letters—Examples; The Poet's Wife; The Model Husband and the Model Wife—the Mutual Obligations, Privileges, and Duties; The Poetry of Love, Courtship, and Marriage—Being a Practical Guide to all the Relations of HAPPY WEDLOCK.

The book is handsomely printed and beautifully bound It was intended more especially for young people, but may be read with interest and with profit by those of every age. Copies will be sent by post to any address on receipt of price.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

REPLY

TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S

"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."

By B. W. Lacy

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

GOLDEN THRONE

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA.

INCLUDING

Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.

Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

TRAVELS IN FAITH,

From Tradition to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

Poetry.

Morning.

The clouds and mists of ages
Are rolling fast away;
The sun of scientific truth
Is heralding the day.

Far from its gleaming beams
Gigantic error flies;
And superstition's gloom
Beneath it fades and dies.

Free from all priestly rule,
And bound by creeds no more;
The earth beneath its light
Shall joy from shore to shore.

Revivifying all,
It rolls the world around;
And aids the sons of men
In labor's fetters bound.

The clouds and mists of ages,
Are into chaos hurled;
The sun of scientific truth
Is rising o'er the world!

R. W. H.

The Austere Preacher.

The Rev. Mr. Wegnell was a severe religionist. His idea was that love for Christ should shut out from the soul every gleam of mirth. No soft lights played upon the faces of his hearers. Persons who believed his awful theory would often shrink in fear at his lurid pictures of torment. The faces of the Sunday-day-school children grew dark whenever he entered the room. A smile would instantly vanish like a suddenly extinguished light.

"Children," said Mr. Wegnell one Sunday morning, "I heard some one laugh just now. It was very wicked to violate the Lord's day in that manner. The Lord has his eye upon you all, and those of you who turn the Sabbath into a day of jubilee shall be made to feel the wrath of insulted Jehovah."

This is an extract from one of his sermons, preached on the occasion of a revival meeting: "The vapors arising from scalding hell pervade this house. Those who come forward and kneel at this bench may escape damnation, but those who linger amid the false pleasures of this world must feel the withering breath of a triumphant devil."

There were many people in the neighborhood who believed Wegnell's doctrin, and who thought that he was one of the greatest preachers that ever lived, but the preacher's wife could not, in justice to herself, share such a belief. The neighbors said that Mrs. Wegnell was not a happy woman, and some of them insinuated that she was not good enough for him.

One Sunday morning Mrs. Wegnell said that she did not feel well enough to go to church.

Wegnell put down a cup of coffee which he had just raised to his lips, sternly looked at his wife, and asked:

"Mary, what do you mean?"

"I mean that I do not feel disposed to go to church to-day."

"Why this sudden rebellion?" he asked, as he frowned at her.

"It is not rebellion. I washed all day yesterday, and I am really too tired to go."

"You will never be too tired to die, Mary."

"I hope not."

"What!" he exclaimed.

"I say that I hope—"

"I know what you said, and I also know that you are becoming a wicked woman. Just as long as you can hold up your head it is your duty to listen to the gospel."

"I wouldn't mind listening to the gospel—good news—but I am tired of listening to magnified woe. In none of your sermons do you make use of a pleasant expression, and I always feel worse when I hear you preach."

Wegnell arose and left the breakfast table. With a troubled air, he walked up and down the gallery. Then, re-entering the dining-room, he said:

"I am sorry to know that you hav announced yourself as a candidate for torment."

"Well, replied the woman, without looking up, "I am confident of one thing. The change will be so slight that it will not be necessary to change clothing."

The preacher gasped. "Hav you lost your mind?" he exclaimed.

"Mr. Wegnell, please go away and leave me alone. You hav ever been so anxious about saving my soul that you hav made my life miserable. You found me when I was a happy girl."

The preacher, smothering his rage, replied: "I found you when you were a gay, sinful girl. You seemed not to realize your awful condition. I pitied you, and hav attempted to save you, and now, after all, I see you are blind to the welfare of your soul."

"Well, I hope that you will not let it further concern you. This to me must be a day of rest. Go on to church, and permit me to remain at home."

"Mary, you must accompany me."

"I cannot."

"Do not tell a lie, woman. You can.

"Well, then, I will not."

"You shall."

. . . . . .

As the preacher rode alone, he said to himself: "Perhaps I ought not to hav slapped her, but then she should hav understood her duty."

A little child climbed on to the fence and laughed.

"You little sinner," said the preacher, "You'd better be praying for the salvation of your soul."

Wegnell arrived at the church and preached a threatening sermon. He spoke particularly of women, and declared if left alone they would "giggle themselvs into hell."

As the preacher was going home he was overtaken by a heavy shower of rain. When he reached home he was chilled through and through. The next morning he awoke with a burning fever. He rapidly grew worse. His wife faithfully waited upon him, but she spoke not a word. He had crushed her spirit—had broken her heart. The doctors gave him up. He called his wife and said:

"I am going. I hav done my duty as I read the lines. If I hav mistreated you, I ask for pardon."

She turned her face from him. When she looked back she saw that he was dead.

A wagon containing the coffin was slowly drawn along the road. A little child climbed on to a fence and laughed.—Arkansaw Traveler.

Book Notice.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Permit me to call your attention and the attention of your readers to a little work, "Marriage and Divorce," of forty pages, by Emanuel M. Jones, published by Wm. S. Bailey, 135 South Cherry street, Nashville, Tenn., for the benefit of the Liberal, of which Mr. Bailey is the worthy editor.

I will not attempt to review the book, as my object in writing this item is to induce The Truth Seeker readers to purchase and read for themselvs, and thus confer a favor on its author and publisher. A photograph of the author accompanies the book when ordered from him, 127 North Seventh street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The distinguishing feature of the book is its war upon the church and clergy in claiming a Bible, Christian sanctity for the natural law of marriage under the plea, "What God hath joined together let not man put asunder," and the right of inteference in solemnizing (?) marriage, and in attempting to control the divorce law, etc. There are other excellent points in the book, besides valuable statistical and historical information.

Pardon me for making a few extracts: "The law as it now stands is a cruel outrage, in giving to the man all the joint earnings, for a wife may labor side by side with the husband all her lifetime, and never hav a dollar of her own." Wives, you must submit. "We claim, and can prove, that women is just as good in every respect as any 'lord of creation and slave to passion,' and has just as perfect a right to agree to enter or dissolve the marriage, or any other bond, as a man has. . . To our view marriage is nothing less than a pure business transaction. . . We do not approve of the silly fashion of a woman discarding her name and individuality at marriage, etc., merging herself into her husband. . . The most potent cause of divorce is the so-called headship of man. . . The only remedy for the present marriage is to destroy its pretended sanctity." But buy and read for yourselvs; only ten cents.

Barre, Mass. Ella E. Gibson.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By Wm. McDonnell, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By Frederika Macdonald. 404 pages, $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By Winwood Reade, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote; five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR the YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," presenting the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10c.; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

Freethinkers will find this, for an outline history, the best for their use, as Professor Cottinger is a Freethinker, and in his reports of the church's actions has stated facts with a truthful freedom not found in ordinary histories. He dates his work from the beginning of historical certainty and not from the mythical Eden, as do most "universal" historians, and brings it down to 1883, with a brief mention of subsequent important inventions and discoveries.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALL in a LIFETIME,

A ROMANCE.

BY MISS SUSAN H. WIXON.

"The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks. . . . But what pleased me most in this charming story was the unflinching honesty with which its author holds up to the derision of the world the rottenness of average ministerial character, particularly that of revivalist type. I hav not space here to treat, in detail, of the characters of this truly absorbing novel. Suffice it to say that it is safe to predict that anyone who reads its first chapters will be loth to lay it down till the denouement is reached. Miss Wixon has long been doing a noble work in educating our children into the ranks of true Liberalism, thereby robbing the church of hundreds of those who, in after years, might hav become its willing dupes and servil tools, and she certainly deserves the generous and substantial recognition of all Freethinkers. Let everyone send for a copy of 'All in a Lifetime.' It will yield a liberal reward for the outlay."

ELLIOTT PRESTON.

Price, $1.50. Address. The Truth Seeker.

Marriage and Divorce.

By R. D. Westbrook, D D, LL.B.

Author of "The Bible—Whence and What?"

CONTENTS:

The True Ideal of Marriage.
Free Love.
The History of Marriage.
The Old Testament Divorce Law.
The New Testament on Divorce.
Divorce as a Question of Law and Religion.
Rational Deductions from Established Principles
Objections to Liberal Divorce Laws Answered.
Prevention Better than Cure.

Price, 50 cents. Neatly bound in cloth. For sale at this office.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A
MISSIONARY DOCUMENT
IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.

The Greatest of all Anti-theological Works

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.
By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

A COMMON SENSE
GUIDE TO CORRECT ENGLISH;
IN WHICH THE
DECLENSION OF THE NOUN
AND THE
CONJUGATION OF THE VERB
Are superseded by a few simple rules; and comprising the most rational and progressiv views of the best grammarians of the 19th century.

By J. L. BARKER,
Author of "An Improvement on I. J. Morris's Grammar."

PRICE, - - - 35 CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."

Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth
TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Price, $2. 33 Clinton Place, New York

WAIFS AND WANDERINGS

A NEW AMERICAN STORY,

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

AUTHOR OF
"GOLDEN THRONE," "PROMETHEUS," "INGERSOLL AND JESUS," ETC.

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cts.

"A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day,—John Swinton's Paper.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 CLINTON PLACE. NEW YORK.

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT

A HISTORICAL SKETCH.

By G. F. RINEHART. Price 25 cts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," says Dr. Eadon, of Edinburgh, Scotland; a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular
Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible
Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" medi
Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cure
Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and liberat
Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young me
Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interestin

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling work for AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Pr s Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

MONKS, POPES,
AND
THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.
Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

A NEW BOOK!
By Andrew Jackson Davis
entitled
Beyond the Valley
a sequel to the
MAGIC STAFF
An Autobiography of
Andrew Jackson Davis.
Six Illustrations Picturing what Mr. Davis says he has seen.

"Beyond the Valley" is a record of events and scenes in his private and public career, beginning where the Magic Staff ends, and bringing his psychological and private experiences truthfully up to the present day. This attractive volume will interest thousands who hav never read his preceding works. It will answer the ever-recurring questions concerning remarkable events in Mr. Davis's private life, and fully explains his various public labors for mankind.

"Beyond the Valley" is a companion volume to the "Magic Staff," and resembles it in style of workmanship—in paper, press-work, binding, etc. 408 pages. Price, $1.50.

For Sale by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORKS OF DR. W. F. EVANS.

The Primitiv Mind-Cure. The Nature and Power of Faith; or, Elementary Lessons in Transcendental Medicin. This work is a complete exposition of principles underlying the system of mental healing. It contains a full course of instruction in the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure. Price $1.50.

The Divine Law of Cure. A standard work on the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure, a reliable text-book in all the schools of mental healing. No work has ever been written of more practical value to physicians of all schools. The book is the result of the extensiv learning and research of the author, and exhibits a familiarity with the literature of the subject. It is profoundly religious without being offensivly dogmatic. It has been received with universal favor by all who are seeking light on the subject on which it treats—the cure of disease in ourselvs and others by mental and spiritual agencies. Price $1.50.

Mental Medicin. A Theoretical and Practical Treatis on Medical Psychology. This book contains a full exposition of the nature and laws of magnetism, and its application to the cure of disease. Price $1.25.

Soul and Body; or, The Spiritual Science of Health and Disease. Price $1.00.

The Mental Cure, illustrating the Influence of the Mind on the Body both in Health and Disease, and the Psychological Method of Treatment. Price $1.50.

All the above books sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,
WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

Man, Whence and Whither.
By R. B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,
Author of "The Bible.—Whence and What?

About all that can be said for the existence of God and the future life of man, is here pungently presented, with an incidental discussion of many collateral questions, from a rationalistic standpoint.

1 vol, cloth. Price, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

St. Matthew Before the Court on a Charge of Forgery.

BY SECULARIST.

Price, 10 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TO APPEAR IMMEDIATELY.
MOSES BEFORE THE COURT.
By the same Author.

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the BibleExposed.
BY O. B. WHITFORD. M.D.
Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.

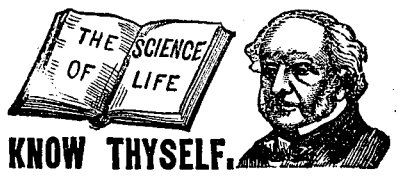
SECOND EDITION.

Price, 25 Cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Bible Analyzed.
BY
John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.



Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
POPULAR JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.

Headquarters for Fine Goods in the line of Genuin Diamonds; Fine Gold and Silver Watches; Chains; Bracelets; Wedding and Presentation Rings; Jewelry of Latest style; Gold Pens; Silverware; Optical and Fancy Goods; 3 ounce Coin Silver Elgin Watch, $10; 4 ounce, Full Jeweled, Adjusted Pat. Regulator Stem Wind, $22; this same, fine movement, in best gold filled case, $35; with cheap movement, $25. Ladies' Solid Gold Elgin stem wind watches, $20, $24, and $32—14 karat, upward. Watches cleaned, finest work in the world, $1. Springs, $1, and returned per. reg. mail or ex., paid one way. Work for the trade at reduced rates and agents sending work once a week from every state in the Union are making lots of money. Best spectacles in the world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back on demand. Try me! OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Patentee of Wettstein's New Freethought Badge. The most beautiful badge ever placed upon the market. Immense sale. Elegant present for Lady or Gent. Solid gold, $3; $3.50; extra heavy, $4; with diamond, artistically enameled, $10.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. ONLY $1.
BY MAIL POST-PAID.

KNOW THYSELF.
A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14

HEAL THYSELF

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y8

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N. Y.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.
3tf

WHY DON'T HE LEND A HAND?
AND OTHER POEMS.

By S. P. PUTNAM, Author of Ingersoll and Jesus, Prometheus, Golden Throne, Waifs and Wanderings, Problems of the Universe, etc.

CONTENTS: Why Don't He Lend a Hand? The Golden Age, The Ideal and the Real, Not Dead but Living, Fruition, Hope, Thomas Paine, Nature's Gospel, Address to Deity, Giv us Light (Holdreth's poem often recited by Charles Watts).

PRICE 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

IMMORTALITY INHERENT IN NATURE.
BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.
Price, 60 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

The Wonder of the Nineteenth Century!

ACTINA BATTERY.
Patent applied for

Do you wear Glasses,
and wish to do without them?
ACTINA CURES DISEASES OF THE EYE AFTER OCULISTS FAIL
Are you suffering from that most common of all diseases,
CATARRH?
Are you troubled with
Deafness, Neuralgia, Hay Fever, or Severe Headache.
If so, WHY NOT Investigate ACTINA? this will cost nothing.

☞ A General Agent wanted for every city and town in the United States.

Send for Catalogue Containing all Information.

Remit Money by Registered Letter, Check, Draft, or P. O. Order to "ACTINA" COMPANY
SOLE PROPRIETORS
88 FIFTH AVENUE, near 14th Street, N. Y.
Please mention this paper. 3t40

Gems of Thought.

WHAT a mockery are gilded palaces, and the glitter of royalty and fashion, while tens of thousands of beings in human form are wallowing in the filth of misery and destitution!—D. M. Bennett.

SOME philosophers assert that the deity is the immediate cause of the union between soul and body and that they are not the organs of sense, which, being agitated by external objects, produce sensations in the mind; but that it is a particular volition of our omnipotent maker which excites such a sensation in consequence of such a sensation of the organ In like manner it is not any energy in the will that produces local motion in our members, it is God himself who is pleased to second our will, in itself impotent, and to command that motion which we erroneously attribute to our own power and efficacy. Nor do philosophers stop at this conclusion. They sometimes extend the same inference to the mind itself in its internal operations. Our mental vision, or conception of ideas, is nothing but a revelation made to us by our maker. When we voluntarily turn our thoughts to any object, and raise up its image in the fancy, it is not the will which creates that idea; it is the universal creator who discovers it to the mind, and renders it present to us.—Hume's Essays.

HE that borrows the aid of an equal understanding doubles his own; he that uses that of a superior elevates his own to the station of that he contemplates. —Burke.

JOHNSON ceased to attend Dr. John Campbell's parties lest Scotchmen should say of any good bits of work, "Ay, ay, Johnson learned this of Caw. mell!" Campbell, he said, quaintly, was a good man, a pious man. "I am afraid he has not seen the inside of a church for many years, but he never passes one without pulling of his hat. This shows he has good principles."—Leslie Stephen's Johnson.

WHEN we run over libraries what havoc must be made! If we take in our hand any volume of divinity, or school metaphysics, for instance, let us ask, Does it contain any abstract reasoning concerning quantity or number? No. Commit it, then, to the flames, for it can contain nothing but sophistry and illusion.—Hume's Essays.

SOME books are lies from end to end,
And some great lies were never penned.
Ev'n ministers, they hav been kenned,
In holy rapture,
A rousing whid at times to vend
Wi' faith, and hope, and love, and drink,
And nail't wi' scripture. —Burns.

CHRISTIAN civilization! We might as well speak of liberal despotism or wholesome poison. The delusions of pessimism are fatal to the development of our highest faculties, and the dogma of the New Testament is a dam that has obstructed the advance of mankind for eighteen hundred years. At the bursting of such dams rivers generally make up for lost time, hence the present floodtide of industrial and scientific progress. The victories of civilization were won on the battle-field that broke the power of Christian superstition. The surviving bigots who condescend to enjoy the fruits of these victories are like rats that hav been prevented from scuttling a ship, but continue to share the provisions of the crew, and congratulate themselvs on the prospect of a pleasant voyage. The history of the last seventeen centuries proves that Tacitus was not far wrong when he called the Christian fanatics "the enemies of the human race." Their prophet of the millennium has persistently failed to keep his promis.—Felix L. Oswald.

HUMAN nature remains what it always was. The nature of God and the relation in which man stands to God, are the same now as they were when man first began to be. The truth of fact is what it is, independent, happily, of our notions of it. We do not make truth by recognizing it; we cannot unmake truth by denying it. So much of it as it concerns us practically to know, we learn by experience, as we learn every natural lesson, and if a man is not permitted to liv and prosper in this world without an acknowledgment of his maker, the scientific experiment will fail, as it failed before. The existing forms of religion may dissolve, but the truth, which is the soul of religion, will revive more vigorous than ever.—Froude's Science and Theology.

IF God, holding truth in his right hand, and in his left only the ever-living desire for truth, although on condition of perpetual error, should leave me the choice of the two, I would humbly point to the right hand and say, Father, giv! Pure truth is for thee alone.—Lessing.

JOHNSON'S religious emotions were such as to make habitual reserve almost a sanitary necessity. They were deeply colored by his constitutional melancholy. Fear of death and hell were prominent in his personal creed. To trade upon his feelings like a charlatan would hav been abhorrent to his masculin character, and to giv them full and frequent utterance, like a genuin teacher of mankind, would hav been to imperil his sanity. If he had gone through the excitement of a Methodist conversion, he would probably hav ended his days in a madhouse.—Leslie Stephen's Johnson.

IT can scarcely need to be pointed out that a perfect jumble of the crudest conceptions is comprised in the idea of an atoning death, of a propitiation by proxy. To punish some one for another's transgression, to accept even the voluntary suffering of the innocent, and let the guilty escape scathless in consequence, this, everybody now admits, is a barbarous action; to consider it matter of indifference in regard to a moral or a pecuniary debt, whether it be discharged by the debtor, or by some one else in his stead, is, every one now admits, a barbarous conception.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

THERE can be no doubt that acting on a predetermined profession of faith, long kept up, in connection with fear and aversion in regard to what contradicts the factitious creed, is in many cases eventually productiv of belief, and in this way the will does really mold the understanding. Religious faith is a standing crusade against reason.—Waters's Through Rome On.

To the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York:

The Constitution of our State guarantees that "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State to all mankind." The general principle of American Government is equality of all men before the law. This, as Your Honorable Body is aware, involves the principle, already acknowledged in theory, of the Total Separation of Church and State. But Church and State are now practically united by the following statutes:

1. The law exempting Church Property from Taxation.

2. The laws appropriating Money from the Public Treasury for the support of Institutions founded and managed chiefly by Sectarian Denominations.

3. The law compelling the Observance of Sunday as a religious holy day.

The undersigned, Citizens of the State of New York, do therefore respectfully but earnestly petition Your Honorable Body to repeal all the laws or parts of laws of this State which are violations of the above principles. Our reasons for asking this are:

1. The Churches are voluntary associations properly to be supported by the voluntary contributions of their members. 2. The State is compulsory. Every citizen must pay taxes. And we submit that it is unjust to a large and growing body of voters to be compelled to pay for the support of Churches which they cannot conscientiously attend; for the hire of Ministers in our Legislature and Public Institutions, in whose doctrines they are unable to believe; and to observe as holy a day to them no more sacred than any other. We also submit that the exemption of Churches from taxation, the appropriation of money for the hire of Ministers and the support of Sectarian Institutions, and the Legal observance of Sunday as a holy day, are discriminations in favor of one form of religion, are abridgments of the free exercise of religious preferences, and are therefore unconstitutional.

NAMES. | RESIDENCE.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M., 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17
The National Liberal League,	28
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73
Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardener,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,	Elizabeth Cady Stanton,	J. D. Shaw,

Gottlieb: His Life. A romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written by S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By Mrs. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Odds and Ends.

WHY does a summer hotel in winter resemble heaven? Because there's not a damned soul there. —Religious Paper.

THE chap who said a beautiful woman was a poem would probably call a Boston girl a spectacular drama.—Ex.

CARL SCHURZ is writing a life of Henry Clay. Henry Clay, it will be remembered, achieved a wide fame for his very excellent brand of cigars.

MOTT STREET SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHER (to Ah Sin, the laundryman): What are the wages of sin? Ah Sin: Sleventy-five cient a dozen. No checkee no washee.

"Mme. Adam is the best dressed woman in Paris." History repeats itself. Mme. Adam was also the best-dressed woman in the Garden of Eden.

NAUTICAL husband (jokingly): "Oh, I'm the mainstay of the family." Wife: "Yes, and the jibboom and the—and the——" Small boy (from experience): "And the spanker too, mamma."—Worcester Gazette.

DRUNKENNESS is now said to be a contagious disease. This is no new discovery, however. It has long been known that a man returning home perfectly sober, after doing the town with some boon companions, is pretty sure to catch it from his wife when he gets into the house.

TEACHER: "What are the names of the seven days of the week?" Boy: "Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday." Teacher: "That's only six days. You hav missed one. When does your mother go to church?" Boy: "When papa buys her a new hat."

"I DON'T see why pennies were invented," said a New York banker, who had received a few in change. "Oh, that is easily accounted for," remarked a friend from an adjacent city; "pennies were invented to enable New York millionaires to contribute toward the erection of public monuments."

TAKEN IN.

Stranger here? Yes; come from Varmount,
Rutland county. You've hern tell
Mabbe of the town of Granville?
You born there? No! Sho! Well, well!
You was born at Granville, was you?
Then you know Elisha Brown.
Him as runs the old meat market
At the lower end of town!
Well! well! well! Born down in Granville!
And out here, so far away!
Stranger, I'm homesick already,
Though it's but a week to-day
Since I left my good wife standin'
Out there at the kitchen door,
Sayin' she'd ask God to keep me;
And her eyes were running o'er!
You must know old Albert Withers,
Henry Bell, and Ambrose Cole,
Know them all? And born in Granville!
Well! well! well! God bless my soul!
Sho! You are not old Isaac's nephew!
Isaac Green, down on the flat!
Isaac's oldest nephew—Henry?
Well, I'd never thought of that!
Hav I got a hundred dollars
I could loan you for a minute,
Till you buy a horse at Marcy's?
There's my wallet! Just that in it!
Hold on, though! You hav ten, mebbe,
You could let me keep; you see
I might chance to need a little
Betwixt now and half past three!
Ten: That's it; you'll owe me ninety;
Bring it round to the hotel.
So you're old friend Isaac's nephew?
Born in Granville! Sho! Well, well!

What! policeman! did you call me?
That a rascal, going there?
Well, sir, do you know I thought so,
And I played him pretty fair;
Hundred-dollar bill I gave him—
Counterfeit—and got this ten!
Ten ahead. No! you don't tell me!
This bad, too? Sho! Sold again!

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 43. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, October 24, 1885. {33 CLINTON PLACE.} $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

PETER was the first man who went out on a fowl.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

THREE more Mormons on the 13th received sentences of six months' imprisonment and a fine of $300 for unlawful cohabitation and refusing hereafter to abide by the law.

JOHN MCCLOSKY, just deceased, was the first American cardinal. It would be desirable in this case that the piece of scripture prophecy might be fulfilled which states that the first shall be last.

ALBERT BURKE, a Hartford, Conn., bookkeeper, is a defaulter to the extent of $10,000. He has for a number of years been the superintendent of one of the leading Methodist Sunday-schools of the city.

THE Brazilian legislature has passed a law for the gradual abolition of slavery in that country, the state buying the slaves from their owners. It is calculated that in thirteen years slave labor will hav come to an end.

IN addressing a Salvation Army meeting in Hancock county, Ill., recently, a young lady convert said she wished to God she was a double-barreled shot gun, loaded to the muzzle, so she could shoot salvation all over the civilized world.

CARDINAL NEWMAN, of London, said, in a recent address, that the Protestant church of England was the great bulwark against Atheism. His speech is thought to hav a political significance, as it is likely to influence many votes in favor of Conservativ members of Parliament in the forthcoming election.

THE Rev. R. Heber Newton lectured last Sunday evening before the Labor Lyceum at Forty-ninth street and Broadway. From what he said, it is to be inferred that the Rev. Mr. Newton favors Socialism. He also favors Christianity, although he has denied its fundamental dogmas. It is therefore hardly accurate to judge him by what he says.

AN "Owners' and Business Men's Association" has been formed in this city, the object of which is to drive the keepers of assignation and other disorderly houses out of respectable quarters, and to arrest immoral (female) persons who promenade the streets against the peace and safety of the community. The Association realizes that it has undertaken a large contract, but is hopeful of being able to fill it.

SUCH paragraphs as the following from Lucifer of the 9th instant are unworthy of a Liberal: "In the mind of the average Eastern man, the West is only a cattle ranch. The League Congress is to be held at Cleveland this year, and the secretary is announcing reduced rates on the railroads. But, by a curious coincidence, they are all roads that lead from the East westward, traversing a few hundred miles of the territory contiguous to Cassadaga. It is evidently not the intention of the managers to giv those western Liberals who are so strangely organized as to yet cling to the League, any opportunity to obtain reduced rates to the Watts Convention.—Repeal." In criticising men or an organization the critic should hav a due regard for facts, and should possess himself of a little information concerning those with whom he has made up his mind to differ. H. L. Green obtained a concession in rates from the railroad leading from Salamanca to Cleveland. He also said the Lake Shore road would reduce the return fare from Cleveland. Mr. Putnam applied to all the roads leading east and west from Cleveland. From their replies, no doubts were entertained that arrangements would be made. But at the last moment all roads except the New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio refused to issue return certificates. Through Mr. King, railroad commissioner at Cincinnati, delegates to the Convention might hav obtained better rates had they notified the secretary of the Union of their intention to attend the Congress in time for him to hav obtained certificates and sent the same to them before they started for Cleveland, that the local ticket agents might hav stamped them. As it was, no one obtained reduced rates except the few who could travel over the N. Y. P. & O.

THE Boston Record relates this story about a venerable disciple of Wesley who rode the circuit of the northwest long years ago. The exploit of Joshua before Jericho formed the theme of his discourse one Sunday forenoon in presence of an audience gathered, as was customary in the days before settlements were large enough to support their own preachers, from far and near on the day of the "stated supply." The parson's sermon seemed to make a profound impression upon two of his hearers, who waited for him outside the door and accosted him: "You say that seven men with seven horns walked seven times around the walls and blowed seven blasts seven times; and then the walls fell in?" The preacher acknowledged this to be as nearly correct as it could be stated. "Looks reasonable, don't it?" asked the questioner, turning to his companion. The latter slowly shook his head as if unconvinced. "You see," persisted the former, "there was seven men with seven horns, and they marched seven times around the walls and blowed seven blasts. Don't you think that would fetch 'em?" "Seven times seven is forty-nine, and seven times forty-nine is ——." The voice of the skeptic muttered the calculation to the end, and then he said aloud: "Well, yes; I reckon that would fetch 'em. Leastways, it would hav got a devil of a purchase on 'em."

To know the American you must see all sides of him. On a train between Jersey City and Paterson, a day or two ago, a poorly dressed woman, carrying a baby in her arms, walked through two coaches and was unable to find a seat. The railroad Hog was there. In a dozen cases he had a whole seat to himself, and he meant to keep it. The woman finally found refuge in the smoking car, and by and by the Hog went forward to enjoy a Havana and found her crying. "What's the matter?" "Baby is very ill, sir." "And where are you going?" "To my sister's. My husband is dead, and I hav no home now." "Leave you any money?" "Not a dollar, sir." "Umph! Sorry for you. Let me hand you this." The Hog has been robbed of his bristles. Woman's tears hav melted his selfishness. He returned to his car, gathered the other Hogs about him, and said: "Come down! Poor widow—sick baby—no home. Come down!" The Hogs went down for their wallets, and in ten minutes the sum of $40 was put into the woman's hand, and the Boss Hog observed: "There—there—it's all right—not a word! Now come back here!" And as she followed him into the coach a dozen Hogs rose up and insisted that she take their seats, and all gathered round her to voice the sentiment: "Poor woman! Poor baby! Isn't there something we can do for you?" The railroad Hog can't be crowded, but he can be melted.

MR. BEECHER, in a late sermon on "The Life to Come," made these melancholy confessions: "The heroes of the olden days, Abraham and Moses, hav left not a trace of their idea of a future life, and any dealing with the scriptures that shall seem to make them believers in a future existence is unjust and dishonest. Only when poetry began to speak were there glimpses of a belief in an existence after death. The Old Testament was a book working for time; the New Testament enlarged the scope and set us to work in time for eternity. And yet is it not remarkable that the New Testament develops so little of that hereafter? We know but very little respecting the conditions of future life, and we know very little of those things which we hav a right to feel anxious to know—what our personality is to be; what our relations to our children, to our earthly companions; the whole method of being. On these elements we hav no knowledge whatever—not a line, not a fact. We know that death ministers again to life, but the make-up of that life is left to the imagination. It perplexes us why Christ did not throw some light on the mystery of the resurrection, but he did not. When the babe is laid in the grave the mother's heart cries out, 'Where is my babe? Who has got it? Is there, then, a heavenly nurse? Are there mother hearts to care for it? Where is it? Does it cry for me?' No voice answers back, and with these things the heart has a right to deal; these questions we hav a right to ask." Of course. But when, a few years since, Colonel Ingersoll said that "from the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead there comes no word" as to a future life, nearly every preacher in the land pointed to that sentence to show that in the presence of death unbelief had no words of consolation to offer. Let those gentlemen now turn their attention to this confession of the foremost Christian preacher in America, and indicate the comforting assurance which it contains.

THE St. James's Gazette reports a meeting of the French Association at Grenoble, at which M. de Mortillet read a paper on "Tertiary Man" before the anthropological section. The question, he said, was not to know whether man already existed in the tertiary epoch as he exists at the present day. Animals varied from one geological stratum to another, and the higher the animals the greater was the variation. It was to be inferred, therefore, that man would vary more rapidly than the other mammals. The problem was to discover in the tertiary period an ancestral form of man, a predecessor of the man of historical times. M. de Mortillet affirmed that there were unquestionably in the tertiary strata objects which implied the existence of an intelligent being. These objects hav, in fact, been found at two different stages of the tertiary epoch—in the lower tertiary at Thenay and in the upper tertiary at Otta, in Portugal, and at Puy Courny, in Cantal. These objects proved that at these two distant epochs there existed in Europe animals acquainted with the use of fire, and able more or less to cut stone. During the tertiary period, then, there lived animals less intelligent than existing man, but much more intelligent than existing apes. M. de Mortillet givs the name of anthropitheque, or ape-man, to the species, which, he maintains, was an ancestral form of historic man, whose skeleton has not yet been discovered, but who has made himself known to us in the clearest manner by his works. A number of flints were exhibited from the strata in question, which had been intentionally chipped and exposed to fire. The general opinion of the savants assembled at Grenoble was that there can no longer be any doubt of the existence in the tertiary period of an ancestral form of man.

"THE people who think that museums and art galleries shouldn't be open on Sundays ought to walk up Broadway some pleasant Sunday evening and take a look at the crowds in front of the windows of the art stores," said Detectiv Larkins to a Sun reporter a few days ago. "I've been looking for a certain man ever since I came back from New Orleans, and I keep my eyes open when there's a crowd around. Sunday nights about seven o'clock, and Sunday afternoons before darkness sets in, see the poorer people who liv on the extreme west side of New York gravitating toward Broadway. Sunday is the poor man's holiday, you know, and poor men can't afford to spend much money on amusements; but they take their wives, mothers, sisters, and children, and walk up Broadway regularly whenever the day is clear. There is an art store just below Fourteenth street that keeps lights burning Sunday nights, and another above Union Square; but the real point of attraction is the big shop filled with bric-a-brac, bronzes, and bits of statuary a short distance above Delmonico's, and on the east side of Broadway. I've seen crowds of men, women, and children ten deep about these windows until late hours of the night, examining the handsome things that are exposed there, and chuckling with delight over some of the odd little groups in terra cotta. Italian street laborers, Irish hod carriers, mechanics, and workingmen of all creeds, ages, and nations stand for hours looking at the pretty things displayed. You can tell me that it would do harm to hav a museum open on Sunday until you are black in the face, but you can't make me believe it, since I've taken to watching the crowds on Sunday nights along Broadway."

News of the Week.

THE Grant monument fund exceeds $90,000.

FERDINAND WARD, Grant's former partner, is on trial for alleged rascality.

THERE is a report afloat that 7,000 Christians had been massacred in Annam.

The Rev. Mr. Downes, of Boston, is on trial this week charged with adultery.

AN association to prevent burial before death has been formed at Bridgeport, Conn.

C. B. REYNOLDS will speak to the people of Jobstown, N. J., Saturday and Sunday, November 7th and 8th.

A PRESBYTERIAN church in Schenectady was destroyed by fire last Sunday, and the Lord is $20,000 poorer in consequence.

S. P. PUTNAM will lecture before the Albany Secular Association, Sunday evening, October 25th. He will be at Boston November 21st.

THERE are signs of war in Turkey, and the complications which it is liable to lead to among European powers are the subject of much speculation.

CZAR ALEXANDER of Russia has forbidden his subjects to celebrate on March 3d next the twenty-fifth anniversary of the emancipation of serfs in that country.

FREETHINKING Governor Hoadly having been defeated in the recent election, the people of Ohio now hav a governor who is an avowed opponent of church taxation.

HERR MOST, the Anarchist, wants the Knights of Labor to arm themselvs with rifles and demand their rights at the muzzles thereof. The Knights do not fall in with the scheme.

SUCH examinations as hav been made of Flood Rock, in Hell Gate, since the explosion on the tenth show that the work was successful. What remains of the rock above water is gradually sinking.

A RAILROAD accident at Andover Plains, on the Northern New Hampshire Railroad, last Sunday, caused the death of two engineers and a brakeman. Another accident near the Hackensack bridge in New Jersey killed eight persons, and seriously injured ten.

THE smallpox scourge at Montreal shows few signs of abating, but is rather on the increase. The Catholic processions and gatherings tend to communicate the disease. Total lack of sanitary precautions is another evil. The smallpox has also appeared in Vermont.

THE death of A. W. Shaw, known as "Josh Billings," the humorous writer and original speller, was reported from Monterey, Cal., Oct. 14th. His death resulted from an attack of apoplexy. He had accumulated a considerable fortune by lecturing. His age was 70, or thereabouts.

W. F. JAMIESON is engaged to return to Albany, Maitland, Quitman, and Savannah, Mo., to deliver second courses of lectures. He is having full houses in every town. He is engaged to giv a course of lectures also in Maysville, Mo., and Leon, Ia. His address is Burlington Junction, Mo.

J. E. REMSBURG'S November appointments, as far as arranged, are: Wausau, Wis., Sunday, 1st; Menomonee, Wis., Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 3d, 4th, and 5th; West Union, Ia., Saturday and Sunday, 7th and 8th; Lake City, Ia., Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 10th, 11th, and 12th; Ottumwa, Ia., Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th; Prescott, Ia., Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 17th, 18th, and 19th; Nevinville, Ia., Friday, 20th.

CHARLES WATTS addresses the Liberals of Boston on Sunday afternoon and evening, October 25th; Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, October 26th, 27th, and 28th, at Greenwich, Mass., at Town Hall. November 1st he goes to Philadelphia; November 8th and 15th he is at Pittsburgh; November 16th and 17th at Alliance, O.; November 18th and 19th, at Massilon, O.; November 20th, at Medina, O.; November 22d at Grand Rapids, Mich.; November 29th at Kansas City, Mo.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

CHARLES WATTS, First Vice-President. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Secretary, 33 Clinton Pl., New York

COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York

The American Secular Union Congress.

When the secretary had finished reading letters on Friday evening, the vice-president introduced J. D. Shaw, of Waco, Texas, as a man who could describe Liberalism with authority, having been on both sides of the theological controversy. From the church of orthodoxy he had been converted to the church of humanity.

Mr. Shaw, in beginning his address, modestly disclaimed his right to speak with authority. He is a tall, nervous, black-haired, black-whiskered, black-eyed man, of typical Southern aspect. He spoke with vim, and his well-rounded sentences penetrated every part of the house. He said that there were some people who think that Liberalism is a system of religion based upon divine revelation. Some think it a new Christian denomination. Others opine that it is a sectarian form of unbelief. Still others think it is synonymous with Infidelity. In fact, while all Liberals are more or less Infidels, many Infidels are not Liberals. Infidels are they who do not believe in the deity of the man Jesus. Persons who doubt this dogma are Infidels to the extent of their doubt. Thousands of them are church-members in good standing, and some of them preach the gospel for a living. Some Infidels are so cowardly as to fear to express their intellectual convictions. That course might endanger their positions in society, jeopardize their business opportunities. I know a church which has sixteen paying members who are Infidels. They believe neither in Christ nor in his precepts, but business advantages count higher with them than their convictions. They are Infidels, but not Liberals. Again, there are some people who think that Liberalism is a system of libertinism, encouraging vice and immorality. If that were true, we should find the large body of Liberalists corrupt people. The facts here speak for themselvs. The criminal records show that the jails are not filled with Liberalists. Ninety per cent of the prisoners are either Christians or Christian believers, expecting to be saved by the atoning blood of Christ. To-day there are more Christian ministers in penitentiaries than there are Liberals. But few men who are hanged profess to be Infidels. Nearly all the cutthroats and murderers claim a crown of glory in some indefinit and indefinable hereafter. I don't claim that every Liberalist is all that we would hav Liberalists to be, but take any city in the land and compare its Liberals with its Christians. I am not afraid of a comparison. Liberalism is not a religious doctrin. It is a creedless, unecclesiastical, non-political, anti-theological system of ethical culture devoted to the inculcation of the noblest virtues. It demands purity of life and character, personal integrity and personal self-respect and true benevolence. If it is a religion at all it is the religion of humanity, a religion of this world and not of another, the religion of the good Samaritan. It is a personified, million-headed protest against bigotry, clerical domination, and religious persecution. It requires that a man's morals be good and his life pure. If we stand by this "declaration of independence," Liberalism is an assured power in the land. We are often met, he said, by the church people with objections to our position. They say that Christianity is a system of ethical culture and covers the same ground sought to be occupied by Liberalism. That is simply the wail of the old and superannuated to the new and vigorous. The Jews might hav said the same to the disciples. In every age of reform the old has tenaciously clung to the old and objected to the new. Christianity teaches that faith in a dogma is of greater importance than morality, that it is superior to charitable deeds and noble sentiments.

I was raised, he went on to say, in the land of Methodism. I took the vows of the ministry because I desired to work for the elevation of the people. What were the consequences? After twelve years of pulpit work I became convinced that my doctrins were untenable. I was too honest to deceive either myself or my people. I hav never had a quarrel with my church. I went before the conference, avowed the intellectual convictions which I could not control, and asked leave to retire. It was granted, and those good men sent me away with their blessing. I left without a stain on my escutcheon, and to-day I preach Liberalism in the same city where formerly I occupied a Methodist pulpit. My friends hav not deserted me, they hav not scandalized me, they hav believed in me.

What has Christianity done for Mormonism, the darkest spot on our national history? Can you reach the Mormons with the Bible? They go to the Bible for Mormonism. Let us show to them the folly of self-degradation, and I will warrant you the women will hav brought about the abolition of polygamy within the next twenty years.

It is claimed by our pious adversaries that we aim to degrade the church and destroy the Bible. Not so. We would convince the church, and by engrafting upon it new and rational ideas set it free, as we are ourselvs. As to the Bible, we are its best friends. We want to elevate it to a rational position. We desire to place it on a footing with a book on geography and a book on history. We accept from it all that is rational and good, and relieve it of that which is irrational and immoral. The church says that Liberalism is a negativ system, that we deny what it affirms. In a measure that is true. But does not the church deny what we affirm? We affirm the supremacy of natural laws by evolution in the survival of the fittest over the claim of divine creation. The church denies the proposition. We affirm that knowledge is superior to faith in determining the relations of earth. Again the church denies. We say that human experience is a better criterion to human wants and human rights than church domination. Still the church denies. The church claims that we do not encourage hope for another life. If that is so, the church does not either. According to the orthodox doctrin, ninety-nine one-hundredths go to hell. Where is the Christian encouragement for a future life? How many people are there that are going to heaven on the orthodox plan? Since I hav put away the Christian creed the buoyancy of my spirit has increased as never before, My very soul has grown with hope. Liberalism does not treat with disrespect the hopes of anybody —unless argument and reason be considered in that light. But then the church says we are divided in our intellectual convictions—that we count in our ranks, Atheists, Materialists, and Spiritualists. The less said about that, I think, the better, when one hundred or more creeds in the Christian church are clashing and clanging in discord. It is not essential that we should unite in intellectual conviction, for we believe in mental freedom. We claim unity of action and sentiment, but not of thought.

They say we are unorganized. That is the unkindest cut of all. Three thousand years ago the world had not sense enough to produce a Liberalist. Two thousand years ago they crucified the first one they found, and for one thousand five hundred years afterward Liberalists were tortured and killed by every Christian nation. During the last two or three hundred years to be a Liberalist meant social ostracism and even imprisonment. We hav had a poor chance for organization and should be excused. Fifty years ago we could hav got no hearing. Only seven years ago a man was mobbed in my own state for daring to be a Liberalist. But the people hav made reparation, for two years later they mobbed a couple of Scotchmen for being too religious. Notwithstanding the noble deeds of Thomas Paine, his name was at one time almost execrated. The memory of that noble man is now asserting itself, however, and monuments are being erected in his honor. One hundred years ago Methodism had not as much influence as Liberalism has to-day. Where will we be one hundred years hence? Men sneer at us. They say we hav no churches, no temples. Well, it is true we havn't done much. But we hav forced a new interpretation of the scripture. We hav brought about progress in theology. To-day Mr. Beecher has no hesitancy in referring to an "anachronism" in the Bible. We hav forced the church to revise that book, and they hav actually chased hell out of the Bible. It's all sheol now, a nice cool place; but you couldn't get up a camp-meeting on sheol. Liberalism is fast becoming respectable and powerful in face of the bitterest opposition. Still onward we go in rational thought and intellectual strength. With deeds of true charity abundantly performed, with a pure heart and a clear record, any man ought to be content to die.

Mr. Shaw's remarks were received with hearty and long-continued applause. His speech, of which the foregoing is but a very imperfect outline, was described by a friend as a "rattler."

Following him, Mrs. Mattie Krekel made a vigorous five-minute speech advocating the addition of a tenth demand to the Nine, in which woman's rights should be insisted upon.

C. W. Stewart, of Liberal, Mo., closed the evening program. Mr. Stewart's appearance suggests strength, and his vigorous oratory sustains the idea. He is tall and large-boned. In his work on the platform he dwells more particularly upon the scientific and constructiv phases of Liberalism. At this time he wished to emphasize one point, and that was that the world was desirous of having a basis for its religious thought. Theology had, for ages, furnished a supernatural basis upon which was reared the structure of supernatural religion

To-day theology was dying, and with it was dying the supernatural religion based upon it. Professor Adler, of New York, had once said that the churches were never more gorgeous in their paraphernalia than now; but their showy glitter was like the gorgeous colors upon the trees in autumn. It was the beauty of decay. And as the wind would sweep the leaves from the branches and hurl them to oblivion, so the breath of truth would sweep away the dogmas of faith, and with them the evanescent pomp of religious worship. In the coming time, evolution, that mighty law that holds all other laws in its grasp, would furnish a natural basis for the religion of humanity, to take the place of supernaturalism. As proof of the rapid appreciation of this theory in popular estimation, Mr. Stewart cited the fact that, when recently a statue of Charles Darwin was unveiled in the British Museum, the state was represented in the person of the Prince of Wales, while the church was represented by the Archbishop of Canterbury, although, when Mr. Darwin died, the church and state were unrepresented at the funeral. To-day there is not an eminent scientist in the world who does not accept evolution.

Science has increased the longevity of the human race by studying man's relationship with nature. The difference between our condition to-day, with better food, clothing, and education, and the squalor and wretchedness of the past, had not been brought about by fasting, prayer, and religious worship, but by the investigation of the forces and principles of nature, and their application to human needs. The speaker citied the advancement of our age as the evidence of the value of science, and said that he knew of no better material of which to construct angels in a possible future world than good men and women in this world, and that the object of a scientific, humanitarian religion was to produce the best possible manhood and womanhood.

At the conclusion of Mr. Stewart's remarks, the Congress adjourned until 10:30 Saturday morning.

SATURDAY MORNING SESSION.

This is the third year that J. E. Remsburg has prepared for delivery at one of the large Freethought meetings a landmark speech. At the Rochester meeting "False Claims" took the public by storm; at Cassadaga even those most conversant with the Christian text-book were surprised at the depth of its infamy as revealed by "Bible Morals." This year at Cleveland, Mr. Remsburg gave us "Sabbath Breaking," which will stand as a Freethought text-book upon the Sunday question. We find room for a large portion of it, but shall immediately publish the whole in pamphlet form:

ADDRESS BY J. E. REMSBURG.

"You might as well commit murder as violate the Fourth Commandment. Of the two evils, murder is the least."

The above words, inspired by the announcement of a lecture that I was to deliver on the Sabbath Question, appeared in the correspondence of the Toronto World of Dec. 13, 1884. Strange as these words sound, they yet voice a sentiment that has existed for ages. Three thousand years ago, for a trifling violation of this law, a man was stoned to death. The one who had been chosen to proclaim the law, and who in this case was its executor, was himself an unpunished murderer. Eighteen hundred years ago a man was crucified in Palestine. One of his crimes was Sabbath-breaking. On the very day that he was executed, those who had been instrumental in having him put to death—those who cried, "Crucify him"—demanded and obtained the release of a murderer. Fifteen hundred years ago the Christian Sabbath was established. The imperial edict creating this institution was issued by a murderer—by one who had taken the lives of seven members of his own family. Three hundred years ago the Puritan Sabbath, with its dungeon and its chains, appeared in England. Its founders taught that murder was less vile than Sunday recreation; and that to make a feast on Sunday—to entertain your friends—to make your fellow-beings happy on this day, was a greater crime than to cut the throat of your child. At a meeting of a woman's society held in St. Louis a little while ago, a vote of thanks was tendered Gov. Crittenden for having refused to pardon a person convicted of Sabbath-breaking. It was ascertained that the names of several members who supported the resolution had previously been affixed to a petition praying for the pardon of a murderer. There hav been, and there are to-day, those, then, who consider Sabbath-breaking worse than murder.

But what is this thing called Sabbath-breaking? Is it a real crime; or is it an artificial crime? Is it a positive wrong injurious to society; or is it a fancied wrong that exists only in the minds of religious devotees? To contribute something toward the solution of this problem is the object of my discourse.

The setting apart of a day for rest, for recreation or religious worship, is a custom that antedates the earliest authentic records of history. Centuries, and perhaps millenniums, before the slaves of Pharaoh fled from Egypt and founded a nation of their own was such a day observed. The Israelites borrowed the custom either from their masters or from the neighboring nations who had followed it from time immemorial. It needed not the proclamation of a God to secure its adoption. The social instincts of the people and the interests of the priests combined to suggest the propriety of selecting a day to be observed in common by all the members of a tribe or nation. At the same time, the isolated condition of many of the earlier nations, as well as the differences of religious opinions, precluded the possibility of the same day being observed by all mankind; and hence we find one nation or church observing one day, while another nation or church observes some other day. Every day has doubtless been the sacred day of some people. Take our three great Semitic churches, all springing from the same source, yet each observing a different day—the Jewish church observing Saturday, the Christian church observing Sunday, and the Mohammedan church observing Friday.

Yet why, with all this diversity, you ask, was every seventh day so generally adopted? Is this not proof of its divine origin? No; natural phenomena determined not only the principal divisions of time, but likewise suggested nearly all of our sacred and festal days. The annual revolution of the earth in its orbit around the sun determined the division called a year. The diurnal revolution of the earth on its axis determined the division called a day. The time elapsing between one new moon and another suggested the division called a month, while the several phases or quarters of the moon suggested the division called a week; and the length of the week, which nature had determined, suggested the septenary number in the observance of this day.

At an early period in the world's history, we find the pagans consecrating a day of the week to each of the seven principal celestial bodies which they had deified. Sunday was consecrated to the sun, Monday to the moon, Tuesday to Mars, Wednesday to Mercury, Thursday to Jupiter, Friday to Venus, and Saturday to Saturn.

The names of the days are derived: Sunday from sun, Monday from moon, Tuesday from the Saxon's war-god Tuisco, Wednesday from their god Woden, Thursday from Thor, the god of thunder, Friday from Fria, wife of Woden and goddess of marriage, and Saturday from Saturn.

With the Egyptians, and with the Jews, the days of the week were not distinguished by names, but by the ordinal numbers. Sunday was called the first day of the week, Monday the second, Tuesday the third, Wednesday the fourth, Thursday the fifth, Friday the Sixth, and Saturday the seventh. This fact remember, that with Jews and Christians, with all churches, and with all nations making the week a principal division of time, Sunday has ever been the first day of the week, and Saturday the seventh.

"But you are ignoring the Bible," says the Christian. "You ought to accept the Mosaic account of the institution of the Sabbath." Which account? You cannot be ignorant of the fact that the Bible contains two apparently different and contradictory statements in regard to its origin. The Decalogue, or Ten Commandments, you are doubtless aware, are presented twice in the Pentateuch; in the twentieth chapter of Exodus, and in the fifth chapter of Deuteronomy. A striking resemblance exists between the two copies; the commandments all appear in the same order and in nearly the same language. But immediately following the Fourth Commandment in each case, and constituting a part, as it were, of the Decalogue, is the reason assigned for instituting the commandment. And what is the reason assigned? Read the commandment as given in Exodus, and immediately following it are these words:

"For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it" (Ex. xx, 11).

Now read the commandment as given in Deuteronomy. In the same place where the words just quoted appear, occur the following:

"And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day" (Deut. v, 15).

Here are two entirely different reasons given for instituting the Sabbath. The first account states that it was instituted in commemoration of God's having rested from his labors on this day; the second account states that it was instituted in commemoration of the escape of the Israelites from bondage. The one places it at the Creation, the other at the Exodus, two thousand five hundred years later, according to Bible chronology. But whatever may hav been the origin of the Jewish Sabbath, the injunction to observe it is plain and emphatic:

"Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work."

Now, my Christian friend, do you accept or reject this law? Do you keep sacred this seventh day, or Saturday, as commanded by your God? You do not. Why? "Because this law has been abrogated," you answer. Very well; for the sake of argument, at least, the validity of your conclusion is accepted. And now, if the Sabbath has been abolished, what means this perpetual cry about "Sabbath-breaking?" If this law has been annulled, then, surely, you hav no Sabbath to desecrate.

Oh, but you say that you hav had another day consecrated in place of the old one; that you hav been authorized to observe the first day of the week instead of the seventh. When, where, by whom, and by what authority hav you? All your authority, you claim, emanates from the Bible. Now, please show me your authority for this. I defy you to point to one line, one word, between the lids of your Bible, commanding you or even authorizing you to observe the first day of the week, or Sunday, as a Sabbath. You hav no scriptural authority for this innovation whatever.

When reproved for non-observance of the Sabbath of the Bible, you plead the abrogation of the Jewish law; to uphold the Sabbath of the church, you cite the Fourth Commandment.

But, in the language of Milton, "If on a plea of a divine command, you impose upon us the observance of a particular day, how do you presume, without the authority of a divine command, to substitute another in its place?" You denounce as wholly debased the Sabbath-breaker, and attribute nearly every accident occurring on Sunday, occurring on another day, to the displeasure of an offended deity. What sublimity of logic! You ignore your God's injunction respecting the observance of his Sabbath, and yet expect him to visit with awful punishment all those who do not choose to keep your Sabbath. Upon the same principle, the counterfeiter should expect the government to punish those who do not accept his spurious coin as genuin.

The advocate of Christian Sabbatarianism is placed in a most pitiable dilemma. If the Fourth Commandment is still binding upon us, then the entire Christian church, with the exception of two or three minor sects, are habitual Sabbath-breakers, observing as they do the first day of the week instead of the seventh, which they are commanded to observe; and if their God were to exercise the same severity toward them that he is said to hav exercised in the time of Moses, and as some of his self-constituted agents and their dupes would fain hav us believe he ought to exercise to-day, the church would virtually become extinct at the end of a single week. If, on the other hand, the Fourth Commandment was abrogated, then the Christian clergy, and others, in representing as a divine law that which is simply a human ordinance, instituted for the purpose of promoting the interests of the church, are guilty of endeavoring to impose a gross fraud upon mankind.

In discussing and opposing the Sabbatic institution, I shall meet its advocates upon their own ground and refute their claims by Christian testimony. The Christian scriptures and the Christian founders first deserve attention.

The central figure in the Christian scriptures, in Christian theology, and in Christian history, is Jesus. In the Christian world, he is the omnipotent ruler whose authority it is worse than treason to deny; he is the infallible legislator whose laws are immutable; he is the supreme judge from whose decision there is no appeal. Upon this question where did Jesus stand? In the four gospels which purport to giv a record of his life and teachings, three facts are prominent:

1. Jesus never enjoined the observance of the Sabbath as a moral duty in any form or on any day.

His Sermon on the Mount, Christians claim, constitutes the best code of morals ever given to the world. In this Sermon he prescribes the various duties which he deems it necessary to observe. But the observance of the Sabbath is not one of the duties enjoined. The word "Sabbath" does not appear in this discourse.

When the young man comes to him and asks him what he shall do to be saved, Jesus says: "Thou knowest the Commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honor thy father and mother" (Mark x, 19). The Fourth Commandment is not named. The moral laws of the Decalog—those which are natural and just—are given; the theological and ceremonial are omitted, and with them the law pertaining to the Sabbath.

2. Jesus was himself a Sabbath-breaker.

One of the principal charges made against him by the Jews, one of the chief reasons why they sought to take his life, was because he did not keep the Sabbath. You say that this was a false charge, a charge preferred against him by the Pharisees. Here I confront you with the testimony of the favorit evangelist. John admits that Jesus had broken the Sabbath: "Therefore the Jews sought to kill him, because he not only had broken the Sabbath, but said also that God was his father" (John v, 18).

When they rebuked him for performing his works on the Sabbath, what answer did he giv? "My father worketh hitherto, and I work" (John v, 17). And from the Christian standpoint, was not the answer a reasonable one? If, as Christians affirm, the various operations of nature are but the visible manifestations of God's work, then God himself has no regard for the Sabbath. He does not observe the Sabbath. The grass grows, the wind blows, the rivers run to the sea, the planets roll on in their orbits, and all nature is alive with activity on this as on every other day.

3. Not only did Jesus violate the Sabbath himself, he also encouraged and even commanded others to violate it.

He went with his disciples to the fields on the Sabbath and permitted them to gather the corn (Mark ii, 23). When the Jews reproved them he told them that "the Sabbath was made for man" (ii, 27)—not as an ecclesiastical institution to be devoted wholly to religious ceremonies and idleness, but, like other days to be used for "the commodity and profit of man."

When the impotent man was healed on the Sabbath, "Jesus saith unto him, Rise, take up thy bed, and walk" (John v, 8). When the Jews saw this they said to the man, "It is the Sabbath day: it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed." And, judged by the Jewish scriptures, they were right. The Old Testament explicitly forbade it. "Thus saith the Lord: Take heed to yourselvs, and bear no burden on the Sabbath day" (Jer. xvii, 21).

Next to Jesus, the most important character in Christian history, the chief writer of the Christian scriptures, the real founder of Christian theology, is Paul. What are Paul's views regarding the Sabbath? Substantially those of his master. He believes that with the advent of Christ all things hav become new; that the Mosaic law has been superseded by the gospel; that these old rites and customs, circumcisions, sacrifices, feasts, and Sabbaths pertained to the Jews, and to the Jews alone, that they are no longer binding upon humanity. "But now we are delivered from the law" (Rom. vii, 6), he says.

In his Epistle to the Romans he writes:

"One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind" (xiv, 5).

He upbraids the Galatians for their superstitious observance of days:

"Ye observe days and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I hav bestowed upon you labor in vain" (iv, 10, 11).

In his Epistle to the Colossians, he is still more emphatic:

"Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days" (ii, 16).

Thus the whole tenor of Paul's teachings is opposed to Sabbath observance, opposed not merely to the observance of the Jewish Sabbath, but to this whole Sabbatarian idea. The same is true of the writers of all the New Testament. Says the Rev. Minot J. Savage:

"The writers of the New Testament, in several places, catalog at length all kinds of sins and offenses against Christian character. They are so long, so exhaustiv, that it is apparent on the part of the writer that he wishes substantially to cover the whole ground. Now, it is very remarkable that nowhere is there any mention of Sabbath-keeping, of Sunday-keeping, of Lord's day-keeping, as binding, and that nowhere is any fault found with anybody for neglecting to keep any of these days" (History of Sunday Observance).

But Christians must hav something to uphold their holy day. It is the business of theologians to furnish evidence and arguments when needed. In this case they hav been forced to imitate their God's creativ act, and make them out of nothing. Smith's "Bible Dictionary" givs a list of all the texts and pretexts used in support of a Sunday Sabbath. Let us examin them.

1. "The Lord rose on the first day of the week" (B. D.).

But he rested in the grave on the seventh day. His followers, also, "rested the Sabbath [seventh] day according to the commandment" (Luke xxiii, 55), and came to the sepulcher on the first day to perform the work of embalming his body.

If any event in the history of Jesus is to be commemorated by a weekly memorial, why not select the most important event? From a Christian point of view, the atonement is of infinitly more importance than the resurrection. Why, then, is the sixth day not observed as a Sabbath instead of the first? The orthodox idea of Sabbath observance, the solemnity attached to the modern Sabbath, is certainly more in harmony with the sad circumstances attending the crucifixion than with any other event in his career.

There is a valid reason, then, why the sixth day should hold the highest rank among the days of the week with Christians; there is none for elevating the first day to this place.

2. Jesus "appeared on the very day of his rising, . . to ten apostles collected together" (B. D.).

The assembling of the apostles on the day of the resurrection is another argument adduced in favor of Sunday observance. But why were the apostles "collected together?" John says, "For fear of the Jews" (xx, 19). That they had not assembled in honor of the resurrection is proven by the fact that they did not know that the resurrection had taken place, for the stories told them by the women concerning it, "seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not" (Luke xxiv, 11).

That he appeared to the apostles "on the very day of his rising" is extremely doubtful. According to the accounts given in Luke and John, it seems that he did not visit them until after nightfall. If so, then, according to the Jewish mode of reckoning time, he did not appear to them until after the second day of the week had commenced.

According to Matthew and Mark, the apostles, after the resurrection, were obliged to travel from Jerusalem to Galilee, a distance of nearly one hundred miles, before Jesus appeared to them. If this account be true, then it must hav been the third or fourth day of the week when he first appeared to them.

If the obligations of the Sabbath had at this time been transferred from the seventh to the first day, it must be admitted that both Christ and his followers violated them; for while the Sabbath day's journey was but little more than half a mile, Christ and two of his disciples traveled from Jerusalem to Emmaus and returned—a journey of fourteen miles.

3. "After eight days, that is, according to the ordinary reckoning, on the first day of the next week, he appeared to the eleven" (B. D.).

Even admitting that the first meeting occurred before the close of the first day—occurred on Sunday afternoon—it is plain to any one but a theologian that if the next meeting did not take place until eight days after this, it could not, therefore, hav taken place until Monday afternoon of the following week.

4. "On the day of Pentecost, which in that year fell on the first day of the week, 'they were all with one accord in one place,' had spiritual gifts conferred on them, and in their turn began to communicate those gifts, as accompaniments of instruction, to others" (B. D.).

Was the holy ghost bestowed upon them at this time because it was the first day of the week, or because it was the day of Pentecost? Let the same authority that presents the above as an argument in behalf of Sunday answer:

"The typical significance of the Pentecost is made clear from the events of the day recorded in the Acts of the Apostles. . . . Just as the appearance of God on Sinai was the birthday of the Jewish nation, so was that Pentecost the birthday of the Christian church. The Pentecost was the last Jewish feast that Paul was anxious to keep (1 Cor. xvi, 8), and Whitsuntide, its successor, was the first annual festival adopted in the Christian church" (Bible Dictionary, art. Pentecost).

But did the day of Pentecost in that year fall on the first day of the week as claimed? The Rev. Dr. H. B. Hacket, professor of biblical literature in Newton Theological Institution, and an advocate of Sunday observance, says:

"It is generally supposed that this Pentecost, signalized by the outpouring of the spirit, fell on the Jewish Sabbath, our Saturday" (Commentary on the original Text of the Acts, p. 50).

5. "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow, and continued his speech until midnight. . . When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed" (Acts xx, 7, 11).

The fact of Paul's once having preached on the first day of the week (?) is brought forward as authority for observing Sunday as a Sabbath. But what can be more unreasonable than this? Here was Paul, journeying from country to country, and from city to city, and is it not fair to suppose that he would preach on any day that it was convenient for him to preach? But if his preaching on a particular day is evidence of that day being a Sabbath, the argument is an unfortunate one, for in the same book he is reported to hav preached on the Jewish Sabbath, or Saturday, no less than three times (Acts xvi, 13; xvii, 2; xviii, 4).

It is also urged that the day was observed as a Sabbath because the disciples had assembled together for the purpose of breaking bread, i. e., for the purpose of celebrating the eucharist. In the same book (Acts ii, 46) we are told that they were in the habit of going from house to house and performing this ceremony every day.

But when did the meeting referred to in the text really occur? According to the Jewish method of reckoning time, and which the early Christians followed, the day began and ended at sunset. The Jewish Sabbath began at sunset, Friday evening, and ended at sunset, Saturday evening; the first day of the week began at sunset, Saturday evening, and ended at sunset, Sunday evening. Was it on Saturday night, or Sunday night, that the meeting took place? If it took place on the night following the first day, or Sunday night, as generally supposed, then Paul's preaching and the breaking of bread took place, not on the first, but on the second day of the week. If it took place on the night following the Jewish Sabbath, or Saturday night, as some contend, then Paul traveled on the Christian Sabbath—began a journey of nine hundred miles on Sunday morning.

That the Apostles designated any particular day of the week on which to celebrate the eucharist, there is not a particle of proof to show. Had they appointed such a day for its observance, it would undoubtedly hav been either Saturday, the day on which the Jewish converts were accustomed to meet, or Thursday, the day on which the ceremony was instituted.

But supposing that the custom was observed on the first day of the week, what has this to do with the question of Sabbath observance? Does this prove that the day was observed as a Sabbath? What do we understand by the term Sabbath? A day of rest; in the Christian sense, a divinely-appointed day; a day wherein all secular work is sin. Now, because they performed a certain ceremony on a current day of the week, it does not follow that that day was necessarily a Sabbath. The primitiv Christians, many of them, were in the habit of assembling together on Wednesday for the purpose of receiving religious instruction. But this does not prove that they observed the day as a Sabbath; for they did not. When their meetings were ended, they returned to their homes and to their labors. Again, with the primitiv church, Friday was, and with the Roman Catholic church, it is, in some respects, a more sacred day than any other. With Roman Catholics, Friday is a peculiarly sacred day; they observe it as such; and yet they do not observe it as a Sabbath.

6. "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come" (1 Corinthians xvi, 2).

This was not a public collection as some claim, but a task to be performed at home. The Rev. J. W. Morton, for many years a Presbyterian missionary to Hayti, says:

"The whole question turns upon the meaning of the expression, 'by him;' and I marvel greatly how you can imagin that it means 'in the collection box of the congregation.' Greenfield, in his Lexicon, translates the Greek term, 'With one's self, i. e., at home.' Two Latin versions, the Vulgate and that of Castillio, render it, 'apud se,' with one's self; at home. Three French translations, those of Martin, Osterwald, and De Sacy, 'chez soi,' at his own house; at home. The German of Luther, 'bei sich selbst,' by himself; at home."

The Douay Bible, the standard Catholic version, reads: "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you put apart with himself."

That Paul should designate some particular day for the performance of this work, and that if any day of the week was considered holy, some other day would be selected, is but reasonable to suppose. Instead of supporting the doctrin of a Sunday Sabbath, the above text is one of the chief arguments relied upon by advocates of the Seventh Day or Jewish Sabbath, to prove that the first day of the week was not regarded as a sacred, but as a secular day by the primitiv church.

7. "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselvs together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching" (Hebrews x, 25).

"An injunction which seems to imply that a regular day for such assembling existed, and was well known" (Bible Dictionary).

The Epistle containing this injunction, the same authority says, "was probably addressed to the Jews in Jerusalem and Palestine." That the Hebrew Christians had a regular day for assembling has never been disputed; and the editor of the "Bible Dictionary" knew, and every person acquainted with the history of primitiv Christianity knows, that this day was the Jewish Sabbath.

The fact that the Jewish converts continued for centuries to hold their meetings on Saturday ought to convince every intelligent Christian that the obligations of the Jewish Sabbath had not been transferred to Sunday.

8. "I was in the spirit on the Lord's day" (Revelation i, 10).

But what day is here referred to? If a current day of the week is meant, it certainly must be the seventh day—the day which the God of the Bible "blessed" and "sanctified" (Gen. ii, 3)—the day which he declares to be "my holy day" (Isa. lviii, 13). "The only day that can be called 'the Lord's day,'" says the Rev. J. N. Andrews, "is the Sabbath of the great creator." "The only day bearing this definition, in either the Old or New Testament," says Taylor in his "Obligation of the Sabbath," "is Saturday, the seventh day of the week."

Not until the close of the second century, or the beginning of the third, was the term Lord's day ever applied to the first day of the week. To-day, Sunday is called the Lord's day, and taking advantage of this fact, the clergy teach their followers that this is the day referred to in Revelation, an assumption which they know to be wholly unwarranted.

These are the miserable subterfuges palmed off upon a credulous public in behalf of Sunday. Not one of these so-called arguments, not all of them combined, furnish the shadow of a reason for its observance. The Rev. J. H. Waggoner, an able Sabbatarian writer, thus tersely states the case against it:

"Read your Bibles through a hundred times with reference to this subject, and you will each time become more and more convinced of the truthfulness of the following notable facts: 1. There is no divine command for Sunday observance. 2. There is not the least hint of a Sunday institution. 3. Christ never changed God's Sabbath to Sunday. 4. He never observed Sunday as the Sabbath. 5. The apostles never kept Sunday for the Sabbath. 6. There is no prophecy that Sunday would ever take the place of the Sabbath. 7. Neither God, Christ, angels, nor inspired men, hav ever said one word in favor of Sunday as a holy day."

To-day there is a Christian Sabbath. This institution had an origin somewhere and at some time. Some one instituted it. Who? Not the God of Christians; not their Christ; neither was it his apostles. It was that imperial butcher, Constantine, who created the Christian Sabbath. A man who deluged the Roman empire with blood; a man who threw his captivs to wild beasts; a man who killed the husband of his sister and the father of his wife: a man who tore his nephew, a little boy of eleven years, from the arms of a pleading sister, and murdered him; a man who plunged his own wife into a bath of boiling water; a man who consigned to a cruel death his own innocent son. All of these crimes committed, not while yet a pagan, but after he had embraced the Christian faith.

Here is the edict of Constantine, issued A.D. 321, instituting this so-called Christian Sabbath:

"Let all judges and all people of the towns rest, and all the various trades be suspended on the venerable day of the Sun. Those who liv in the country, however, may freely and without fault attend to the cultivation of the fields, lest with the loss of favorable opportunity, the commodities offered by heaven be destroyed" (Justinian Code, Book III., title 12).

Now, I challenge the defenders of the Christian Sabbath to produce a particle of credible evidence tending to establish the existence of this institution prior to this edict of Constantine's in the fourth century. Sir William Domville, one of the most eminent Protestant divines of his age, referring to this subject, says:

"Centuries of the Christian era passed away before the Sunday was observed by the Christian church as a Sabbath. History does not furnish us with a single proof or indication that it was at any time so observed previous to the Sabbatical edict of Constantine in A.D. 321" (Six Texts, p. 241).

Why was the Christian Sabbath established? Because the clergy could not close their eyes to the importance of having a day set apart for their especial work. With Constantine they had, for the first time, the power to secure such an institution by legal enactment; with Constantine, Christianity became the state religion of the Roman empire; and so, with the advice of the priesthood, this Sabbath edict was issued.

Why was Sunday selected for the Christian Sabbath? Various reasons hav been assigned. But the correct one has, as far as possible, been withheld from the public. With the pagans comprising a large portion of the empire, Sunday was already the chief day of the week. It was the day which they had consecrated to the sun; and although they did not observe it as a Sabbath, it was yet their sacred day, and we see how much easier it would be to compel them to abstain from labor on this day than on any other. To blend, as far as possible, into one harmonious whole the discordant systems of paganism and Christianity was the ambition of Constantine's reign. In the prosecution of this work, it is charged by Protestants that Christianity was corrupted, that in order to unite the young and rising faith with the old and waning one, compromises were made. They are loath to tell us, however, that one of these compromises was the adoption of the old pagan holiday of Sunday for the Christian Sabbath. And yet it was.

"The festival of Sunday," says Andrews, "is more ancient than the Christian religion, its origin being lost in remote antiquity. It did not originate, however, from any divine command nor from piety toward God: on the contrary, it was set apart as a sacred day by the heathen world in honor of their chief god, the sun" (History of the Sabbath, p. 258).

Mour, an eminent English divine, and an upholder of the Christian Sabbath, says:

"It is not to be denied but we borrow the name of this day from the ancient Greeks and Romans, and we allow that the old Egyptians worshiped the sun, and as a standing memorial of their veneration, dedicated this day to him. . . . So that Sunday being the day on which the gentiles solemnly adored that planet, and called it Sunday, . . . the Christians thought fit to keep the same day and the same name of it, that they might not appear causelessly peevish, and by that means hinder the conversion of the gentiles" (Dialogs on the Lord's Day, p. 22).

Another advocate of first-day observance makes a similar apology:

"That very day was the Sunday of their heathen neighbors and respectiv countrymen; and patriotism gladly united with expediency in making it at once their Lord's day and their Sabbath" (North British Review, vol. xviii, p. 409).

Thus we see that it was priestly "expediency" backed by a murderer's edict, instead of a divine decree or an apostolic injunction, that made Sunday the Sabbath of the Christians.

Prejudice, too, has played a prominent part in this Sabbatarian drama. The ancient pagans, and among them the Egyptians, had elevated Sunday to the first rank among the days of the week. Dislike for their oppressors doubtless caused the Jews to ignore the sacredness attached to it and choose another for their holy day. Hatred of the Jews caused the gentile Christians to spurn the Jewish Sabbath and hold their meetings on various other days. Contempt for the church of Rome well nigh caused tne Protestants to dethrone the Lord's day and substitute another in its place. Calvin and others seriously proposed the adoption of Thursday as the day on which to hold religious services.

[Mr. Remsburg next introduced the testimony of the Christian fathers, Justin Martyr, Irenæus, Clement of Alexendria, Tertullian, Origen, Victorinus, Eusebius, St. Cyril, St. Epiphanius, and Jerome, none of whom believed in any sort of Sabbath as an apostolic or divine institution, and held that all days were substantially the same. The speaker then proceeded:]

The edict of Constantine was not universal in its application; the agricultural class was exempt from its authority. Nor was it this class alone that abstained from labor on Sunday. For several centuries after, various other kinds of labor were allowed on this day. Dr. White, Bishop of Ely, says:

"In St. Jerome's day [400 A.D.], and in the very place where he was residing, the devoutest Christians did ordinarily work upon the Lord's day, when the service of the church was ended" (Dialogs on the Lord's Day, p. 236).

Jerome himself, speaking of certain devout Christian women, says:

"As soon as they returned home on the Lord's day, they sat down severally to their work, and made clothes for themselvs and others" (Heylyn's History of the Sabbath, part II. chap. iii)

Kitto's "Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature" says:

"Though in later times we find considerable reference to a sort of consecration of the day, it does not seem at any period of the ancient church to hav assumed the form of auch an observance as some modern religious communities hav contended for. . . . Chrysostom concludes one of his homilies by dismissing his audience to their respectiv ordinary occupations" (Art. Lord's Day).

In 538, the Third Council of Orleans recommended the observance of Sunday as a Sabbath by all classes; not because labor on this day was a sin, but "in order that the people might not be prevented from attending church." This resolution, however, being merely advisory, but little attention seems to hav been paid to it.

Of the Western church, Dr. White writes as follows:

"The Catholic church, for more than six hundred years after Christ, permitted labor, and gave license to many Christian people to work on the Lord's day, at such hours as they were not commanded to be present at the public service" (Treatis of the Sabbath Day, p. 217).

Referring to the Eastern church, Dr. Heylyn writes:

"It was near nine hundred years from our Savior's birth if not quite so much, before restraint of husbandry on this day had been first thought of in the East; and probably being thus restrained did find no more obedience there than it had done before in the western parts" (History of the Sabbath, part II. chap. v).

That civil courts were held on Sunday until a very late period, is attested by the fact that a council which met at Arragon in the sixth century forbade the clergy to attend. In the ninth century a church council, acting in conjunction with the civil government, prohibited civil pleadings on Sunday in France. A hundred years later, King Athelstan prohibited them in England.

In the twelfth century Sunday was, for the first time, called the Christian Sabbath. At the advent of the succeeding century a spasmodic effort was made to secure a more rigid observance of this and the other holy days. In 1201 St. Eustace appeared with a parchment purporting to be a proclamation written by God in heaven and laid upon the altar of St. Simeon in Jerulsaem. Christian prelates pronounced the document genuin, and Innocent III. gave it the papal sanction. Among other things, this divine decree contained the following:

"By my right hand, I swear unto you that if you do not observe the Lord's day, and the festivals of my saints, I will send unto you the pagan nations, that they may slay you."

If they still persist in violating those holy days (after having been slain),

"I will open the heavens, and for rain I will rain upon you stones and wood, and hot water in the night, that one may take precautions against the same, and that so I may destroy all wicked men."

If they continue obstinate, they are, like Pharaoh's cattle, to be killed again:

"I will send unto you beasts that hav the heads of lions, the hair of women, the tails of camels, and they shall be so ravenous that they shall devour your flesh, and you shall long to flee away and hide yourselvs for fear of the beasts."

To aid in the work numerous "well-attested" miracles were published. A farmer going to his field to plow on Sunday took a piece of iron to clean his plow. The iron became fixed to his hand, and remained in it two years. A miller put a grist in the hopper to grind on the Sabbath, but the vessel was filled with blood instead of flour. A woman attempted to bake on Saturday evening after the Sabbath commenced, and though she kept the oven heated for two days, "her cake was dough." Another, failing to get her dough prepared before the Sabbath began, put it aside, intending to bake on Monday, but when she looked at it again it was baked.

It was decreed that the Lord's day should begin at 3 P.M. on Saturday. To giv full measure, a Scotch council declared that its observance should begin at noon on Saturday and end at sunrise on Monday—continue forty-two hours.

But these efforts to enforce a strict observance of Sunday were either transient or local. Sunday labor, under certain restrictions, was frequently if not generally allowed. In the fourteenth century a Spanish council decreed that Christians might labor on the Lord's day, with permission of the parish priest. In England fairs and markets were held in the churches on Sunday up to the middle of the fifteenth century. A century later (1547) Edward VI., head of the Episcopal church, issued the following order:

"All parsons, vicars, and curates, shall teach and declare unto their parishioners that they may with a safe and quiet conscience, in the time of harvest, labor upon the holy and festival days."

The council of Rheims (1533) decreed "That no man on these days giv himself to plays or dances, especially during service." This interdiction was understood, in its strict sense, to apply only to the hours devoted to public worship; and during this and all of the preceding centuries, even when laboring on Sunday was not permitted, Sunday recreation and amusements were allowed.

It was reserved for the Puritans to crush out every vestige of popular liberty on Sunday. The Puritan Sabbath, whose decrepit form, supported by the crutches of state laws, still lingers in our midst, is one of the most despicable frauds that a knavish priesthood ever imposed upon humanity. The story of its establishment and reign constitutes one of the most disgraceful chapters in the history of ecclesiastical despotism.

The Catholic church has created an incredible number of holy days, or festivals. One of them was the Lord's day. This institution rested upon the same foundation as the others—it had the authority of the church for its support. It was observed with as much reverence as the others, and with no more. There was not an argument that could be adduced in its behalf that would not apply with equal force to the others. In the Church of England these festivals were received with some degree of favor, but to the Dissenters they were an intolerable burden. Relativ to this subject, Dr. Heylyn writes:

"The brethren had tried many ways to suppress them formerly, as having too much in them of the superstitions of the Church of Rome, but they had found no way successful till they fell on this, which was to set on foot some new Sabbath doctrin, and, by advancing the authority of the Lord's day Sabbath, to cry down the rest."

Alluding to the same subject, the German divine, Dr. Hengstenberg, says:

"The opinion that the Sabbath was transferred to the Sunday was first broached in its perfect form, and with all its consequences, in the controversy which was carried on in England between the Episcopalians and Presbyterians. . . . The Presbyterians were now in a position which compelled them either to giv up the observance of the Sunday, or to maintain that a divine appointment from God separated it from the other festivals. The first they could not do. . . . They therefore decided upon the latter" (Lord's Day, p. 66).

To Dr. Bound, who is justly styled the Father of the Puritan Sabbath, belongs the credit of furnishing the needed plan and the arguments for its support. The following is his theory:

"That which is natural, namely, that every seventh day should be kept holy unto the Lord, that still remaineth: that which is positiv, namely, that day which was the seventh day from the creation should be the Sabbath, or day of rest, that is now changed in the church of God" (The True Doctrin of the Sabbath," p. 51).

"He [God] maketh the seventh day to be genus in this commandment, and to be perpetual; and in it by virtue of the commandment to comprehend these two species or kinds: the Sabbath of the Jews and of the gentiles, of the law and of the gospel; so that both of them were comprehended in the commandment, even as genus comprehendeth both his species" (Ibid, p. 71).

It is a lamentable fact that the more false and unreasonable a religious doctrin is the more readily it is accepted. And so, baseless and absurd as this new Sabbatarian doctrin was, the rapidity with which it spread exceeded the expectations even of its most sanguin supporters. Dr. Heylyn says:

"Though Jewish and rabbinical this doctrin was, it carried a fair show of piety, at the least, in the opinion of the common people, and such as did not stand to examin the true grounds thereof, but took it upon the appearance; such as did judge, not by the workmanship of the stuff, but the gloss and color, in which it is not strange to see how suddenly men were induced not only to giv way unto it, but without more ado to abet the same, till in the end and in very little time it grew the most bewitching error and most popular infatuation that ever was infused into the people of England."

Thus, at last, this venerabile die Solis, the day once consecrated to the orb of light, was overspread with the thick clouds of theological gloom, that in the darkness superstition's bats and owls might the more readily secure their prey.

The most rigid observance of the Sabbath was at once enforced in Great Britain and her colonies. In England it was a crime to perform any labor whatever on this day. It was a sin to cook or even kindle a fire. A husband was not permitted to kiss his wife, nor were parents permitted to kiss their children on the Sabbath. A little child stretched upon a bed of mortal sickness might throw its loving arms around its mother's neck and crave with its last breath her farewell kiss, and to grant that dying child's request would be a violation of these Sabbatarian laws.

For daring to question the authority of this institution many were persecuted, imprisoned, and even put to death. Mrs. Trask, an English teacher, was a believer in Sabbath observance. But she believed that the Sabbath of the Bible was the true Sabbath, and this she observed. That she might not violate the laws of her country nor giv offense to her neighbors, she also kept the Christian Sabbath. For an honest avowal of her opinions she was imprisoned and fed on "bread and water, roots and herbs," for fifteen years, or until she died. Francis Bampfield, an old man of seventy years, published a vindication of the ancient Sabbath. For this his property was confiscated; he was imprisoned, and so brutally treated that he died. In 1661, for rejecting the Puritan Sabbath, John James, a Baptist clergyman, was hanged and quartered. "After he was dead his heart was taken out and burnt, his quarters were affixed to the gates of the city, and his head was set up in Whitechapel on a pole opposit to the alley in which his meeting-house stood" (Utter's Manual of the Seventh Day Baptists, p. 23).

In Scotland it was a sin to laugh or even smile on Sunday; and it is a historical fact that when Charles I. visited Scotland, he was publicly rebuked by the clergy for having indulged in a laugh on that day. Off the north coast of that country a shipwreck once occurred on the Sabbath. A party of fishermen upon the shore saw the wreck—saw the sailors struggling with the waves. They went to their rescue and saved them; and for this very act these fishermen were required to do penance for having violated the Sabbath.

In America the colonial legislatures enacted laws making it a misdemeanor to do almost anything on Sunday but walk "reverently" to and from church. In Boston an iron cage was kept in the public square where Sabbath-breakers were confined and exhibited. The Quakers, while they were permitted to liv in New England—before they got to hanging and banishing them, were continually being persecuted for their more rational observance of the Sabbath. Three Quaker women were arrested for some trivial offense and convicted of Sabbath-breaking. This was their punishment: on a cold December day they were taken out, stripped to the waist, tied behind a cart, and publicly whipped through the streets of Boston and Roxbury, the snow over which they passed being stained with the drops of blood that fell from their lacerated bodies.

The old colonial records of Massachusetts are still preserved in the public archives at Worcester. In these records one Mary Fay stands convicted of Sabbath-breaking. Her crime was this: on a Saturday night she received word that her married daughter, living a mile away, was sick. The next morning she went on horseback to see her daughter. For this she was arrested and convicted of Sabbath-breaking. An appeal was taken to a higher court, but in vain; and a round three hundred dollars was the cost. Three hundred dollars for visiting a sick child! A mother arrested, dragged before the courts, robbed, and disgraced for performing one of the holiest deeds a mother can perform!

What would hav been the fate of a religious reformer had he appeared in New England at the time, passing through the cornfields, plucking the ears of corn, or healing the sick on the Sabbath? The Jews of Palestine suffered Jesus to go among them three years teaching his heretical doctrins and condemning their Sabbath before they crucified him. The Christians of New England would hav hanged him in three weeks!

It is related of a boy, who, in order to ingratiate himself into the favor of his parents, resolved that for once he would keep the Sabbath in true Puritanic style. Well, he succeeded, but it was a terrible task. Every moment seemed an hour, but at last night came. When he retired, the father said to him, "My son, you hav faithfully kept this Sabbath, you hav been a good boy to-day; if you continue to be good, when you die you will go to heaven and be with God where it is always one blessed Sabbath." There was little consolation in this thought for the poor boy; but presently a gleam of hope shot through his troubled mind, and he ventured to inquire, "Father, when I die and go to heaven, if I am real good there, won't God let me go to hell on Saturday afternoons to hav a little fun?" Hell was a paradise compared with this Puritan Sabbath.

[The testimony of Christian reformers, scholars, and divines was here recited, showing that "the most eminent Christians that hav ever lived—the church's greatest scholars and divines—from Martin Luther down to the present day, hav had the candor to admit that the observance of this day, so far as divine authority is concerned, is wholly unauthorized; that the Christian Sabbath was made by man, and that there is no more sacredness attached to Sunday than to any other day." These facts were fully sustained. Mr. Remsburg then said:]

And now, in the face of all this evidence, why is it that the church so zealously persists in imposing this fraudulent institution upon the people? I will tell you why? It is to fill her empty pews, and line the pockets of her priests. She would close every public library and reading room, every place of innocent amusement; she would veil the face of art, and silence the tongue of music; she would hide from our gaze, with all their ennobling influences, the beauties of nature, the blue sea, placid streams, and silvery fountains, green fields and shady groves, bright flowers and warbling birds, in short, she would barricade every avenue to social enjoyment and rational happiness on this day, and make for us a gloomy prison of her Sabbath, with her places of public worship for our prison-yard.

We are told that man's physical nature demands the Sabbatic rest—that medical men hav attested the truth of this. That an institution possessing the power and wealth that priestcraft does should be able to produce a doctor's certificate when needed is not strange. But the physician who seriously contends that man's physical nature demands the observance of the Sabbath, is better qualified for a doctor of divinity than for a doctor of medicin. As well might he contend that man's physical nature demands a feast every seventh day. Man's physical nature requires both food and rest, but it requires them, not once a week, but every day. Ask the laboring man whether he feels better fitted for work on Monday morning, after passing Sunday in idleness, than he does on Saturday morning, after five days' labor, and he will tell you, "No." With the more fatiguing kinds of labor, a man will accomplish as much in a week by working every day, and working but eight hours a day, as he will working six days a week, and working ten hours a day.

Dr. George W. Brown, an intelligent physician, and a man of broad experience and observation, says that laboring men "may desire rest for social or literary pleasures, or to look after family or personal affairs, but they are not invigorated by a day's relaxation, neither are they better qualified to endure next week's toil" (The Sunday Question).

"In the state of nature," says Parker Pillsbury, "neither man nor animals know nor care anything about days of rest" (The Sabbath).

At a convention held in Boston, William Lloyd Garrison said: "The Sabbath is not necessary for man or beast. Who says it is is but the overworker of himself and beast" (Christian Advocate).

But, in rejecting a popular fallacy, I do not wish to be understood as advocating the ceaseless round of seven days' work a week. The laws regulating man's physical being do not demand abstinence from labor one day in seven; but if by surcease of toil on Sunday his happiness can be promoted, or his intellect improved; if he may devote the day to innocent recreation, or to the acquisition of useful knowledge, it is a blessing which no lover of his race will deny. But to enjoy the fruits of this blessing it must be free. The veil of sanctity, which scheming priests hav thrown over it, must be removed, and the obnoxious laws enforcing its observance be repealed.

This argument of Sabbath observance being a physical necessity is the last resort of the clergy. When the falsity of their theological claims regarding Sunday is exposed, and their holy Sabbath shown to be an unholy fraud, then they begin to whine about the "poor laborer"—that it is in behalf of the laboring classes they advocate the observance of Sunday. It is true that the laboring classes do need rest; they ought to hav far more rest than they get: and were it not for priestcraft, were it not for this vast army of priests and preachers which they hav to support, they would be able to obtain it. But who is to determin when they are tired, their neighbors or themselvs? Who knows best when I need rest, my neighbor or myself? I hav as much right to tell my Christian neighbor when he shall work as he has to tell me when I shall rest; I hav as much right, in justice, to compel him to work on Sunday as he has to compel me to rest on Sunday.

Whom do these laws affect most grievously, the rich or the poor? It is the poor upon whom the burden chiefly falls. The man of wealth and leisure, surfeited with pleasure all the week, can well afford to rest on Sunday; the poor man, obliged to labor all the week, has no other day but this to spare for pleasure. You stop the street-cars on Sunday. The rich man in his carriage rolls along at ease, the poor man and his family must go on foot or stay at home. You stop the milk cart on Sunday. The wealthy, with their better conveniences, with their cellars and refrigerators, procure a supply on Saturday evening, and keep it over Sunday; the poor, destitute of these conveniences, cannot. You close the art gallery, the museum, the library, and the reading-room on Sunday. To the wealthy this is a matter of little consequence, for they hav access to them all the week; the poor, engrossed with toil, hav not.

In 1876 the Centennial Exhibition was held in Philadelphia. At the bidding of the clergy the managers closed it on Sunday. Seventy thousand laborers, mechanics, and business men knocked at its doors and petitioned for admittance. But their petition was spurned. Throughout that long summer the institution was closed on Sunday. What might hav been a glorious Sunday-school for the workingmen of Philadelphia and their families was interdicted that clerical monopolists might hav full sway.

In priest-ridden Toronto, in the name of law, little newsboys hav been robbed of the pennies needed to support their widowed mothers—robbed at the instigation of the clergy, who coin their living on this day. Think of it; a hundred able-bodied men, claiming to be educated, claiming to be respectable, claiming to be honest—backed by the wealth and influence of a hundred churches—pretending to be backed by an omnipotent God—think of these men compelling the municipal authorities to drive these little boys from an honest and useful avocation for fear their business shall be injured!

These are the men who deprecate Sabbath-breaking—men who themselvs violate the law they profess to uphold. The Bible says, "Six days shalt thou labor," and yet the very men who are for the most part idle six days, and then labor on the very day on which they claim we should abstain from labor—these are the men who shout themselvs hoarse about the "desecration of the Sabbath."

In Continental Europe, where the Puritan Sabbath never gained a foothold, and especially in enlightened Germany and France, this Sunday slavery is little known. Sunday there is a day of joy rather than a day of gloom.

The Rev. Dr. Guthrie, of Scotland, after a visit to the French capital, thus writes: "We counted on one occasion, in Paris, thirty-three theaters and places of amusement open on the Sabbath day." Leaving France and her Sunday holiday, he returned to Great Britain, the home of the Puritan Sabbath. No theaters, no places of amusement, were open here. The church alone was permitted to do business on this day. But what does this rigid Sabbath observance do for the morals of his people? This sad admission drops from his pen: "In one hour we saw in London and Edinburgh, with all their churches, and schools, and piety, more drunkenness than we saw in five long months in guilty Paris."

The Rev. Dr. Wooley, of England, visited Germany, and, after describing the happy manner in which Sunday is spent by the Germans, says: "Nothing can exceed the picturesque beauty of the scene, except its moral beauty. We often sadly contrasted the cheerful, contented faces around us with the careworn, haggard look of the same classes of our countrymen; often wished that we, too, were taught to worship God with the natural homage of thankful enjoyment."

Protestants charge Catholics with lack of loyalty, with holding allegiance to a foreign ecclesiastical power. Are Protestants themselvs less guilty?

It has been declared that the Fourth of July shall be a national holiday, that on it each year we may celebrate the anniversary of our nation's birth. But Sunday is esteemed by them too sacred to celebrate the birth of Freedom, and when this anniversary occurs on Sunday, Jefferson and his associates must not be eulogized, the Declaration of Independence must not be read, but the edict of slavery promulgated by Constantine must be obeyed.

The thirtieth of May has been dedicated to the memory of the dead soldiers of the republic. But when this day falls on Sunday, and the surviving comrades of our fallen defenders proceed to decorate their graves with flags and flowers, Protestant clergymen protest against it because a Catholic emperor and the Catholic church whom they profess to despise once consecrated the day to the service of priestcraft. The fraudulent institution of an enemy because it serves their selfish interests is divine, so divine that even the strewing of flowers upon dead heroes' graves is sacrilege.

Last winter the monument erected to Washington was completed. It was decided, as was most fitting, to hav the ceremony attending its completion held on the anniversary of his birth. His birthday fell on Sunday, and the ceremonies were held on another day. The natal day of Washington was ignored and dishonored that the authority of a Roman cutthroat might be recognized and honored.

Against the recognition and enforcement of this ecclesiastical institution by legal enactment every honest man and woman should protest. No Freethinker can conscientiously sanction it. No Christian who is willing to "do unto others as he would that others should do to him"—who is willing to concede to others the same rights he claims for himself—can demand it. Let him keep sacred the first day of the week if he desires to; it is his privilege.

There is also a respectable portion of our people, comprising Jews, Adventists, and Seventh Day Baptists, who believe in observing the seventh day of the week, or Saturday. They are sincere in this belief, it is a part of their religion, and let them observe it. To compel the Christian to abstain from labor on this day simply because his Jewish neighbors keep it would be unjust; and I ask if it is not equally unjust to require these people to keep the Christian Sabbath? It may be urged that they are not required to do so. I am aware that the more enlightened public sentiment is opposed to such coercion; I am aware that the laws of many states permit them to pursue their avocations on this day when they hav kept the Bible Sabbath. But there are states where this is not the case. In Pennsylvania, for instance, the Jew who labors on the Christian Sabbath is subject to fine and imprisonment, no matter how faithfully he may hav kept his own. The laws of Massachusetts, as interpreted by the Supreme Court of that state, declare that those who observe the seventh day shall be allowed to do business on Sunday—and fined if they open their doors for this purpose. Time is money, and to thus withhold from these people one-seventh of their time is robbery.

Again, while "one man esteemeth one day above another, another esteemeth every day alike"—all days are sacred days to him; and is it reasonable to compel him to affect a special reverence for either the first or the seventh day? Is he made any better, or is the world made any better, by this enforced hypocrisy?

Dr. Franklin once expressed the belief that God cared less about Sabbath-breaking than a New England justice. And this recalls an incident that occurred in an Eastern village many years ago. The inhabitants of the village were all very pious. One old deacon, named Sharpe, affected to be particularly pious. His neighbors, however, generally regarded him as a hypocrit, and even the members of his own church had no little contempt for him. Notwithstanding this they were all afraid of him; because for every delinquency in their conduct, Sharpe was sure to bring them up before the church for it. It chanced one cold Sunday afternoon that Smith, a brother in the church, ran out of wood. What should he do? He must hav wood. So he slipped quietly out of the back door, proceeded cautiously to the wood pile, picked up his ax, looked around him to see that the coast was clear, and went to work. He chopped his wood, and was just starting into the house with an armful of it, when some one from the street exclaimed, "Hallo, Smith!" Smith dropped his wood in an instant, and looked up. "What, Thompson, is that you?" said he, "I thought it was Sharpe; I don't want him to see me chopping wood on Sunday." "What," said Thompson, "afraid of Sharpe, and not of God? Don't you suppose God saw you chopping that wood?" "Well, yes, I suppose he did," rejoined Smith, "but then he won't make as much fuss about it as old Sharpe." It is the same with these advocates of Sunday observance; they are making a great ado about Sabbath-breaking; their Deity is making none.

The state has no right to imprison its citizens on Sunday in order that the church may drug them with superstition and rob them. If theology is free on Sunday, I demand that intelligence and pleasure shall also be free; that the temple of Knowledge may open its doors as well as the temple of Ignorance; that the man of reason on the rostrum shall hav an opportunity to tell what he knows as well as the man of faith in the pulpit has to tell what he doesn't know; that the facts of to-day may be given to the public in the Sunday paper as well as the fictions of yesterday in the Sunday sermon; that the marble and canvas of the art gallery may be looked upon as well as the images and pictures of the cathedral; that the band shall hav as valid a right to entertain the people with inspiring music on Sunday evening as the church has to disturb their rest with the harsh clangor of her bells on Sunday morning; that the young folks shall hav the same liberty to dance at the picnic that the old folks hav to shout at the camp-meeting; that the clown in the tent shall hav a right to amuse the public as well as the clown in the tabernacle.

If a legislativ body were to enact a law requiring all persons, save the clergy, to sit in the stocks, to stand in the pillory, to wear shackles, or to be imprisoned one day in seven, that law would be looked upon with amazement, yet not with more amazement than that which our descendants a century hence would look upon a re-enactment of our Sabbatarian laws, which, happily for humanity, hav not long to survive.

Desperate and persistent are the efforts now being made by the evangelical clergy to retain and enforce these laws. They know full well that with their abrogation the strongest pillar of priestcraft falls. But they are contending against the inevitable. Their efforts must fail in the end, and the political party that champions them will find a deeper grave than the old Whig party found; for the intelligent and liberty-loving portion of our people are determined that the Declaration of freedom and equality promulgated by the fathers of '76, and the bulwark of constitutional liberty reared by the fathers of '87, shall be our equity and law, and they will not compromise their rights by wearing the collar of a slave for even one day in seven.

Yes, these laws must go. They are not needed. Justice is not subserved in their enforcement. Whatever is a crime or misdemeanor on Monday is a crime or misdemeanor on Sunday; and whatever is lawful on Monday cannot in justice be unlawful on Sunday. Let the people of this country enjoy that entire civil and religious freedom which the genius of their Constitution guarantees them. Let each one determin for himself, not only which shall be his sacred day, but also in what manner it shall be observed. Let those who deem it their duty to set apart one day in seven for religious worship, do so; let those who desire to devote a day to rest or study, do so; and let those who see proper to appropriate a day, no matter what that day may be, to pleasure and recreation, do so. If the day be Sunday, let them step forth from this Puritanical prison into the grand palace of nature—not as escaped convicts, liable to hav their reputations brained by a statutory club in the hand of some brutal magistrate, but as free people serene with the consciousness of not having committed even an artificial wrong. Let those who wish to make Sunday the saddest, dreariest day of all the seven, enjoy the "blessed privilege," but let them keep their meddling fingers from off those who would make it the brightest, sweetest, happiest day.

Dr. T. L. Brown, of Binghamton, followed Mr. Remsburg. His subject was "Organized Co-operation." He said:

ADDRESS BY DR. T. L. BROWN.

No person educated to the fact that every member of society has moral and legal rights which all should respect would not be willing to hav his own similar rights protected. As radicals and Liberals we will not succeed until we are willing to work with and for others who differ from us in ways and methods of reaching that liberty, based upon our universal needs, and not dependent upon any forms of religion. We are not trying to establish any selfish interests not founded upon equal justice, controled by facts and reason.

Were the churches taxed to support the theaters, then the Christian would call for just taxation. That is, if the theaters were exempt and the churches taxed, there would be some extra praying to reverse the imposition. Now it is on the other side.

Of good deeds we make our heaven, without a kingdom or a king. Education saves us from the crimes, deceptions and great expense of kings, priests, preachers, and religious "drummers" generally. Religion was created by idlers, who did it as the best thing they could do for their own support. Is it blackmailing the ignorant and innocent by promising more than they can furnish? Yes! Shall we co-operate with religious pretenders who leave all their hopes to shallow faith? With whatever deceives the ignorant and innocent we hav no sympathy, and will not knowingly giv it support. We will stand by the right, the radical, the just, the true, and the useful with our knowledge, our money, and our lives. In so far as Christians, Spiritualists, and Infidels agree with demonstrable science, there is need of dispute or discussion.

We advocate equal rights to sex, color, race, and class, with only one privilege reserved, and that is to prohibit yourselvs first before practicing it upon others. The Declaration of American Independence, the Constitution of these United States, the protection given to all its public schools, and the rights of individual liberty, are some of the grand results gained by organized co-operation. Each person interested in mutually extending to others that liberty he claims for himself, lessens his chances of becoming a slave by working with the avowed Liberals. United interests are the bond of co-operation. The more knowledge the more liberty. The more ignorance the more slavery.

I am in favor of a legal incorporation of this organization, and a full public understanding of all its aims and objects in the support of liberty, justice, and peace. Let us wisely co-operate until we can regulate the selfishness of Christians, both Catholic and Protestant, who now ask their God to forgiv their unjust treatment of consistent sinners. We think industrious sinners are quite as good and useful as lazy, slandering, fault-finding saints, and that this life is of more worth than any imaginary one preached from the pulpit. Which are the most criminal, believers or unbelievers?

What shall we say to preachers when they declare "Infidelity is coupled with Impurity?" We would reply: "Do not throw stones until you get out of your glass houses." Such are the men who desire to hav their pay increased to make them more faithful in leading the worship of their unknown God. How proud God must be of his pet "divine drummers," when he knows he has not created a class of natural sinners who can begin to compete with them in crime only as 2.7 to 13.3 to the 1,000. When we can stand, by the best statistics, as eleven better than the preachers of Christianity, do we need them to convert or save us? Is it not time we co-operate to save our children from them and their example? Thirteen to two is the record of knowledge compared with that of ignorance. Nature's laws are better then the religions of priests and preachers who are looking for impurity. Statistics show that natural sinners, outside of the supernatural clergy and their church, are less criminal than those who teach and profess the pardoning and hell-fired religions.

When a man says he is without religion, and depends upon his knowledge and reason, he is not conscious of sinning against any God. Such a man knows too much to commit a crime or harm his friend or enemy. Imaginary sins never find room in his healthy brain.

Why need he pay ten or fifty cents every Sunday to keep his soul from an imaginary hell, more fit for those who teach such doctrins? He is too honest and kind to call his neighbor bad if he differs with him about what neither can rightfully determin. When deception and falsehood are the foundations of religion, what moral or useful results can come even to the founders themselvs? All they do is to pocket the money and wait for more. "Salvation free!"

"By their fruits shall ye know them." In our penitentiaries, almshouses, houses of correction, and daily begging upon streets, we find the fruits of the Catholic religion. Ignorance, fear, poverty, and crime. The fruits of priestcraft. In our public schools, Liberal colleges, with the secular press, the arts and sciences, agricultural progress, all useful advancement and moral improvement, we find people too knowing to commit crime and too good to be in any way religious. In this substantial world they find reality enough to keep them free from the "supernatural" muddles of religions. Priests, preachers, and their zealous followers, will find it most convenient to prove their mythical doctrins true in that future state not yet demonstrable. Now for a question the clergy may call "impure."

If a believer dies here to-morrow morning at six o'clock and another believer dies here at six o'clock P.M., both souls at death take their upward course toward heaven, how long will they travel in directly opposit directions before they will meet in that much sought place? If this world is not flat and still, as believed in Bible times, their next meeting will very likely be indefinitly postponed. The extra Christian knowledge of the exact direction to the Christian heaven is still on the "ragged edge" of ignorance and faith.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Mrs. Krekel — the only vice-president besides Charles Watts who honored the Congress by being present—presided at this session. The first business was the report of the Committee on Credentials. Mr. C. B. Reynolds, chairman, announced the presence of the following delegates and charter and life members:

MICHIGAN.

M. P. Thurston, of Burr Oak.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE LEAGUE.

C. B. Reynolds, Roman Staley, H. Barchfield, C. I. Griffith, Robert Graham.

PITTSBURGH LEAGUE.

Harry Hoover, O. S. Cheeseman, E. Bambach, G. W. Darby.

ILLINOIS (CHICAGO).

Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Freeman, E. A. Stevens, Olaf Olson Ray, Thomas Galfin.

OHIO (ALLIANCE).

George Thornberg, Emil Tanner, John F. Kreider, D. H. Smith, J. R. Haines.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, LEAGUE.

John M. Wilcox, J. D. Mallonee, Thos. Lees, Mrs. I. Scovell, Phil. McIlrath.

MISSOURI (LIBERAL).

S. C. Thayer, C. W. Stewart, T. P. Lyon.

CANADA.

William Algie.

NEW YORK.

C. P. Somerby, E. H. Gault, T. L. Brown, N. Eggleston, Courtlandt Palmer.

NEW JERSEY (PROXY FOR NEWARK LEAGUE).

E. M. Macdonald.

We think this list must be incomplete, for we recognized several present not on the list who should hav represented Leagues if they did not. But the above were all who reported to the Committee on Credentials. At the close of Mr. Reynolds's report, the secretary read the following letters:

TENAFLY, N. J., Oct. 4, 1885.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: Your letter asking for the manuscript of my speech, partly prepared for Albany, to be read by you at Cleveland, is at hand.

I am always thankful to get my thoughts before the people, and would gladly send that address to you if it were in shape for you to read; but it is not, and I am so busy just now giving the finishing touches to a book to be published at the holidays that, with constant writing and proof reading, I hav no time for anything but the imperativ work this involves; hence I cannot write out and arrange what you desire. If I can find time to throw the substance of it in a letter to the Congress, I will try to do that.

Religious liberty for woman, which would necessarily involve civil and social liberty, would be the most momentous revolution the world has ever known. It would be in fact the upheaving of the state, the church, and the home, as they are all based on the subordination of woman—a triple power that has thus far crucified the mother of the race.

Respectfully yours, ELIZABETH CADY STANTON.

NEW YORK, Oct. 7, 1885.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, My Dear Sir: I am intensely sorry not to be with you at the coming Congress of the National Liberal League, but my long sojourn among the hills of New Hampshire renders it impossible.

Command my services in any way that the League may require, but it seems to me that it would be much better to choose as Chairman of Finance Committee some one who is activly engaged in the work of propaganda.

Hoping that you may hav a large and harmonious Congress, and that it may concur in such measures as will move forward more rapidly the work of secularization, I am, as ever, with you in the work. A. C. MACDONALD, Ch. Fin. Com.

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 6, 1885.

TO THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, Greeting: I am exceedingly disappointed in not being able to be present and participate in the deliberations of the Congress, but as I can not be, I wish to offer some suggestions regarding its action.

We are laboring as best we can to free our government from the shackles of ecclesiastical power, and to prevent the church from encroaching upon individual liberty; in other words, to liberate the people from the church domination through unjust legislation.

I wish to call your attention, fellow-members of this League, to one of the most damaging features of this church power in government, and one that affects the whole nation more than all others combined; which is the subjugation and degradation of woman, through the infamous teaching that in her creation she was an afterthought, created only for man's convenience and service; that she should be in subjection to him in all things; that she should obey him; learn only of him, etc., etc.

Under the Roman law, the husband and wife had equal rights, and marriage was a civil contract, dissoluble at the will of the contracting parties, as in other partnerships.

Christianity degraded her by pronouncing a curse upon the glory of womanhood, maternity. This masculin religion has been crystallized into laws whereby woman is everywhere degraded in the eyes of man; classed politically with idiots, criminals, and lunatics; deprived of her just property rights, made the sexual slave of man in marriage; denied the ownership of her children, and in every way made a dependent. From an enslaved motherhood, a race of slaves is born. No wonder that the church bull, the party whip, or Grundy's disapproval, appalls even the heart of the average man. Our unjust laws make woman the slave of these slaves.

The most important step, then, toward liberty is to elevate woman in point of political privilege to coequality with man.

As the last Congress by its action returned to the original Nine Demands as its basis, thus ignoring all previous action on this subject, I move a Tenth Demand—that all laws discriminating against woman be repealed, and that humanity be guaranteed equality in rights, privileges, and responsibilities before the law, irrespectiv of sex.

Fraternally yours. JULIET H. SEVERANCE, M.D.

Vice-President Krekel then introduced Mrs. A. M. Freeman, of Chicago, who entertained the audience with a thoughtful discourse in flowery language.

Science and superstition, said Mrs. Freeman, are the two forces to be considered, positiv and negativ, in regard to human advancement. As to what constitutes superstition we may widely disagree, as all peoples in all ages hav done. "If you were all good orthodox Christians," said the speaker, "I could tell you of the Supreme God—three in one—the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, the son as old as the father; and however little you might understand it yourselvs, you would agree with me. If you were Mohammedans, I should say there is but one God, and Mohammed is his prophet; if inhabitants of India, I should tell you that the three principal gods are Brahma, the creator of the universe; Vishnu, the preserver of the world, and Siva, the god of desolation and destruction. But having as many independent thoughts as there are minds present, I must tell you what I myself believe, and leave you to disagree with me. Honest thought, and bold expression thereof, is what the world needs. We hav had but little, comparativly, of the most radical, truthful convictions of men's minds, for superstition in every part of the earth has erected itself as a barrier against free inquiry and progression. Wherever and whenever truth has tried to make itself known by proof and argument, man has stifled the voice of his conscience by citing celestial authorities, each nation almost having had its god, or gods; and these hav been arrayed one against the other, and the followers of each creed hav contended that all innovation was blasphemy. So throughout the ages, in every part of the great world, man has riveted the chains which bind him. He has fought with the ferocity of a wild beast destitute of reason, that he might be permitted to continue in his bondage. Nothing has been too absurd for him to believe. The most fantastic fable that human ingenuity could invent, or human imagination portray, has been put forth as his creed, and he has taken for his god the lowest thing that crawls, and the highest ideas of which he could conceive.

"We may hav come to that time," continued the speaker, "in our search for truth, when we know and feel that there is to be a boundary to our ambitions, that the how is to be studied, instead of the why, that we may learn effects, but that causes are beyond our reach. We are convinced that the universe is not governed by 'wills,' by 'gods,' but by law, and that it is easier to prove that a miracle is false than that the law that governs the universe has been suspended.

"About impossibilities we all fight and wrangle, and hate each other. If we would believe only what we may know, and prove to ourselvs, all the world would be agreed, and we should hav nothing to fight for. Science is order, peace, progress. Superstition is anarchy, bloodshed, ignorance. Science is a world governed by law; superstition is a world governed by chance—which is another name for miracle.

"We see nations passing through different stages of development. In the beginning, savage man peopled the unknown world about him with goblins, demons, devils, and gods. Man passes, as do the nations, through these identical stages, believing, in childhood, in fairies, genii, giants, and dwarfs. Thus the mythological stories with which man amused himself in the remote days of his history correspond perfectly to those with which children amuse themselvs to-day.

"In mystifying the people their mental subjection is the result. With their minds filled with these old fables, and their aspirations reaching out toward an imaginary future of which they can know nothing, their thoughts are diverted from the things of this world which they may know, and cunning despots throughout the ages hav taken advantage of the people's indifference to their surroundings, and the result has been that we hav had whole nations sinking gradually but surely into the deepest slavery.

"A belief in these old dogmas has retarded the growth of the world. Every step in advance made by science has been fought inch by inch, and hand to hand, with superstition. Men hav written volume upon volume to prove that the science of the Bible is true. They hav stood trembling at the threshold of wonderful discoveries, but hav paused, for the great truths lying before them would not coincide with the revealed word.

"The Duke of Argyll, the honored father of the Marquis of Lorne, in one of his scientific works, says: 'The apparent age of the rocks might hav been simulated in their creation.' That is, that when God made the world he gave to it an apparent age that it did not really possess; that all these fossils of extinct animals, together with the rocky evidence of their remote antiquity—that all these links binding man to the life beneath him, and demonstrating that he must hav been evolved from a lower creation—were specially created; that God made the solid rocks a lie! This is the sophistry that superstition has been compelled to employ in order to reconcile natural and revealed religion.

"The beginning of life, or rather what is life, the why of our living, the soul of the being, is, so far, and perhaps forever, beyond our comprehension. The surgeon's knife does not find it, the most delicate instrument cannot weigh it, or giv to it dimensions. But this we know, that science has positivly declared against the history of creation as contained in all sacred books, proving that everything exists in accordance with a law underlying all nature, called motion, change, progression, evolution, claiming that this principle called life is as eternal as this body called matter; that there has been no stretching out of a mighty arm as a magician would hold forth a wand, no command to chaos to at once marshal itself into moving, shining, orderly, progressiv array; to fill all the mighty deep of eternal, illimitable space with wondrous, gorgeous worlds. This idea was no doubt very poetical, and corresponded perfectly to the marvelousness of primitiv man; but the marshaling of all that heavenly host required millions upon millions of years, and still the creativ work goes on. A drop of water falling year by year through a fissure in a cave produces the most beautiful stalactite. A single idea in the brain of a savage, nay, it may be a single emotion in an animal, becomes through the course of ages the wisdom of a Socrates, the genius of a Shakspere, or the reason of a Humboldt."

J. D. Mallonee, of Cleveland, next presented some solid facts setting forth the injustice under which non-church-going people are laboring:

ADDRESS OF J. D. MALLONEE.

The truth of ages is often condensed into a single sentence. Centuries of misrule, oppression, and political serfdom were necessary to evolve that grand truth which stands as the corner-stone in the great temple of our American liberties:

"The just right to govern comes from the consent of the governed." Viewed in the light of their surroundings, considering the character of these men in whose minds the memories of religious as well as political persecutions were still fresh, and we can safely assume that the founders of this republic sought to establish for their posterity a government in which church and state should forever remain separate and distinct.

Looking back a hundred years from the glory of the nineteenth century to the weak and feeble beginning of a nation's greatness, we can appreciate the magnitude of this forward step in human progress. Superstition ruled the Old World. Kings trembled at the voice of Rome, and hastened to obey its least behests. That the king received his authority from God was conceded upon every hand. The throne was supported by priestcraft, as, in fact, has been every form of injustice ever practiced upon mankind, and priestcraft was in turn sanctioned and sustained by royalty.

These were the upper and the nether mill-stones between which, for ages, humanity had been crushed. And having by their love of freedom, their heroic bravery, their unequaled valor in the field of battle, broken the fetters of one bondage and established a nation of men, free at least in name, can it be supposed for a moment that they would fail to take such action as they should deem sufficient to protect them from the other and greater evil—the despotism of ecclesiastical power? Perhaps they underestimated the danger. To them, the Old World seemed farther away than it does to us. I doubt if a prescience of the time when time and space should be so nearly annihilated, ever came to any of those noble minds, gifted as they were. No prophetic vision of the day when the world's thoughts should flash beneath the ocean's wave, and the voice of Rome be heard in the land sacred only to liberty—liberty not only to act but to think. All men were intellectually free men. This right to any or no religious belief is as clearly enunciated by the framers of the Constitution of the United States, and of the state of Ohio, as is the right to personal liberty.

That no religious belief, doctrin, or sect shall receive any especial sanction by law is equally evident.

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

The subject of religion is left entirely to the state government. The persecutions, intolerance, and jealousies which had ever marked the establishment of a state religion or a national church, were doubtless among the efficient reasons why the Constitution thus forbids any union of civil and ecclesiastical authority, or any alliance of church and state.

The constitution of the state of Ohio declares that "all men hav a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience. No person shall be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or maintain any form of worship against his consent, and no preference shall be given by law to any religious society; nor shall any interference with the rights of conscience be permitted. No religious test shall be required as a qualification for office, nor shall any person be incompetent to be a witness on account of his religious belief; but nothing herein shall be construed to dispense with oaths and affirmations.

"Religion, morality, and knowledge, however, being essential to good government, it shall be the duty of the general assembly to pass suitable laws to protect every religious denomination in the peaceable enjoyment of its own mode of public worship, and to encourage schools and the means of instruction."

I am not here to say that the principles herein enunciated are unjust. Every true Liberal givs his unqualified assent to this declaration of rights. All that we, as Liberals, ask, all that we demand, is that the laws of the state of Ohio be so amended as to render them in harmony with the constitution of the state, and of the United States.

All recognition of God, Christ, or religion was studiously avoided by the framers of the Constitution of the United States, and, lest their silence should be construed as giving assent to the abuses of privileges which hav since arisen, an amendment was afterward adopted in which their views upon the question of religious rights and privileges are clearly set forth. The constitution of the state of Ohio, 1851, is even more explicit upon this subject, as I hav already shown.

The necessity of religion as a restraining element in social as well as national life was recognized, and the claim of the church to exercise such moral power over the naturally criminal inclinations of mankind is their excuse for exemption from just taxation. The claim that religious teaching tends to hold in check the baser passions of mankind, and render men better citizens, I am prepared to deny. Religion recognizes no higher authority than God, whereas our liberties, our grand civilization of to-day, rest upon the fundamental truth of man's supremacy. Morality pertains tc the affairs of this world, the relations of one man to all his fellow-men: Morality is a matter of education. It is founded in certain material conditions arising from our various relations in life. Religion is simply the worship of the unknown. Morality is the fruit of thought. While it might be difficult to suddenly separate the two, still there can be no question as to morality being the activ element in man's relation to this life, and a future life is a matter which is beyond the province of civil law.

The convention which framed the Constitution of the United States refused to hear prayer in its sittings. Can it be supposed that they intended to grant subsidies to the various religious sects which should afterward assume such formidable proportions in our land? Can it for a moment be claimed that the "liberty to worship God according to the dictates of my own conscience" extends so far as to admit me to teach that "an oath taken against ecclesiastical interest does not bind;" and again, "Faith is not to be kept with him who does not keep faith with God;" and yet all this is taught in schools, subsidized and exempt from taxation on account of the good influence which they exert upon the coming citizen. Neither is it probable that the founders of this government ever intended such construction to be placed upon their words as would permit of millions of dollars invested in church property escaping its just quota of taxation. The splendid cathedrals of to-day were practically unknown in revolutionary days. Plain and simple were the churches in which our forefathers worshiped; and such worship, including, as it did, the greater part of the community, could, without much practical violation of the law, hav been supported by the state, because it was in a sense the educator of the people. The minister usually worked for the love of the Lord and a donation, while in modern times, a call to preach Christ is synonymous with a tender of a five-thousand-dollar salary.

The day of simplicity in religion has passed away.

Churches, instead of being used "exclusivly as a place of public worship, "hav come to be merely the center of a social life, of which religion is simply an adjunct. Lectures, concerts, suppers, socials, at which cards and other ungodly amusements are introduced, go largely to make up the modern worship of our city Christian. This statement will apply more strictly to our Protestant than to our Catholic brethren.

Again, we must take into account the differentiation which has been going on between the schools and the churches. The geology of the Bible is no longer the geology of the school. The theory of evolution, which is now a fact in our store of knowledge, is not very clearly enunciated in the inspired word. Likewise the political economy of Moses is slightly out of date in these modern times. This tendency to classify and separate the known from the unknown has tended to render the church less necessary to society. The fact that a man may be a good man, a good neighbor, a good citizen, without religion has been demonstrated, and the assertion that a community—a great city like Cleveland, for instance—may be happy and prosperous without churches, will gain significant force when I tell you that, by actual count, the average attendance at seven of our most aristocratic Protestant churches last Sunnay morning was only 171. We, the Liberals of America, claim that it is an injustice to exempt from taxation such an aggregation of wealth as is represented by the many churches of the land. That some idea may be gained as to the magnitude of this wrong, I hav prepared some statistics showing the valuation of church property in Cleveland not taxable, and other items of interest connected therewith:

	Value of Property.	Salaries.	Expenses	Home Missions.
Roman Catholic	$2,378 000	$16 100
Methodist Episcopal	427 500	22,500	$12,600	$7.000
Congregational	302 500	15,900	9,000	6 450
Presbyterian	287,000	29,300	12 400	25,800
Baptist	229.000	19.700	12 100	12.950
Evangelical United	192,000	5 000	3 500	5 800
Other Denominations	329 480	39,700	14,250	7,550
Total	$4,305,400	$133,200	$65,800	$64,750

Thus it will be seen that the taxpayers of the city of Cleveland are actually giving to the support of the churches the sum of $111,940 annually. The cost of police department, is $125,000, and unless it can be shown conclusivly that the churches render some service to socieiy of an equal pecuniary value, this annual subsidy should be discontinued. That certain individuals derive a benefit therefrom, and that it is a useful member of society in a general way, is not sufficient. A newspayer is a means of disseminating knowledge, and as a rule exercises a restraining moral influence upon society. It is practically free as the church of to-day, and upon the plea of being a public blessing would stand upon an equal footing with the church. You subscribe to a paper, and day by day the history of the world's doings is spread before you. On the other hand you pay your pew rent, and receive a weekly edition of antiquated romance. To exempt church property from taxation upon the ground of its usefulness to the community would be to establish a precedent whereby all things useful could be exempt, and only the evils of society be subject to taxation.

Although in name the churches of to-day are free, yet that freedom is so hedged about by certain restrictions as to what seats shall be occupied by the public, and the magnificence of structure and furnishings are such that the poorer classes of society are not at home in an aristocratic house of worship. Competition among business men and others who would profit by the prestige which connection with the wealthier class of society givs has brought about a system of pew-rental, which practically excludes all except those holding such shares or stock in the church. Why should an honest man object to paying his just taxes upon church shares from which he derives a financial benefit any more than those upon club shares, or upon his cottage at the sea-shore, or upon any other property from which he individually receives the benefit?

The claim is advanced, and is held as applying more particularly to the Catholic church, that religion tends to control or hold in check the evil tendencies of the ignorant mind. Surely, a man is not entitled to much credit for endeavoring to extinguish a fire that he himself has kindled. Neither should we as a people pay the church for controling the ignorance for which they are wholly responsible. This is well illustrated in the demand of the Catholics of New York that they may be allowed to hold mass in the prisons, etc.

Education is a civilizer of the people—education in the affairs of this world, the relation of man to man, and not of man to God, the principles which are taught in our Catholic schools. The principles which are taught from our Protestant pulpits are antagonistic to a Republican form of government. Faith is exalted above knowledge. The theory that for every crime there is free forgivness tends rather to diminish than to increase a respect for the laws of our land. This is peculiarly illustrated in the case of the Catholic church, which numbers only a small percentage of the population of the land, and yet more than half of the criminals of the country are recruited from its ranks. Especially does the Catholic church claim to exert a beneficial influence upon the ignorant mass of humanity, and yet statistics which I hav compiled show that during three years the percentage of illiteracy among the persons arrested by the police of the city of Cleveland was greater than ten per cent, while the last census givs the average of illiteracy for the entire state at three per cent.

When you find a man who can neither read nor write, you may safely bet your last dollar that in his religious views he is strictly orthodox. In summing up we claim,

First. That for reasons to them sufficient, the framers of the Constitution of our land hav granted no privileges to any religious sect, creed, or denomination, whereby they can legally escape the payment of their just share of taxation upon property which they may hold ostensibly for the purpose of public worship.

Second. The claim of the church to be a public institution, conferring benefits upon society in the direction of preventing the commission of crime, is denied upon the ground that more than ninety-five per cent of the criminals of the land are either church-members or are believers in the doctrins of the Christian religion. Such claim, if valid, would not, under the constitution of this state, exempt them from taxation. To protect does not mean to subsidize.

Third. "We demand that all churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation," which brings me to the caption of this paper—that the truth of ages is often condensed into a single sentence. This demand is the lost link in a long series of events, all looking toward man's mental and social freedom. It stands first among our Nine Demands, and it is to be the first victory which we shall achieve. Having achieved this grand result, other and no less vital questions are before us; and having gained every goal for which we are now striving, there will be new questions to decide, new issues to be met, as humanity marches on and on to ultimate perfection.

J. H. Burnham, of Saginaw City, Mich., took the floor as soon as Mr. Mallonee concluded, and made the next good speech, of which, unfortunately, we hav no report.

SATURDAY EVENING.

Some five hundred people gathered in the evening to listen to S. P. Putnam, who was down on the program to speak of "The Glory of Infidelity." Previous to the lecture, however, was the reception of the report of the Committee on Resolutions. Mr. Shaw, secretary of the committee, said he had divided the resolutions into two parts, and he would present them in that way. He read:

Believing with the founders of the American Republic that civil government is a natural and secular institution, and not a divine and supernatural one; and believing, too, that the human mind in the process of government and education should be entirely free from the trammels of superstition; we, the National Liberal League, in Congress assembled at Cleveland, Ohio, do hereby resolve: That we reaffirm, as the true basis of a perpetual union, the following demands of Liberalism:

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educatiodal and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

Resolved, That in order to carry out harmoniously the policy enunciated in the above Demands, we hereby change the name of the National Liberal League to the American Secular Union.

Resolved, That this Congress acknowledges with unqualified pleasure the amalgamation of the Secularists of Canada with their co-workers of the United States, under the united banner of the American Secular Union.

Resolved, That all who favor the secularization of our government be earnestly and cordially invited to unite and become activ members of the American Union, and that Liberals everywhere be requested to organize local unions, lyceums, kindergartens, and all other instrumentalities for educating children in the principles of science and Secular government.

Resolved, That universal education should be the basis of universal suffrage in this republic, to be secured under present laws and proper legislation, and finally to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution requiring every state to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

Resolved, That in the exercise of suffrage the law should recognize no sex; and that we sympathize with the movement for the enfranchisment of woman.

Resolved, That we deprecate the growing differences between the producing classes and organized monopolies, and we are in sympathy with all movements that look to a reasonable solution of these questions, upon the basis of equal and unrestrained justice.

These resolutions, said Mr. Shaw, the committee present for the consideration of the Congress.

Mr. J. D. Mallonee, of Cleveland, moved that the resolution on woman suffrage be stricken out.

A gentleman who did not giv his name moved for its retention.

Mrs. Krekel asked for its adoption, as did J. M. Wilcox, of Cleveland.

A lady in the audience asked Mr. Mallonee to explain why he opposed the resolution. Mr. Mallonee said that he was in favor of elevating woman, and he did not think the power to vote at elections would hav that tendency.

E. A. Stevens rose to make a speech in support of the resolution, but the chair said that, according to parliamentary rules, the debate was closed when the maker of a motion had replied to his opponents. Unless exception was taken, he would hav to put the motion. This being done, the resolution was adopted.

E. A. Stevens moved that the resolutions be taken up seriatim. Motion carried.

Mr. Shaw then re-read the resolutions, and they were all adopted. He then read the following resolution on business:

Resolved, That the Union raise, during the ensuing year, a campaign fund of $5,000, to be expended by the directors for payment of salary of the secretary; for the employment of lecturers; for printing campaign tracts; for the purchase and distribution of Freethought literature, and for necessary expenditures in presenting the demands of the Union to the attention of such state legislatures as in the opinion of the directors may be wise and opportune; and that all Freethinkers be requested to make contributions to the fund, specifying for which purpose they prefer their contributions to be used.

This resolution was adopted unanimously. Mr. Shaw presented the following:

Resolved, That the Congress expresses unfeigned regret at the loss of Theron C. Leland, former secretary of the League, one of our best and bravest, whose work has been so self-sacrificing, and whose spirit has been so fearless in the many combats for freedom. His life was one of generous triumph; his death a harvest of precious memories. To his bereaved family we offer our sincere condolence.

The resolution was carried.

E. A. Stevens then moved that membership in the Union be reduced from $25 to $10. As this necessitated a change in the constitution of the Union, it could not be acted upon at this Congress, and was accordingly laid over.

A Mr. William Joslin, of Cleveland, rose up in the audience and wanted to know when he could be heard. The chair vouchsafed the information that the present was usually considered the accepted time, and that he might consume ten minutes in revealing to the Congress all he knew. He ascended the platform and began a most absurd and incoherent harang about astronomy, the ancient Greeks, spirits of turpentine, and the circulation of the blood. No one could tell what he was driving at, except that he had challenged Colonel Ingersoll to discuss with him the powers of some mysterious thing which proved the law of gravitation to be a delusion. At the end of two minutes the audience began to smile; in four minutes the smile had extended around to their ears; in six the hall echoed with laughter; in eight everybody was so pleased that Mr. Joslin was compelled to stop. He disappeared in the stage wings leaving behind him the challenge that if Colonel Ingersoll would allow him ten minutes on Sunday night he "would bring a mysterious thing that Mr. Ingersoll couldn't tell what it was."

The audience and the chair having recovered from the effects of Mr. Joslin, Mr. Wm. Algie, president of the Canadian Secular Union, was introduced as the man who built the first Freethought hall in Canada. Mr. Algie is a Scotchman who delights to describe a nativ of his country as "a man who keeps the 'Sawbath' and everything else he can lay his hands on." He made a neat little five-minute speech, into which he worked several jokes.

When Mr. Algie sat down Mr. Putnam rose up and laid a heavy roll of manuscript upon the reading stand. The lecture was one of the poet-secretary's happiest efforts, and ranks with the best speeches at the Congress. It is too long to introduce here, but we may print it in some future issue.

C. B. Reynolds succeeded Mr. Putnam with an outline of practical work that needs to be done to promote the best interests of Liberal people. He strongly recommended the establishment of science schools, where children can be taught the laws of health as well as inducted into the mysteries of physical science. Mr. Reynolds's hard summer work has reduced his avoirdupois, but has not quenched his unbounded enthusiasm for humanity. In all essentials he is a brick, and, aside from one or two mannerisms upon the platform that detract from his dignity, is one of our very best speakers. We shall print his suggestions to the Congress in a subsequent paper.

SUNDAY MORNING.

The Sunday morning session opened with between five and six hundred people present. E. A. Stevens was the first to make a motion. He announced that Mrs. Helen Celler, of Springfield, Ill., a life-long worker in the cause of Freethought, had spoken of leaving some property to the Union, and he moved that the Union be incorporated so as to receive such bequests. By vote of the Congress the directors were ordered to take the necessary steps to carry out the motion. This being all the business on hand Mr. Charles Watts proceeded to address the Congress upon "The Philosophy of Unbelief." As we shall use Mr. Watts's lecture in a future issue it is unnecessary to incorporate it into this report. The audience were greatly pleased with it, and with his manner of delivery, and in discussing it after adjournment, unanimously voted—so far as we heard—that it was a great performance.

Mrs. Krekel was to hav lectured at this session, but having gone out to Thomas Lees's Liberal Sunday-school to address the children, she did not return in time, and the audience was disappointed. The readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will be more favored, for we hav the manuscript, and it will appear next week.

During the session Colonel Ingersoll was among the audience, having arrived late Saturday night. He was accompanied by his private secretary, I. N. Baker, one of the most genial, generous, commonsense men in the world. Colonel Ingersoll came in late, and took a back seat until Mr. Watts ceased speaking. When the people found out at the adjournment that he was among them, he was immediately surrounded, and his right arm must hav ached from the up-and-down motion it was compelled to undergo. From the reception accorded Mr. Ingersoll at Albany, as well as at Cleveland, we hold the opinion that he is all but idolized by the great body of Freethinkers.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON.

Some seven hundred people attended the Sunday afternoon session to hear Courtlandt Palmer's discourse on the "Aristocracy of Freethought." First, however, came the election of officers. J. E. Remsburg, chairman of Committee on Nominations, read the following list:

President.
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Vice-Presidents.

CHARLES WATTS,	HORACE SEAVER,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN,	PARKER PILLSBURY,
MATTIE P. KREKEL,	WILLIAM ALGIE,
ELIZUR WRIGHT,	ROBERT C. ADAMS,
JAMES PARTON.

Secretary.
SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Treasurer.
COURTLANDT PALMER.

Chairman Executiv Committee.
CHARLES B. REYNOLDS.

Chairman Finance Committee.
EUGENE M. MACDONALD.

Colonel Ingersoll moved that the name of John E. Remsburg be added to the list of vice-presidents. The motion was seconded, and unanimously adopted by the Congress.

The president then requested the secretary to read the resolution relating to the campaign fund. Mr. Putnam did so. Mr. Palmer moved to amend by making the amount ten thousand dollars instead of five thousand. The amendment was seconded and carried.

Mr. Palmer moved that a subscription be started, and he asked Colonel Ingersoll to head the list. Mr. Ingersoll advanced to the front of the stage, and spoke as follows:

"Let me say that I think everybody should be willing to give a little from his surplus—mark you, from his surplus. I do not want poverty to give a dollar. I would not have you pinch yourselves, or take a single comfort from wife or child, to give to any public object on earth. But let every one give what he can afford to give without hurting himself or putting in the smallest jeopardy the rights of his creditors.

"There is no better cause, no grander object in this world, than to get the fiend of fear out of the human mind. Of all the monsters that have ever governed and cursed this world, Fear has been and is the worst. Of all the tyrants that have ever oppressed the human race, Fear has been and is the most terrible. Now, if we can kill that fearful phantom; if we can drive out this image of Fear, painted by ignorance on the canvas of the dark; if we can exorcise this devil incarnate, we shall accomplish more than has been accomplished by any who have lived before us.

"Let us think a moment of the amount that has been given to imprison mankind, to shed darkness rather than light, to forge chains instead of to break them, and we shall understand something of the greatness of this work we have undertaken. And there are chains yet to be broken.

"We want to raise ten thousand dollars. We might just as well raise twenty or fifty thousand. If every Liberal in this country, who believes the Bible to be uninspired, every one who believes that there is no such country as hell, would give—say one dollar—I suppose that we could raise five or six millions at once! If everybody who really agrees with us should give but a dollar, we would need no more; and we would suddenly find that we were in the majority. I do not believe that I have addressed an audience in five years, a large majority of whom did not in their hearts agree with me.

"Now I will give something to start the subscription, and if that is not enough, I will give more."

Mr. Ingersoll subscribed $250, remarking sotto voce that he thought he could do that much without injuring his creditors. His subscription was followed by one from Courtlandt Palmer of $200. Mr. Putnam walked about the stage taking down the names and amounts as called out, and Mr. Reynolds passed among the audience. When a lull came, it was found that $940 had been raised. Colonel Ingersoll promptly gave another $60 to make the amount even. Afterwards more was pledged and the list at the close of the Congress stood as follows:

PLEDGES TO THE CAMPAIGN FUND FOR THE COMING YEAR.

R. G. Ingersoll,	$310.00
J. M. Wilcox and family,	25.00
M. B. Lawrence,	10 00
S. P. Hobson,	10.00
Mrs. J. E. Hammond,	15.00
R. Hartley,	10.00
Judge Lewis,	25 00
J. D. Mallonee,	10 00
W. Wilson,	5.00
C. Palmer,	200 00
Chicago League,	50.00
Wm. Whittick,	50 00
M. P. Thurston,	5.00
N. Eggleston,	25.00
T. F. Lucas,	5.00
M. H. Woodbury	10.00
I. N. Baker,	10.00
J. Briggs,	5 00
Morris Johnson,	5.00
G. C. Roe,	25.00
Harrison Halbut,	5.00
Mrs. Russell,	5.00
Mrs. Smith,	1.00
E. L. York,	10.00
J. L. Green,	5.00
Samuel Watson,	5.00
Samuel D. Moore,	5.00
W. A. Lathrop,	5.00
Henry Luse,	25.00
A. Owen,	10 00
Samuel Luse,	10.00
S. C. Thayer,	5.00
T. W. Lydeker,	5.00
J. F. Smith,	5 00
T. B. Borden,	5.00
B. C. Hart,	10.00
Wm. Algie, of Canada,	30.00
Samuel Hunt,	50.00
Smith & Sons,	25.00
O. F. Chessman,	5.00
O. G. Oakland,	5.00
J. Burgess,	5.00
John Jacob,	1.00
Samuel Sharp,	10.00
Cash,	7.00
A. W. Campbell,	1.00
C. C. Haseman,	10.00
Mrs. Sadie Bailey,	5.00
F. S. Montgomery,	3.00
John Stolls,	1.00
Wm. Buchtel,	20.00
Mrs. A. C. Moore,	5.00
Dr. E. Mayer and Sons,	10.00
Dr. W. E. Woodell,	5.00
M. Rowel Dudley,	5.00
Frank Stewart,	5.00
James Downes,	4.00
Total,	$1,138.00

Of these pledges the following amounts were paid:

R. G. Ingersoll,	$160.00
Wm. Whittick,	50.00
Henry Luse,	25.00
Samuel Luse,	10.00
O. G. Oakland,	5.00
S. P. Hobson,	5.00
W. Wilson,	5.00
N. Eggleston,	25.00
I. N. Baker,	10.00
H. Halbut,	5.00
Mrs. Russell,	5.00
Mrs. Smith,	1.00
A. Owen,	10.00
J. F. Smith,	5.00
J. Burgess,	5.00
John Jacob,	1.00
Samuel Sharp,	10.00
Cash,	7.00
A. W. Campbell,	1.00
C. C. Haseman,	10.00
Mrs. Sadie Bailey,	5.00
F. S. Montgomery,	3.00
John Stolls,	1.00
Total,	$364.00

The report of the treasurer for 1884-5 being next in order, Courtlandt Palmer submitted the following general statement:

RECEIPTS.

From contributions, pledges, etc.,	$1,559.34
Collections made by S. P. Putnam,	1,731.35
" " " C. Watts,	356.09
" " " A. C. Macdonald,	37.80
		$3,684.58

DISBURSEMENTS.

C. Watts, eight months' salary, to May 6, 1885,	$1,000.00
S. P. Putnam, ten months' salary, to July 8, 1885,	1,300.00
Paid expenses, traveling, postage, hotel bills, etc., of Messrs. Watts and Putnam,	1,156.71
Paid Thos. J. McCabe six mos.' salary for keeping books,	50.00
Paid Mrs. A. C. Macdonald, on account of correspondence,	48.00
Paid for printing,	104.15
		$3,658.86
Balance in treasury,		$ 25.72

Upon submitting this report, the treasurer moved that an auditing committee be appointed to examin the account, but as no one seemed impressed with the necessity, it was not done.

Since the above balance sheet was drawn off, the secretary has received the following amounts of money:

A. W. Lee (life membership),	$25.00
Wm. Whittick (annual),	1.00
Mrs. A. G. Whittick (annual),	1.00
Friendship Liberal League (per Wm. Seymour),	5.00
St. John's League (per M. B. Lawrence),	5.00
A. F. Neunert (second instalment life membership),	20.00
J. Sedgebeer,	5.00
F. S. Montgomery (annual),	1.00
Wm. Liville (annual),	1.00
J. H. Burnham,	5.00
Thos. G. Watkins,	1.00
H. W. Haight,	2.00
Wm. Thorpe (annual),	1.00
G. Younides (payment on life membership),	12 50
Cyrus Mercer,	1.00
Thos. Knight (annual member),	1.00
Wm. Gray (annual member),	1.00
J. N. Schelling (annual member),	1.00
Daniel D. Chidester,	1.00
John A. Jost (annual member),	1.00
H. L. Boyes (annual member),	1.00
Total,	$92.50

Mr. Putnam requests us to ask donors to closely scan the above lists, particularly the list of pledges and pledges paid at the Congress, and report promptly any error. In the haste of receiving money in the Congress it is possible for mistakes to occur.

After the financial business had been brought to a close, E. A. Stevens offered the following resolution, which was passed:

Resolved, That the American Secular Union hereby expresses its profound gratitude to Mrs. Helen Celler, of Springfield, Ill., whose life has been a continuous and heroic struggle against mental and physical tyranny, for her generous loyalty to the cause of Liberalism by her thoughtful remembrance for its financial future as shown by her desire to bequeath her property for the benefit of this Uuion, and her name shall be honored as the first person who has thus publicly evinced such devotion.

C. W. Stewart moved that all accredited delegates to the Congress be constituted a committee for solicitation of funds. Carried.

This was the last of the regular business. Courtlandt Palmer was down on the program, but previous to his lecture the audience wished to hear from Colonel Ingersoll, our re-elected president. In response to the invitation he said:

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: While I have never sought any place in any organization, and while I never intended to accept any place in any organization, yet as you have done me the honor to elect me president of the American Secular Union, I not only accept the place, but tender to you each and all my sincere thanks.

"This is a position that a man cannot obtain by repressing his honest thought. Nearly all other positions he obtains in that way. But I am glad that the time has come when men can afford to preserve their manhood in this country. Maybe they cannot be elected to the legislature, cannot become errand-boys in Congress, cannot be placed as weather-vanes in the presidential chair, but the time has come when a man can express his honest thought and be treated like a gentleman in the United States. We hav arrived at a point where priests do not govern, and have reached that stage of our journey where we, as Harriet Martineau expressed it, are 'free rovers on the breezy common of the universe.' Day by day we are getting rid of the aristocracy of the air. We have been the slaves of phantoms long enough, and a new day, a day of glory, has dawned upon this new world—this new world which is far beyond the old in the real freedom of thought.

"In the selection of your officers, without referring to myself, I think you have shown great good sense. The first man chosen as vice-president, Mr. Charles Watts, is a gentleman of sound, logical mind; one who knows what he wants to say and how to say it; who is familiar with the organization of Secular societies, knows what we wish to accomplish and the means to attain it. I am glad that he is about to make this country his home, and I know of no man who in my judgment can do more for the cause of intellectual liberty.

"The next vice-president, Mr. Remsburg, has done splendid work all over the country. He is an absolutely fearless man, and tells really and truly what his mind produces. We need such men everywhere.

"You know it is almost a rule, or at any rate the practice, in political parties and in organizations generally, to be so anxious for success that all the offices and places of honor are given to those who will come in at the eleventh hour. The rule is to hold out these honors as bribes for new-comers instead of conferring them upon those who have borne the heat and burden of the day. I hope that the American Secular Union will not be guilty of any such injustice. Bestow your honors upon the men who stood by you when you had few friends, the men who enlisted for the war when the cause needed soldiers. Give your places to them, and if others want to join your ranks welcome them heartily to the places of honor in the rear and let them learn how to keep step.

"In this particular, leaving out myself as I have said, you have done magnificently well. Mrs. Mattie Krekel, another vice-president, is a woman who has the courage to express her opinions, and she is all the more to be commended because, as you know, women have to suffer a little more punishment than men, being amenable to social laws that are more exacting and tyrannical than those passed by legislatures.

"Of Mr. Wakeman it is not necessary to speak. You all know him to be an able, thoughtful, and experienced man, capable in every respect; one who has been in this organization from the beginning, and who is now president of the New York society. Elizur Wright, one of the patriarchs of Freethought, who was battling for liberty before I was born, and who will be found in the front rank until he ceases to be. You have honored yourselves by electing JamesParton, a thoughtful man, a scholar, a philosopher, and a philanthropist—honest, courageous, and logical—with a mind as clear as a cloudless sky. Parker Pillsbury, who has always been on the side of liberty, always willing, if need be, to stand alone—a man who has been mobbed many times because he had the goodness and courage to denounce the institution of slavery—a man possessed of the true martyr spirit. Messrs. Algie and Adams, our friends from Canada, men of the highest character, worthy of our fullest confidence and esteem—conscientious, upright, and faithful.

"And permit me to say that I know of no man of kinder heart, of gentler disposition, with more real, good human feeling toward all the world, with a more forgiving and tender spirit, than Horace Seaver. He and Mr. Mendum are the editors of the Investigator, the first Infidel paper I ever saw, and I guess the first that any one of you ever saw—a paper once edited by Abner Kneeland, who was put in prison for saying, "The Universalists believe in a God which I do not." The court decided that he had denied the existence of a supreme being, and at that time it was not thought safe to allow a remark of that kind to be made, and so, for the purpose of keeping an infinite God from tumbling off his throne, Mr. Kneeland was put in jail. But Horace Seaver and Mr. Mendum went on with his work. They are pioneers in this cause, and they have been absolutely true to the principles of Freethought from the first day until now.

"If there is anybody belonging to our Secular Union more enthusiastic and better calculated to impart something of his enthusiasm to others than Samuel P. Putnam, our secretary, I do not know him. Courtlandt Palmer, your treasurer, you all know, and you will presently know him better when you hear the speech he is about to make, and that speech will speak better for him than I possibly can. Wait until you hear him, as he is now waiting for me to get through that you may hear him. He will give you a definition of the true gentleman, and that definition will be a truthful description of himself.

"Mr. Reynolds is on our side if anybody is or ever was, and Mr. Macdonald, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, aiming not only to seek the truth but to expose error, has done and is doing incalculable good in the cause of mental freedom.

"All these men and women are men and women of character, of high purpose; in favor of Freethought not as a peculiarity or as an eccentricity of the hour, but with all their hearts, through and through, to the very center and core of conviction, life, and purpose.

"And so I can congratulate you on your choice, and believe that you have entered upon the most prosperous year of your existence. I believe that you will do all you can to have every law repealed that puts a hypocrite above an honest man. We know that no man is thoroughly honest who does not tell his honest thought. We want the Sabbath day for ourselves and our families. Let the gods have the heavens. Give us the earth. If the gods want to stay at home Sundays and look solemn, let them do it; let us have a little wholesome recreation and pleasure. If the gods wish to go out with their wives and children, let them go. If they want to play billiards with the stars, so they don't carom on us, let them play.

"We want to do what we can to compel every church to pay taxes on its property as other people pay on theirs. Do you know that if church property is allowed to go without taxation, it is only a question of time when they will own a large per cent. of the property of the civilized world? It is the same as compound interest: only give it time. If you allow it to increase without taxing it for its protection, its growth can only be measured by the time in which it has to grow. The church builds an edifice in some small town, gets several acres of land. In time a city rises around it. The labor of others has added to the value of this property, until it is worth millions. If this property is not taxed, the churches will have so much in their hands that they will again become dangerous to the liberties of mankind. There never will be real liberty in this country until all property is put upon a perfect equality. If you want to build a Joss house, pay taxes. If you want to build churches, pay taxes. If you want to build a hall or temple in which Freethought and science are to be taught, pay taxes. Let there be no property untaxed. When you fail to tax any species of property, you increase the tax of other people owning the rest. To that extent, you unite church and state. You compel the Infidel to support the Catholic. I do not want to support the Catholic church. It is not worth supporting. It is an unadulterated evil. Neither do I want to reform the Catholic church. The only reformation of which that church or any orthodox church is capable is destruction. I want to spend no more money on superstition. Neither should our money be taken to support sectarian schools. We do not wish to employ any chaplains in the navy, or in the army, or in the legislatures, or in Congress. It is useless to ask God to help the political party that happens to be in power. We want no president, no governor 'clothed with a little brief authority,' to issue a proclamation as though he were an agent of God, authorized to tell all his loving subjects to fast on a certain day, or to enter their churches and pray for the accomplishment of a certain object. It is none of his business. When they called on Thomas Jefferson to issue a proclamation, he said he had no right to do it, that religion was a personal, individual matter, and that the state had no right, no power, to interfere.

"Now, I say, we will accomplish more this year than we have ever done before, as there are now in the United States, this minute, one hundred Infidels where there was one ten years ago.

"I now have the pleasure of introducing Mr. Courtlandt Palmer, who will speak to you on the 'Aristocracy of Freethought,' in my judgment the aristocracy not only of the present, but the aristocracy of the future."

Mr. Palmer's address occupied something over an hour in the delivery. Its trend was to show the silliness of the accepted social aristocracy, the injustice of the aristocracy of wealth, and to demonstrate that the only true aristocracy is to base nobility on capacity and service. The essence is contained in the words: "To be a true gentleman and an aristocrat is to throw off pretension and assumption, and base nobility on capacity and service." One of these days we hope to present Mr. Palmer's address in full. It is a paper that should be read and studied by all thoughtful men.

At the conclusion of Mr. Palmer's address, Charles Watts nominated Helen H. Gardener and Titus L. Brown for vice-presidents. They were elected, and the list stands as published last week.

SUNDAY EVENING SESSION.

Sunday evening the theater was crowded by those anxious to hear Colonel Ingersoll's new lecture, "Myth and Miracle." Previous to the lecture, Courtlandt Palmer moved a vote of thanks to the Liberals of Cleveland and the press of the city. The motion was carried.

At a quarter past eight, Colonel Ingersoll began his lecture, of which the following is a good report, so far as it goes. The passages upon Imagination, Science, Liberty, are as Colonel Ingersoll delivered them. Of them it may be said, as he said of Shakespere's words: "They will liv until all languages are dead, and all lips are dust." The other parts are the Boston Herald's synopsis:

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: What, after all, is the object of life; what is the highest possible aim? The highest aim is to accomplish the only good. Happiness is the only good of which man by any possibility can conceive. The object of life is to increase human joy, and the means, intellectual and physical development. The question, then, is, Shall we rely upon superstition or upon growth? Is intellectual development the highway of progress, or must we depend on the pit of credulity? Must we rely on belief or credulity, or upon manly virtues, courageous investigation, thought, and intellectual development? For thousands of years men have been talking about religious freedom. I am now contending for the freedom of religion, not religious freedom—for the freedom which is the only real religion. Only a few years ago our poor ancestors tried to account for what they saw. Noticing the running river, the shining star, or the painted flower, they put a spirit in the river, a spirit in the star, and another in the flower. Something makes this river run, something makes this star shine, something paints the bosom of that flower. There were all spirits. That was the first religion of mankind—fetichism—and in everything that lived, everything that produced an effect upon them, they said, 'This is a spirit that lives within.' That is called the lowest phase of religious thought, and yet it is quite the highest phase of religious thought. One by one these little spirits died. One by one nonentities took their places, and last of all we have one infinite fetich that takes the place of all others. Now, what makes the river run? We say the attraction of gravitation, and we know no more about that than we do about this fetich. What makes the tree grow? The principle of life—vital forces. These are simply phrases; simply names of ignorance. Nobody knows what makes the river run, what makes the trees grow, why the flowers burst and bloom—nobody knows why the stars shine, and probably nobody ever will know.

"There are two horizons that have never been passed by man—origin and destiny. All human knowledge is confined to the diameter of that circle. All religions rest on supposed facts beyond the circumference of the absolutely known. What next? The next thing that came in the world—the next man—was the myth-maker. He gave to these little spirits human passions; he clothed ghosts in flesh; he warmed that flesh with blood; and in that blood he put desire—motive. And the myths were born, and were only produced through the fact of the impressions that nature makes upon the brain of man. They were every one a natural production, and let me say here to-night that what men call monstrosities are only natural productions. Every religion has grown just as naturally as the grass; every one, as I said before, and it cannot be said too often, has been naturally produced. All the Christs, all the gods and goddesses, all the furies and fairies, all the mingling of the beastly and human, were produced by the impressions of nature upon the brain of man—by the rise of the sun, the silver dawn, the golden sunset, the birth and death of day, the change of season, the lightning, the storm, the beautiful bow—all these produced within the brain of man, all myths, and they are all natural productions.

"There have been certain myths universal among men. Gardens of Eden have been absolutely universal—the golden age, which is absolutely the same thing, And what was the golden age born of? Any old man in Boston will tell you that fifty years ago all people were honest. Fifty years ago all people were sociable—there was no stuck-up aristocracy then. Neighbors were neighbors. Merchants gave full weight. Everything was full length; everything was a yard wide and all wool. Now everybody swindles everybody else and calls it business. Go back fifty years, and you will find an old man who will tell you that there was a time when all men were honest. Go back another fifty years, and you will find another sage who will tell you the same story. Every man looks back to his youth, to the golden age; and what is true of the individual is true of the whole human race. It has its infancy, its manhood, and, finally, will hav an old age. The Garden of Eden is not back of us. Memory is like moonlight; it hides all the defects of the landscape, and reveals all the beauties. Every people has its Elysian Fields, its paradise; the people of Central Africa and the Aztecs, and even the Esquimaux have it. Every nation has its tradition of the flood. That myth we find in India, that myth we find in Africa. There are more honest men, good women, and obedient children in the world to-day than ever before. The myth of the Elysian Fields—universally born of sunsets. When the golden clouds in the west turned to amethyst, sapphire, and purple, the poor savage thought it a vision of another land—a land without care or grief—a world of perpetual joy. This myth was born of the setting of the sun. A universal myth, all nations have believed in floods. Savages found everywhere evidences of the sea having been above the earth, and saw in the shells souvenirs of the ocean's visit. It had left its cards on the tops of the mountains. The savage knew nothing of the slow rise and sinking of the crust of the earth. He did not dream of it. We now know that where the mountains lift their granit foreheads to the sun, the billows once held sway, and that where the waves dash into white caps of joy the mountains will stand once more. Everywhere the land is, the ocean will be; and where the ocean is, the land will be. The Hindoos believe in the flood myth. Their hero, who lived almost entirely on water, went to the Ganges to perform his ablutions, and, taking up a little water in his hand, he saw a small fish, that prayed him to save it from the monster of the river, and it would save him in turn from his enemies. He did so, and put it into different receptacles until it grew so large that he let it loose in the sea; then it was large enough to take care of itself. The fish told him that there was going to be an immense flood, and told him to gather all kinds of seed and take two of each kind of animals of use to man, and he would come along with with an ark and take them all in. He told him to pick out seven saints. And the fish towed the ark along tied to its horns, and took them in and carried them to the top of a mountain, where he hitched the ark to a tree. When the waters receded, they came out and followed them down until they reached the plain. There were the same number—eight—in this ark as there were with Noah. I find that the myth of the Virgin Mother is universal. The Virgin Mother is the earth.

"I find also in all countries the idea of a trinity. In Egypt I find Isis, Osiris, and Horus. This idea prevailed in Central America among the Aztecs. We find the myth of the judgment almost universal. I imagin men have seen so much injustice here that they naturally expect that there must be some day of final judgment somewhere. Nearly every Theist is driven to the necessity of having another world in which his God may correct the mistakes he has made in this. We find on the walls of Egyptian temples pictures of the judgment; the righteous all go on the right hand, and those unworthy on the left. The myth of the sun-god was universal. Agni was the sun-god of the Hindoos. He was called the most

(Continued on page 684.)

Communications.

The Annual Idler.

DEAR BROTHER: In my other letter perhaps I dwelt more particularly upon the less pleasant aspects of farm life in New Hampshire. The present letter I will devote in part to a truthful description of some of the diversions by which the people there seek to lighten the burden of their daily toil and tint existence with a roseate hue.

At Chesterfield there is a body of water which, when the older inhabitants were young, was known as Chesterfield Pond. It is now Spofford Lake. This is the watering-place of Cheshire county. On one side is a hotel with bar attached. A mile and a half further along the shore is another hotel with bar attached, and a boat-house with bar attached. On the other side there is a skating rink and hotel with bar attached. I took in these places, barring the attachments, one Saturday evening. I was most interested in the skating rink. Although nearly every little hall in New York has within the last year or two been turned into a skating floor, I had never seen anyone on rollers except such persons as were experts and displayed their agility for hire on the stage. Therefore I went to the rink. A good many people that I knew were sailing around and around the hall in a purposeless kind of fashion. They turned neither to the right nor to the left, but went monotonously on, like the wooden horses of a merry-go-round. Roller-skating and the falls incident thereto hav been the stock in trade of the funny newspaper men for some time. I hav always believed that these men exaggerated the difficulties of learning the game. It looked easy enough. I therefore quietly and surreptitiously possessed myself of a pair of skates, and retiring to a secluded corner strapped them firmly to my feet. I used to skate moderately well on the ice, and somebody had told me that roller skating was the same thing. I wish to say that that statement is erroneous. There is a vital difference between the two methods of locomotion. On ice skates there is no necessity for a person to fall down standing still. With rollers on it is a good deal easier to fall down than to stand up. When I stepped upon the floor and attempted to follow the advice of friends who told me to "strike out," the skates appeared for a moment to be glued securely to the ground. They then started forward with a sudden jerk that communicated an upward undulatory motion to the legs and spine, and terminated at the neck with a painful snap. Imagin yourself possessed with the conviction that you are about to fall in any or all of a half-dozen different directions, and you will realize the difficulty of judging promptly which way to incline. I did not fall, for the reason that in my youth I had learned the art, when practicing high kicking, of turning in midair and landing on my hands. When I came back to earth I found myself seated in a convenient chair. I thereupon gathered in my feet and relieved them of the skates. I had put the rollers on merely as an experiment-to determin whether I could skate or not. I found out I could not and was satisfied. The band played and the other people went monotonously round and round. Roller skates may contain a large amount of dormant hilarity, but it is not given to me to draw any of it out.

I hav read many accounts of learning to skate on rollers, but most of them were apocryphal. The foregoing is designed as a description, at once popular and veracious, of the real difficulties which beset those who go down to the rink with great confidence.

The other things that make Chesterfield Pond attractiv are boating and dram-drinking. The visitors generally spend more money for liquor than they can afford to.

> Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
> Where men drink beer and whisky every day.

For the first of these two lines I am indebted to a poet whose name I do not now recall. The second is a little thing of my own. I hav read it to some friends and they think it should be published. You may put it in if you wish. If not published, please return manuscript.

An interesting experience of my stay in the land of the Puritan was that of camping out on Mount Monadnock. I had hired a horse and carriage almost as soon as I got off the cars at Keene, and, during the three weeks we traveled together, that horse and I became great friends. He was a little suspicious of me a first, and seemed to think I wished to dictate to him the gait he should travel. I soon assured him that that was his business. If he would consent to go in the direction I desired to be carried, he should hav the privilege of regulating the speed. On that basis there was mutual agreement between us. He knew as well as I did that I was in no hurry to get there, and that when I arrived I would stand around doing nothing, whereas it was much pleasanter riding through the country admiring the beauties of nature.

To return to the mountain trip, there were seven of us that went, I being the seventh. The others were paired off in the manner which observation and experience hav shown to be the correct method—three girls, three young men. And here I had an opportunity to see an illustration of New England enterprise: one of the young men in starting had his arm around the girl before they left the dooryard. At the foot of the mountain we hitched our horses in the barn of a queer old chap who livs there, and who promised to take good care of them. Then, laden with bedding and two days' provisions, we began the ascent. The mountain is not four thousand feet in hight, but it seemed to me to be about two miles and a half from the foot to the summit. I was loaded with some fifty pounds of bedding and a tin pail, besides the one hundred and eighty pounds of corporeal substance that I hav got in the habit of carrying around with me every day. I do not deny that before I reached the top of that mountain I was the weariest one in the party. They climbed the rocks like goats, these spare and agil New England boys and girls. I had my burden strapped to my shoulders in such a manner that when I desired to rest I was obliged to fall over backward and recline on it, and on account of the transverse length of the bundle I was unable to turn in either direction, and it required the services of a strong man to get me on my feet again. The path was rugged and sore. I was rugged when I started, and sore when I reached the top, which extends far up into heaven. God was not in. The others of the party looked around from the hight; I sought a sheltered spot, and rested so fast that I could feel my joints working back into their natural relations toward one another.

We camped in a kind of ravine near the top of the mountain, under some hemlock-trees. We had a cloth large enough to make a tent for six. Being the seventh, I slept outside under the waving branches, and upon some branches that will never wave any more. A fire built of old stumps and dead limbs lighted up the darkness of the scenery.

Did you ever sleep in the woods on the ground? If so you will remember how lonesome it was when you thought that everybody else was asleep and that you were alone, and when each individual was thinking the same thing. You will recollect how the wind came through the trees, pushing the branches aside and letting the stars look at you; how the fire flickered and died out and left the darkness peopled with grotesque forms; how you kept getting chillier and realized in your inmost soul that you were going to hav a stiff neck and a cold in your head; how as you dropped into a doze an ant fastened on your leg and you dreamed of being bitten by a rattlesnake; how long the night was; how you arose in the morning drowsy but unable to sleep, tired but unable to rest, faint but unable to eat, a stinging sensation in your nose, an ache in your limbs, and a pain in the back of your head. I judge that you will remember these things, not because they were my experience, but because, from the remarks I gathered, that was about the way the rest of the party fared. Peopling the darkness with grotesque forms, is a feature I introduced on my own responsibility on account of its serene beauty. They had been accustomed to resting on feather beds; I had become inured to hardship by camping on the floor when your boy came to visit me and wished to sleep with his uncle. Therefore early in the morning I arose bright and cheerful.

Our object in staying on the mountain over-night was to see the sunrise. We were well rewarded. Gaining a peak just after daybreak, we saw a narrow cloud running along the horizon. From this cloud Old Sol soon emerged, like a laborer pulling off his jacket for the day's work. I wish I had the pen of a poet or the camera of an amateur artist that I might convey to you an idea of what the scene was like. Here is an opportunity for a stickful or two of fine descriptiv writing for the reader to skip, but instead of putting that in I will say that the morning was rather chilly and we went back to the camp to breakfast.

Blueberries grew all around, and the girls thought they ought to be picked. They filled all the pails with them, and going down the mountain—through tangled woods, up and down rocks, where both hands and the agility of a monkey were needed, along the edges of chasms where a fall meant a funeral—besides the load I had carried up the mountain—I bore a pailful of berries that could hav been purchased near home for 36 cents. This reminded me of the early Christian martyrs, who risked their lives for that which they would hav been as well off without. No one who goes to New Hampshire should miss a trip to Monadnock. It comes high (3,500 feet), but there is a good view from the top.

The pride of the New Hampshire farmer is his steers. If you call on a man who has steers, it will grieve him at his heart if you don't hav a chance to see them. I can tell a good pair of steers from a bad pair, but I cannot enumerate their good points in the technical language of a man who deals in them. An enthusiast on the subject of steers can see as much beauty in them as an artist would find in a handsome painting. I called on one man who seemed to own innumerable pairs of steers, and I could not wonder at the pride he took in his stock. They were a pretty sight. Some of them were yoked and put through the manual for my benefit. When called on for my opinion of their pulling powers, I said, "Turrible!" I found that to be a useful word. It applies anywhere. "Turrible handsome pair of steers," says number one. "Turrible!" replies number two. "That's turrible pullin'," says number three. "Turrible!" says number four. "They ain't turrible fat," remarks number five. "Well, not turrible," says number six. "Turrible quartered feller, though, ain't he?" goes on the next. "God, turrible!" is the response. By a deft use of this word a novice may get along very comfortably at a steer convention.

September is the season of fairs, or cattle shows. On fair day everybody turns out. Nothing but the best speed of the horse will answer the requirements of that day. The young man takes the girl, and the girl hold the reins; then woe unto the poor horse. The best races are often seen on the way to the fair-grounds before the show inside opens. I saw one young lady so unkind as to drive by her father, who was putting his aged roadster to the top of his speed. It was my good luck to put in two days at the Cheshire county fair. The most interesting feature was the trials of strength between different yokes of oxen. The power of those animals is immense, and the science of making them pull all they can is an entertaining study. The position of the load must be carefully surveyed so as to determin whether it will start easier on a gee or on a haw. Some teamsters hold that all loads should be started on a haw, but other authorities differ with them. The man who pulled the biggest load at this trial had what looked like the smallest pair of oxen. He first took off half the load from the stone boat and started his cattle. They drew it easily. This gave them confidence. He then loaded the boat again, putting on an additional stone. Then he squared his team off and yelled "Whoa" several times with all his might. It sounded like "wha-oo." This woke them up. "Come here to me," said he, gently plying the whip. The load started. "Up, up, UP!" he yelled; "there, whoa!" and his cattle had drawn about three tons of stone the required distance. "The oxen drew honestly," said I to a bystander. "Turrible," said he.

A regretable feature of the country fair of late is the gambling, which is carried on as openly as the selling of fruit, and many times more profitably. A French pool layout took in more money, probably, than the man at the gate of the fairground. Red and black, "over and under," and sweat boards were as plentiful as apple stands. Whisky flowed as freely as new cider. Sprint races and handicaps were announced, but few understood their significance. The good old-fashioned half-mile foot race, wherein the boys ran to win, was dropped to make room for these new-fashioned hippodromes. There was a lively wrestling match in which Mr. McMahon, of New York, was downed by a gentleman named Dufur, who belongs in those parts. It was said that Mr. McMahon believed he had a walk over and omitted to put the cork in his bottle soon enough to leave him in good condition; the result was that the Yankee laid him on his back. A balloon with a man in it ascended that same day and went scraping the sky off toward Massachusetts.

Among the catch-penny contrivances for which these fairs are noted there was one that made its possessor rich. It was a device so constructed that by striking a wooden bolt with a huge maul an indicator sprung into the air which told how heavy the blow was. Here the strong young men from Wayback spent all their money. They couldn't keep away from it. They would strike in pairs to see which was the stronger, and having gone away would come stealing back singly to hammer the thing again. A tall young fellow from Walpole beat all competitors, until an agricultural gentleman from Vermont toyed with the beetle and sent the indicafor flying into the air, away above the top of the machine. According to the estimates agreed upon, his blow had a descending force of nearly two tons. That was his first trial. His five cents entitled him to two more. He whistled a gay tune as he fondled the big mallet and swung it lightly over his head to get the "hang" of it, while the pieces of the apparatus were gathered together. The proprietor bribed him not to strike any more, and Mr. Vermont walked away with a chip on his shoulder.

Partisan politics is dying out in some of the smaller towns in New Hampshire. Formerly the party numerically the strongest elected all the town officers. "Now," said a selectman to me, "we put up a good man and elect him regardless of party." I believe that is the right way. It is hard to see why any man should be thought more or less of because he is either a Democrat or a Republican. The line that separates the one from the other is too hazy. But New Hampshire was intensely patriotic in war times. The flower of her youth and manhood enlisted in the Rebellion. In the little town of Sullivan is a marble monument bearing the names of nine of her sons who fell in that war. One of those names is of ever-living interest to you and me. It is this:

> HENRY MACDONALD,
> of the 6th Regt.
> Instantly killed in the second battle of Bull Run,
> August 28, 1862. Aged 35 years.
> Buried on the battlefield.

The history of the town of Sullivan, in the "Gazetteer of Cheshire County," says that these were "all brave soldiers; none deserting, none failing in courage, enthusiasm, or patriotic endeavor." The history adds: "The nine who died were honest, respectable, industrious, and reliable young men. There was no exception to this statement." I am satisfied with that record, although too early closed. "These heroes are dead. They died for liberty—they died for us. They are at rest. They sleep in the land they made free, under the flag they rendered stainless. They sleep beneath the shadows of the clouds, careless alike of sunshine or of storm, each in the windowless palace of Rest. Earth may run red with other wars—they are at peace. In the midst of battle, in the roar of conflict, they found the serenity of death." These words are Ingersoll's. They are true of him who sleeps by the rivulet of Bull Run, on the field of Manassas, "where no man knoweth of his sepulcher unto this day."

I hav little more to write. I ask pardon for having written so much. But some one may ask, How about Freethought in New Hampshire? I believe there is a good deal of it. The people are openly criticising the church. They are getting suspicious of her claims. They put little faith in her promises, and are not frightened by her threats. The last convert I heard of, in his profession did not appear to be wholly convinced. He said that he would like to liv so that if there was another life he might attain it. If there was none, no harm would be done. That recalls the story of General Butler's farmer, who saw something moving in the bushes, and fired so as to hit it if it was a deer and miss it if it was a calf. But the people are beginning to learn that the profession of religion is not a guarantee of character, or, rather, they are beginning to say it. They hav always known it. Doubt of the divinity of Christ and the inspiration of the Bible is outspoken. The doctrin of a future life is pretty generally held in a vague way, but the idea that there is a hell does not meet with so favorable a reception; and I notice that it is the best people, as a rule, who believe the least. I saw a few copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and one Investigator. The latter was taken by an intelligent and well-read gentleman residing in Hinsdale. I should hav guessed that he was a Freethinker by the number of books and papers I saw in his house.

I may be predisposed in their favor, and no doubt folks everywhere are good, but I like the people of New England. They are sharp in a trade, and so is everybody else; it is, unfortunately, necessary. They are a moral people as the world goes, but they are growing charitable as well; a christening in advance of the wedding no longer calls for the pillory and the scarlet letter. What customs they hav are rigid, and sometimes manners different from their own are mistaken for the signs of pretension. The conversation of the older residents is apt to be "as broad as it is long," but profanity is regarded, on the whole, as being rather worse than bad grammar. I saw some courting done which was different from any I had seen before. I was accomplished by main strength on the part of the wooer, the wooee resisting until the young man appeared about ready to giv up the struggle to get by her side, and then yielding gracefully before it was everlastingly too late. I am not prepared to say whether that style of tangling themselvs up in each other's heartstrings is prevalent among the young folks or not. The people here spend a good deal of money for schools; their educational facilities are being constantly improved, and in the fundamental branches opportunity is afforded for every boy and girl to become proficient. This means progress, and when we remember that a generation or two ago the women put heated horseshoes in the churn to drive away the witches, we must admit that New England people are doing quite well.

The man at whose expense I lived on chicken and pie, during a large part of my stay in New Hampshire, was a cousin of ours, and a playmate of our boyhood. He livs on the old farm. I find my regard for him as a boy has grown into respect for him as a man. We spent hours together in old familiar places, talking over the events of days that drift farther and farther away, but are none the less remembered—some of them pleasant, some bitter with the memory of injustice. We concluded that on the whole it is well that we can view the past from a safe and ever-increasing distance. For, sentiment apart, and "childhood's happy days" taken as they were to most of us, who would be a boy again? With due respect for boys, not I. The past did the best it could with the light it had, but I expect that the last day I liv, enjoying good health, will be the best one of all. Wishing the same to you and the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I am,

Your affectionate brother, GEO. E. MACDONALD.

THE money values placed on farm lands hav been increased from $3,000,000,000 in 1850, to over $10,000,000,000 in 1880. It is easy to say $10,000,000,000, but, estimating a silver dollar at one ounce, the weight of them would amount to very nearly 300,000 tons of silver.

Freethought in Australasia.

The Prohibitionists are having a lively time of it just now in Victoria, the bill which their representativs hav presented to the legislature having been the principal theme of the scribe and the gossip for some time past. The bill in question is known as the Amending Licensing bill, and has emanated from the master mind of our renowned chief secretary, Mr. Graham Berry. It proposes to take away the power of licensing from the present licensing benches and vest it instead in special commissioners; also to limit the number of public-houses in each district in proportion to the population; to raise the licensing fees; to prohibit the employment of barmaids, and to adopt generally the principle of local option. I need scarcely tell you that this sweeping measure has met with general approval in this bigoted community. The temperance bodies and a portion of the press hav zealously supported it; and the parliament has been deluged with petitions in its favor from Wesleyan bodies, reformed drunkards, and the like. We hav full confidence that the laws of nature are going to be suspended on our behalf, so that our legal enactments shall make every man a teetotaler, though his natural tastes should say to him at every turn, "Take a little wine for thy stomach's sake."

Two ventures hav been made lately in the periodical line, each of which promises to prove very successful. One is a monthly newspaper under Unitarian management, and published in Melbourne under the name of Modern Thought, and the other is a Freethought paper, the Rationalist, published weekly at Auckland, New Zealand, and edited by that indefatigable worker in our cause, Mr. Joseph Evison, better known as "Ivo." To show the success which the Rationalist has already attained, I need but mention the fact that the authorities hav already set their grip upon it, and it now issues forth every week carrying proudly on its first page, in bold letters, the intimation that it is "Prosecuted by the bigots."

Over here in Victoria the struggle for freedom of thought continues. In the action against Mr. J. S. Robertson for taking the chair at one of the Sunday night lectures at the Hall of Science when a charge had been made for admission, the full court hav now given their decision to the effect that the law in question does apply to this colony. The hearing of the action had been postponed pending the settlement of the question of its local applicability. Action has been taken against the Liberator for publishing without having found the £600 securities against blasphemy and sedition, as required by the Newspaper act. The case came on for hearing on the 18th August, before Mr. Justice Holroyd and a jury of twelve. Five issues of the paper were brought before the court, and it was sought to recover a penalty of £20 on each. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff at the minimum penalty allowed, viz., £5 on each issue, or £25 in all. The judge, however, has reserved several technical points for the full court, and on their decision the fate of the verdict of course hangs. The Australasian Secular Association continues its steady course, "science classes" and a social club having recently been added to its numerous attractions.

But the most cheering piece of news from this quarter is that steps hav at last been taken for the purpose of building a Freethought hall. A meeting was recently held for that purpose, when it was agreed to float a Freethought hall company, with a capital of £25,000, and registered under the Limited Liability statute. A provisional directorate was formed, and a number of shares applied for.

Mr. Symes lectures as usual in the Hall of Science every Sunday evening, and the other meetings of the association take place with the customary regularity.

In New South Wales matters continue to be pretty lively. The Sydney School of Arts expelled the Liberator from its tables, though not without a determined resistance on the part of a good number of its members. Mr. Thomas Walker has been prosecuted for lecturing on "Malthusianism," and illustrating the same with diagrams copied from standard works on surgery and physiology.

Sydney is pushing ahead in sanitary matters. At the recent conference on sanitation the subject of cremation was warmly discussed, and a resolution passed that the sanction of cremation should be introduced in any new sanitary act as a permissiv clause. Another pleasing event was a mass meeting held a few days ago to consider the disclosures of the Pall Mall Gazette. Resolutions were carried sympathizing with that paper in the courageous action it had taken, and a message to that effect was cabled to the proprietors the following day.

Mr. Gerald Massey, Mr. Thomas Walker, and Dr. J. L. York hav been entertaining Sydney audiences lately, but the latter has not yet paid the promised visit to Melbourne.

The Newcastle Secular Association, which is getting on favorably, has just added to its functions that most useful institution, a Secular Sunday-school, and I am glad to learn that it has met with the patronage it deserves. A new society has been started at Granville; it is styled the Granville Mutual Improvement Society. Mr. Wm. Lorando Jones, the Freethought martyr of twelve years ago, is its leader.

Queensland, which for some unknown reason has hitherto made no stir in Freethought movements, has lately discovered to us a prosperous Freethought society, known as the Brisbane Freethought Association, in connection with which is an excellent Sunday-school, which, I am informed by a friend who recently visited it, has been in existence for nine years. Mr. H. Burton lectures every Sunday night at the Brisbane Freethought Hall, and his remarks are keenly appreciated by his hearers.

The Freethinkers of South Australia are fully awake to the necessity of being their own landlords. The South Australian Freethought Hall Company has lately been floated, a number of shares hav been disposed of, and the president has announced that the building will shortly be proceeded with.

Tasmania appears to hav a lot of the convict element remaining there, if we may judge by the religious bigotry and intolerance which prevail. There is very little Freethought, and very few Freethinkers. Miss Ada Campbell, however, is activly engaged in waking the Tasmaniacs (I believe that is the conventional appellation) from the religious nightmare in which they are slumbering, and has met with a fair share of success. This lady, in addition to lecturing in the Tasmanian Hall at Hobart, continues to throw out challenges to the sky-pilots to meet her in debate; but they are nearly all afraid to accept the offer. A poor unfortunate layman, Mr. George Peacock, tackled the fair champion of Infidelity, and succeeded in making himself ridiculous. The Rev. A. M. Taylor, a Methodist clergyman, was to debate with Miss Campbell on "the inspiration of the Bible;" the discussion was set down for the 25th of August, but no later intelligence is to hand. I am again obliged to pass over Western Australia, as I do not know of a solitary Freethinker there, let alone a Freethought Association. Not so New Zealand, however, for in that favored locality Freethought has "a local habitation and a name." The publication of the Rationalist I hav already alluded to, and its co-worker, the Freethought Review, is already familiar to you. A paragraph in the former paper states that Mr. Ballance, of the New Zealand ministry, is no longer the editor of the Freethought Review. Whether the statement is correct or not, the Review has kept up to the standard which characterized it from the start, and is doing good work for our cause.

The many Freethought associations dotted over New Zealand are in full swing. Auckland, Canterbury, Wellington, Palmerston, Ngaire, Timaru, Fielding, Wanganui, Masterton, Lyttleton, Waverly, each has its Freethought association, and each finds plenty to do.

When the Rationalist was prosecuted it became necessary to sell it on Sundays inside the Opera House instead of outside, and so "Ivo" is thinking of selling the holy Bible some Sunday outside the Opera House. This would perplex the authorities a little.

A few brief facts, and I must close. The Rev. J. A. Dowie has recently been imprisoned for parading the streets with his noisy followers in defiance of the law. He said he would follow the laws of God rather than the laws of man. The Victorian Women's Suffrage Society hav held several influential public meetings in Melbourne recently, and a mild species of "woman's suffrage" bill has been passed in the South Australian parliament. Dr. Taylor, the well-known London scientist, has made a successful lecturing tour through this and the adjoining colonies. George Chainey, under engagement to the Victorian Association of Spiritualists, has failed to fulfil his agreement, and has given them no explanation. A number of Presbyterians in Melbourne hav taken steps to form a new congregation for the semi-heretic, the Rev. Charles Strong. A lad was fined ten shillings the other day at the Melbourne police court for playing football on Sunday, and threatened with a severer fine if he dared to repeat the "offense." The Salvation Army of Victoria claim to hav reclaimed 1,500 men and 480 women of the lowest criminal class, during the last two years. The medical superintendent of the Beechworth Lunatic Asylum states that much of the insanity is produced from religious excitement caused by the Salvation Army, and fifteen cases in the last two months were directly traceable to that cause. The Rev. Mr. Inglis, Wesleyan minister, of Naracoorte, S. A., has been arrested on a charge of forging a receipt. The Rev. J. W. Inglis, of Ballarat, Victoria, has been found guilty of plagiarizing from the sermons of Dean Alford, and he has had a severe admonition from the Presbytery. Judge Williams states that he is preparing a voluminous and exhaustiv treatis on "religion without superstition," which is to be published in two or three years' time. Charles Bradlaugh intends visiting Australia next year. With these random jottings, I must conclude, wishing success to you and your readers and the cause of Liberty all the world over.

DAVID A. ANDRADE.

South Yarra, Melbourne, Sept. 3, 1885.

(Continued from page 681.)

generous of all gods, yet he ate his own father and mother. Baldur was another sun-god; he was a sun myth. Hercules was a sun-god, and so was Samson. Jonah, too, was a sun-god, and was swallowed by a fish. So was Hercules, and a wonderful thing is that they were swallowed in about the same place, near Joppa. Where did the big fish go? When the sun went down under the earth, it was thought to be followed by the fish, which was said to swallow it, and carry it safely through the underworld. The sun thus came to be represented as the body of a woman with the tail of a fish, and so the mermaid was born. Another strange thing is that all the sun-gods were born near Christmas. The myth of Red Riding Hood was known among the Aztecs. The myth of the eucharist came from the story of Ceres and Bacchus. When the cakes made by the product of the field were eaten, it was of the body of Ceres, and when the wine was drunk it was the blood of Bacchus. From this idea the eucharist was born.

"There is nothing original in Christianity. Holy water is another myth. The Hindoos imagined that the water had its source in the throne of God. The Egyptians thought the Nile sacred. Greece was settled by Egyptian colonies, and they carried with them the water of the Nile, and when any one died the water was sprinkled on him. Finally Rome conquered Greece physically, but Greece conquered Rome intellectually. This is the myth of holy water, and with it grew up the idea of baptism, and I presume that that is as old as water and dirt. The cross is another universal symbol. There was once an ancient people in Italy before the Romans, before the Etruscans. They faded from the world, and history does not even know the name of that nation. We find where they buried the ashes of their dead, and we find chiseled, hundreds of years before Christ, the cross, a symbol of hope of another life. We find the cross in Egypt, in the cylinders from Babylon, and, more than that, we find them in Central America. On the temples of the Aztecs we find the cross, and on it a bleeding, dying god. Our cross was built in the Middle Ages.

"When Adam was very sick he sent Seth, his son, to the Garden of Eden. He told him he would hav no trouble in finding it; all he had to do was to follow the tracks made by his mother and father when they left it. He wanted a little balsam from the tree of life that he might not die. Seth found there a cherub, with flaming sword, who would not let him pass the door. He moved his wing so that he could see in, and he saw the tree of life, with its roots running down to hell, and among them Cain, the murderer. The angel gave Seth three seeds, and told him to put them in his father's mouth when he was buried and to watch the effect. The result was that these trees grew up—one pine, one cedar, and one cypress. Solomon cut down one of these trees to put in the temple, but it grew through the roof and he threw it into the pool of Bethesda. When the soldiers went for a beam on which to crucify Christ they took this tree and made a cross of it. Helen, the mother of Constantine, went to Jerusalem to find this cross. She found the two crosses, also, that the thieves were crucified on. They could not tell which was which, so they called a sick woman, who touched them, and when she touched the right one she was immediately made whole.

"Such is myth and fable. The history of one religion is substantially the history of all religions.

IMAGINATION.

"The man of imagination, of genius, having seen a leaf and a drop of water, can construct the forests, the rivers, and the seas. In his presence all the cataracts fall and foam, the mists rise, the clouds form and float. To really know one fact is to know its kindred and its neighbors. Shakspere, looking at a coat of mail, instantly imagined the society, the conditions that produced it, and what it, in its turn, produced. He saw the castle, the moat, the drawbridge, the lady in the tower, and the knightly lover spurring over the plain. He saw the bold baron and the rude retainer, the trampled serfs, and all the glory and the grief of feudal life.

"The man of imagination has lived the life of all people, of all races. He has been a citizen of Athens in the days of Pericles; listened to the eager eloquence of the great orator, and has sat upon the cliff, and with the tragic poet heard 'the multitudinous laughter of the sea.' He has seen Socrates thrust the spear of question through the shield and heart of falsehood—was present when the great man drank hemlock and met the night of death tranquil as a star meets morning. He has followed the peripatetic philosophers, and has been puzzled by the sophists. He has watched Phidias as he chiseled shapeless stone to forms of love and awe. He has lived by the slow Nile, amid the vast and monstrous. He knows the very thought that wrought the form and features of the Sphinx. He has heard great Memnon's morning song—has lain him down with the embalmed dead, and felt within their dust the expectation of another life, mingled with cold and suffocating doubts, the children born of long delay. He has walked the ways of mighty Rome, has seen great Cæsar with his legions in the field, has stood with vast and motley throngs, and watched the triumphs given to victorious men, followed by uncrowned kings, the captured hosts, and all the spoils of ruthless war. He has heard the shout that shook the Coliseum's roofless walls, when from the reeling gladiator's hand the short sword fell, while from his bosom gushed the stream of wasted life. He has lived the life of savage men, has trod the forest's silent depths, and in the desperate game of life or death has matched his thought against the instinct of the beast. He has sat beneath the bo-tree's contemplativ shade, rapt in Buddha's mighty thought, and he has dreamed all dreams that Light, the alchemist, hath wrought from dust and dew, and stored within the slumbrous poppy's subtle blood. He has knelt with awe and dread at every shrine; has offered every sacrifice and every prayer; has felt the consolation and the shuddering fear; has seen all the devils; has mocked and worshiped all the gods; enjoyed all heavens, and felt the pangs of every hell. He has lived all lives, and through his blood and brain have crept the shadow and the chill of every death, and his soul, Mazeppa-like, has been lashed naked to the wild horse of every fear and love and hate. The imagination hath a stage within the brain, whereon he sets all scenes that lie between the morn of laughter and the night of tears, and where his players body forth the false and true, the joys and griefs, the careless shallows and the tragic deeps of human life.

"Through with the myth-makers, we now come to the wonder-worker. There is this difference between the miracle and the myth—a myth is an idealism of a fact, and a miracle is a counterfeit of a fact. There is the same difference between a myth and a miracle that there is between fiction and falsehood, and poetry and perjury. Miracles are probable only in the far past or the very remote future. The present is the property of the natural. You say to a man 'The dead were raised four thousand years ago.' He says, 'Well, that's reasonable.' You say to him, 'In four million years we shall all be raised.' He says, 'That is what I believe.' Say to him, 'A man was raised from the dead this morning,' and he will say, 'What are you giving us?' Miracles never convinced at the time they were said to have been performed.

"John the Baptist was the forerunner of Christ. He was cast into prison. When Christ heard of it he 'departed from that country.' Afterward he returned and heard that John had been beheaded, and he again departed from that country. There is no possible relation between the miraculous and the moral. The miracles of the Middle Ages are the children of superstition. In the Middle Ages men told everything but the truth, and believed everything but the facts. The Middle Ages—a trinity of ignorance, mendacity, and insanity. There is one thing about humanity. You see the faults of others, but not your own. A Catholic in India sees a Hindoo bowing before an idol and thinks it absurd. Why does he not get him a plaster of paris Virgin and some beads and holy water? Why does the Protestant shut his eyes when he prays? The idea is a souvenir of sun-worship. It is the most natural worship in the world. Religious dogmas have become absurd. The doctrine of eternal torment today has become absurd, low, groveling, ignorant, barbaric, savage, devilish, and no gentleman would preach it.

"We read that a 'certain' man was raised from the dead. If Christ had wanted to convince men that he was God, why didn't he raise from the dead a person that all knew, and not slip off into a corner of the earth like Palestine? If God had wanted to convince us, why not raise Lincoln, who was known by millions? We read in the Bible that Christ cast out devils from men. The modern minister, who is paid a salary for answering the objections of Infidels, will tell you that they were very flowery in their mode of expression in the East, and that the Bible really means that Christ cured a man of epilepsy or fits. Did you ever hear of a doctor making a contract with fits? And yet Christ got the devils to go out of a person into some hogs. I pity a man who believes in such a groveling doctrine as that which admits the existence of devils.

"Formerly the orthodox measured all science by the Bible, and it wasn't well with the scientist whose doctrin didn't agree with the Bible. They killed him and then everything was harmonious. The orthodox are now trying to show that the Bible is true because not contrary to science.

SCIENCE.

"Science, thou art the great magician! Thou alone performest the true miracles. Thou alone workest the real wonders. Fire is thy servant, lightning is thy messenger. The waves obey thee, and thou knowest the circuits of the wind. Thou art the great philanthropist! Thou hast freed the slave and civilized the master. Thou hast taught man to chain not his fellow-man, but the forces of nature—forces that have no backs to be scarred, no limbs for chains to chill and eat—forces that never know fatigue, that shed no tears—forces that have no hearts to break. Thou gavest man the plow, the reaper and the loom—thou hast fed and clothed the world! Thou art the great physician! Thy touch hath given sight. Thou hast made the lame to leap, the dumb to speak, and in the pallid cheek thy hand hath set the rose of health. 'Thou hast given thy beloved sleep'—a sleep that wraps in happy dreams the throbbing nerves of pain. Thou art the perpetual providence of man—preserver of life and love! Thou art the teacher of every virtue, the enemy of every vice. Thou hast discovered the true basis of morals—the origin and office of conscience—and hast revealed the nature and measure of obligation. Thou hast taught that love is justice in its highest form, and that even self-love, guided by wisdom, embraces with loving arms the human race. Thou hast slain the monsters of the past. Thou hast discovered the one inspired book. Thou hast read the records of the rocks, written by wind and wave, by frost and flame—records that even priestcraft cannot change—and in thy wondrous scales thou hast weighed the atoms and the stars. Thou art the founder of the only true religion. Thou art the very Christ, the only savior of mankind.

"Theology has always been in the way of the advance of the human race. There is this difference between science and theology—science is modest and merciful, while theology is arrogant and cruel. The hope of science is the perfection of the human race. The hope of theology is the salvation of a few and the damnation of almost everybody. As I told you in the first place, I believe in the religion of freedom.

LIBERTY.

"O Liberty! Thou art the god of my idolatry. Thou art the only deity that hates the bended knee. In thy vast and unwalled temple, beneath the roofless dome, star-gemmed and luminous with suns, thy worshipers stand erect. They do not crawl, or cringe, or bend their foreheads in the earth. The dust has never borne the impress of their lips. Upon thy altars mothers do not sacrifice their babes, nor men their rights. Thou askest naught from man except the things that good men hate—the whip, the chain, the dungeon key. Thou hast no kings, no popes, no priests who stand between their fellow-men and thee. Thou hast no monks, no nuns, who in the name of duty murder joy. Thou carest not for forms or mumbled prayers. At thy sacred shrine hypocrisy does not bow, fear does not crouch, virtue does not tremble, superstition's feeble tapers do not burn, but Reason holds aloft her inextinguishable torch, while on the ever-broadening brow of Science falls the ever-coming morning of the ever-better day."

With this magnificent lecture closed the largest Congress ever held by the National Liberal League—now the American Secular Union. The delegated attendance was not large, even smaller than last year, but the number of Freethinkers present was many times larger. Though not regularly elected delegates, the right of these last to hav a voice in the Congress was considered good. They represented all sections of the country, and a strict rule would hav thrown out the best workers in the cause. We noted among those present, besides the delegates and speakers—a list of whom has been given—D. A. Blodgett, of Grand Rapids; S. D. Moore, of Adrian; Harrison Halbert, of Michigan; W. L. Farnsworth, of Poe, O.; John Jacobs, Loraine; Shepheard Smalley, Muscatine; N. Eggleston, Aurora; S. Hobson, Muscatine; F. C. Weninger, Sandusky; H. Belden, North Amherst; Lars Erlandsen, Chicago; A. F. Miller, Caro; John Biggs, Cleveland; A. W. Campbell, Canton; N. Phillips, Glenville; B. F. Burke, Jonesboro; S. E. Russell, Streetsboro; John Thompson, Solon; Mrs. Sadie Bailey, Beloit; C. C. Abbott, Palmyra; Joseph Fisher, Cleveland; C. H. Krehbiel, T. F. Lucas, and Mrs. M. S. Grossard, of Cleveland; J. O. Brixey, Chicago; A. F. Miller, Carey; R. Hartley and J. C. Roe, of Cleveland; W. Whittick and wife, of Dushore, Pa., and many others whose faces hav become familiar at our Conventions, but whose names hav slipped from memory. The local attendance, also, was good, showing that Cleveland possesses a large Liberal element.

The reception Sunday night at the Forest City House afforded scores of Freethinkers a long-desired opportunity of meeting Colonel Ingersoll on a level and exchanging a few words. The opportunity was largely improved. The hotel parlor on Sunday night, after the lecture, was an exceedingly sociable place. Another pleasant incident of the Congress was the raising of a purse for Arthur Tilney, Mr. Reynolds's musical Tent-master. Fifty-four dollars were collected—a rather small sum for a summer's work, but better than nothing, which was about what he expected to get. A purse of $10, also, was gathered among a few friends of Harry Hoover, C. Watts, solicitor.

The Congress was almost unanimous. There is need of the utmost energy to carry out the work proposed for next year, which can be better outlined when the directors hav met, and a strong pull together is needed to accomplish it. The resolution calls for activ work before such state legislatures as will permit our advocates to address them, for the preparation of campaign tracts expository of the Nine Demands, and for the missionary work of distributing general Freethought arguments. If the means are provided we are confident the directors will do all in their power to carry out the directions of the Congress, and that the secretary's next report will treat of legal work performed as well as of lectures delivered.

One criticism of the report of the Committee on Nominations we heard was that the majority of the officers were from the East, and particularly from New York. This criticism is just or unjust, as the critic views the work of the Union. If the officers were selected simply as a personal and sectional honor, then the criticism is just. If, however, the directors are expected to take hold of practical work, then the criticism is unjust. With the directors scattered all over the United States, meetings of the board would be impossible, and the Union would simply be a paper organization, as the League remained too many years. To carry out the thorough reorganization begun at Cassadaga, and to perform the practical work the Union ought to take hold of, the directors must be within consulting distance. The wisdom of the committee's choice must be vindicated by the officers themselvs, and their work must be governed by the support given them throughout the country. With the people with them, the officers can do much; without them, nothing.

Like the New York State Convention, the Congress of the American Secular Union was remarkable for the ability of the speakers who occupied the platform, not a dull speech being delivered at either gathering. The average attendance at Cleveland was larger than at Albany, showing that an impetus was given the cause by the State Convention which materially helped the national work. In selecting speakers, the Executiv Committee of the State Association chose a majority from the East; the secretary of the Union invited those from the West. In this way nearly all had a chance to be heard, and the Liberals of the country are to be congratulated that our cause is represented and defended by such able gentlemen. Our only regret is that the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER are not capacious enough to print all they said at the two meetings.

The generosity of Colonel Ingersoll at Albany and Cleveland should be known and remembered with gratitude by every Liberal. At neither Convention nor Congress was made any appeal for money to pay expenses and speakers, yet at both, had it not been for Mr. Ingersoll's royal generosity, the finances would hav been hopelessly in arrears. As it was, the State Association paid every debt incurred at Cassadaga, as well as the expenses of this year's meeting, and the deficit at Cleveland was made up by the advance payment of pledges by Colonel Ingersoll and a few others, which appear in the list previously given. These generous ones should be long remembered, as well as the people of Cleveland, who gave over two hundred dollars before the Congress convened.

It seems to us that with such men and women as Liberalism counts within its ranks—earnest, patriotic, untiring in effort—the next year ought to be productiv of a deal of good; and if harmony shall continue to prevail, and a united front be maintained, the next ten years ought to see granted by our legislature a good portion of the Demands. Catholics and Protestants are vieing with each other to see which sect shall in the name of law and religion steal the most from our public treasuries, and it is high time the Liberals act the part of police in restraining both contestants, and ejecting them from our municipal, state, and national treasuries. That is the work called for by the Congress. Whether any laws conflicting with the Nine Demands are repealed or not this year, if the effort shall be vigorously made the Union will hav taken the first step toward vindicating its existence, and putting itself on a secure foundation. The times are ripe for Liberal political work. Infidelity is everywhere, and a good portion of the nominal Christians are in favor of most of our demands. Preachers are no longer considered to be a privileged class; churches are not regarded as sacred in themselvs. It will therefore be possible to oust the former from some of their soft political jobs, and force the supporters of the latter to bear their share of public burdens.

Let the Union take hold of these questions.

The Secretary Upon the Congress.

The Convention at Albany and the Congress at Cleveland hav fulfilled our brightest hopes. They hav been pre-eminently successful. There is a better understanding than ever among Liberals of all shades of opinion. The work of the past year, whatever its mistakes and failings, has made apparent the common purpose, and created a friendly feeling throughout our ranks.

Representativ men were at the Cleveland Congress, and made a noble presentation of our cause. The opening address of Vice-President Watts sounded the keynote of future work. The report of the secretary was a plain, matter-of-fact detail of what had really been accomplished.

C. B. Reynolds, fresh from his tent labors, gave a vigorous report from the Executiv Committee. The afternoon session was a stimulating preliminary to the evening session, when we listened to the fervid eloquence of J. D. Shaw, the fearless and able advocate of our cause in the Southwest. The North was glad to welcome so valiant, so chivalrous, so brilliant a soldier of Humanity. May the bonds become closer between him and his fellow-workers.

Mrs. Mattie Krekel again graced our platform and admirably expressed the liberty for which we strive. C. W. Stewart, in whose veins from birth has flowed the blood of freedom, delivered a most instructiv discourse on the process of evolution and the passing away forever of the supernatural.

On Saturday morning, John E. Remsburg, manly to the core, the Bayard of our cause, wielding the glittering spear of scholarship and eloquence, inflicted a mortal wound upon that hoary and bloody idol of superstition—the ecclesiastical Sabbath, today the main bulwark of the church, and around which the fiercest battles will be fought.

Dr. T. L. Brown, strong as a lion, keen as a greyhound, knowing all the weak spots of the enemy, and piercing them with the shafts of ridicule, followed Remsburg with that impetuous gallantry for which he is so famous.

Our Chicago friends may well be proud of their gifted representativ, Mrs. A. M. Freeman, and her beautiful description of science as opposed to superstition will not soon be forgotten by those who listened to her graceful speech and saw the glory of the future beaming over the darkness of the past.

J. D. Mallonee's "Facts for Thinkers" was one of the best things of the Congress, and would make an excellent campaign document. His facts were woven together with logical acumen and with a happiness of style that gave them a fresh significance.

J. H. Burnham gave an admirable delineation of the source of morality in the classified experiences of mankind, as it comes into manifold relations with the world and grows toward perfection. The vigorous eloquence of Mr. Burnham should not be missed from the platform of the American Secular Union.

Wm. Algie brought good news with him from Canada, and all were glad to see his genial face and listen to his happy words as he welcomed the union of all American Liberals.

The "Glory of Infidelity" should be insisted upon. The name has been given to us. Let us accept it and make it glorious in the history of the world. The skeptic has been the constant redeemer of mankind.

C. B. Reynolds told us how to go to work, and he knows whereof he speaks, for he himself is one of our royal laborers, a host in himself, and worthy of the storm of plaudits which he received.

Arthur Tilney was welcome too, with the voice of Apollo and the muscle of Hercules. He can sing and work and pitch his Tent to the music of the spheres.

Sunday morning Charles Watts gave his new lecture on the "Philosophy of Unbelief," which gave a solid foundation for our destructiv work and a vindication of our constructiv method. Mr. Watts is in splendid trim for this year's campaign and we hope will be kept constantly at work. His effectiv oratory is quite adapted to the immense field of labor which now opens to American Liberalism. All who desire his services, send at once to 33 Clinton Place.

Those who listened to Ingersoll's introductory address on Sunday afternoon enjoyed a most exquisit gem of extemporaneous speech. It came forth just like a fountain from his irrepressible spirit and dashed this way and that way with impetuous bubbles of light, making rainbows of hope for all our hearts.

The flower and perfect fruit of Secular philosophy was illustrated in Courtlandt Palmer's lecture, "The Aristocracy of Freethought," in which the high ideal of manhood and womanhood, which is in the world's heart to-day nobler than all past ideals, was portrayed with the delicate poetic insight of its scholarly author, and was a rich contribution to the literature of advanced reform.

An immense audience was present on Sunday evening, and the Congress closed with one of the noblest displays of oratory that it is the fortune of man to enjoy. In artistic arrangement and unfolding I think it the best of Ingersoll's lectures. It had the symmetry of Greek rhetoric. How vividly before our mind's eye passed the childhood of the race, touched and thrilled with the mystery and wonder of the universe, the imagination far outreaching the judgment and building in sky and cloud the palaces of the gods and the Elysian fields. Then came the miracle-worker—poetry succeeded by theology—imagination transformed to sleight-of-hand, and glowing dreams to tricks of trade. Then came the fact-finder, revealing again all the wondrous beauty of the myth, but in form that will abide forever.

Ingersoll has the supreme gift of genius—the gift of interpretation. The world of to-day is photographed in his brain completely, its hights and depths, its multitudinous passions and desires, its hopes and achievements; and he voices it all in the tide of his burning speech.

This was a remarkable Congress, and its results will make a bright mark in American history.

It will giv renewed enthusiasm, and a larger and more important work will be undertaken.

It was voted to raise a fund of $10,000 for the coming year. In a few minutes a thousand dollars was pledged, and without doubt the whole will be raised when the objects of the Union are thoroughly understood.

The publication and distribution of Freethought literature and the enforcement of the Nine Demands through legislativ action will be the most advantageous use of the funds for the coming year.

It is hoped that the best lecturers can be put in the field at once, and the public mind kept agitated by stirring appeals.

It is hoped also that state organizations will be formed wherever feasible. There must be State Unions to work in conjunction with the National Union. In New York state there is already a strong organization. In Pennsylvania one is formed, and its work should be pushed forward. Such a devoted worker as Harry Hoover, of Pittsburgh, should be made available in the field. In Ohio there is abundant material. With an earnest organizer it could be made activ and powerful. J. D. Mallonee, of Cleveland, one of our most enterprising young men, could achieve a valuable success in this direction if properly sustained by the Liberals of Ohio. Shall not this be done?

Illinois should also fall into line with such a vigorous officer as E. A. Stevens, of Chicago, to pioneer the way.

The American Secular Union should be formed on the principle of the American republic. There must be national, state, and local societies, each giving life to the others, and making the whole organization thoroughly democratic and constantly progressiv.

Let the Liberals of Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois take these suggestions into serious consideration, and adopt measures for their inauguration. There are some things that can be done only by a national organization. There are some things that can be done only by a state organization, and there are some things that can be done only by a local society. With a combination of these several agencies, with live men in the harness, the next year will see a vast advancement of our power and influence.

Our president, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, will raise his subscription for the coming year to one thousand dollars, if other friends of the cause will do their share. We must not depend upon one or a few friends for the money necessary to the campaign. The noble generosity of Ingersoll should stimulate everyone to do something. Of the thousands of Liberals in this country each can do a little.

Let there be a quick response to the magnanimous proposition of our president.

Those who contribute one dollar, or more, can hav an annual membership certificate, if so desired.

Those who contribute twenty-five dollars, or more, can hav a life membership certificate, if so desired.

The outlook was never so favorable as to-day. A grand fellowship has been begun. We labor for political equality, for social development, and the inspiration of this extending work is constantly becoming more beautiful. With thankfulness to those in the past who hav done the hard campaigning of intellectual enfranchisment, we look forward to the moral and creativ tendencies of our work with exultant minds.

The work of destruction is sad, though necessary. The work of construction, with the riches of science at our command and the spirit of Beauty in the very air we breathe, lighted with new joys and finer aspirations, will make whatever we now do like the task of the artist who sees springing beneath his hand the living statue, the spacious temple, the entrancing picture.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

As a humorist and writer of romance, our highly esteemed but vertiginous friend Tucker, of Liberty, is an immense success. His little piece concerning some of the people at the Albany Convention is positivly charming in its airiness and in its offhand manner of misinforming the reader. Mr. Tucker should write a bible.

CARDINAL MCCLOSKY was buried one day last week with great pomp. It costs a good deal to get one of these church dignitaries under ground, but perhaps the accomplishment is worthy of the expense.

N. D. C.

How to Become

A MEDIUM

IN YOUR OWN HOME.

A 16-page pamphlet, containing full instructions and a letter designating all your phases of mediumship, and a copy of the Riddle of the American Spiritual Sphinx, or the Lost Key Found, sent FREE upon receipt of three two-cent stamps to cover expenses of mailing, etc. Address, JAMES A. BLISS, 718 Washington st., Boston, Mass. 39tf.

Something New!

Every Liberal should have one of our beautiful

MOTTO CARDS,

(7x22), ready for framing, for their homes. Twenty-five cents per copy.

Also Large Cards (14x22), and expressing the NINE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Thirty cents each.

Circulars sent FREE. Address all orders to

LIBERAL MOTTO SUPPLY CO., Troy, N. Y. 40tf

POCKET ATLAS

Of the

WORLD.

Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE.

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-page colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents, by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

40

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:

OR,

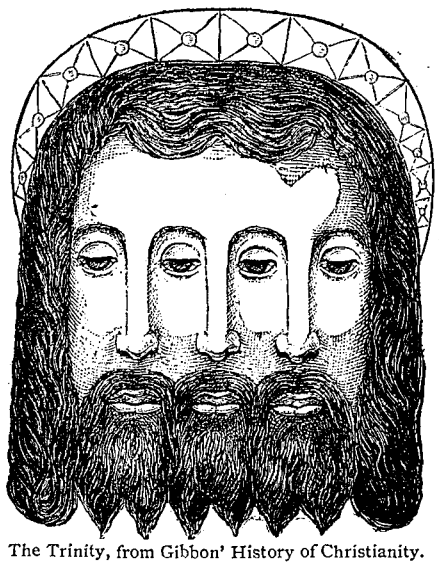
MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who have helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

PRICE, - - - - - $1.25.



Address THE TRUTH SEEKER. 33 Clinton Place. New York.

EVOLUTION:

A SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE.

By Robert C. Adams.

Paper, 25 cents. For Sale at this Office.

The Trinity, from Gibbon' History of Christianity.

History of Christianity

AND

A VINDICATION

of some passages in the "History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" by

EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With a Life of Gibbon, preface and notes by the editor, including critical notes by Guizot, Milman, Wenck, an "English Churchman," and other scholars.

1 vol. 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With 65 engravings. $2 00

This book shows when, where, and how Christianity originated, who were its founders, and what were the sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

"I know of no book that contains more real and valuable information upon the origin of Christianity."—R. G. INGERSOLL.

"One of the most learned and interesting books ever written and published."—Boston Investigator.

FOR SALE AT TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

JUST OUT.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

DR. SUNDERLAND'S LAST AND GREATEST WORK.

IDEOLOGY.

Mental Anesthesia Self-Induced, Miraculous Cures Self-Made, Involution and Evolution in the Human Mind as in the Whole of Things.

By DR. LAROY SUNDERLAND,

(Foundation Fellow of the Society of Science, Literature, and Art, London).

CONTENTS:

Vol. 1: Chapter I.—Selfhood. II.—Experimental. III.—Mental Anesthesia. IV.—Miraculous Cures. V.—Ideology. VI.—The Highest Laws. VII.—No "Royal Road." VIII.—Mentality. IX.—Idiocrasy. X.—"Christian" Science. XI.—The Bible Idea of Inspiration. XII.—The Bible Idea of Its God. XIII.—The Bible Idea of Witchcraft. XIV.—The Bible Idea of Mediums. XV.—Bloody Ideas, All Besmeared with Blood. XVI.—Barbarian Lies. XVII.—Humanity Forever.

Vol. 2: Chapter I.—Gullibility. II.—Mental Epidemics. III.—The South Sea Bubble. IV.—The Mississippi Scheme. V.—The Crusades. VI.—The Trance Epidemic. VII.—Fascination. VIII.—Religious Revivals. IX.—Clairvoyance. X.—The Witchcraft Madness. XI.—Modern Witchcraft. XII.—Mediumship a Wide-spread Epidemic. XIII.—Psychometry and "Deadheads." XIV.—The Contagious Dance of Death. XIV.—And What Then? XVI.—Science.

TWO VOLUMES IN ONE. PRICE $1.50.

Published by J. P. Mendum Investigator Office, Boston, Mass.

4t41

Ingersoll Catechised:

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies $1; 100 copies $3. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

THE MAGNIFICENT

COLORED LITHOGRAPHS

—OF THE—

D. M. BENNETT MONUMENT.

PRINTED IN SEVEN COLORS ON THE BEST LITHOGRAPH PAPER, SIZE, 22½ x 28½.

THE BRONZE MEDALLION

PRINTS AS LARGE AS A CABINET PHOTOGRAPH, THUS GIVING NOT ONLY A PICTURE OF THE MONUMENT, BUT AN ACCURATE

LIKENESS OF D. M. BENNETT.

The lithograph is designed for framing, and will be a treasure for all Liberals.

Sent, postpaid, and securely wrapped, to subscribers to the Monument Fund for 30 cents; to others, 50 cents. Address this office.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, with Sixty-seven Engravings, Preface, and Notes.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.
Zadig; or, Fate.
The Sage and the Atheist.
The Princess of Babylon.
Tho Man of Forty Crowns.
The Huron; or, The Pupil of Nature.
Micromegas.
The World as it Goes.
The Black and the White.
Memnom the Philosopher.
Andres Des Touches at Siam.
The Study of Nature.
A Conversation With a Chinese.
Plato's Dream.
A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.
An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, 4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00

A PHOTOGRAPH

OF THE BIBLE'S FLAT EARTH AND SOLID HEAVEN.

A Picture of the world as described in Genesis, with the texts of the Bible teaching the doctrin, and the passages from profane writer supporting it. Price 25 cents

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail:

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study, the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy. The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 33 Clinton Pl., New York.

A New and Useful Work.

WEDLOCK, OR, THE RIGHT RELATIONS OF THE SEXES—Disclosing the Laws of Conjugal Selection, and showing Who May and Who May Not Marry. A Scientific Treatise. By SAMUEL R. WELLS, One vol., 12mo, 250 pages; plain muslin, price, $1.50; in fancy gilt binding, $2.

Among the subjects treated are the following: Marriage a Divine Institution; Qualifications for Matrimony; The Right Age to Marry; Motives for Marrying; Marriages of Consanguinity—of Cousins, when Justifiable; Conjugal Selection—Affinities; Courtship—Long or Short; Duty of Parents; Marriage Customs and Ceremonies of all Nations; Ethics of Marriage; Second Marriages, are they Admissible? Jealousy—Its Cause and Cure; Causes of Separation and Divorce; Celibacy—Ancient and Modern; Polygamy and Pantagamy; Love Signs in the Features, and How to Read Them; Physiognomy; Sensible Love Letters—Examples; The Poet's Wife; The Model Husband and the Model Wife—the Mutual Obligations, Privileges, and Duties; The Poetry of Love, Courtship, and Marriage—Being a Practical Guide to all the Relations of HAPPY WEDLOCK.

The book is handsomely printed and beautifully bound It was intended more especially for young people, but may be read with interest and with profit by those of every age. Copies will be sent by post to any address on receipt of price.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

REPLY

TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S

"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."

By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

GOLDEN THRONE

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA.

INCLUDING

Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.

Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

TRAVELS IN FAITH,

From Tradition to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

MONKS, POPES,
AND
THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.
Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

A NEW BOOK!
By Andrew Jackson Davis
entitled
Beyond the Valley
a sequel to the
MAGIC STAFF
An Autobiography of
Andrew Jackson Davis.
Six Illustrations Picturing what Mr. Davis says he h s seen.

"Beyond the Valley" is a record of events and scenes in his private and public career, beginning where the Magic Staff ends, and bringing his psychological and private experiences truthfully up to the present day. This attractive volume will interest thousands who hav never read his preceding works. It will answer the ever-recurring questions concerning remarkable events in Mr. Davis's private life, and fully explains his various public labors for mankind.

"Beyond the Valley" is a companion volume to the "Magic Staff," and resembles it in style of workmanship—in paper, press-work, binding, etc. 408 pages. Price, $1.50.

For Sale by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORKS OF DR. W. F. EVANS.

The Primitiv Mind-Cure. The Nature and Power of Faith; or, Elementary Lessons in Transcendental Medicin. This work is a complete exposition of principles underlying the system of mental healing. It contains a full course of instruction in the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure. Price $1.50.

The Divine Law of Cure. A standard work on the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure, a reliable text-book in all the schools of mental healing. No work has ever been written of more practical value to physicians of all schools. The book is the result of the extensiv learning and research of the author, and exhibits a familiarity with the literature of the subject. It is profoundly religious without being offensivly dogmatic. It has been received with universal favor by all who are seeking light on the subject on which it treats—the cure of disease in ourselvs and others by mental and spiritual agencies. Price $1.50.

Mental Medicin. A Theoretical and Practical Treatis on Medical Psychology. This book contains a full exposition of the nature and laws of magnetism, and its application to the cure of disease. Price $1.25.

Soul and Body; or, The Spiritual Science of Health and Disease. Price $1.00.

The Mental Cure, illustrating the Influence of the Mind on the Body both in Health and Disease, and the Psychological Method of Treatment. Price $1.50.

All the above books sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

A COMMON SENSE
GUIDE TO CORRECT ENGLISH;
IN WHICH THE
DECLENSION OF THE NOUN
AND THE
CONJUGATION OF THE VERB
Are superseded by a few simple rules; and comprising the most rational and progressiv views of the best grammarians of the 19th century.
By J. L. BARKER,
Author of "An Improvement on I. J. Morris's Grammar."
PRICE, - - - 35 CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth
TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price, $2. 33 Clinton Place, New York

PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,
WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

Man. Whence and Whither.
By R. B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,
Author of "The Bible.—Whence and What?

About all that can be said for the existence of God and the future life of man, is here pungently presented, with an incidental discussion of many collateral questions, from a rationalistic standpoint.

1 vol, cloth. Price, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

St. Matthew Before the Court on a Charge of Forgery.

BY SECULARIST.

Price, 10 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TO APPEAR IMMEDIATELY.
MOSES BEFORE THE COURT.
By the same Author.

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the BibleExposed.
BY O. B. WHITFORD. M.D.
Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.

SECOND EDITION.

Price, 25 Cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY
John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY
BETTER THAN
Eternal Punishment.
BY M. BABCOCK

The subjects discussed in this finely-printed pamphlet are, besides the title above given, Satan and Hades, Some Reasons Why I am Not a Christian, Divinity of the Bible, Theological Logic, Preachers are Not Honest, Preachers Sometimes Differ, Infant Damnation, Prayer, The Cloak of Charity, The Clergy were Afraid, No Fear of Being Damned, But What are We to Do? But Why Should I Be Damned? Why Not Pray for the Damned? Conclusion.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
A HISTORICAL SKETCH.
By G. F. RINEHART. Price 25 cts.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK.

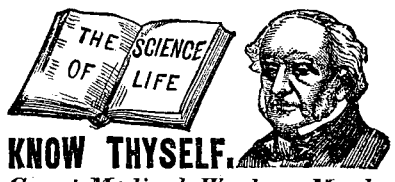
BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00



Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
POPULAR JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.

Headquarters for Fine Goods in the line of Genuin Diamonds; Fine Gold and Silver Watches;—Chains; Bracelets; Wedding and Presentation Rings; Jewelry of Latest style; Gold Pens; Silverware; Optical and Fancy Goods; 3 ounce Coin Silver Elgin Watch, $10; 4 ounce, Full Jeweled, Adjusted Pat. Regulator Stem Wind, $22; this same, fine movement, in best gold filled case, $35; with cheap movement, $25. Ladies' Solid Gold Elgin stem wind watches, $20, $24, and $32—14 karat, upward. Watches cleaned, finest work in the world, $1. Springs, $1, and returned per. reg. mail or ex., paid one way. Work for the trade at reduced rates and agents sending work once a week from every state in the Union are making lots of money. Best spectacles in the world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back on demand. Try me. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Patentee of Wettstein's New Freethought Badge. The most beautiful badge ever placed upon the market. Immense sale. Elegant present for Lady or Gent. Solid gold, $3; $3.50; extra heavy, $4; with diamond, artistically enameled, $10.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. ONLY $1.
BY MAIL POST-PAID.

KNOW THYSELF.
A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14

HEAL THYSELF

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y8

RUPTURES CURED by

my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

WHY DON'T HE LEND A HAND?
AND OTHER POEMS.

By S. P. PUTNAM, Author of Ingersoll and Jesus, Prometheus, Golden Throne, Waifs and Wanderings, Problems of the Universe, etc.

CONTENTS: Why Don't He Lend a Hand? The Golden Age, The Ideal and the Real, Not Dead but Living, Fruition, Hope, Thomas Paine, Nature's Gospel, Address to Deity, Giv us Light (Holdreth's poem often recited by Charles Watts).

PRICE 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

IMMORTALITY INHERENT IN NATURE.
BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.
Price, 60 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Gems of Thought.

AN upright minister of state asks what recommends a man; a corrupt minister asks who recommends him.—Colton's Lacon.

CHRISTIAN fetichism, though it dies hard, will be as glaringly absurd in time as heathen fetichism is now.—Waters's Through Rome on.

I KNEW a wise man that had it for a by-word, when he saw men hasten to a conclusion, "Stay a little, that we may make an end the sooner."—Bacon's Essays.

BIOGRAPHERS hav derived Milton's Presbyterianism in 1641 from the lessons twenty years before of Thomas Young, one of the authors of "Smectymnuus." This, however, is a misreading of Milton's mind—a mind which was an organic abode, "where seed was in itself;" self-determined; not one whose opinions can be accounted for by contagion or casual impact.—Mark Pattison's Milton.

MILTON was resolute in his religion at Rome, so much so that many were deterred from showing him the civilities they were prepared to offer. His rule, he said, was "not of my own accord to introduce in these places conversation about religion, but if interrogated respecting the faith, then, whatsoever I should suffer, to dissemble nothing. What I was, if anyone asked, I concealed from no one; if anyone in the very city of the pope attacked the orthodox religion I defended it most freely.—Mark Pattison's Milton.

LUCRETIUS, the Roman poet and philosopher that beautified the sect that was otherwise inferior to the rest, saith yet excellently well: "It is a pleasure to stand upon the shore, and to see ships tossed upon the sea: a pleasure to stand in the window of a castle, and to see a battle, and the adventures thereof below: but no pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantageground of truth [a hill not to be commanded, and where the air is always clear and serene], and to see the errors, and wanderings, and mists, and tempests, in the vale below;" so always that this prospect be with pity, and not with swelling or pride. Certainly, it is heaven upon earth, to hav a man's mind move in charity, rest in providence, and turn upon the poles of truth.—Bacon's Essays.

IT seems to me that the theory of the universal energy and operation of the supreme being is too bald even to carry conviction with it to a man sufficiently apprised of the weakness of human reason and the narrow limits to which it is confined in all its operations. Though the chain of arguments which conduct to it were ever so logical, there must arise a strong suspicion, if not an absolute assurance, that it has carried us quite beyond the reach of our faculties when it leads to conclusions so extraordinary and so remote from common life and experience. We are got into fairy-land long ere we hav reached the last steps of our theory; and there we hav no reason to trust our common methods of argument, or to think our usual analogies and probabilities hav any authority. Our line is too short to fathom such immense abysses. And, however we may flatter ourselvs that we are guided in every step which we take by a kind of verisimilitude and experience, we may be assured that this fancied experience has no authority when we apply it to subjects that lie entirely out of the sphere of experience.—Hume's Essays.

IF we open our eyes, and are honest enough to aver what they show us, we must acknowledge that the entire activity and aspiration of the civilized nations of our time is based on views of life which run directly counter to those entertained by Christ. The ratio of value between the here and the hereafter is exactly reversed. And this is by no means the result of the merely luxurious and so-called materialistic tendencies of our age, nor even of its marvelous progress in technical and industrial improvements; but it is equally due to its discoveries in science. . . . All that is best and happiest, which has been achieved by us, has been attainable only on the basis of a conception which regarded this present world as by no means despicable, but rather as man's proper field of labor, as the sum total of the aims to which his efforts should be directed. If from the force of habit a certain proportion of workers in this field still carry the belief in a hereafter along with them, it is nevertheless a mere shadow which attends their footsteps, without exercising any determining influence on their actions.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS had settled in London at the end of 1752. Johnson met him at the house of Miss Cotterell. Reynolds had specially admired Johnson's "Life of Savage," and, on their first meeting, happened to make a remark that delighted Johnson. The ladies were regretting the loss of a friend to whom they were under obligations. "You hav, however," said Reynolds, "the comfort of being relieved from a burden of gratitude." The saying is a little too much like Rochefoucauld, and too true to be pleasant; but it was one of those keen remarks which Johnson appreciated, because they prick a bubble of commonplace moralizing without demanding too literal an acceptation. Johnson went home to sup with Reynolds. and became his intimate friend.—Leslie Stephen's Johnson.

"WE are told that we must "walk by faith and not by sight," said Marjory. "Ah, yes, I know all we are told. But meanwhile, unfortunately. we are blessed, or cursed, by the possession of brains and hearts, ingenious compounds of nerves and other capacities. If these could be suspended at will, 'walking by faith' might be another matter. But as it is, when the heart compound has endured to a certain point, the brain compound cannot help beginning to reason; to wonder why this should be; if there be no way of stopping or alleviating our trouble; if an almighty power could not find a way; whether, if that power be almighty, it can be kind; if kind, almighty; and so on to questions more complicated than any one who had not thought of them could imagin. And the end of all that is, one does not know what to believe, and one feels—at least I feel—that the enigma of our existence remains yet to be solved. The sphinx divides, if it does not devour, these hapless mortals who attempt to solve it."—Marjory—A Study, etc.

To the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York:

The Constitution of our State guarantees that "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State to all mankind." The general principle of American Government is equality of all men before the law. This, as Your Honorable Body is aware, involves the principle, already acknowledged in theory, of the Total Separation of Church and State. But Church and State are now practically united by the following statutes:

1. The law exempting Church Property from Taxation.

2. The laws appropriating Money from the Public Treasury for the support of Institutions founded and managed chiefly by Sectarian Denominations.

3. The law compelling the Observance of Sunday as a religious holy day.

The undersigned, Citizens of the State of New York, do therefore respectfully but earnestly petition Your Honorable Body to repeal all the laws or parts of laws of this State which are violations of the above principles. Our reasons for asking this are:

1. The Churches are voluntary associations properly to be supported by the voluntary contributions of their members. 2. The State is compulsory. Every citizen must pay taxes. And we submit that it is unjust to a large and growing body of voters to be compelled to pay for the support of Churches which they cannot conscientiously attend; for the hire of Ministers in our Legislature and Public Institutions, in whose doctrines they are unable to believe; and to observe as holy a day to them no more sacred than any other. We also submit that the exemption of Churches from taxation, the appropriation of money for the hire of Ministers and the support of Sectarian Institutions, and the Legal observance of Sunday as a holy day, are discriminations in favor of one form of religion, are abridgments of the free exercise of religious preferences, and are therefore unconstitutional.

NAMES.	RESIDENCE.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17
The National Liberal League,	28
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73
Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardener,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,	Elizabeth Cady Stanton,	J. D. Shaw,

Gottlieb: His Life. A romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written by S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By Mrs. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Odds and Ends.

"PA," said a young disciple, "was Daniel a barber?" "No, my son. God's men do not go round scraping acquaintances. But what made you think that Daniel was a barber?" "I read it in a book." "What did you read, my son?" "It said that Daniel bearded the lion in his den."—National Weekly.

"PRAY call me a pretty name," said he,
One night to his darling Carrie.
The girl he had courted so long that she Thought he never meant to marry.
Up from his bosom she raised her head,
And her cheeks grew red as roses,
"I think I will call you man," she said,
"For they say that 'man proposes.'"

AMAZIN' GRACE HEARD FROM.

A few months ago, says the Arkansaw Traveler, Col. W. P. Grace, one of the most prominent lawyers in the state, had occasion to make a horseback journey into a wild district lying between two great mountains of the Ozark range. One day, while the heat was intense, he came upon a small log house surrounded by a fence of poles. An old fellow with long yellow whiskers, like the dead silk on an ear of corn, sat on the fence, engaged, it seems, in the work of killing buffalo gnats.

"How are you?" said the colonel, reining up his horse.

"Little perter than I wuz, but ain't so powerful pert yit," slapping at a gnat.

"Will you be so kind as to bring me a dipper of water?"

"Dipper!" he repeated contemptuously. "I ain't seed one sense I went down to take a look at the legislatur.' Ef you drink here, stranger, yer'll hafter drink outen a gourd. Want it?"

"Yes; I am thirsty enough to drink out of a straw hat."

The old fellow went into the cabin and soon returned with a gourd, dripping with water. The colonel took the vegetable vessel, turned it up, but only for a moment. Spitting out the water, he returned the gourd, and said:

"Put the therfmometer in that water and it would run up to 150."

"Don't know about that, Cap'n; but put a wiggletail in it an' he'd caper round mightily."

"When did you draw it?"

"Wa'nt drawed; it was fotched."

"When did you bring it from the spring?"

"Day afore yistiddy."

"Why havn't you brought some since?"

"'Cause this ain't giv out yet, an' another reason is, wife, she's down with the chills."

"Can't you leave her long enough to get water?"

"Tain't that. She ain't able to go after it. She tends ter the water."

"How far is the spring?"

"'Bout three miles."

"Which direction?"

"Fust one an' then tuther. Path 's powerful crooked."

"Why don't you dig a well?"

"Weather's too hot."

"Why don't you dig one when it is cold?"

"'Cause the ground's friz."

"How far is it to the next house?"

"Thar ain't none."

"What's your name, my friend?"

"Patterson. What's your name?"

"My name is Grace."

"What!" exclaimed the squatter, dropping the gourd. "Air yer the feller they sing about et church? Yer ain't old Amazin' Grace, air you? Well, dog my cats. Git down. I've been waitin' to meet yer ever since I heard 'em sing about yer so much. I reckon yer air a powerful hand at rasslin'. Jis' git off an' fling me down once. I never wur flung yet, an' daddy he told me 'fore he died that Grace would come 'long arter a while an' fling me. Yer wuz a mighty long time a comin', but yer air here at last. What, yer ain't gwine to leave? Don't reckon daddy knowed what a man I'd be agin yer got here. Wall, er good by, Grace; don't reckon I'll ever see yer no mo'."

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 44. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, October 31, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

RICH men are our right-hand men in the church.—Rev. Dr. McCullough, editor of the Philadelphia Methodist ("rat" paper.)

THE Chinese government has unanimously decided to proceed steadily with the work of building railways throughout the empire.

A GRAVESTONE in a Massachusetts churchyard is said to contain the following inscription:

"I came in the morning—it was spring,
And I smiled;
I walked out at noon—it was summer,
And I was glad;
I sat me down at night—it was winter,
And I slept."

THE fires in the retorts of the United States Crematory at Fresh Pond, L. I., were started last Friday with a view to a gradual and thorough drying of the fire-proof mortar, and the 17,000 fire brick used in the building of the furnace. The experimental tests in cremation are to be made this week on the bodies of animals.

THE Rev. C. C. McCabe, who was an army chaplain during the war, writes to the New York Herald that once when he visited General Grant, the general locked the door and both men went on their knees together and prayed. It looks as if this Parson McCabe wished to lessen the respect which the people entertain for the memory of General Grant.

ALREADY, after their terrible experience of cholera, the people of Valencia are making great preparations for the annual bull fight. The bull ring holds 20,000 spectators, not including the many babies in arms carried there. Then there is to be a Te Deum, celebrated with such pomp as to make it a popular amusement, and this to be followed by the great annual fair. Those dead from cholera are utterly forgotten.

THE Jews of the world numbered 6,377,602 last June, according to statistics gathered by the Geographical Society of Marseilles, and were distributed as follows: Europe, 5,407,602; Asia, 245,000; Africa, 413,000; America, 300,000; Australia, 12,000. Nearly a third of the European Jews liv in Russia. Austria and Hungary come next. In the three Scandinavian kingdoms, Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, there are 7,000 Israelites all told.

ON a recent Sunday a Roman Catholic priest in St. Louis announced from his pulpit that none of the children of his parish who attended the public schools would be prepared for their first communion by any of the priests of the parish. In Boston the Catholics are trying to get a controling power in the school board, and hav urged their women to register under the law permitting women to vote for school commissioners; and in one strongly Catholic ward 277 women hav registered this year where none at all were registered last year. These two instances indicate the policy of this un-American sect, namely, to get possession of the schools, and run them for its own interests when possible; and when this cannot be done, to keep Roman Catholic children away from them by ecclesiastical penalties.

"WHAT shall be done with the evening service in our churches is a growing problem," says the Independent. "More and more the people who attend the morning service are disinclined to come out to a second meeting. Congregations, with rare exceptions, are small and uninspiring to the preacher; and preachers and pastors are at their wits' end to know what to do. In many cases—especially in the towns and smaller cities—the evening service is given up, and the house of God is closed for want of an audience. It is bad enough that our churches should be hermetically sealed six days out of the seven, without going on in this bad direction, and still further closing them on the seventh day." We should recommend the pastors of churches to preach common sense instead of superstition as one way of filling the pews. The people are tired of hearing the centuries old guesswork of a lot of barbarians.

A PENNSYLVANIA Sunday-school sent 600 dolls to the heathen. They were lost at sea, and a subscription is now on foot to send out another invoice. The Boston Transcript thinks it will surprise the heathen when they see what fine idols the Americans can make, and says it is not improbable that a lively export trade will immediately spring up.

THE London Truth reports a silly piece of Sabbatarianism from Birkenhead. The dock board in that place hav totally prohibited pleasure-boats from making use of the docks on Sundays, and as an immediate consequence of this arbitrary proceeding a great many people are deprived of a very harmless amusement, and several boat-owners are compelled to suffer a serious diminution of their incomes. The matter is made worse by the fact that the docks were originally formed out of a natural inlet of the sea—Wallasey Pool. That the public should not only suffer considerably from the inclosure of the pool, but also be partially deprived of the use of it when inclosed, seems to be adding insult to injury.

IN the course of a very sensible article discussing the efforts being made to introduce Bible instruction in the public schools of Australia, the Melbourne Leader givs some statistics which are a complete answer to the assertion that the abolition of religious teaching in the public schools leads to an increase of immorality. In the five years ending 1869, just before the present English School Act was passed, the average number of cases of imprisonment for criminal offenses in a population of 19,000,000 was 12,000. In the five years ending 1881, during which the act was in operation and the population of England had increased to 26,000,000, the average number of prisoners who troubled the police was only 9,300.

THE antics of the Rev. Mr. Downes, Boston's latest pride, cause Peck's Sun to remark: "It may sound a little sacrilegious to apply the term 'smart Aleck' to a minister, but if Parson Downes, of Boston, is reported correctly, that phrase seems to fit him like the paper on the wall. It is said that as he read off the first lines of a hymn at an evening meeting, he coughed violently, and after clearing his throat shouted at the top of his harsh voice, 'I wish I was a tom-cat—an old tom-cat.' At this the dense audience laughed, yelled, hissed, and hooted. When the noise had subsided somewhat, he continued, 'No, perhaps not for the reason you think or as the public would say, because I want to scratch and fight, but really so that I would always keep in good voice.' If some one of his audience had fired a bootjack or some other equally effectiv missil at him, it would hav been quite proper."

THE ancient Hindoo faith, which has withstood the assaults of Christian missionary enterprise without suffering appreciable injury, has been grieviously shaken at last; not by preaching though, nor by the spread of education, nor through the efforts of the "Esoteric Buddhists." It was the earthquake which lately rumbled throughout the greater part of Hindostan that accomplished this wonderful feat. Among other cities, the volcanic upheaval visited holy Benares, and, to the great surprise of devout Hindoos, sent many a rickety building tumbling to the ground. Thereupon the Mohammedans laughed, and the Hindoos were wroth, for Moslem mirth is very irritating to the gentle one. Why did the followers of the prophet mock at their fellow-subjects? Because it is an article of faith among the latter, that Benares does not rest on the earth at all, but on the back of a supernatural tortoise. Hence it should enjoy immunity from shocks of earthquake, and when these convulsions were taking place, the learned Brahmans of Benares openly derided the notion that the holy city could be shaken. The serious matter is that Hindooism itself has received a shock. But we make very little doubt that some astute Brahman will shortly discover that the tortoise had a sneezing fit. Of course, that would at once account for the tumbling down of buildings, and in process of time it might come to be regarded as an additional proof of the ancient article of faith. —London Globe.

THE prayer to St. Roch by which the Catholics seek to influence God to stop the small-pox scourge runs something like this: "Hail, O St. Roch, most holy and of most noble origin, who bearest on thy left side the stigmata of the cross, St. Roch, pilgrim and traveler; thou hast miraculously cured by thy holy touch those who hav been stricken by the plague. O Lord, who didst promis to St. Roch in communicating to him a written message by an angel that all those who invoke him would not be stricken by the plague, vouchsafe, we beseech thee, that we who remember him may be preserved, through his merits and prayers, from the plague that kills the body as well as that which kills the soul. Through our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen." This absurd piece of mummery having been gone through with, the disease continues on its devastating way with unabated vigor.

A SMALL and sudden fair was held in the parlor of a minor hotel at Saratoga for the benefit of the Grant monument fund. The women guests were asked to contribute such handiwork as they could get ready without delay. There had been a hesitancy about inviting the Jewesses of the house to take part in the affair, but the decision was that to let them in would not imply a social recognition. This came to the Jewish ears, of course, and some declined to participate. Not so the fairest and richest Rebecca of them all. She promised to giv a handsome piece of embroidery. "And to prove that I hold no race prejudice," she added, with ominous sweetness, "I shall work on silk a Madonna." She secluded herself in her room while on the job, and the gentile maidens praised her for consenting to embroider the most revered of Christianity's saints. But when the thing was unrolled to be placed on sale the countenance of Mary was found to be, not the conventional portraiture, but the typical face of a Jewess. "As the mother of Christ was one of my people," she demurely remarked, "I thought it was right to be correct in my work." The purchaser was a Jew.

THE public school question has been a burning one in Holland for the past twenty-five years, as it is becoming in all the great civilized nations. It is one of the perplexities before the states-general, now in session, in the form of a proposed revision of the constitution. Article 194 provides that in the state schools there shall be no religious teaching. It will not surprise those who recollect the first outbreak of indignation in New England at the proposal to remove the Bible from the schools, to hear that the most activ foes of the state schools in Holland are the Calvinists. With these are leagued in opinion, and at times in action, the Roman Catholics. The latter occupy a peculiar position. They are too weak in numbers to take an independent stand. Therefore they combine with the Calvinists to break down the state schools, although they are equally anxious lest their allies should obtain a control in them. Their aim is to prevent the setting up of state schools, tax supported—where religious schools can be maintained—the same position as that taken by the Romanists in this country. There is also an opposition to the state schools on the part of the Conservativs, on the ground of expense. Indeed, the outlays for public school buildings hav had something to do with that unwonted deficit which now plagues the Dutch treasury. This is an effectiv argument, as the French government has found to its cost. What the outcome of the struggle will be is difficult to say, but it is presumed the Liberal policy will be maintained, though perhaps with some curtailment of its expenditure. No such revolution backward as occurred last year in Belgium would naturally be expected, unless this question becomes complicated with others. Just now there is a pressing demand for extension of the suffrage, and Dutch parties are so hopelessly cut up into groups, that almost any bargain and combination is possible. The phases of the public school question in Hollaud and the other European countries are worth our watching. The signs are multiplying that we shall hav it among our own most absorbing issues before very many years. —Christian at Work.

News of the Week.

THE Grant memorial fund is over $92,000.

THE possibility of war between Russia and Austria is under discussion.

THE whole number of voters registered in New York this year is 215,898.

THE small-pox in Montreal has broken out among the prisoners in the common jails.

HENRY SHAW, "Josh Billings," was buried in Lanesboro, Mass., his nativ town, last Saturday.

THERE are said to be a half million nativ Christians in the Chinese empire converted by Roman Catholic missionaries.

CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED, of the "Bennett-Teed Discussion," is running for coroner on the Prohibition ticket in this city.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has sent $1,000 to the New York State Committee to help pay the expense of re-electing Governor Hill.

MR. JENKINS, prominent in church matters in Syracuse, is alleged to be a defaulter to a firm which had long employed him as a bookkeeper.

EFFORTS to hav the sentence of Reil, the Canadian rebel, commuted to imprisonment for life hav failed, and he will probably be hanged.

HANLAN, the Canadian oarsman, was badly beaten at Troy, N. Y., last Saturday, in a race with Teemer, of McKeesport, Pa., for the championship and $2,000.

RETURNS show that Foraker had a plurality of 18,158 votes for governor in the recent Ohio elections. The Prohibitionists polled 28,064 votes, and the Greenbackers 2,963. Foraker is now in New York, stumping for Davenport.

BECAUSE the Rev. B. F. Smoll, aged 53, of Klinesville, Pa., took a wife thirty years younger than himself, his congregation has voted him out of his pulpit. Some of his letters hav been stolen and published, as he claims, in a garbled condition.

THE Presbyterian synod of South Carolina has condemned the action of the directors of the Columbia Seminary, who deposed Professor Woodrow for accepting the theory of evolutiou. In the synod of Virginia action was taken indicating just the contrary sentiment.

THE Rev. Mr. Hunt, formerly of Mystic, Conn., has bought suit for divorce against his wife, and she has met him with a similar action. Hunt is a Baptist and made himself notorious some years ago by an escapade with a woman on the huckleberry-clad hills north of Mystic village.

Two women hav registered as voters in Brooklyn, and declare their intention of voting on election day. Dr. Clemence Lozier presented herself for registration in this city, but was not accepted. The woman suffragists claim that there is no law in the state which forbids women to vote.

A STATUE of the late William E. Dodge was unveiled on the 22d in a public square at Thirty-fifth street and Broadway. Upon which the average citizen remarks, "Who the devil was William E. Dodge?" He was a millionaire, extraordinarily pious, and a backer of Anthony Comstock.

THE Rev. Dr. Curry has just been appointed minister from this country to Spain. His opinion of Roman Catholicism is that it is worse than cannibalism and is heathenizing in its tendencies. As Spain is a Catholic country, the advisability of keeping the Rev. Dr. Curry at home is being seriously discussed.

CANON FARRAR, the English church official, now in this country, preached last Sunday in Trinity church, New York. His sermon was an empty affair, and at no place showed any signs of excellence. Cannon Farrar is the man who wrote the epitaph of Andre the spy. At the close of his sermon he rode away with Cyrus Field, the millionaire who built the monument on which the epitaph is engraved.

Communications.

The Trojan Horse in the Platform of the Prohibitionists.

The Greeks, at the close of their ten years' siege of Troy, at the suggestion of Minerva, their tutelary goddess, constructed a large wooden horse, capable of holding a body of armed men, and placed it before the walls of the city, hoping that the enemy would take it in, and that the soldiers concealed in its belly would come forth at the right time, and open the gates to the conquerors. They then took their seeming departure. The hoodwinked Trojans, after contemplating the horse for a while, thought they were about to capture a work of art. But Laokoon, a priest of Apollo, had more discernment than the rest, and protested against the folly of bringing the horse inside the walls, saying, in words quoted a thousand times since for their wisdom: Timeo Danaos et dena ferents, which, when interpreted, means, I see the claws of a cat underneath the meal. But the stratagem succeeded. The Trojan gullibles were in the overwhelming majority; and the patriotic Laokoon, stigmatized, probably, as an ex-priest who did not know much, was forced to see the ruin of his country. Not only so, but Minerva, in revenge upon him for warning his countryman against the treachery of her beloved Greeks, sent two enormous serpents from the sea, which entwined themselvs around Laokoon and his two sons, and crushed them to death.

Now, the first plank of the Prohibition platform is a wooden horse, full of armed soldiers, placed there by that sleepless, unscrupulous, and revolutionary party who are aiming to put God into the Constitution. Under the guise of piety, which they see is the dodge that so many other rogues successfully resort to in order to carry out their fraudulent purposes, they are attempting to inaugurate in this country the old European system that kings and priests rule the people by the grace and authority of God, and that the people are bound to submit to every ordinance of kings and governors for the Lord's sake. The plank is as follows: "The Prohibition Home Protection Party, in national convention assembled, acknowledge Almighty God as the rightful sovereign of all men, from whom the just powers of government are derived, to whose laws human enactments should conform, and that peace, prosperity, and happiness can come to the people only when their laws of the national and state governments are in accord with the divine will."

The first dangerous principle in this primary article of the Prohibition creed is, that the just powers of political government are derived from Almighty God as the rightful sovereign of all men. This is in the face and teeth of the fundamental principle for which our fathers, in 1776, went to war with England, and upon which, after the war was over, they erected the present republic, that, "all civil governments derive their just powers," not from Almighty God, nor from kings or priests, but "from the consent of the governed, and that when any form of government becomes destructiv of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it."

I know the Prohibitionists quote the scriptures as authority, citing the words of Paul in the thirteenth chapter of Romans: "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselvs damnation." But our National Constitution neither knows, nor recognizes as authority, any scriptures, whether they be Jewish, Christian, Mohammedan, or what not. Thus we see that this fundamental article of the Prohibitionists is brimful of treason to a republican form of government. Had such a political party arisen in 1790 with such a platform of principles, the leaders would hav been arrested, tried, and put to death as traitors to the United States government. The masses of this new party, like their illustrious predecessors of Troy, are probably not cognizant of the cunning trick played upon their confidence. But the leaders of the party, the priesthood of the God-in-the-Constitution stamp, who built the platform of principles, knew well what they were about, and now openly boast that last year's vote in favor of the platform was a true indication of the strength of the God-in-the-Constitution principle and policy in this country.

It is said that the Congress of 1873, which, in the closing hours of its session, demonetized the silver dollar, were so drunk when they passed the bill that they did not know what they were doing. But, drunk or sober, the bill, by their votes, got the authority of law. In like manner, if the Prohibition ticket last year had carried the day, the people by this time would hav found out that they had bartered away their liberties. When I pointed this out to a Prohibitionist, after the election, he turned pale at the discovery. His zeal for Prohibition had destroyed his level-headedness. To secure an imaginary good, he had voted for a policy that, if successful, would be the suicide of the republic.

The second false and dangerous principle in the Prohibitionist creed is, that all human enactments should conform to the will of God; and that peace, prosperity, and happiness can come to the people only when the laws of the national and state governments are in accord with the will of God, as it is expressed in the Bible. This takes the ground that the Bible is a law-book for men and nations, full of judicial and political rulings and decisions; that it contains a set of theological doctrins for persons to believe; and that all these should be incorporated into, and be enforced by, the laws of the general and state governments of this country, as they were in Europe during those centuries when the church held supreme sway over the nations. Let me giv them a few extracts from this inspired code of civil and ecclesiastical law, that our people may see what our Prohibition brethren are aiming to accomplish under the guise of a temperance crusade.

(a) The thirteenth chapter of Deuteronomy contains the law concerning the serving and worshiping of God, and the duties which the civil magistrate owes to those who hold heretical opinions. As it is too long and tautological to be embodied in a newspaper article, the salient points alone are touched, with the hope that the reader will turn to the chapter and see in detail the force of the law as it bears upon those who believe in, and worship, any other God than the Jewish Jehovah. "If there arise among you a prophet, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder [a miracle], saying, Let us go after other gods which thou hast not known, and let us serve them; then thou shalt not hearken unto that prophet: and that prophet shall be put to death. If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee saying, Let us go, and serve other gods, namely, the gods of the people round about, thou shalt not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither shall thine eye pity or spare him; neither shalt thou conceal him. But thou shalt surely kill him; thine hand shall be first upon him to put him to death; and thou shalt stone him with stones that he die."

This law, although professing to be enacted by an all-wise God, goes upon the principle that belief of a proposition of any kind is a voluntary act of the mind, and can be controled by mere authority, just as a man's actions are. But there never was a greater mistake. A man's belief is involuntary. He believes according to the amount of evidence, more or less, that he sees. If all the evidence in a given case is before his mind he will come to a just conclusion, if he knows how to reason. If only a part of the evidence is present, he may believe that to be true which is not true. Mere authority, or the opinions of other men, called in logic the argumentum ad verecundiam, may silence him, but cannot assure him that he holds an error. To convince him you must show by facts, and arguments based upon them, that he is mistaken in his judgment, if he really be so, and when he sees the opposit truth he will believe it, and cannot help doing so.

How intrinsically unreasonable and wicked, then, is this law of Deuteronomy, which the Prohibitionists, because it is found in the Bible, say has all the authority of a law of God, and which inflicts the punishment of death on a person for his religious opinions and worship! We hav scores of sects in the United States, each of which has a conception of God different from that of all the rest. If this law were in force, what a time the courts of justice and the executioner would hav in trying and putting heretics to death! The Jews compounded this terrible medicin for the cure of heresy in their theocracy, but they little dreamed when they administered it to their brethren, that the day would come when, as a people, they themselvs would be compelled to drink the cup to the dregs. For in process of time their nationality was destroyed by Roman power, and on the incoming of Christianity, their creed being deemed a deadly heresy, their descendants hav been chased by fire and sword through all nations, except our own, and for 1800 years, because they did not and could not believe as the Christian church required them. So intense is the hate generated by the sentiment of religion, that, to this day and in this enlightened age, they are discriminated against. Even in this country, if our Infidel Constitution did not protect them, religious zealots, "very jealous for the Lord of hosts," would light again the torch of persecution.

(b) But let us see how the peace, prosperity, and happiness of the American people would be promoted by bringing the codes of the general and state governments into accord with the divine law book on another point. In Exodus xxii, 15, it is written, for the guidance of all nations, as the Prohibitionists allege, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to liv."

So pious and obedient to God were all the nations of Europe during the reign of the church, that, on the authority of Sir John Lubbock, a member of the British Parliament and author of a work entitled, "The Childhood of the Human Race," nine millions of persons were put to death in that country on the charge of being witches and in league with the devil. These eight fatal words of God composing the law on this subject are found in the same code with the Decalogue, or "Ten Commandments," and with all the rest of the laws therein contained, and are as binding to-day as they ever were, since they hav never been repealed or modified by the Divine Lawgiver. During our colonial period, and before the formation of the United States government, our Puritan fathers, believing with the Prohibitionists, or, rather, the Prohibitionists believing with them, that the law was a divine one, and still in force, embodied it in their laws, and executed it in Massachusetts. These "witches" of antiquity, of whom so many millions were put to death by the command of God, were the materializing and healing mediums, the clairvoyants and clairaudients, the good and bad "controls" of this day. And if our laws were conformed to the divine laws, as the Prohibitionists solemnly declare they ought to be, what a holocaust there would be in Boston, which seems to be the headquarters of Spiritualist mediums and Spiritualism itself! The church believes in the plenary inspiration of the Bible, and the perpetual authority of its teachings, and obligation of its laws upon men and nations. It was her priesthood that hid this Trojan Horse under the planks of the Prohibition platform, hoping that the people, in the craze of a righteous indignation at the vice of drunkenness, would endorse its fatal principles. The rack, the iron boot, and the thumbscrews are all hid away in the ark of the covenant, and would be brought out again for use upon the modern witches and wizards and leaguers with the devil, as the church considers Spiritualistic mediums to be.

(c) Among the many bloody statutes in the divine law-book is one which, in this day and country, where children in their teens think they know so much more than their parents, might well be contemplated. It is one for the punishment of disobedient and rebellious children. It is in Deuteronomy xxi, 18–21, and reads thus:

> If a man hav a stubborn and rebellious son, which will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother, and that, when they hav chastened him, will not hearken unto them: then shall his father and his mother lay hold of him, and bring him out to the elders of the city, and shall say unto the elders of the city, This our son is stubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice; he is a glutton and a drunkard. And all the men of his city shall stone him with stones, that he die.

This law was actually executed in Geneva by the syndics, or criminal magistrates, of that city during the reign of John Calvin, and, although never executed, was incorporated into the code of the Massachusetts theocracy in 1646. But the law was so cruel that even the Puritans, who seldom stuck at the performance of any known duty, seemed to think that it was too hard to stone to death a disobedient and drunken boy, and therefore amended the divine statute by interpolating the exceptions "unless it shall be proved that the parents hav been very unchristianly negligent in the education of such children," or else that the children "hav been forced thereunto, to preserve themselvs from death and maiming."

(d) Let us see, in one more case, how this fundamental principle in the platform of the Prohibition party would work in promoting the happiness of our people. In Exodus xxxv, 2, 3, we hav a repetition of the law of the Sabbath in the words: "Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to you an holy day, a Sabbath of rest to the Lord; whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death. Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitation upon the Sabbath day." Now, let it be remembered that this law of the Sabbath, so often enjoined in the divine statute book, has never been repealed, but is as binding to-day as it was in Judea. It should therefore be incorporated into our laws, and enforced. The Jews still believe that "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt do no manner of work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle [horses and oxen], nor the stranger within thy gates." The only difference between the Jews and Christians on this subject is, that the former believe the Sabbath institution should be observed, according to the express language of the statute, on the seventh day of the week, while the latter think, without one particle of evidence, that the day has been changed to the first day of the week. But both believe in the perpetual obligation of the institution, since the unchangeable author of a moral law could not repeal, or even amend it, without an impeachment of his own moral character. Now, no matter whether the first or seventh day of the week is the time of the true Sabbath, the law itself requires that whoever does any manner of work on that day should be put to death. How would the Sabbatarian clergy, and the Prohibitionists, like it if this law were incorporated into our state codes, and enforced upon the citizens? There is not a clergyman in the land who rolls up the whites of his eyes in the pulpit at the desecration of the Sabbath by pleasure excursions, but what would be put to death on Monday mornings for a wilful violation of the statute, for every one of them kindled fires in their habitations, and cooked food on the Sabbath day. The hypocrisy of Christian Sabbatarianism is as gigantic as the Alps, for it violates every part of the Sabbath law, and for obedience substitutes church-going and worship, which are not required by the law at all. It only requires an absolute cessation from all kinds of labor.

It is not to be wondered at that the Prohibitionists, being generally benevolent people, should be driven nearly crazy in contemplating the ravages made upon health, character, and happiness which the use of intoxicating liquors is making in this country. Nine hundred millions of dollars are expended in a single year in the indulgence of this habit, and the government reports show that, notwithstanding the efforts made by temperance agitators and legislators, no perceptible effect is seen in diminishing the quantity of liquor used; nay, the figures show that the consumption is increasing. This fact alone should teach the Prohibitionists that there is a fault somewhere in their method of reform, and that they ought to search and find out what it is. In works of moral reform it will never do to take counsel of our feelings alone. Our feelings are simply the steam in the locomotiv. Our brain, our cool judgment, must control and guide the engin, else it gets off the track and accomplishes nothing but harm. For the first time in the history of reform responsibility is lifted from the shoulders of the actor, the drunkard, and placed upon the person who in a legal traffic, from which the government derives a vast revenue, sells him the article which intoxicates, just as a druggist sells narcotics to those who use them. Nearly all the murders and suicides of the day are committed with firearms. But who ever thought of forbidding by law the manufacture and sale of guns and revolvers? We can only prevent suicides and murders by the slow process of social reform, and educating the people into such views of the world and of life that no one would want to commit suicide or deprive his neighbor of existence. There are vices of barbarism and vices of civilization, and a liking for that stupid and idiotic condition called drunkenness is one of the latter; as is seen in England, Scotland, and the United States—the three most "civilized" and most drunken nations on earth.

The use of liquor and other stimulants, like tobacco, is unnatural, and all unnatural habits, when once formed and long indulged, are the most difficult to break up. It can be done by showing that personal vices are against the health and character of those who indulge in them. In reforming a man we must begin with his grandmother. But the Prohibitionists make the same mistake that our Puritan ancestors did in imagining that good habits and piety could be injected into a man's character by statute law, just as you would stuff a sausage. One would suppose that the utter failure of the plan, in Old as well as in New England, would convince the Prohibitionists that whereas the love of intoxicating liquors has been the slow growth of long generations of the past, it can only be eliminated by the study of physiology and pathology, the application of the laws of heredity, and by cherishing in our youth the sentiments of self-respect and self-government. The Prohibition movement and all other temperance efforts may clip off some of the outer branches of the upas-tree of drunkenness, but they do not giv one deadly blow at the roots. LAOKOON.

Money for Masses.

The following is a part of an editorial in the New York Herald of Oct. 9th. The editorial comment with which it concludes is significant, and suggests the painful thought that perhaps the old battles with Catholicism are to be fought over and over again. Romanism never relents. Mankind easily forgets.

MASSES FOR THE SOUL.

In August, 1882, Margaret Gilman placed in the hands of Henry McArdle a sum of money with the request that after the death of herself and her husband it be used for having masses said by a Roman Catholic priest for the repose of their souls. Soon afterward Mr. and Mrs. Gilman, who were very old, died. A relativ of the former became his administrator and sued McArdle to recover the money held for masses.

Judge Freedman, of the Superior Court in this city, decided that the defendant was bound to pay over the money.

This decision was based on the ground that to sustain a trust the person for whose benefit it is intended must be living; that there cannot be a valid trust for a dead beneficiary. By the statute of the state a trust for charitable or religious uses is valid, and in such case the question of a dead or a living beneficiary does not arise. But Judge Freedman held that saying masses for the soul is neither a charitable nor a religious use within the meaning of this statute.

This decision was widely discussed when it was rendered two years ago, and it was generally condemned by the Catholic press and clergy throughout the country. The Herald at that time disputed its legal soundness and cited Pennsylvania and Illinois decisions against it. By the common law of England money or property set apart for saying masses for the dead falls under the ban of "superstitious uses," and gifts and bequests for such purpose are held illegal. But this doctrin has no place in the jurisprudence of a country where the largest civil and religious liberty is guaranteed to all.

Judge Freedman's opinion and that of the General Term affirming it hav been overruled by the Court of Appeals, which upholds the validity of trusts for masses for the repose of the soul. Its decision enlarges the liberty of a person to do what he pleases with his money and removes what would hav been an unwarranted restraint upon the conscience of a large part of the community.

The Court of Appeals, in upholding "the validity of trusts for masses for the repose of souls," takes us out of the nineteenth century, with all its boasted advancement, away back into the blackest of the dark ages. Nothing more is required, after that point is conceded, to secure the future supremacy of Catholicism in any country making the concession. I shall not attempt even to sketch the terrible history of this most dangerous pretension of the Romish priesthood. I will only suggest to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER that they read a few of the thousands of pages already written in which the mournful details of humanity's long struggle are recorded. I will, however, cite a quite modern example.

In the infancy of New Granada the "validity of trusts for masses for the repose of souls" was regarded as a matter of course, and the consequence, as a matter of course, was that in a few years all of what we call real estate was in "dead hands," that is to say, very nearly all the wealth of that country was held in trust" for masses for the repose of souls."

The dictator, Mosquiera, who did not believe that there were any souls in purgatory, came into power about thirty years ago, and said that what was claimed for souls in purgatory did not belong to anybody, and should be taken by the state. He was as good as his word, and confiscated all the property so held. The method of creating the trusts was as follows: The dying sinner, hoping to shorten up the penalty of his wrong-doings, was generally selfish enough on his death bed to forget even his nearest of kin, and devote all his wealth to getting his soul through purgatory. He appointed a "patron," as executor, or trustholder, who was to hold the estate and pay for a specified number of masses every year. An estate that paid enough to support one priest was called a chaplaincy, Capillania, and so it came about that the patrons and the chaplains got everything that was worth having in that country, and held it until General Mosquiera destroyed their occupation. Freethinkers should see to it that the "validity of trusts for masses for the repose of souls" be stoutly denied in this country.

Cohoes, N. Y. DAVID REEVES SMITH.

Questions to a Cleveland Clergyman.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Evidently the National Congress of the Liberal League lately held in this city was a "providential occurrence" for the benefit of some of our local D.D.'s. At least one Methodist divine announced that he would consider the question, "Is Christianity declining?" in answer to the self-styled Liberals.

Actuated by a desire to learn the truth upon this subject, I attended the Franklyn Avenue M. E. church, and listened to a very interesting discourse by the Rev. Mr. Leek, D.D.

In his opening prayer he besought the Almighty to use his influence in suppressing the numerous beer halls and other ungodly places of Sunday evening amusement, and if he could get a word in edgeways between the clinking of beer glassses to incline the hearts of the Sabbath-breaker to Christianity, etc.

The text selected was from Isa. ix, 7. And here let me make a suggestion, and quote a Christian authority, for the especial benefit of Mr. Leek and others of the same class. The world has reached that stage of morality that the doctrins of Paul related to lying are no longer tolerated. Now for the citation. Paley says, "A man may act a lie," and a person, even though he be a D.D., has no right to cut a sentence in two, and giv it forth as applying to a particular person or thing, when such application is forbidden by the complete text.

The entire sentence reads as follows: "Of the increase of government and peace no end upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever."

It would be quite a task to convince even a Methodist congregation (four-fifths women at that) that this prophecy (?) of Isaiah referred to Christ, especially if they had ever read the two preceding chapters; but such little obstacles as a few words are easily overcome, and by the addition of four words, and the omission of that part of the sentence which gave it any character, it was made to read as follows: "Of the increase of his government there shall be no end."

After the usual amount of gush concerning the wonderful gift of prophecy conferred especially upon Isaiah, he proceeded to annihilate "Ingersoll and his crowd of clowns" by showing that Christianity is gaining in strength and numbers year by year. This was accomplished by statistics showing the increase in numbers in the membership of Protestant churches, extending over a period of sixty years, and to prove the spiritual as well as numerical growth, numerous extracts from various authors were cited showing the immoral practices of the Christians of a hundred years ago.

The reverend gentleman laid much stress upon the fact that a hundred years ago Europe and America were permeated by skepticism. Nothing was said concerning the modifications which hav taken place in Christianity itself during these years. Neither was the decrease in Catholicism mentioned. In every respect the defense of Christianity showed to what extremities of sophisiry its priests are driven.

Now, Mr. Leek, allow me, as a "self-styled Liberal" and "one of the clowns," to ask a few questions upon certain phases of the situation which you seem disposed to let alone.

First, what is Christianity? Is it a belief in the dogmas of the Methodist church? Is Catholicism Christianity? Is Unitarianism Christianity? How much Christianity hav you remaining after subtracting hell and a belief in the divinity of Christ? What percentage of the population of this country believe in either of those two dogmas of the church? Can a man believe in the law of evolution and in the Mosaic account of creation at the same time? How many of your church-members believe in evolution? Can you giv me any information as to the progress Christianity is making among the North American Indians? What percentage of our Jewish population are Christians? Don't you think that the Jews, being descendants of the people among whom all these wonderful things are said to hav taken place, are the best judges as to the divine origin of Christianity? Do you class as Christians the Mormons, who derive their authority for polygamous practices from the Bible? Judging from the progress made during the past eighteen hundred years, how long do you think it will take to Christianize China?

If Christianity is gaining ground, why are you obliged to call for divine help to prevent Sunday desecration? Would Sunday excursions, Sunday travel, Sunday picnics, ball games, Sunday papers and Sunday lectures by "Ingersoll and his crowd of clows," hav been tolerated one hundred and fifty years ago?

I grant your statement of the immorality of the church a hundred and fifty years ago. But was it not better then than it was a hundred and fifty years prior, or when all or nearly all were Christians? How is it as between Germany and Spain to-day? The former is largely Infidel, the latter wholly Christian. Which has the highest moral standing? Where do you find the most skepticism to-day, in our state prisons or in our colleges?

The fact is, my friend, you hav become moral just to the extent that you hav become Liberal. You deserve no credit for it, for you hav abused, maligned, and persecuted to the full extent of your power every reformer who has endeavored to lead you away from the barren rocks of superstition and into the green pastures of mental freedom. Now, in spite of yourselvs, you are in a vast minority; you can't imprison men for saying their say about your religion. You can't even prevent a prize fighter desecrating your so-called divine day. Beer halls rise as ghosts to haunt you, and they will not down even though you invoke the aid of your antiquated deity. You cannot stem the tide of skepticism, but, like some little boy who has been worsted in a fight, you can retire to a safe distance and call names. J. D. MALLONEE.

144 Cedar Ave., Cleveland.

Tribute to Colonel Ingersoll from New South Wales.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: By direction of the New South Wales Sunday Platform Association I append copy of resolutions passed with great applause by a crowded audience at one of our Sunday evening lectures in Sydney. As the matter speaks fully for itself, I will say no more than to giv you the greetings of our Australian Freethinkers, who sympathize with you in every movement made for mental liberty.

To Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, President of the Liberal League of the United States. WHEREAS, We, the Freethinkers of New South Wales, having for many years past, through various channels, had opportunity to read and study your noble teachings, and the honesty and straightforwardness distinguishing your numerous speeches in the cause of mental liberty and the advancement of humanity, and recognizing in you a true champion for the moral welfare of all classes of society, we desire, upon this your fifty-second birthday, to take advantage of Dr. J. L. York's engagement in our city of Sydney, under the auspices of the Sunday Platform Association, to greet you with words of love and brotherly feeling, assuring you of our esteem and heartfelt recognition for the courteous and honorable manner in which you, as a recognized leader, hav ever characterized your arguments in favor of liberty. We trust that you will accept the accompanying Australian memento of our love, and will ever regard it as emblematic of the affection of the Freethinkers of New South Wales, and we hope that your earthly career may continue for many years, and that health and happiness may ever attend you, and we desire further to add that should you ever visit Australia, you will receive a warm and hearty welcome from the thousands of friends who now only know you by an honored name.

Resolved, That the foregoing be embodied in an address to be signed by as many friends as possible, and then forwarded, through the Sunday Platform Association, to Colonel Ingersoll.

Resolved, That the above resolutions and proceedings of this meeting be forwarded for publication to the New York TRUTH SEEKER, the Boston Investigator, and the Sydney Evening News and the Daily Telegraph.

I also herewith inclose a copy of the proceedings and resolutions passed of sympathy with the Freethinkers of the United States at the loss of General Grant.

A large portrait adorned the center of the stage, and the American and English flags hung round it, while a crowded audience listened attentivly to the eloquent speech of Dr. J. L. York.

To the Liberals and Freethinkers of the United States of America, and to the family of General Grant. WHEREAS, We, the Liberals and Freethinkers of New South Wales, having for many years recognized the great character and genius of Gen. Ulysses Simpson Grant; and feeling grateful to him for his many acts in liberalizing and elevating the minds of the citizens of the United States, and through them influencing the world at large in the direction of broader thought and greater freedom for all classes, irrespectiv of religion or creed, and also for the activ part he played while carrying his own life nobly in his hand, for the purpose of suppressing slavery;

Resolved, That we convey to the Liberals and Freethinkers of the United States, and especially to the family of General Grant, our sincere and heartfelt sympathy with them in the loss to the world of so great a master mind, whose honesty of purpose and greatness of soul hav placed him on a pedestal of love, where generations yet unborn will yearn toward him, feeling that he has truly, in the words of his fellow-countryman, left "footprints on the sands of time."

Resolved, That the foregoing and the proceedings of this meeting be sent for publication to the Daily Telegraph, Sydney Evening News, New York TRUTH SEEKER, and the Boston Investigator, and also to Mrs. Grant.

283 George st., Sydney. CYRIL HAVILAND.

The Liberal Club.

There was no necessity for the great speed at which, about 8 o'clock Friday night, a man wearing a badge-pin swung round the corner from Third avenue into Fifteenth street, and hurried toward the German Masonic Temple, for the 385th regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club did not open until fifteen minutes later. The badge-pin man had bought a monthly ticket the first of October to nail up in THE TRUTH SEEKER office where people who came to converse with the cashier could see it, and he therefore did not contribute to Treasurer Morris's pile of nickels on the table at the door.

Dr. Lambert sat near the entrance, and when visitors came in he supplied them with circulars of a temperance meeting to be addressed by himself and E. Duncan Sniffin, Esq., and to be closed by a doxology and benediction. This meeting of Dr. Lambert's is the one that turns itself into a Sunday mass meeting for the Rev. Steve Merritt, candidate for senator in the Eighth district.

After Mr. Wakeman had paid the compliment due to THE TRUTH SEEKER'S report of the Congress of the American Secular Union, he introduced Mr. Samuel Leavitt as the speaker of the evening. Mr. Leavitt had announced as the subject of his discourse "The Coming Revolution in Social, Political, and Industrial Life." The lecture was mostly on the sex question, and those who missed hearing it enjoyed, in a negativ kind of way, an enviable evening's amusement. Mr. Leavitt is the advocate of thirty-one separate and distinct reforms. The marriage reform was the one especially borne down upon on this occasion. The speaker prefaced his remarks by assuring his audience that he had been virtuous for a period covering many years, although he enjoyed good health, and could toss the hundred pound dumbbell as high with his left hand as he could when he was younger. No one expressed a doubt of this, and Mr. Leavitt proceeded to develop his theory, which was, in substance, that monogamy should be encouraged, and self-restraint was a virtue; but necessity knew no mother-in-law, and concubinage in the third degree might be permitted in the case of men like the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher and Sir Charles Dilke. Boys might consort with widows and spinsters of advanced age. Similarly absurd propositions were made by the speaker as to girls. Mr. Leavitt appeared to regard this question as one of great importance. He had carefully weighed the consequences of thus unbosoming himself, and had crossed the Rubicon with the knowledge that he could never return. To show the forbearing nature of a Liberal Club audience it is only necessary to say that throughout his entire remarks, bad as they were, the lecturer was not once shot at.

When the lecturer had closed, Mr. Wakeman apologized for him by saying that he did not expect a discourse of this sort. If the speaker had made any errors, Mr. Wakeman hoped somebody would point them out.

Mrs. Leonard followed. The lecturer, she said, was not radical enough. She then went into a minute examination of the process by which the race is prevented from becoming extinct. Her remarks were rather distressing, and it is not saying too much to designate them as somewhat uncalled for and inappropriate to a public meeting.

Mr. Chamberlain said that the speaker of the evening was a much mistaken man if he hoped to escape calumny by the purity of his life and motiv. Mr. Heywood, of Princeton, was a pure man, but he was reviled.

The chairman said the floor was open. The writer thought he said the door was open, and went home. It is learned that Dr. Weeks, Dr. Foote, and other speakers followed. A member of the club said the next day, in referring to the previous evening's performance: "It has yet to be demonstrated that public discussions of this sort do any good. They make the vulgar laugh, lower the dignity of the club, deplete its attendance, and disgust the person of average common sense." Injustice to the members of the lecture committee would be done if it were not stated that they share the regret of the audience when lecturers mislead them as to the nature of what they propose to say on the platform of the club.

At the next meeting Professor Davidson will speak on Giordano Bruno. Tickets, admitting lady and gentleman, are for sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office for 50 cents each. Those who attend are assured that they will hav as much reason to congratulate themselvs as those hav who stayed away from the last meeting.

That Albany Arrest.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: On my return from the National Liberal League Congress at Cleveland I find quite an amusing amount of comment in THE TRUTH SEEKER, the Nonconformist, Mr. Tucker's Liberty, and other papers, about the arrest of Mr. Seward Mitchell at the Albany Convention and my connection therewith. This occurrence was but a ripple in the progress of a most successful convention. But, behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth! The impression sought to be made is that the Convention went back on itself, on Mr. Mitchell, on Freethought, and that I in particular sought to snub or persecute in some way Mr. Heywood and Mr. Mitchell, and wrote some card for that purpose.

Now, the truth is that there was no ground whatever for these impressions. The facts are these: Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Heywood, as so-called Liberal editors, received complimentary tickets as guests to the Convention, as did many other Liberal editors. They, instead of attending the lectures of the Convention on their tickets, as did others, posted themselvs with armfuls of literature (which many Freethinkers deem objectionable) in the vestibule of the hall of the Convention. Mr. Mitchell was very soon arrested for selling his paper, which Liberty (Mr. Tucker) very well describes as a hotch-potch of sense and nonsense, called The World's Reformer. The arrest was made quietly. None of the Convention heard of it till after it was over. Mr. Heywood went along with Mr. Mitchell, and explained the matter to the justice so effectivly that the prisoner was discharged at once, before the Convention or its officers knew anything about it.

When their attention was called to it they said that the case was ended by the discharge, and they did not feel called upon to advertise it further. If Mr. Mitchell had been held for trial, as was the case with Mr. Bennett and others at the Watkins Glen Convention, the circumstances would hav been very different, and would hav properly come up for consideration. As it was, "all's well that ends well" was the maxim to apply. There was no occasion to do anything, much less to go back on anybody or anything.

Nor would there hav been any occasion to say anything unless the Albany Evening Journal had taken it for granted in reporting the arrest that Mr. Mitchell's World's Reformer was "the organ of the Freethinkers' Convention."

I, thereupon, acting on my own responsibility, wrote the following card to that paper, which the simplest justice to all concerned required:

Editor Albany Journal: The Journal has fallen into an error in calling Seward Mitchell's organ entitled The World's Reformer the organ of the Freethinkers' Convention. Probably ninety-nine out of one hundred attendants among us never heard of the sheet, and, if they did, would utterly disavow its ideas. None of us wish to interfere with anyone's rights of free thought, free speech, or free press, but it is not fair to force issues on the Freethinkers which as a body do not belong to them. By making this correction you would only be doing justice to us all. We hav a hard enough fight to conduct anyhow.

This card was approved generally by the officers and attendants of the Convention, who, as the past has abundantly shown, were ready to take any steps to defend liberty of thought, of the press, of the mails, and of speech, if the occasion had really arisen and demanded such steps to be taken. This Convention was the last one to hav gone back on the example of its predecessors.

And it seems, too, rather hard to charge with the spirit of persecution me who, during some years past, hav consistently opposed the Comstock laws as violations of a free post-office, and who, in my support of Heywood and Bennett—in the right they claimed of selling the pamphlet known as "Cupid's Yokes"—hav proved my faith by my acts; and had I been called upon as an expert witness in the arrest at Albany, I should doubtless hav expressed it as my opinion that there was less obscenity in The World's Reformer than could readily be extracted from Shakspere or the Bible.

Nor is the impression that Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Heywood were persecuted or treated with impoliteness borne out. In fact, the reverse is the truth, and they were the ones to be complained of in these respects.

What I insist upon is that Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Heywood, on the occasion under consideration, violated what might be called the comity and courtesy of Freethought. There are matters in life not only of principle, but of propriety also. Mr. C. B. Reynolds well illustrated this by supposing the case of a clown singing his comic songs at a funeral. I myself, for instance, was asked to attend the Christian School of Philosophy, just the same as Messrs. Mitchell and Heywood were asked by the Freethinkers. I should hav felt that under such circumstances, had I gone, it would hav been an act of discourtesy to vend a Liberal newspaper among them. It would hav been a disregard of the amenities, the relativity, the perspectiv, in a word, the politeness of the occasion, just as much as it would be to enter an evening social gathering with an armful of journals, distasteful to many of the company, and hawk them for sale.

In other words, to bring the matter home, we Liberals assembled at Albany as a Freethought, not as a Freelove or Anarchist convention. As far as I can learn, I am right in saying that ninety-nine out of one hundred attendants would hav disavowed many of Mitchell's ideas. The fact that the Freethinkers of the country are now organizing under Colonel Ingersoll—the most sturdy opponent of such notions—is of this proof sufficient. Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Heywood came there not as members, but on a complimentary invitation, with full foreknowledge of our general attitude. The most common consideration and respect would hav suggested to them that they should hav consulted the wishes of the Convention before presenting at that time to the public, through the convention, literature which they knew would be likely to make trouble. They chose to make use of a complimentary invitation to our organization to facilitate the propaganda of not its, but their convictions, and at our expense. Even granting that some of our members may deem unmodified liberty the only panacea for all social evils, nevertheless the Freethinkers' Association, as an association, hav pronounced that they will not champion freelove reforms, and to seek to force freelove upon them is a violation of freedom itself. I mean the right of the Convention not to be loaded with special theories or reforms is essential to its freedom and usefulness.

This brings me to the heinous charge of declining to shake hands with Mr. Heywood after the facts relating to his attendance and conduct at the Convention became known to me. Not to hav done so then would hav shown that I was perfectly insensible—insensitiv—to impoliteness. That Mr. Heywood could not plead ignorance of what was expected of him is shown by the following, which also answers the allegations made against my friend, Mr. T. B. Wakeman, in the articles above referred to. I had learned that Mr. Wakeman, who was a prominent member and who had been elected our president, had lately befriended Mr. Heywood, and that the latter (when he received his editor's complimentary ticket to attend the convention) had written to Mr. Wakeman about it, expressing doubt about attending. Thereupon, Mr. Wakeman, foreseeing what was likely to happen, replied, suggesting in the most delicate manner whether it would not be better for the cause and all concerned that Mr. Heywood should not attend, and so requesting. Thereupon, without a word of reply, Mr. Heywood, with Mr. Mitchell and Miss Josephine Tilton, practically took possession of the vestibule of the hall bright and early, with bundles of literature in favor not only of Freethought, but of freelove and Anarchy, and offered them for sale there and on the sidewalk to passers-by. They did not apparently frequent the Convention as guests, nor take part in its proceedings. I doubt if they barely went inside the doors. They came there evidently in the interests of Anarchy to wreck the Convention, and all they could do was to get one of their number arrested, so as to cast obloquy on its members and attendants. After I had written the card to get this obloquy removed, Mr. Heywood came up and offered me his hand as though nothing had been done amiss. My action said that I would not take the hand of a man who could not or would not act with a more considerate regard for the position he then and there occupied. Nevertheless, nothing shall in the future as in the past, prevent me from fighting as best I can for the right of every man to differ from me and to express his difference fully in his own way, place, and time; but if he forces his utterances upon me so as to compromise me, I shall disown both them and him, and resent the impoliteness.

But it is said that THE TRUTH SEEKER and Index sold their literature in the same vestibule, and why not these others? The answer is that they sold Freethought literature, to which no objection was made by any member, attendant, or outsider.

But if the Convention must be publicly held to approve of the wildest notion that the wildest crank can originate, who may abuse its hospitality, the discontinuance of the sale of all literature at its doors may be the better plan in the future. But as to that the Convention must judge. Yours truly,

COURTLANDT PALMER.

New York, Oct. 18, 1885.

The Troy Society.

The Troy Ingersoll Society held a meeting last Sunday afternoon in the Keenan building, and were addressed by the secretary of the American Secular Union, Samuel P. Putnam, on the "Nine Demands of Liberalism: their Aim and Object; and the Reason for Changing the Name of the National League to the American Secular Union." The society resolved to be hereafter known as the Troy Secular Society. The officers elected were: president, Henry Staude; vice-president, Hiram Wilbur; secretary, S. N. Gardner; treasurer, Robert Wade. President

Staude took the chair, and after a brief address acknowledging the honor, J. J. McCabe, of the Albany Secular Society, gave an address on the "Objects of the Society, and the Manner of Conducting the Same in Albany." The subject for next Sunday will be, "The Chasm Between Science and Theology." Meetings will be held every Sunday hereafter at the Keenan building.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents.

CHARLES WATTS, JOHN E. REMSBERG, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, MATTIE P. KREKEL, ELIZUR WRIGHT, JAMES PARTON, HORACE SEAVER, PARKER PILLSBURY, WILLIAM ALGIE, ROBERT C. ADAMS, TITUS L. BROWN, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place. COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com. EUGENE M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Balance in Treasury (as per report at last Congress)	$25.72
Received since balance reported (as per THE TRUTH SEEKER of last week),	92.50
Pledged at Congress ($364.00 being paid),	1,138 00
A. Van Deusen (pledge),	100.00
Newark League (paid on last year's pledge),	10.00
Charles Eckhart (pledge),	10.00
Total	$1,376.22

To Friends of the Secular Union.

The Convention at Albany and the Congress at Cleveland hav given new hope and impulse to the advocates of Freethought. The lectures and addresses given by the ablest exponents of our principles, the ample reports published in the metropolitan journals and throughout the country, the large audiences present, and the thorough harmony displayed in regard to the policy to be adopted and the methods to be pursued, hav all contributed to make an enthusiasm, interest, and power which hav not before existed. These, however, but furnish the conditions for more strenuous activity. Unless the opportunity is improved and better work work done, what has already been accomplished will be to our shame and not to our honor. We hav not reached a resting-place, but a point of vaster momentum, where greater exertions must be put forth.

The ninth annual Congress at Cleveland resolved that the immediate work of the Union should be:

1. Work before state legislatures.
2. Printing and distributing tracts upon the Nine Demands.
3. Distribution of Freethought literature.
4. Employment of Freethought lecturers.

For these purposes the Congress voted to raise a fund of ten thousand dollars for the coming year. To this Robert G. Ingersoll, our president, will contribute one thousand dollars if other friends of the Secular Union throughout the country will do their share. Let there be an immediate response to this magnanimous proposition of our president.

It is desirable that our best lecturers be kept constantly busy and receive from the Union moral and where necessary, pecuniary support in order that, without too great loss to themselvs, they may enter new fields. The platform is necessary to the advance of Freethought. The living voice must be heard, the face be seen, the presence felt. Every one of our lecturers should receive the amplest encouragement. The work that lies before them is of immense importance.

It is desirable also to print campaign documents and circulate them by the million, if possible. Especially do we need a thorough exposition of the Nine Demands by our most skilful writers. Statistics should be carefully compiled and studied, and their lessons learned. Apt arguments should be made, with telling illustrations, in order that the people may vividly see the injustice that actually exists, and the proper remedies that must be applied. The printing-press is a powerful ally, and it must be used. Above all, our Liberal papers, THE TRUTH SEEKER, the Investigator, and others, whose influence is of incalculable benefit, should receive the earnest help of every friend of the Union, and their subscription lists be increased by the thousand.

It is desirable, also, that immediate action be taken to present the Demands of the Union to the attention of legislatures, and urge that all statutes contrary to the Nine Demands be repealed. On this point there must be unceasing agitation.

Our President, Robert G. Ingersoll, in his introductory address at the Cleveland Congress, expressed the potent reasons for constant effort in this direction.

President Garfield said in Congress, June 22, 1874:

The divorce between church and state ought to be absolute. It ought to be absolute that no church property anywhere in any state, or in the nation, should be exempt from equal taxation; for if you exempt the property of any church organization, to that extent you impose a tax upon the whole community.

The New York Evening Post, while conducted by William Cullen Bryant, said:

The Evening Post has long been of the opinion that the American theory of a self-supporting church ought to be carried out to its full and legitimate conclusion, and that the separation of the church and state ought to be complete. It should include the total discontinuance of contributions of public money, direct or indirect, to the support of any religious establishment. We hav never been able to see the slightest difference in principle between the appropriation of a certain sum of money raised by tax to a particular church, and a release of that church from a tax on its property to the same amount. The cost of the benevolent act in either case falls upon the taxpayers generally.

Another paper asks:

Has civil society a right to giv the public money outright to a religious or ecclesiastical body, a missionary or a tract society, or a church? According to our American doctrin of church and state it has not.

Is there any difference between releasing one from a debt of ten dollars, which he is bound to pay, and giving him ten dollars? Is there any difference whatever between paying out money from the public treasury and remitting taxes that are coming into the public treasury?

President Grant, in his annual message of 1875, recommended the passage of a constitutional amendment for the more complete separation of church and state, and referred to the rapid increase of this exempted property as follows:

In connection with this important question, I would also call your attention to the importance of correcting an evil that. if permitted to continue, will probably lead to great trouble in our land before the close of the nineteenth century. It is the acquisition of vast amounts of untaxed church property. In 1850, I believe, the church property of the United States, which paid no tax. municipal or state, amounted to about $87,000 000. In 1860 the amount had doubled. In 1870 it was $354.483,587. By 1900, without a check, it is safe to say this property will reach a sum exceeding $3,000,000,000. So vast a sum, receiving all the protection and benefits of government, without bearing its proportion of the burdens and expenses of the same, will not be looked upon acquiescently by those who hav to pay the taxes. In a growing country, where real estate enhances so rapidly with time as in the United States, there is scarcely a limit to the wealth that may be acquired by corporations, religious or otherwise, if allowed to retain real estate without taxation. The contemplation of so vast a property as here alluded to, without taxation, may lead to sequestration without constitutional authority, and through blood. I would suggest the taxation of all property equally.

By this unjust remission of taxes the taxpayers of New York city alone pay over one million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars yearly for the support of churches. The tax-payers generally throughout the country pay over twenty million dollars yearly to the same purpose. How long will the Liberals of America submit to this political outrage?

Herbert Spencer, one of the greatest of living philosophers, when visiting this country said:

You retain the forms of freedom, but so far as I can gather there has been considerable loss of the substance. Free institutions can be maintained only by citizens each of whom is instant to oppose every illegitimate act, every assumption of supremacy, every official excess of power, however trivial it may seem. As Hamlet says, there is such a thing as "greatly to find quarrel in a straw" when the straw implies a principle. If, as you say of the American, he pauses to consider whether he can afford the time and trouble—whether it will pay—corruption is sure to creep in. All these lapses from a higher to lower forms of life begin in trifling ways; and it is only by incessant watchfulness that they can be prevented. As one of your early statesmen said, "The price of liberty is eternal vigilance." But it is far less against foreign aggressions upon national liberty that this vigilance is required than against the insidious growth of domestic interferences with personal liberty.

With these words of warning and of wisdom from the best and wisest of the advocates of human welfare, shall the friends of Freethought be longer inactiv against these wrongs which in principle are fundamental and far-reaching and most injurious to our national development?

The American people, it is estimated, pay over twenty-six million dollars per year for the preaching of theology. Shall not the Liberals of America contribute ten thousand dollars for the advancement of justice? Now is the time to work. To delay is to increase the evil.

Giv something. However little, it will add strength to the general cause. It is preferable not that the few, but that the masses of Liberals giv mainly to the fund. The interest will be greater, and the results more fruitful. Let the rich Freethinker giv of his abundance to a work that makes wealth more desirable, since it dignifies human life and makes its pleasures nobler; but let the humblest toiler feel that in this struggle for Liberty and Justice he also can be a comrade as honorable and as useful as his more fortunate fellow-soldier.

All who contribute One Dollar will be entitled to a certificate of Annual Membership in this Union, and will be supplied with copies of all documents issued by the Union. Those contributing Twenty-five Dollars will be entitled to a certificate of Life Membership in the Union, and will also be furnished with quantities of all documents published.

Address all communications, and forward contributions to the fund to Samuel P. Putnam, Secretary, 33 Clinton Place, New York, or to Courtlandt Palmer, Treasurer, 850 Broadway, New York.

CONCEIT may puff a man up, but never prop him up.—Ruskin.

Mr. Watts Breaking New Ground.

The usually quiet village of Greenwich, with its five hundred inhabitants, situated a few miles from Springfield, Mass., was the scene of considerable excitement on Sunday, Oct. 18th. Mr. Charles Watts had been announced to lecture on that day in what is called a church, but which is really, in the opinion of those in a position to judge, a meeting-house belonging to the people of the town. Hearing of Mr. Watts's intended lecture, the orthodox party met and decided to prevent, if possible, his speaking. They therefore secured an injunction forbidding the use of the building by Freethinkers. The Springfield Republican of Monday, Oct. 19th, gives a full account of the proceedings, from which we take the following:

STRUGGLING FOR A CHURCH.

Greenwich had an exciting Sunday because of a contest over the possession of the Congregational meeting-house, the result of considerable past friction. The ownership of this building, it will be remembered, has been for years in question, as between the town and Congregational parish, because the transfer from the town, which held the building under the old law, to the parish is not made very clear by the records, and because of money which the town has paid out for repairs within a few years. The lawyers favor both sides, as usual, one set holding that, under the circumstances the town can share the use of the church with the parish, while others maintain that all churches must in any event, under the present ecclesiastical law, pertain exclusivly to the parishes and religious organizations which are connected with them. But the town voted in the spring of 1884 that on petition of six citizens the selectmen might open the church for such lectures and entertainments as they should deem proper.

Something like two weeks ago a petition to the selectmen was circulated for signatures for the use of the church for a public lecture in accordance with that vote. The petition, bearing the names of about forty citizens, was deemed by the board sufficient cause for issuing a license, and permission was granted. Notices were posted over the town a week ago by Chandler Powers, one of the petitioners, of a public lecture at the "town's meeting-house" at 3 P.M., Sunday, October 18th, by Charles Watts, "the distinguished and eminent lecturer from England, of a highly instructiv and educational character, the subject to be announced at the time." On Saturday Blackmer & Vaughn, of Worcester, attorneys for the parish, appeared in the village and ordered Sheriff Gallond of Amherst to serve a writ of injunction upon the town, citing them to appear at Northampton, before the supreme judicial court for the county of Hampshire, to show what is their right, title, and interest in the church property. The lawyer also required the officer to serve a dozen or more written notices signed by the parish committee upon those who hav petitioned the selectmen for the use of the church, including H W. Smith, and ordering them not to trespass on parish property. Printed notices were also posted on the parish property forbidding trespassing on the premises under penalty of the law. The parish committee posted notices that the usual Sunday services for yesterday would be held at Farmer's Hall in Greenwich village instead of at the church, and service was held there. Two of the parish committee thought best to occupy the church Saturday night, and a watchman was kept in the building all day yesterday. Mr. Vaughn had ordered Sheriff Gallond to be on the ground yesterday, and warn all who should attempt to enter on or trespass on the property claimed by the parish.

There are intimations that those who petitioned for the church will get out an injunction to prevent the use of the church by the parish until the ownership of the property is settled in the courts.

Of course, Mr. Watts was determined to deliver his lecture, and he did so to perhaps a much larger audience than he would hav had in such a small place but for the theological interference. Under the circumstances it was thought best to secure the Town Hall, which was done, and at the commencement of the lecture every seat in the hall was occupied. Mr. H. W. Smith, the leading Spiritualist of the district, presided, and made a telling speech against the despotism of the orthodox party. Mr. Watts spoke for nearly an hour and a half, and at the conclusion he received the hearty congratulations of numbers of ladies and gentlemen, who, although Spiritualists, were at one with Mr. Watts in his crusade against orthodox injustice. The Springfield Republican, referring to the speaker, said:

He had considerable to say about the orthodox party, and made some sharp references to the action of the parish people in refusing the use of the church for his lecture. The audience applauded some of his points, and at the close H. W. Smith said he wished a thousand people had been present to hear the eloquent address.

This attempt to break new ground in the very hot-bed of rampant orthodoxy was so successful that arrangements were made with Mr. Watts to return to giv three lectures on "The Fallacy of Orthodox Christianity." Mr. Watts lectures twice next Sunday, November 1st, before the Friendship Liberal League, of Philadelphia, in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood streets. Afternoon at 2:30; evening at 7 30. Subjects: "The Nightmare of Theology," and "Unbelief: Its Nature and Services to Humanity." The public are invited.

Mr. Reynolds's Tent Fund.

Thos. G. Watkins,	1.00
N. D. Goodell,	10.00

For the Bruno Statue at Rome.

S. C. Rogers,	$1.00
William Smith,	1.00
F. Schuneman,	1.00
P. Wettstein,	1.00
A. McAra,	1.00
S. C. Highland,	1.00
W. Whittick,	1.00
Nelson Beall,	5.00
R. B. Jackson,

Communications.

The Demands of Liberalism.*

It is almost universally charged against Freethinkers that the effort now making to fully secularize the government is an effort directed toward the overthrow and destruction of the Christian religion. No other charge which the church makes against us shows so fully and clearly the fact which we are attempting to call public attention to, namely, that by the many privileges and immunities granted the church in this country, the Christian religion has almost become a state religion; so nearly that any attempt to stay their further encroachments upon personal liberty and the public purse is met with the cry that we are trying to destroy their church. The truth is that the present Secular movement is simply an effort to realize the spirit of the Constitution. We would be unworthy the name of Freethinkers did we wage Sectarian warfare against anyone. Freethinking means, above everything else, respect for the rights of those who honestly, however mistakenly, differ from us. As Freethinkers it is our highest duty to insist that under a government founded "by the people, for the people," no vantage ground be given for sectarian purposes. That the wise founders of this republic clearly saw such danger, and caresought to avoid it, must be evident, I think, to anyone who examins the statutes of the colonies prior to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States in 1789. What was carefully and completely left out is quite as significant as what was carefully put in.

Nearly all of the colonies and states had adopted and incorporated religious tests and qualifications. Under these provisions persecutions had taken place. You hav only to turn back a few pages in the history of the New England states to find the blackest crimes against humanity authorized, defended, and justified by the Christian religion, at least so much of it as was capable of getting into legal binding.

Here are some of the religious tests and qualifications out of which our Secular Constitution was evolved.

The charter of Delaware, granted in 1701, speaks of "Almighty God as being the only Lord of conscience, father of light and spirits." The Constitution of 1776 required officials to subscribe a declara- professing "faith in God the father, and in Christ his only son, and in the Holy Ghost, one God, blessed for ever more, and I do acknowledge the holy scriptures of the Old and New Testament to be by divine inspiration."

The constitution of Maryland of 1776 authorizes the legislature to "levy taxes to support the Christian religion, and requires all officials to subscribe a declaration of a belief in the Christian religion."

The charter of Massachusetts of 1620 attributes "plagues and slaughter to providence," and is "granted to convert the Indians."

The constitution of 1780 declares that "good government depends on piety and religion," and authorizes "the legislature to make provisions for Protestant ministers. Members of the legislature must be Protestant."

The charter of the Carolinas of 1663 speaks of "a laudable and pious zeal for the propagation of the Christian faith" as an inducement of the grant. The celebrated Locke constitution has not less than thirteen sections on religion. Among them are found the following and similar declarations:

"There is a God. God is to be publicly worshiped. Persons over seventeen years of age and not members of a church are without legal protection. Every person in Carolina shall hav absolute power and authority over his negro slaves of what opinion or religion whatever."

The Constitution of North Carolina of 1776 provides: "That no person who shall deny the being of a God, or the truth of the Protestant religion, or the divine authority of either the Old or the New Testament, shall hold any office."

It was under this old law, or as much of it as remained in the state constitution, that Mr. Thorne was, only a few years since, expelled from the legislature.

Up to the year 1848 the God in the North Carolina Constitution was not only a Christian God, but also a Protestant God. Under the organic law of the state up to that period, all persons who denied "the truth of the Protestant religion" were excluded from holding office. This provision debarred Catholics and Jews, as well as Deists, Atheists, and Infidels. In the constitution of 1848 the political notion of deity was modified, and the new restriction was limited to a general belief in God; this idea was retained in the new constitution of 1868, which has a clause disqualifying from holding office, "First, all persons who shall deny the being of Almighty God." This general disqualification, however, seems to be the special interpretation of the legislature, for Mr. Thorne was expelled on the ground of disbelief in the being of Almighty God, though he made the following explicit declaration of faith in his speech before the legislature: "There is but one living and true God; everlasting, without body, parts, or passion; of unlimited power, wisdom, and goodness; the maker of all things, visible and invisible." To a layman and non-believer in the doctrin of "God in politics" this would seem to be a sufficiently strong declaration of a belief in Almighty God to warrant a man otherwise unobjectionable in holding a seat in the legislature to which he had been chosen by the suffrages of the peeple. In addition to this declaration, Mr. Thorne also presented a number of letters showing that he was a member in good standing of the Progressiv Order of Friends, a sect of Quakers; that he had been a trustee in the church of that society in Pennsylvania, his former home; and that he was a man of good moral character. But he had written a pamphlet in which he had spoken of the trinity and resurrection as mythical or superstitious, and said that he did not regard God as a being whose chief purpose is to torture mankind after death. He also stated in the presence of the legislature that while he believed in God he did not believe "in all the characterizations attributed to him." Thereupon a member declared that it was clear Thorne did not believe in the "God of our constitution," and it was on this ground that Mr. Thorne was expelled by a majority vote of the house sitting as an ecclesiastical court.

The constitution of South Carolina of 1778 requires governors and commanders-in-chief to be Protestant, and officials "must believe that there is a God." The Protestant religion is made the state religion. All religious associations are required to subscribe to the following articles:

That there is an eternal God, and future reward and punishment.

That God is to be publicly worshiped.

That the Christian religion is the true religion.

That the Old and the New Testaments are inspired, and are the rule of faith and of practice.

The charter of Pennsylvania, granted in 1625, declares: "When a great and wise God had made the world, of all his creation it pleased him to choose man his deputy to rule it." All officials are required to possess faith in Christ.

The constitution of 1776 has the following provisions regarding religion: To be entitled to the full rights of citizenship it requires, the acknowledgment of there being a God. Members of the legislature must subscribe the following declarations: "I do believe in one God, the creator and governor of the universe, the rewarder of the good, and the punisher of the wicked, and I do acknowledge the scriptures of the Old and the New Testaments to be given by divine inspiration."

The charters and constitutions of Georgia, New Jersey, and New York, Virginia, and Rhode Island, are comparatively free from religious intolerance, and some of them contain wise provisions on the subject of religion.

These citations from the charters and constitutions are made to indicate the status of public opinion from the time the first settlements were made up to the time of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States in 1789. Prior to the Revolution, none of the states had charters, but constructed their governments under the several charters obtained from the English government. The federal congress of 1775, by resolution, requested the states to adopt constitutions with the charters, and from these the exact progress which had been made in the one hundred and more years between the dates of the charters and the constitutions, on religious subjects, can be seen. But the main object in referring to them is to arrive at what the fathers really intended by the Constitution of the United States, to which I now refer.

The preamble declares that the Constitution is established by the people to secure the blessings of liberty to themselvs and their posterity. No allusion is made to God or religion in any part of the original instrument. The oath prescribed to be taken by the president on entering into office is as follows: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States." There is no "so help me God," now so much used at the conclusion of oaths, both in and out of court, in the Constitution.

Those who object to swearing may affirm, indicating a regard to individual preferences even.

The delegates to the convention which formed the Constitution of the United States came from the several states, and were familiar, not only with the constitutions of the states thay came from and represented, but undoubtedly partook more or less of the views of their constituents in religious matters. These were fully discussed in the convention, and the conclusions which were arrived at were arrived at after full consideration. They must therefore be taken as deliberately overruling and negativing the religious tests found in the constitutions of the several states. The delegates who formed the Constitution of the United States spoke for the whole people, and after they had formed its provisions, submitted it to the people themselvs, who approved and adopted it.

So far, then, as the government of the United States is concerned, it was intended to be, beyond all question, secular, and the evidence to this effect is irresistible and conclusiv.

The people of the United States, in view of the provisions of state constitutions, seem not to hav been satisfied with the ignoring of religious matters by the Constitution of the United States, and very soon amended it by the following provision: "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishing of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press." This was an unqualified securing of the freedom of opinion on religious subjects to the people of the United States, and is of special force in view of the provisions cited from the state constitutions. Can an unprejudiced mind come to any other conclusion than that the government to be established under the constitutional provisions already cited was to be thoroughly secular?

In the convention that framed the Constitution of the United States, when Benjamin Franklin moved that prayers be offered every morning before proceeding to business, the motion was opposed and defeated by adjournment without a vote. (See Elliot's Debates, vol. v, pp. 253–255.) And when President Jefferson was requested to appoint days of fasting and prayer, and days of thanksgiving, he refused at different times to perform any such act, on the express ground that the Constitution prohibited him, although there were precedents to the contrary in the administration of the government by his predecessors. His language, in a letter to the Rev. Mr. Millar, in the year 1808, is as follows: "I consider the government of the United States as interdicted by the Constitution from intermeddling with religious institutions, their doctrins, disciplin, or exercises" (Jefferson's Works, vol. v, p. 236).

You will remember, also, that the committee of Congress to whom was referred the petition of five hundred—titled signers (every name bore a title)—asking for an amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which should "recognize God and the Christian religion," reported as follows:

> Your committee would respectfully report: That, upon examination even of the meager debates of the fathers of the republic in the convention which framed the Constitution, they find that the subject of the memorial was fully and carefully considered, and they, in that convention, decided, after grave deliberation, to which the subject was entitled, that, as this country, the foundation of whose government they were then laying, was to be the home of the oppressed of all nations of the earth, whether Christian or pagan, and in full realization of the dangers which the union between church and state had imposed upon so many nations of the Old World, agreed, with great unanimity, that it was inexpedient to put anything into the Constitution or form of government which might be construed to be a reference to any religious creed or doctrin. And they further find that this decision was accepted by our Christian fathers with such great unanimity that, in the amendments which were afterward proposed, in order to make the Constitution more acceptable to the nation, none had ever been proposed to the states by which this wise determination of the fathers has been attempted to be changed. Wherefore, your committee report that it is inexpedient to legislate upon the subject of the above memorial, and ask that they be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that this report, together with the petitions, be laid upon the table.

At the Potter reception in England, a few years since, Bright, speaking of the United States, said:

> They hav no bishops in their senate. I hav no doubt there are people in this country (England) who commiserate their privation in that respect, but I do not. They hav not constructed a machine mostly political and partly religious, in which the state bolsters up religion on condition that religion will bolster up the state. They hav got no favorit government church or organization which lends to the crimes of monarchs or statesmen, sanctioned by the simulated voice of God, an approval in which the voice of Christianity is demoralized and degraded.

Would that this were wholly true.

It is upon this ground that we base our argument and make our demand for equal rights and exact justice. We are tired of having broad constitutional rights crowded into narrow, superstitious, and aristocratically inherited colonial interpretations. We are tired of paying tribute to a pauper church—pauper both in respect to the matter of its teaching and the manner of its support, a church which is so poverty-stricken in matter of demonstrable truth and sound logic that it dare not allow science to turn the lens of its mighty achievements upon the musty old creeds, for fear the people will discover the fact that they are everywhere honeycombed by ignorant assumption and divine impudence; a church so poverty-stricken in its manner of support that, not content with the privileges granted, by which it has become a cancer on the body politic eating actually the substance of the poverty-stricken classes, who by increased taxation of unecclesiastical property contribute to the existence, maintenance, and protection of an institution whose assumed divinely authoritativ creed degrades them—first, in levying unlawful tax upon their property in this world, and secondly in assuming to dispose of their souls in the next, upon purely doctrinal and technical grounds, without either their connivance or consent. The people, the whole people of this country, the laboring classes who until our "labor troubles," as they are called, developed, did not think much upon the subject, are coming now to see that the power of taxing is one of the vital powers of the government, and that when any aggregation of wealth becomes colossal it can take advantage of legislation (not intended to be special) which the poor man cannot reach. We demand that exemption both by virtue of much wealth and much piety shall cease, and that taxation shall be reduced to the actual necessities of an honest, industrious people.

*An address prepared for the late Congress of the American Secular Union. By Mrs. Mattie Krekel.

We are tired of priestly interference everywhere, from the most sacred relations of private life up to the public sessions of the accumulated wisdom of our country. We hav been commended to both "watch and pray." Prayers hav not improved our American Congress; let us quit praying at the public expense and watch a little closer. We demand that prayer be no longer paid for out of the public purse, but, like other personal benefits, out of the personal pocket.

We are tired of that mockery which for hundreds of years has made a pious perjurer more respectable than an honest, unpretentious truth-teller, which makes a lie uttered by lips which hav kissed the Bible more sacred than the truth told without pretention and without hypocrisy.

We demand that the outgrown forms of the judicial oath be discontinued; we are tired of the fruits of the so-called Christian morality, which, founded on the proposition that we are cursed by a crime against God, which he, as father of our being, foreknew and foreplanned, makes an innocent being suffer the penalty; a code of morality which tolerates murderers and cutthroats in heaven and consigns the world's greatest benefactors, such as Goethe, Emerson, Lincoln, Sumner, and Dickens, to doubtful regions. And we demand that, as under our government our creed of morality is the product of an earnest endeavor among men to liv together in justice and harmony toward each other—a natural morality—our laws shall be shaped and administered with this end only in view. We are tired of the hypocrisy which insists on carrying into our schools the book called the Bible, portions of which are so obscene as to shock even the ecclesiastical mind, while at the tame time asking for a special law and a special agent so punish lesser offenses against modesty and common decency.

And we demand that our schools shall be made and kept purely secular. Friends, let us consecrate ourselvs anew to the objects of our national asssociation, viz., an attempt to realize in full, for the benefit of present and future civilization, a purely secular government, such as our wise forefathers, having seen and felt the curse of ecclesiastical power, designed to form.

The Order of Anarchy.

Will THE TRUTH SEEKER kindly permit me to say a few words in defense of the social theory of the Anarchists. Of course, Anarchists are all individualists, and it must be understood that I giv only my own conception of Anarchy, though I think that I voice the ideas of many of my brethren. Every man for himself and justice for all, is the Anarchists' platform.

Anarchists are men who reject all political headship or rulership, all government of man by man as such; all authority outside of the natural laws of harmony. They hold that every sane, non-criminal individual of right is, or should be, free from all dictation or domination by other individuals. Individuals hav no right to require anything of other individuals except respect for just and natural rights and fidelity to voluntary agreements. Justice and Liberty are the watchwords of Anarchy. Justice is the foundation on which the superstructure of a true scientific social order is to be erected, and liberty the condition of those residing therein. Justice, as the Anarchist understands it, is simply the "eternal fitness of things," that natural right relationship of things one with the other which, duly understood and regarded, inevitably results in order and harmony, and, in the sphere of humanity, in health and happiness. Liberty is opportunity to study and practice justice, which study and practice constitute morality. Therefore liberty is opportunity to be just, do right, or be moral. This is very simple, very philosophical, and very comprehensiv, is it not? In practice, the Anarchists claim this model state of things will be best realized by giving each individual perfect freedom to do what he or she pleases, provided that pursuit of pleasure does not lead to the infringement of the equal freedom of others. Obviously any disturbance of the just social equilibrium curtails the freedom of some one; therefore, whether you say, "do justice" or "maintain liberty," it means the same to the Anarchist. Therefore Anarchy is emphatically the doctrin of non-interference, of "mind your own business, and let your neighbor's alone."

Logically the Anarchist rejects all compulsion except in defence of justice and liberty, and then only to the extent rendered absolutely necessary. He would rather persuade than compel his assailant to do him justice, because he realizes that compulsion always interferes with freedom, and though an aggressiv wrong may hav rendered its aid indispensable to the restoration of a just equilibrium, his clear vision naturally regards its temporary evils with abhorrence. How absurd, then, to call those dynamite-exploding incendiaries, seeking only to gratify their hate and avarice on the persons and property of the rich, Anarchists! They are no more true Anarchists than Ignatius Loyola was Jesus Christ. Not but what the Anarchist regards dynamite as having a legitimate function, but it is an agent too terrible to be lightly used.

Realizing that the existing social structure is founded on injustice and maintained by compulsion, the Anarchist is revolutionary to the heart's core, but it is a bloodless revolution that he desires—the evolution of truth-directed consciences and enlightened intellects working justice. When Anarchy fully triumphs, war will cease and scientific order begin.

It is somewhat amusing to review the prevalent misconceptions of and objections to the Anarchial theory. It is a common assertion that in primitiv savagedom Anarchy was tried and found wanting. But the savage's idea of liberty is as different from the Anarchist's as night from day. The savage idea of liberty is freedom for self and opportunity to invade the freedom of others; the Anarchist idea is mutual freedom of self with others. The first is the outgrowth of ignorant brutality, the second of the highest civilization and morality. Those who thus criticise Anarchy expose themselvs to the suspicion that their own highest conception of liberty is that of the savage, and that consequently they are afraid to trust it. Some accuse Anarchists of opposing co-operation; others will confound them with Communists. In fact, no men believe more in co-operation than Anarchists, yet there is a vital difference between them and Communists. The Communistic motto, "From each according to his ability; to each according to his necessity," contrasted with the Anarchistic motto, "To each according to his works," reveals this too clearly to need comment. In Communism there are no individuals; all are merged in one. In Anarchy every individual is an independent sphere, rolling on its own axis, moving in its own orbit, harmonizing but not interfering with its fellow-spheres. With the Anarchist everything begins and ends with the individual, yet, with his eye fixed on the grand principles of justice and liberty (which to the vision thus concentrated appear as one), he realizes, as no other man can, the true solidarity of humanity. Therefore he loves and does right by his neighbor, because he loves and would do right by himself. Therefore, while testing everything by its usefulness to self, he is most unselfish. Therefore Anarchism is ethical religion, or the religion of humanity, in practice, applied to the social and political life of man. It is the scientific pursuit of happiness and must include all reforms.

Anarchists are much criticised because they do not minutely explain the social order that will supplant the state. Where is the prophet acute enough to describe the forms into which a world of free individuals will crystallize?

However, for the benefit of such questioners, many of whom are honest, I will sketch a social order which may be the form Anarchy will assume. Suppose the great majority of Anarchists unite in a Confederation of Free Individuals. The confederation insists simply in their mutually agreeing, on their honor, to two things: (1) To mutually respect, promote, and defend each other's rights and liberties. (2) To refer all disputed questions to arbitrators, and to abide in good faith by their decisions. Nothing more. This great Confederation is subdivided into groups or companies of individuals residing near together. Each group elects its wisest and justest men by unanimous (not majority) votes, to be its council of advisers. These men make justice and harmony in all human affairs a special study; they look after the few public concerns and interests that would be found in a state of Anarchy (the keeping of public records, inspection of asylums, etc., for instance), and are the natural leaders (not rulers or commanders) of the group. In disputes they are naturally and usually chosen to arbitrate, though not if the disputants desire others. It is an office of honor, but not of profit, for they only receive an equitable compensation for labor performed. So far as public works or buildings are needed by the group, they are supplied by individual enterprise, or by co-operation of the individuals interested. The products of labor are equitably exchanged between individuals or groups on the principle of cost the limit of price. Thus little currency is needed, and what is, is supplied by a system of material banking or something similar. What would you ask better, simpler, or cheaper than this?

But how would we treat children, you ask? As soon as they are old enough to care for self, and comprehend liberty, we would treat them just as politely and respectfully as their elders, requiring them only not to invade the liberties of those around them. How treat the insane? If dangerous, prevent their harming self or others; if harmless, let them alone. How treat the robber? Require him to restore what he has taken, or, at least, its equivalent in money, goods, or labor, and to compensate for losses arising from his theft. How treat the murderer? His victim is dead and cannot be restored, but he must remove, as much as possible, evils resulting from his crime (the poverty of widow and orphans, for instance), and if his crime was premeditated, or exhibitiv of a character dangerous to the lives of other individuals, he is considered a moral lunatic, and placed in an asylum till his reformation is assured. The true principles of criminal restraint are these: (1) No punishment, capital or otherwise, for this is revenge and invasiv of the rights of the criminal. (2) Giv the criminal a chance to make good the evil he has done, and require him to do so. (3) Confine him, if he is a moral lunatic (one who reveals by repeated or atrocious crimes that he cannot, or does not, comprehend the vital importance of respecting human rights), till he is reformed.

Think you we should hav as many animals under such kind, just treatment as by our present system of legal tyranny, degradation, revenge and torture; hanging men or shutting them up in prisons (schools and hot-beds of vice and crime) whence they emerge sevenfold more the children of hell than when they entered?

Who would try and sentence these criminals? The advisers, who are, you remember, by universal consent the wisest and best men in the group. This is not mob law. Is it not an improvement on our present horde of mercenary, client-hired, lawyers, statute-bound, and, perhaps, bribed judges, and ignorant, indifferent jurymen?

Remember that in this Anarchistic Confederation there are no distinctions of race, nation, color, or sex; it is the "federation of the world," the "universal brotherhood," the "liberty, equality, fraternity," sung by poets and dreamed of by philosophers. Touch a single Anarchist, in that day, with the wand of injury, and the free and the just of every clime, the picked men of every race and country, will be your opponents, pledged and ready, with the courage and resolution only freemen know, to compel you to do justice.

J. WM. LLOYD.

Not Precisely as It Used to Be.

From the New York Times.

Clergyman (to hotel clerk): What do you charge a day?

Clerk: Two dollars.

Clergyman: You hav rates for clergymen, of course?

Clerk: Oh, yes, sir.

Clergyman: How much are they?

Clerk: Two dollars.

MUST CALL LOUDER.

Deacon Jones (from out of town): I am deputed to learn, Mr. Goodman, if a "call" from our church would likely be favorably entertained by you.

Minister: H'm. It would depend somewhat, I think, Mr. Jones, upon—er—circumstances.

Deacon: Ah, yes, I see. We discussed the matter in rather an informal way, and the sense of the majority seemed to be that—er—about $900——

Minister: H'm, yes. I am afraid, Mr. Jones, that the good people whom you represent will hav to "call" a little louder than that.

CREMATION.—The true keys of Peter, the fisherman, are priestly powers over births, marriages, and deaths, exhibited in christenings, weddings, and funerals. All of these are now exercised by the civil authorities in most civilized countries. The registration of births, and the recognition of marriages as civil contracts, hav been instituted in many enlightened nations, and cremation is the order of the day in Catholic Portugal, and is now entering into France, as the following extract testifies.

The municipal authorities of Paris hav decided that the remains of all the bodies dissected in the Paris hospitals shall henceforth be cremated, and, as the average number of such bodies is about four thousand a year, a special crematory is to be erected. Rome, Milan, and Gotha hav so far been at the head of the cremation movement in Europe, and Rome seems so far to possess the most perfect crematory. It consists of a handsome building, and the incineration is made in such a way that even the gases are consumed. Yet the expense of burning a body does not exceed six francs, or a little over a dollar. The crematory has been in operation about two years, and the body of Senator Cypriani was the first consumed in it. —New Yorlc Sun, Sept. 23, 1885.

The strength of the religious systems of Europe now rests in the women, and power over them is obtained by the clergy on the above-mentioned occasions. Every true Freethinker ought to dispense with the services of the priest at such times, wherever and whenever possible. For that reason, as well as for its sanitary superiority, cremation ought to be patronized by all well-wishers of humanity, in lieu of the old barbarous Egyptian custom of burying the dead.

THE truth which science asserts and religion indorses cannot be one furnished by mathematics; nor can it be a physical truth; nor can it be a truth in chemistry; it cannot be a truth belonging to any particular science.—Spencer.

To die well, one must first learn to liv well.—Confucius.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - OCTOBER 31, 1885.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—We are in need of the amounts of money owing upon subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and we ask those who are in arrears to promptly settle. There are upon our books a great many who hav sent us nothing since last year, and who owe from $3 to $5. To all these, little bills hav been sent, and unless we hear from them within a reasonable time, their names will hav to be erased from the list, however much we regret to do it. A large number of subscriptions hav expired during the past few months; we ask such subscribers to kindly remit at once. Everyone should look at the tab upon the wrapper of his paper, and if the date is in the past another payment is due.

We need, also, to hav our list increased, and respectfully ask every one of our friends to endeavor to procure at least one new subscriber. In no way can Freethought be more advantageously aided than by circulating its journals, and we confidently submit the claims of THE TRUTH SEEKER to the Freethinkers of the country. If everyone who has written expressing appreciation of the paper would forward a new subscriber, the list would be nearly doubled, and we could make a better paper than ever, and so do more good. Will not our friends make a little effort in this direction?

Shall We Illustrate The Truth Seeker?

The two pictures, The Modern Balaam and A Short Lesson in History for Christians, hav been very highly appreciated by the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and the desire for more is strongly expressed. The following letter is only one of many commending the pictures, but it is the first to suggest a practical method of making the paper an illustrated weekly:

"FORT FAIRFIELD, ME., Sept. 21, 1885.

"MR. EDITOR: The favor with which the printing of The Modern Balaam has been received by the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER suggests the idea, why can we not make THE TRUTH SEEKER an illustrated weekly? As we hav no illustrated Liberal paper in this country, would not the increased circulation of such a paper justify the Truth Seeker Company in trying the experiment? Of course this would very materially increase the expense in publishing THE TRUTH SEEKER, but my way out of the difficulty is for Liberals that are able to do so to subscribe for additional copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER for one year in sufficient numbers to meet the extra expense. If we ever hav a first-class illustrated weekly, somewhat in the style of Harper's Weekly, you may put me down for twenty-five (25) additional copies for one year, cash in advance.

"R. L. BAKER."

To pay the expense of a printing establishment sufficient to produce an illustrated weekly like Harper's, the TRUTH SEEKER subscription list would hav to be doubled a few times. But we can produce each week a picture like The Modern Balaam and a few other smaller ones for from $50 to $75 per week. Unless our subscription list can be extended we could not undertake the work, but if a number of friends will interest themselvs to help we can do it, and will do it as fast as the aid it given. Send us a few hundred subscribers during the next year, and THE TRUTH SEEKER shall each week contain arguments against theology that he who sees can understand. By pictures even Roman Catholics can be reached, and between them and the Liberals who enjoy the solid philosophy of Freethought there is an immense intellectual country peopled by those who must be reached in a variety of ways, and to whom pictures are more powerful than logic. For the good it will do, as well as the pleasure it will confer, THE TRUTH SEEKER ought to be illustrated. We propose to do it if within our power, and it can be done if the friends of Freethought will aid us by getting new subscribers.

Let those in favor of the project speak out, indicating what help they can offer, and we will introduce just as many pictures—and as soon—as we hav means to do with.

The Hebrews With Us.

We extend a hand to the Hebrew Standard, and hope it may see a way to help us practically in pushing our petition, of which it says:

"THE TRUTH SEEKER, the able organ of the Secular party, prints a petition asking for the repeal by the New York legislature of the following laws: '1. The law exempting church property from taxation. 2. The laws appropriating money from the public treasury for the support of institutions founded and managed chiefly by sectarian denominations. 3. The law compelling the observance of Sunday as a religious holy day.'

"We fully sympathize with the object of the petition. If we choose to erect costly temples and synagogs it is unfair to relieve ourselvs of our proportionate burden of taxation upon the plea of religion, and throw it upon the shoulders of others who honestly doubt the moral utility of churches and synagogs. The appropriations from the public treasury to Jewish institutions are at present received, because, under existing laws, we are legally entitled to our equitable proportion. A repeal of the law would necessitate further drafts upon our charity, which no Israelite would shirk, and if we desire to conduct our institutions upon Jewish religious principles, we ought, as Jews, to be willing to pay for the privilege. The so-called Sunday laws are a blot upon our civilization, and a disgrace to us as American citizens. Christ himself did not recognize Sunday as a Sabbath, and if a man wishes to observe Friday or Saturday as his Sabbath, or no Sabbath at all for that matter, it is his own business, and no one should interfere with his liberty of conscience. The truth is, we hav too many canting, sniveling hypocrits in America, and the wider the chasm between church and state, the better will it be for the prosperity of the people."

The position of the Standard is fair, square, and manly. We hope it voices the sentiments of the whole Hebrew population. Although Jewish institutions now wrongly receive money from the public treasury, the expressed willingness to renounce it when others do is in some measure an atonement for the peculation.

Upon the question of taxation and Sunday laws the Jews and the Infidels are at one. If any sect choose to build costly churches or synagogs, let it pay the taxes upon them. That is the true American principle, and we are glad the Israelites see it.

The laws making a man outwardly observe a day for which he inwardly has no respect are relics of a Christian age, when the cut of a man's coat and the quality of food he should eat were regulated by ecclesiastical dicta. Away with them! They hav no place on any statute book of any state in the nineteenth century.

A Letter from a True Christian.

We were cheered in our work one day this month by receiving the following letter dated in this city but postmarked Brooklyn:

"NEW YORK, Oct. 15, 1885.

"MR. EDITOR: I noticed in one of TRUTH SEEKERS a few days since that your miserable 'Freethinking' nonsense was on the increase, and that the church was on the decline.

"I send with this some statistics for you to read over, which will show the false statements you hav made.

"The same paper also speaks of our dear savior, using very vile terms and epithets against him. I hope you will consult the figures I send you, and turn from your wicked, evil ways.

"I am an old man sixty-six years, and I know Christ has been my stay in sickness and health. I wish that you and your miserable paper could burnt up in one pile is the sincere wish of a true CHRISTIAN."

The "statistics" were to the effect that some Ohio river boatmen had abandoned the bad habit of swearing; that Christianity is indebted to science for a new conception of "God;" a far-fetched and wholly erroneous opinion that Mary had no child but Jesus; a recital of the number of Young Men's Christian Associations; a statement that six hundred and fifty thousand French Protestants employ fifty missionaries; that the Church of England intends to use workingmen as missionaries; that fifty-four female physicians hav been sent to Asia, and that their work is going to be "of inestimable value in supplementing evangelistic efforts in heathen lands;" and a statement that the Religious Tract Society of England has translated and published Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" "in seventy languages."

No doubt all this is very gratifying to a true Christian, but there is nothing in it to make us turn from our "wicked, evil ways" of editing THE TRUTH SEEKER. If all the statements were true, and if such "statistics" were multiplied fifty times, it would only be an additional incentiv to us to circulate THE TRUTH SEEKER with increased vigor. If all the world were deluded enough to believe in Christianity, it would not make that religion true, nor be even the weakest of reasons why we and our "miserable paper" should be "burnt up in one pile."

The "statistics" of a true Christian, and his assertion that he knows Christ to hav been his preventer-backstay, as it were, all his life, are of a little less value than a row of bent pins. Aside from the statement that he is an old man of sixty-six years (which may be true), the only remark in the correspondence that we can admit is that he wishes THE TRUTH SEEKER and its editor could be burnt in the same pile. No doubt this is so. Other true Christians before his time hav not only wished heretics could be burnt, but hav shown the sincerity of their wishes by burning them. This true Christian may be sincere in the wish, but, thanks to the heretics who hav preceded us, he cannot realize his hopes. Our bones will make no bonfire for him to read his Bible by, and there are enough presses in New York to print as many copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER as he can buy and burn.

About a Three Thousand Dollar Swindle.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Brooklyn owns something over one hundred thousand dollars' worth of real estate, consisting of a building on Fulton street occupying nearly a block, wherein the young men loaf and perform their gymnastic exercises. The Board of Assessors asked the association to pay its taxes. The association declined, claiming exemption under the public libraries act.

The assessors referred the matter to Corporation-Counsel Taylor, who has given a decision sustaining the claim to exemption:

"While upon the general grounds of exemption set forth in the Revised Statues it might be doubted whether the association is sufficiently within the objects contemplated by the statutes to be exempt, yet Section 8 of Chapter 437 of the Laws of 1884 seems to accord to the association, by an amendment to its charter, the same exemption given by the Revised Statutes to public libraries. In view of the consideration that the exemption claimed does not inure to private gain, but is in furtherance of a public benefaction, Mr. Taylor is inclined to advise the Assessors that the claim of the association is well founded."

According to the Revised Statutes, chapter 13, title 1, §4, subdivisions 3, 4, and 5, the following property is exempt from taxation:

Subdivision 3. "Every building erected for the use of a college, incorporated academy, or other seminary of learning, every building for public worship, every school-house, court house, and jail, and the several lots whereon such buildings are situated, and the furniture belonging to each of them.

Subdivision 4. "Every poorhouse, almshouse, house of industry, and every house belonging to a company incorporated for the reformation of offenders or to improve the moral condition of seamen, and the real and personal property used for such purposes belonging to or connected with the same.

Subdivision 5. "The real and personal property of every public library."

In 1884 the Young Men's Christian Association of Brooklyn had the act incorporating the association amended by the legislature. At the tail end of the amendment, section 8 amending section 11, they put these words:

"The said corporation shall be . . . subject to the . . . . provisions of chapter 13 of part first of the Revised Statutes relativ to public libraries" (Laws of 1884, chapter 437, section 8).

The laws relativ to public libraries, as above given, is that their real and personal property shall be exempt. But in order that they may escape the assessors' visits the association should first prove that the words "subject to the provision of chapter thirteen of part first of the Revised Statutes relativ to public libraries" means also a similar exemption. To do this it must first be shown that the association is a public library. "In this case," says the Brooklyn Eagle, "the fact is that the Young Men's Christian Association is not a library, and can only be represented as a library by straining the truth." The Eagle thinks that the corporation counsel's opinion would not be sustained by the courts.

Whether or not it should be, the association is relieved of no culpability. In the first place, the exemption of the property is a gross wrong inflicted upon the taxpayers of Brooklyn. Their burdens are increased by just the amount cancelled by the assessors upon the association's property. It is safe to say that not one in six hundred of the people of Brooklyn hav ever benefited in the remotest way by any accommodation afforded by the library, reading-room, or gymnasium. In the second place, if the property shall be permanently exempted, the association must bear the odium of having by a legal quibble committed a dishonest and immoral act, for exemption amounts to the same thing as taking so much money from Brooklyn's treasury. An act of legislature cannot make theft honorable. Let the Young Men's Christian Association remember that.

The Congregational Hogs of Greenwich.

There was a time when church and state in Massachusetts were one. The connection was as close as in Great Britain, and it was not until 1833 that the ostensible separation was effected. During the colonial period Massachusetts law required attendance at church every Sunday, and the treatment of such heretics as the Quakers was very severe. It appears, from the trouble about Mr. Watts's lecture in Greenwich, that the separation of church and state in that town is very far from complete.

The facts in the case, as given by our correspondent, are a good illustration of the evils of the state in any way aiding ecclesiastical societies. According to old custom the town once owned this meeting house, supporting it by taxes upon all alike. When a transfer was forced by law, the Congregationalists did not secure a good title. The town has kept the building in repair, with the understanding, since the spring of 1884, that its use was to be granted whenever six citizens petitioned the selectmen. With the hoggishness common to Christians when feeding at the public trough, the Congregationalists hav been satisfied to accept the Infidel tax-payers' money, but when the Infidels wish to use the building they forthwith procure an injunction restraining the selectmen from accommodating the unbelievers. This, it seems, is the Greenwich Christian's idea of justice.

Fortunately, there is another hall in Greenwich, and the Freethinkers of the place were enabled to hear the speaker of their choice. But it should be a lesson to them to wrench the alleged church from the hands of the Congregationalists and put it outside of the jurisdiction of ecclesiastical law, or compel the people who worship in it to wholly support it. It is idle folly to go in partnership with superstition, expecting justice at the hands of its devotees.

Editorial Notes.

In an account of a funeral in this city last week, the World informs the public that "the flicker of a blessed candle illumined" the face of the officiating priest. Will the World kindly tell us what difference there is between the flicker of a blessed candle and the flicker of a candle that is not blessed?

Since General Newton blew up Hell Gate, a New York paper says that Colonel Ingersoll "has made a proposition to General Newton to join him in the lecture business—sit on the platform and exhibit himself at the Agnostic entertainments as the man who, next to Ingersoll, has prevailed most largely against the Gates of Sheol."

The Times of this city says the conviction of Mr. Stead, editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, would be as unjust "as was the conviction of Mr. Bradlaugh and Mr. Besant, upon the charge of circulating obscene literature." It takes the ordinary editor a good while to do justice to a Freethinker, but in the end truth is bound to be vindicated.

Some of the readers of the Boston Index may be growing weary of Mr. Underwood's remarks about rescinding some resolution or other which was at some time or other adopted by the National Liberal League; but they should hav learned by this time that the Index does not deal with questions of contemporaneous human interest. Mr. Underwood will therefore be permitted to proceed with his motion to rescind.

The recently deceased Cardinal McCloskey, says the Advocate, "regarded Protestantism as a pestilent heresy, born of the spurious alliance of reason and the Bible. We [Protestants] regard Romanism as a gigantic structure built of about equal proportions of Pagan and Christian materials." Not to show partiality for either Protestant or Catholic, we would remark that in their estimate of each other they may both be right.

Our friends in Cleveland, Ohio, can find Freethought books for sale at N. Hexter's, 303 Superior street, and also at Van Epps & Co.'s 259 Superior street. In Detroit, Mich., John Macfarlane, 135 Woodward avenue, and Swan & Co., 87 Woodward avenue, hav laid in a stock of Freethought works and will welcome customers for them. Mr. Somerby is now on the road, and will no doubt induce other book houses in other cities to keep our literature for sale, notice of which will be given.

The recent New York State Freethinker's Association Convention at Albany left a legacy of discussion to the resident Freethinkers. The ministers of the city carefully kept silence when the Convention was in session, but has since come valorously to the front in defense of their faith. The two noisest are Rev. Father Walsh and the Rev. Mr. Stanton. In pulpit and press, these Christians hav attacked Freethinkers and Freethought, repeating every Christian libel they could scrape together and rehearsing all the spread-eagle oratory of the dangerousness of Freethought. In the hands of J. J. McCabe and Augustus Schell, however, our cause is safe; the clerical defamers hav been sharply brought to book, and the inhabitants of Albany are learning something of what our Convention was all about. To the credit of the Albany press we must say they appear to print both sides with equal readiness.

It seems that the bed-rock reason for the recent overthrow of the French cabinet is the radical position the government assumed toward the church. The leaders of the republic are all Infidels. The Conservativs and royalists are stanch supporters of Romanism. The Republican assembly made war upon the concordat, curtailing the revenues of the church, struck the name of God from the school-books, removed the idolatrous images of the same mythical being from the hospitals, and the church has revenged herself by ordering her voters to vote with the royalist party. Such a proceedure was to be expected, and the Freethinkers are in nowise discouraged. A continued Catholic supremacy means monarchy, and the people will by no means consent to that. The intellect of France is Infidel and republican, and intellect must finally prevail over blind superstition.

The London Secular Review says:

"Our bright little contemporary, the Republican, edited by Mr. George Standring, givs in its September issue a portrait and biographical sketch of Mr. E. M. Macdonald, of the New York Truth Seeker. We agree with Mr. Standring that The Truth Seeker has been vastly improved since Mr. Macdonald became the man at the helm. We did not lack in appreciation of the pluck and persistency of his predecessor, D. M. Bennett, of 'Cupid's Yokes' notoriety, but he was almost destitute of the literary faculty, and his propaganda was of the old Bible-banging order, which is now nearly obsolete. Mr. Macdonald conducts a really model Freethought journal on popular lines, and, being still a young man, we trust he has before him a career of usefulness and distinction."

We copy the above that we may put in a word for our loved and honored friend who rests in Greenwood. No two men are alike, and The Truth Seeker may be a little different now from what it was when Mr. Bennett was alive; that is to be expected. But no one could do more effectiv work against superstition than Mr. Bennett. His Titanic assaults upon the church were felt by her supporters, as no one's else of the present time hav been, except Colonel Ingersoll's. Bennett stormed her walls, and fell into the prison which is back of every creed. "Cupid's Yokes" had but little to do with his trial. If we can do as much good in all of life as he did in eight short years we shall not hav lived in vain; that will be distinction enough. However, we thank Saladin for his kindly-meant words.

The ephemeral effects of revival efforts are well shown in the last visit of Sam Jones to Plattsburg, Mo. Plattsburg was the first town in Missouri in which Jones made a stand, and his preaching was considered at the time to be a great success. The Daily Gazette, of St. Joseph, says: "It was at Plattsburg that this remarkable revivalist first set the woods afire in Missouri, so to speak. It was there that a flood tide of fervor, excitement, and enthusiasm arose which finally inundated St. Joseph. It was there that he fried sinners on both sides, as brother Waller Young has so tersely and characteristically expressed it. It was there vast crowds, under a sweltering midsummer sun, stood for hours and hours—never weary, faultfinding, or impatient." Then Jones left the place, and the local Christians had to get along as best they could. The Methodists soon started a camp-meeting project, and money was desired to buy the ground. Jones was reimported to draw the dollars out of the pockets of the faithful. He came, he preached, but he did not conquer. One man, a preacher, offered to be one of twenty to giv one hundred dollars each, toward the proposed enterprise. Mr. Jones called for the nineteen. He waited—not another response. He insisted—still no response. He prayed, begged, beseeched, but not a dollar came. Then he slammed the Bible shut, and said, "Let's hav the benediction." The meeting was over—a flat failure, and Jones left town. The Christians of Plattsburg will probably hav this to answer for at the judgment seat.

And now comes the Index, a Liberal organ, and intimates that the National Liberal League is raising money under false pretenses. It is leading a crusade against Christianity, while it is asking Christians and others for money simply for the cause of state secularization. It has just voted to call itself the American Secular Union; but it has not voted to cease its efforts to dechristianize and demoralize—Independent.

The attitude of the Boston Index toward the Freethinkers of the country is truly surprising. The above charge is nothing less than dishonest. The Union does not ask or expect money from the church, nor from individual Christians. The managers of the Index seem to hav peculiar ideas of honor. While condemning the action of the officers of last year, they nevertheless took advantage of the gathering at Cleveland to circulate copies of the Index, which was, to say the least, a very cheeky performance. And before giving away his stock, the man charged with the distribution, Mr. E. D. Stark, of Cleveland, spread himself in a morning paper of the city, charging the Union with endeavoring to "secularize the church, the family, and the very shrine of our private devotion." It is unnecessary to state that instead of endeavoring to interfere with Mr. Stark's private devotion, the Union was totally unaware of his existence until he invaded the hall hired and paid for by the Union to circulate a paper bitterly inimical to the officers. Even then he was allowed every privilege. At Albany the same was done. Though in no way to aiding the New York State Association to make the Convention a success, the managers of the Index sent hundreds of copies to be given away. In this case, as a member of the business committee, we had the satisfaction of heaping coals of fire on the managers' craniums by assuring Mr. McDonough that the managers of the Convention had not the slightest objection to his scattering copies of the Index as freely as he liked, and by showing his clerks good places from which to operate. But it seems to us that the conduct of the Index people is lacking both in courtesy and honor.

On the day of Cardinal McClosky's funeral the Sun said:

"The first American cardinal has died at a time when all Christians are ready to honor his memory as that of a man who has done measureless service in the cause of religion, good morals, and humanity, for at length they are beginning to understand that the old battles between the different parties of the Christian church must cease, and that together as trustful allies they must fight for the preservation of the faith against its Infidel enemies. Therefore Protestants and Catholics will join in sincerely mourning the first American cardinal as a Christian hero lost."

No doubt the Catholics and some of the Protestants will in the future join hands in the struggle for the preservation of Christianity, but we think a good many of the Protestants will be found in the Infidel line of battle. It looks that way now.

The Rev. R. Heber Newton, in drawing attention to the error which people make in praying for material blessings, said recently:

"If prayer were always answered, its power could then be calculated as the power of steam or electricity. It would be measurable, ponderable, merchantable force. Prayer would be an order upon omnipotence, a draft to be duly honored when presented, a faucet opening the conduits of force, a wire tapping the battery of the infinit energy. It becomes the electrician's tapping of the currents of universal energy, and using them to save himself labor. Man has only to wire his orders to heaven and supplies are shipped at once. I don't see why, in such conception of prayer, we should not hav a Faure system for storing prayer-power and for using it per cubic foot of energy on demand. Saints would be highly useful members of the community—a sort of force generator, serving to keep the reservoirs of prayer-power full, so that society would draw freely from the treasury of grace."

Mr. Newton's suggestions open up a wide range of thought. If prayer is what it is claimed to be, it must possess a certain amount of dynamic force. This brought into consideration would serve a useful purpose in gauging the capacity of ministers according to the horse-power of their praying capacity. For instance a minister who could accomplish a ten horse-power petition to the throne of grace would of course be entitled to twice the salary of one whose prayers had an effect of only five horse-power. Ministers by working over-time could also store up a sufficient amount of prayer-force to last the flock during their annual vacations, so that Satan might not hav the whole field to himself. Mr. Newton should be encouraged to go on in the way he has begun.

We hav at times been rather sharply criticised for publishing clerical departures from the paths of virtue, and for saying that churches are in many cases schools wherein the young learn many bad things. But we never charged such wholesale immorality to the members as was admitted by Mr. Taber to Mr. Downes, the amorous pastor of Bowdoin Square Baptist church in Boston. The admission was put in evidence by Mr. Downes himself as witness in the suit brought by Mr. Taber for divorce from his wife. Mr. Downes had testified that upon one occasion, when he called upon Mrs. Taber, she arose, "and, rushing forward, threw herself upon me." Mr. Taber's lawyer then questioned him:

"Q. Did you not confess to him that Mrs. Taber had sat upon your knee and kissed you? A. Emphatically, no; nothing of the kind occurred. Mr. Taber had said that he saw it, but he, in his confession to me, acknowledged that he did not. When I alluded to Mrs. Taber's throwing herself upon me, he said: 'Oh, don't think anything about that; I've had the same thing happen to me in the church a hundred times.'"

This is a queer state of affairs to prevail in a congregation of supposed-to-be respectable people. A hundred times hav the women of the church thrown themselvs upon Mr. Taber! Hav they also thrown themselvs upon the other male members of the congregation? We venture to doubt if in any concert hall in Boston the women hav so immoderately precipitated themselvs upon the men. Reading the report of this trial, we hav to agree with the detectiv who saw Mr. Downes and Mrs. Taber in an equivocal position in her room: "I never thought much of ministers or of religion, and now I think a damned sight less!"

Answers to Inquiries.

W. H. Mannebach.—There are no ceremonies prescribed by law when affirming. The custom is to hold up the right hand—a senseless relic of God worship—and say Yes to the clerk.

Wm. Adams.—1. Bank defaulters are very scarce in China, according to all accounts. The government has a habit of decapitating such Chinese gentlemen as get away with other people's money, and this has a deterrent effect upon bank officials. 2. It is an indisputable fact that such heathen nations as the Japanese and some others are more moral than Chrtstian nations. Read D. M. Bennett's "Around the World."

E. A. Jacquinot.—1. The Bible describes the earth as having foundations, pillars, ends, etc., and but one conclusion can be arrived at by reading it, namely, that the author thought the earth to be flat. This opinion was shared by all the old Christians, including Martin Luther. 1 Sam. ii, 8, says "the pillars of the earth are the Lord's, and he hath set the world upon them." In Isaiah xlviii, 13, "God" says: "My hand also hath laid the foundation of the earth." In Deut. xxxiii, God threatened to "push the people together to the ends of the earth" with his horns, which "are like the horns of unicorns." Presumably, when God had hooked the people to the ends of the earth, they would fall over the edge. For fifteen hundred years all Christians, basing their ideas upon the Bible, believed the earth was flat, and the Catholic church anathematized, imprisoned, and burnt as heretics those who held otherwise. 2. The first insurrection in Paris of the French Revolution was on July 12, 1789. In 1795 Bonaparte disarmed the mob of Paris, and France was ruled by a Directory of five. The Royalists endeavored to seize the government, but were prevented by force of arms. Bonaparte overthrew the Directory on Nov. 9, 1799. The "Revolution" lasted six years. The subsequent fighting was not the fault of the people, and, for that matter, neither was the Revolution. It was forced upon them by the Romish church. We do not recollect having seen any statement of the number killed.

Letters from Friends.

EASTWOOD, ONT., Oct. 3, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Remsburg delivered a lecture in Eastwood October 1st, subject, "Bible Morals." Great interest was manifested by Liberals living in the surrounding country, some driving from ten to twenty miles to hear the lecture. This was the second Freethought lecture delivered in Eastwood. The first was by Mr. Putnam, on "The Glory of Infidelity." Those lectures hav evidently set men to thinking outside of the old theological grooves of former days. There was a large and appreciativ audience present, except some church-members who were not prepared to receive statements which Mr. Remsburg made so pointedly in his lecture. I invited several reverend gentlemen to meet Mr. Remsburg in public discussion, but none put in an appearance. Considerable merriment was caused by Mr. Remsburg reading a reply to my invitation by Rev. James Little, of Princeton. He, not satisfied to show his vindictivness in the letter, put a supplement on the outside of the envelope. I inclose the original for publication, which will no doubt amuse if it does not instruct the public. RICHARD HOOPER.

THE REVEREND'S LETTER.

PRINCETON, Sept. 29, 1885.

Mr. Richard Hooper: So far as I know, my Lord and Master Christ Jesus, whose I am and whom I seek to serve, has never sent any of his servants on an errand such as you write me to go upon. "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature" (Mark xvi, 15). The God of the book and the book of God need no defense from me. God will attend to that matter in his own time and way. Of old, the ark of God, which for the time being was the symbol of God's cause on earth, was perfectly capable of taking care of itself, when the Philistines got possession of it. You and your "free thought" lecturer are evidently like Pilate—not knowing what to do with Jesus. "Pilate said unto them, What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ? They all said unto him, Let him be crucified" (Matt. xvii, 22).

There are two classes in the world—the spiritually dead and the spiritually alive. You belong to the former class, I to the latter. You could not understand me were I to speak to you. "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (1 Cor. 2, xiv). You are dead in trespasses and sins. Unless you are born of the spirit you must perish. You cannot regenerate yourself. If God do not awaken your poor dead and lost soul, you must go to hell, for you are not fit to go to heaven. You hav no "freedom," either of thought or of anything else. The devil is binding you harder and harder every day with his chains of error and darkness. I now warn you solemnly and faithfully and earnestly to escape for your life and not to tarry any longer in the plains of Infidelity. Hell yawns to receive you. The devil is on your track and your day of peace will soon b over. I am clear of your blood. There is a God; there is a heaven; there is a hell; there is a devil, and you know it; there is a Savior, and I offer him to you. "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."

"Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his works in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain."

May God hav mercy on your poor dead soul!

Yours respectfully, JAMES LITTLE.

[On the envelope was a reference to Gen. iii, 4, "And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die," followed by the remark: "Your gospel is very old. The devil first preached it and ruined the race." The genial and polite gentleman also referred Mr. Hooper to John vi, 39–14, the application of which we fail to see, and to Rom. viii, 29–30, which are the texts especially sworn by by Presbyterians. He added: "If you are not of the elect of God there is no help for you. You must fry throughout eternity. It were well for you if you had never been born." Altogether, the letter shows the reverend to be a very well preserved fossil of the hell-and-damnation period.]

OMRO, WIS., Oct. 8, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Passed to spirit life at her home in this place, October 5th, Mrs. Harriet Stanley Pettingill, wife of Wm. R. Pettingill. Mrs. Pettingill was born in Morristown, Vt., September 22, 1825, and consequently was sixty years of age. She was a kind and true friend, a loving companion, and a devoted mother. Having been a Spiritualist thirty-three years, the change called death had no terrors for her; indeed, she was anxious to go. The last rites were appropriately observed on the 7th inst. in Spiritualist Hall, Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood speaking on "The Continuity of Existence" to a large concourse of relativs and friends, the writer and family furnishing the music. DR. J. C. PHILLIPS.

LEONARD, IOWA, Sept. 27, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: There is no use for me to make an apology other than to say that carelessness has been my fault for not remitting to you sooner. Here are $5. Send on THE TRUTH SEEKER, for I am lonesome without it.

Mr. John E. Remsburg delivered three lectures in my grove on Aug. 23d. There was no unusual stir at the time, but since then the Christians hav been horrified, and now that he is hundreds of miles away the hornets are a buzzing around threatening what they will do if he ever comes into these parts again. It comes to my knowledge that if Mr. Remsburg had lectured in the evening he would hav been "egged," the eggs having been collected. I hope to liv to see John on the same ground again and hear him speak again as never man spake before in Leonard's Grove.

I am persuaded that an occasional stirring-up of the Christians will be the means of prolonging their existence in this neighborhood—that is, of the old ones only, as scarcely a new recruit joins them. I am told that I hav disgraced myself and the neighborhood by having that infamous Infidel lecture here. At any rate, the lectures hav caused a sermon to be preached on the inspiration of the Bible.

It is amusing to watch them preaching and compare their sermons. The above preacher said on one Sunday that Mohammed inspired his troops to valor by the promis that their reward should be to capture for themselvs wives, but the Christian Bible was superior to the Mohammedan Bible. He certainly had forgotten that his Bible taught that "when thou goest to war and the Lord thy God hath delivered thine enemies into thine own hands and thou beholdest a beautiful woman among the captivs, and hath desire unto her to wife, thou shalt take her unto thine own house: thou shalt shave her head and pare her nails." DANIEL LEONARD.

ANTELOPE CO., NEB., Sept. 30, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I think the last I wrote you was from the state of California, where I was trying change of climate for malarial congestion of the lungs. The summer and autumn of 1885 find me in Nebraska, working on a farm, with a distant hope of redeeming my financial fortunes, so unfortunately devastated by sickness at the South. I love and prefer a country life. The love, and life, and beauty of the early dawn; the grass; the birds; the ripening grain; the free, wild prairie; the zephyr and the storm, hav been to me a thrilling joy. I find here, among the most advanced thought of all creeds and parties, the Prohibition and the female suffrage questions are coming to the front. The great law of progress, or "Forward," is written indelibly on the Caucasian race. They cannot permanently go backward. They feel that civilization has groped long enough without the full and untrammeled influence of the female mind; that we are esthetically far back in barbarism and barbarous thought, because of shackles on her mind and acts, by foul control of her free purpose, and that free companionship between the sexes has been too much restrained.

I am nearly two days' walk from home, called, in my old capacity of hydropathist and magnetic aid, to attend the sick. I found a Liberal sister suffering from want of physical nervous energy, her mind as clear as crystal, but her strength reduced. Sciatic and nervous rheumatism hav laid on her their tiresome hand. Too free use of nervous energy; excessiv toil; the care for a family; the anxieties and privations of a frontier life, hav told on a frame not too robust, and retarded the development of a mentality at once rare and beautiful. When we shall learn to put our trust in our obedience to natural law, and leave uncertain chance and the still more uncertain gods to barbarous tribes and histories of olden time, and teach our sons and daughters that too free expenditure of nervous force in early life means premature exhaustion, then shall we hav made advancement. WM. J. ROSENKRANS.

CAWKER CITY, KAN., Sept. 29, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I much regret my inability to meet with the Congress at my old home (Cleveland, O.), but wish the work of the good may go on forever.

We hav quite a large Liberal element in this vicinity, but hav for some time been unable to effect an organization. We are in one of the best agricultural sections of the state, and hav a city of two thousand. Most of our business men are Liberals, as well as many farmers in vicinity. We hope that our numbers may be increased by immigration during the coming year, and to effect a strong organization. I hav visited many cities of this state, and think we ought to number 100,000 if we had a good organizer. Several of our local papers are edited by Liberals, but some of them seem afraid to come out squarely on the question. W. I. IRVINE.

JACKSONVILLE, OR., Oct. 3, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3 to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER the present year. I hav been somewhat tardy in my remittance, but better late than never. A confessed Liberal cannot or should not be dishonest. We are making the old orthodox mossbacks tremble in their boots in this portion of Oregon (Jackson county). We dedicate our new Liberal hall on Wagoner Creek, this county, to-morrow, and expect a rousing time. The Methodists hav started a ten days' protracted meeting in the vicinity of our hall, to head us off, but we will dedicate with an attendance of five to one.

May the banners of THE TRUTH SEEKER continue to wave. Our star of hope is in the ascendant, and we will never let up till we kill off all the cruel gods and devils.

J. N. HALL.

OTTUMWA, IA., Oct. 2, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Last Sunday the citizens of Ottumwa were favored with one of the best lectures ever delivered in this city, the speaker being Mr. C. W. Stewart, the great scientific lecturer. By the inclosed clippings you will see that he has already set the minds of the people to thinking. For the benefit of THE TRUTH SEEKER readers, I send the questions addressed to Mr. Stewart, as well as the speaker's answers.

Sincerely yours, KATIE KEHM.

From the Ottumwa Democrat.

"OTTUMWA, Sept. 23, 1885.

"EDITOR DEMOCRAT: Having always found the Democrat ready to aid any of its readers in acquiring knowledge, I ask a little space in which to ask Professor Stewart a few questions relating to his lecture given at Liberal Hall last evening. I come as a truth seeker, and hope the professor will answer through the Democrat, as his reply will interest many besides myself.

"You say this universe has always existed; that these powers, matter and force, must hav always existed, for if there was a time when there were no such powers they must hav created themselvs, which is impossible. Now, I wish to ask the question, Does development go on forever? And going on forever, would it not hav at last produced an infinitly perfect being?

"Must we either deny that this activ principle of development inheres in the universe, or must we admit that it has existed forever in it, and if activ forever in it, must it not hav produced in an infinit time an infinitly perfectly being, a God. A conscious, intelligent force, choosing to create, is higher in the scale of existence than a blind force necessarily creating without plan and for no end. Those who do not accept a personal, conscious God as the cause of creation are bound, it seems to me, to accept him as the result of development. No limit can be set to this principle of evolution, which, having given us the mineral, vegetable, and animal kingdoms, gone up through radiata, mollusca, and articulata to fishes, reptils, birds, and mammalia, and so arrived at man. During this finite time it has produced the human mind in this planet.

"If during a finite period matter has developed finite mind in this particular planet, then throughout the infinit universe during an infinit period of time ought it not to hav developed an infinit mind? Otherwise, if God did not create the universe, has not the universe created God? (Culled from Clarke's Steps of Belief.) M. P."

REPLY.

"OTTUMWA, IA., Oct. 1, 1885.

"MR EDITOR: In reply to the queries of your correspondent, 'M. P.,' permit me to say:

"First, That according to science matter and force are eternal; that matter and force express themselvs in form; that the change in form through adaptation to environment is called development. This does not go on forever as to any one form, forms being simply subject to it as an eternal principle or law.

"Second, The universe of matter and force could not 'produce an infinitly perfect being,' because the universe itself is that being. There cannot be two infinit beings, and if the universe is infinit there is no room for an infinit God.

"It is a mistake to say that evolution has given us the kingdoms of nature if nature is eternal. Nature evolves forms in accordance with the principle of evolution.

"It is useless to speak of nature producing an infinitly perfect being unless it can be shown that there is in nature an eternally existing form. And if nature created such a being she could not evolve more than is involved. Intelligence is not a form of force. Force can only express itself through matter. If nature evolved an infinit intelligence it would only be an expression of her nativ force in a certain way through the nativ material. This is simply Pantheism, and in all ages this has been the result of the search after God. Science is modest enough to admit that she knows nothing about gods, and that she deals with the tangible phenomena of the world we liv in, leaving the realm of the unknowable for the exploration and exploitation of theologians and metaphysicians, who hav time and taste for such labors.

"Respectfully, C. W. STEWART."

TRIMBLE, O., Oct. 5, 285.

MR. EDITOR: In the last issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER I read a letter from Seward Mitchell, which brings to my mind the question, Was the Albany Convention a meeting of Liberals or Conservativs? Has the meeting that had its birth in the town of Huron on the 18th of August, 1877, so developed and grown in size as to forget its "creed"—"Universal Mental Liberty"—or does it desire to please the majority? I ask the Albany Convention, Can you afford to stand by and quietly ignore the rights of a brother—the right of free speech?

To Mr. Mitchell I say, "Glory in your spirit." I know not what the World's Reformer is like or what it advocates, but, judging from the title, I am led to suppose it is for the good of humanity. There are a great many calling themselves Liberals, but when it comes to a practical test of their Liberalism they are far from being Liberals.

What did people think of the Antislavery movement fifty years ago, when William Lloyd Garrison established his paper, whose open aim was immediate "unconditional emancipation?" Why, the legislature of our state offered five thousand dollars for his head; the governor of another state "expressed in his annual message the opinion that Abolitionists might be prosecuted in the courts." It would be well to warn the Albany Convention to be careful. Had you been in existence then you would hav been just as conservativ. Why did Heywood lie in jail and Bennet in a prison? Because of trammeled free speech.

Garrison, in his paper, called the Liberator, said: "I will not equivocate, I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch, and I will be heard." Mr. Mitchell, if you think your views, expressed in the World's Reformer, are right, repeat the language of Garrison. You hav a right to be heard. No Freethinker can say otherwise.

Conservativs executed the noble John Brown. In years to come their posterity may erect a monument to his memory.

In the language of the outraged, "Can the Albany Convention afford to act so?" Thousands of Freethinkers in this and other countries will notice their actions, and their hearts will fill up with sympathy for Mr. Mitchell and denounce the Albany Convention. The noble TRUTH SEEKER does not refuse him a hearing. When will the world learn the true meaning of liberty?

"Fly swift around, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

D. E. LEWIS.

CALISTOGA, CAL., Oct. 3, 285.

MR. EDITOR: A young Italian recently from Genoa, Italy, tells of an occurrence which he witnessed shortly before leaving his nativ land.

The summer being very dry, the people were instructed to pray to the Madonna for rain. They did so repeatedly without success. At length becoming alarmed and impatient, the priests told them to be ready, and at a given signal to rush to their Madonnas, put ropes around them and drag them through the dirt, and otherwise abuse them, and then wash them off and set them up again. This was done, most effectually, he says, and shortly afterward there was plenty of rain.

Being questioned by his brother, with whom I am well acquainted, he said it was a fact, and that most of the people participated in the affair, and believed their prayers had been effectual after they had chastised and abused the Madonna.

I giv this story to THE TRUTH SEEKER friends to enable them to irrigate their fields and gardens as occasion may require.

Ropes and Madonnas may be had at little cost, and we might hitch them to our plows and wagons as we go about the fields and highways. If anyone knows of a better way to make the angels, weep please tell us. Strange, too, that, having so few lady saints in their catalog, they should pitch upon the queen of them all as the object of their abuse. What a fine sense of honor these teachers of religion must hav! Woman's dishonor is superstition's crowning glory.

J. C. WEYBRIGHT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Oct. 5, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: It is about five years since I last had the pleasure of hearing Mr. George Chainey from the rostrum, and it was then in Boston. Yesterday the opportunity occurred again, and after reading so much relativ to his new departure in belief, I was anxious to receive some of his present thoughts. The name Gnostic, under which he now writes and speaks, is an ancient one, and in choosing it, if I understand right, he has chosen or accepted an ancient belief. I was disappointed in his failure to refer to this belief, except in a brief way, during his lecture; but as his co-laborer in the cause, Mrs. Anna Kimball, delivered a discourse and replied to questions in relation to it, it is taken for granted that she gave his views as well as her own; to this I will refer later. Mr. Chainey still retains the power to interest and hold the close attention of an audience, and his carefully chosen words, uttered with deliberation and sincerity, find a responsiv echo in the hearts of his hearers. There is no denying the fact that his insight of human nature is clear and deep, and when he confines his remarks to "this world," and the affairs of humanity, it is a pleasure and a satisfaction to listen to him. Judging from his personal appearance, the censure and harsh criticism of former friends and admirers has perturbed him little, for, barring the changed look which his flowing locks, worn a la Theodore Tilton, giv him, his young and scholarly face seems singularly free from the marks of time. I judge that the enthusiasm which has been manifested in all his labors and life work remains unabated, and he has entered the new field of labor with a determination to succeed, and a conviction that he will. In company with Mrs. Kimball, he has organized a school of "psychic and physical culture;" has leased a hall which will be dedicated to-morrow evening, and made a permanent home, library, and reading-room for the school; and so certain seems success that he has given up his intended lecture tour to Australia. Every reformer who seeks to elevate humanity and raise the mind to loftier hights; to cultivate reason and promote intelligence, should never lack for assistance and co-operation, and I hope while he deals with the practical and real that lack of support will never lead him to fall into that slough of despondency which he did when trying to convince others and comfort himself with the belief that the womb is the origin and the grave the finality of man. According to Mrs. Anna Kimball's assertions, the Gnostic believes man has a physical body, an astral soul, and some a spirit. The physical body has a birth and beginning, also the astral soul, but the spirit always existed, and, when freed from the astral soul and physical body, can return in memory to the beginning of time, or at least to a very early period, when God was probably quite young. The astral soul is an invisible counterpart of the physical body and was evolved from the great central sun, which is an invisible counterpart of our old Sol, and after it has completed its work on earth in connection with the spirit and physical body it again returns to the "great central sun," is absorbed and loses individuality. The reason the spirit, which always existed and ever will, takes possession of a physical body is to produce a perfect one, so immortality can be had in the flesh, but as yet has not succeeded in so doing. She says her astral soul can go to distant places and appear to those having the power to see, and during this time she is unconscious of its absence. She further claims that most of the so-called materialized spirits are nothing but astral souls, and that these are often the astral souls of persons in the audience or seance-room. She further says the spirits of animals evolute into human beings, but don't know how long it takes, or the exact process. And this she calls "Gnosticism!" Is there no end to credulity, and is it possible that Chainey indorses these views? When she finished speaking, her audience knew just as much as it did when she began, and I fancy that many felt, as I did, that it was a waste of time to listen to such vague, visionary, and nonsensical gush. This part of the world has passed the age of mysticism, and has little use for theories that cannot be demonstrated. When people claim "they hav direct intercourse with the divine spirit, and acquire a knowledge of God and of spiritual things, such as cannot be analyzed or explained," I, for one, can dispense with any information they desire to giv. There is no limit to fanaticism when you lose your grip on reason, but some still act and talk as though reason should be suppressed; and if dupes and devotees are gained to certain isms, it surely must be. This is a free country, and if anyone wants to be a "Gnostic," the law don't prohibit. There is no penalty attached to credulity. But my astral soul is getting weary and we must enter the land of nod.

C. SEVERANCE.

BRATTLEBORO, VT., Oct. 10, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find fifteen cents, for which please send me two copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER—one for Sept. 19th, and the other for Sept. 26th, as I am anxious to preserve the proceedings of the Albany Convention, which proved such a grand success, with, perhaps, one exception, and I refer to the arrest of Mr. Seward Mitchell, for the alleged circulation of obscene literature. It is too bad that a meeting of that kind should hav been unnecesarily marred by such a proceeding, for I fail to see any satisfaction to be gained in promulgating filth—for it amounts to nothing more nor less than that, in the opinion of decent men and women.

Such hog-wash as Mitchell and Heywood publish in their cranky sheets is demoralizing to almost any community, and has a decided tendency to lower all Freethinkers in the estimation of outsiders.

Compare the polished, refined, and very scholarly address of Courtlandt Palmer, on the "Aristocracy of Freethought," with some of the stuff given to the public by Mr. Mitchell, and is it anything to be wondered at that Messrs. Palmer and Wakeman should dislike to affiliate his notions? No man, with the least regard for himself and family, would.

I hope the New York State Freethinkers will conclude to hold their next Convention in New York city, as there are many who would be more apt to attend it there than elsewhere. Besides, it would be accessible from all points, and also giv people an opportunity to visit Greenwood Cemetery, and see D. M. Bennett's monument.

There was some talk of having Col. Ingersoll speak here, while he was in Vermont, but a hasty consultation with several business men in regard to it resulted in a contrary decision, many of them being terribly shocked at the mere mention of the great Infidel's name.

Well, it is nothing to be marveled at, when one considers the fact that only a few Sundays since a Baptist preacher in this place told his congregation that the sun goes around the earth in 24 hours, and that all lawyers who defend criminals are destined for hell, while a Methodist exhorter said the Bible story about Jonah was true, and two-thirds of his audience actually believed him. And it is only a fow years since that a ridiculous case occurred in the northern part of this state, where a good church man and a devout Christian took his children out of a district school one winter because the teacher taught the scholars that the earth revolved on its axis once in every 24 hours. He said he knew better than that, for he had kept milk in his cellar for more than forty years, and there "had never been a drop of milk spilled out of his pans." With such ideas, and a law on the statutes of Vermont imposing a fine of $200 on any person "who publicly denies the being and existence of God," and a $10 fine for traveling or resorting to an inn or tavern on the Lord's day, it is not at all surprising that the poor ignoramuses believe and tremble.

Yours, for freedom of thought, and expression of the same, without nastiness,

A. L. FRISBIE.

WAYNESBURG, PA., Oct. 8, 285.

MR. EDITOR: The people of Waynesburg hav just listened to a six-nights' discussion between Charles Watts and Clark Braden. The first three nights were devoted to a discussion of the proposition: "The great ideas and general principles of Christianity, as taught in the inculcations of the Bible, harmonize with a right use of human reason and the highest exercise of human reason, and are necessary to human progress and happiness here and hereafter."

The proposition offered by Mr. Watts during the last three nights involved "The great ideas and general principles of Secularism," and their relation to human progress and happiness.

Mr. Braden's course throughout the debate was remarkable. He is a man of repulsiv appearance. His shabby dress, vulgar manner, and sensuous countenance lead one toward a belief in total depravity. His first half-dozen speeches were read almost wholly from manuscript, and consisted of an examination of truisms, which he claimed to be the great ideas and inculcations of Christianity. Mr. Watts denied that they were such, and asked for chapter and verse showing that such ideas were taught in the Bible. This Mr. Braden persistently refused to produce. Throughout the whole of the discussion Braden claimed to hav all truth on his side, and, with an assumption of infallibility that would hav put to shame one of St. Peter's descendants, asked his audience to accept it as truth on his own bare statement, unsupported by a shadow of proof. Braden's course was the more remarkable since he himself had imposed the condition that, "The statements, ideas, and inculcations of the Bible shall be read from the Bible in the exact language of the Bible." Not once did he refer to the Bible, and, so far as the audience knows, he had no Bible with him. He assumed the very thing he was there to prove, i.e., that the Bible is a divine book given by inspiration from God. He endeavored to mislead his hearers by a distortion of history, and misrepresentation of his opponent's position. Braden evidently believes that lying for the Lord will be rewarded now, as in the past, and he does it with his might. He referred to his opponent's arguments as "clap-trap," "bosh," "stuff," and "nonsense," and kindly asked Mr. Watts to "pick the wax out of his ear." Mr. Braden's attitude on the stage is that of a prize-fighter or bully. He seems to regard his opponent as without truth, honor, or sincerity, and treats him without any respect whatever.

Mr. Watts kindly and earnestly endeavored to coax or shame his opponent into a discussion of the question at issue, but, finding his endeavor vain, he ignored his opponent's unsupported and impertinent repetitions, and devoted himself to an exposition of his objections to Christianity. During the last three nights of the discussion Mr. Watts gave a clear, logical, convincing exposition of the principles and teachings of Secularism, showing its distinctivness, superiority over Christianity, and its utility to mankind. By the good-natured manner in which he bore the tiresome repetitions, ungentlemanly personalities, and malicious misrepresentations of his opponent, and by his straightforward gentlemanly course throughout the debate, Mr. Watts won the sympathy and esteem of a large and intelligent portion of the audience.

Mr. Watts lectured Sunday evening on "The True Philosophy of Life." His audience consisted of more than a hundred people and was remarkable alike for its absence of Christians and its earnest appreciation of the lecture. It will perhaps occur to some that one hundred people is a small audience. Let it be remembered, however, that Waynesburg is a town of not more than 2,500 inhabitants, and has heretofore been considered a hot-bed of orthodoxy; that Mr. Braden lectured at the same hour in a church near by, and yet Mr. Watts had among his hearers at least one-third of those who had listened to the debate throughout the week. It was a separation of the goats from the sheep, and if God had seen fit to take the latter to his fold that night, it would hav saved his gate-keeper a deal of trouble on the judgment day, and, I dare say, would hav relieved some of the sheep from a terrible temptation to take up with the goats again.

In a letter from friend Macdonald of THE TRUTH SEEKER I was admonished that Braden is "too vile to touch," and that every Liberal who had anything to do with him would be disgraced. While I admit that Braden is a little too vile to touch, yet I do not feel in any sense disgraced. Braden was indorsed by the Disciples and Baptists here, who, of course, did not know him, and had we refused to meet him we should hav been taunted with cowardice and dishonesty. He has been met, not as Clark Braden, but as the defender of Christianity, and, as such, has been vanquished in the eyes of the intelligent portion of those who heard the debate. The seeds of Secularism and human advancement hav been sown among the weeds and thorns of theology; some hav fallen by the wayside, some upon rocks, but many, as was evidenced by the audience that listened to Mr. Watts on Sunday evening, hav found good soil.

Some of the notices of the debate by the press here are very amusing. I shall, at another time, write you something of them.

Fraternally yours, H. CLAY LUSE.

PILOT ROCK, O., Sept. 30, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I am now seventy-two years old. I herewith send you $3; I hav no excuse for not sending it sooner; I hav never yet been able to pay a debt until I got the money. Out of all your subscribers at Pendleton and Pilot Rock I am the only one left. I don't know the reason why, unless they had too much sense to read it. You know that man is wedded to his idols, and THE TRUTH SEEKER is one of mine, and if you continue to send it to me you will surely get your pay in this world or the next, where all good Christians sing Psalms and all truth seekers are burnt with brimstone. I want to tell you I hav been living for a long time close beside the Indians, and every winter when the snow falls they commence making medicin to bring the Chenook or hot winds to take the snow off, and they never let up until the wind comes, and then they believe they hav brought it. At Pendleton and Pilot Rock there is a set of Christians that hav been making medicin more or less for a long time to bring the Holy Ghost; sometimes the Holy Ghost don't come; then they believe the Holy Ghost is punishing them for their sins. The Holy Ghost is right; they ought to be punished for their sins. Sometimes the Holy Ghost does come; then they are gloriously happy and shout Glory Hallelujah. I want you to tell Putnam and the balance of you fellows that it would be wrong for you to come out here and tell these people that they would be more happy if they would make medicin the way you do. I would not be afraid to bet that none of you fellows are so happy over your mode of making medicin as to holloa Glory Hallelujah. Of course you will want to publish this letter; if you do I may hereafter, if I take a notion, write to you again, about some things I don't know. You fellows are constantly writing about what you know. What a man knows nowadays don't amount to much. I hav got tired reading such stuff. You know the great Dr. Locke commenced writing about what he did not know and could not know, but he never got to the Great Unknown. If he had I would hav liked it better. But there is another great man that has made up what the doctor left out—Herbert Spencer, who wrote a big book about what he did not know and could not know and the Great Unknowable. So you see what a man don't know and can't know and the Great Unknowable amounts to something. And I want to read about such things the balance of my time. Since I come to think of it, you don't like to publish long letters, but want them simmered down so you can put them in a nutshell. So I will quit. Still I mean to continue to remain yours, the great scientist and poet, Mr. Putnam's, the renowned Dr. Locke's, and the immortal Herbert Spencer's and the Christians' and the Indians' forever.

ELI STEWART.

GOSPEL SHOPS VS. RUM SHOPS.

BOSTON, MASS., Oct. 9, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: A comical feature of the late Prohibition discussion in the columns of the gallant TRUTH SEEKER was the attempt made by some of the opponents of Prohibition to class the work of the gospel shop under the same head as the work of the rum shop, and to argue that the latter has the same right to exist in a community as has the former of these two nuisances.

They seemed to forget that all preaching of opinion, whether religious or secular—superstitious or scientific—comes under the protection of the inviolable right known as free speech, and consequently that gospel shops, equally with wicked passions and prejudices, which also are nuisances, can never be prohibited, because free thought and free speech would be violated thereby. These things are therefore necessary nuisances, in order that people's minds may hav full vent and expression so far as our thoughts and speech are concerned. But rum-selling is a deed—a real act—and it can claim no protection from the great and fundamental right called "freedom of opinion!"

It is also most decidedly not a necessary nuisance, and consequently is wholly at the mercy of the public, and can be prohibited, be regulated, or be let alone, just as the people think best. The function of law is to enforce, so far as possible, immunity from unnecessary nuisance and evil, and while of course statutes can never make human beings really moral, they can cause, and hav caused, both individuals and communities to refrain from committing gross improprieties, indecencies, and injustice.

And one of the huge improprieties, and therefore a genuin nuisance, is the selling of alcoholic liquors as a beverage. It is really nothing less than making the creation of outrage and infamy a regular business pursuit.

Local option Prohibition is the kind I prefer at present, but I claim the right to work and vote for either state or national, or both, whenever such Prohibition seems likely to do more good than harm to the cause of just government in general.

GEO. N. HILL.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

A Frolic on the Floor.

What's the matter with you, neighbor?
Is there any reason why
That your cheek is growing sallow
And there's jaundice in your eye?
Why, you look as if you fancied
All on earth you'd lose;
If you did not set me laughing
You would put me in the blues.
Hav you ever tried what solace
There is in the magic weed?
No! Then you should begin it;
It may help you at your need.
But a better plan I'll mention,
Since I've thought the matter o'er—
Hav you ever tried a frolic
With the youngsters on the floor?

Tut, man! it is no wonder
That you're gloomy, grim, and gray;
That the horrid bile is eating
All your heart and soul away;
That the merry god of laughter
In your bosom never rung,
For you've missed the only pastime
That can make an old heart young.
Oh, the prancing and the dancing!
Oh, the laughter ringing wild!
Oh, the routing and the shouting
Of a happy-hearted child!
There's a magic music in it
Which you never heard before.
Try it, neighbor, for a minute—
Try a frolic on the floor.

Why, good man, the very baby
In the cradle there will crow
When he sees us, topsy-turvy,
Helter-skelter, to and fro.
And young Kitty there goes screaming
Till she rolls about with glee;
'Tis a pastime for the darlings,
And 'tis medicin, man, for me.
Oh, the bumping and the jumping!
Oh, the laughter ringing wild!
Oh, the routing and the shouting
Of a merry-hearted child!
Now, good neighbor don't deny it,
Will it not your life restore?
Then go home, good man, and try it—
Try a frolic on the floor.

—William Haughton.

Voices.

He that struggles for existence
With the mighty human throng,
Sees its different countenances,
Hears its ever-changing song,
It for him has many voices,
Each its inward feeling telling;
It has smiles of different meaning,
Each attracting or repelling.

In the days when he has money,
Honor, happiness, and ease,
Then society will rattle
Her deceitful tongues to please.
She will shed her smiles of gladness
On a man when he rejoices,
And conceal his faults and praise him
With her hypocritic voices.

But when fortune turns to scorn him
And adversities hav come,
And but rags for clothes adorn him,
He will hear a growling hum
Emanating from the wagging
Of aristocratic tongues,
While society breathes venom
From her own deceitful lungs.

Now the loving smiles of gladness
Are but grins of proud disdain,
And the man, once flattered by them,
Feels remorse and mental pain.
Hands, outstretched once to caress him,
Now recoil as from a snake,
And he knows that when they beckoned
It was for his money's sake.

Gold and silver pass for virtue,
And deformity for beauty;
Poverty is but a vagrant;
Nature is the foe to duty.
Now Injustice holds the steelyards,
And while Pity stands aside,
Charity is overbalanced
By our selfishness and pride.

Tyrone, Pa. Wm. Scott.

A Trip to California.

AND OTHER RAMBLES.

As the last term of school drew to a close, I anticipated a pleasant trip to California. I was going to see Clara and Alfred Lennox, who were neighbors and playmates before they went to California to liv. Well, the day came for us to start at last, and there was a great bustle getting our baggage, mamma's and mine, ready; but at length we were on board of the fast train, and in just six days we arrived at our journey's end, and were met at the station by Clara and Alfred, who had grown quite tall since I last saw them. As they lived near by, we walked to their home, and Mrs. Lennox met us at the gate.

Mamma and I were very tired and we rested all that day and night.

The next morning we sat on the veranda and swung in the hammocks and talked about old times. I asked Alfred if there were any lakes or rivers near by.

"Yes," said he, "the fish we had for breakfast were caught near here by Clara, Frank Cummings, and myself."

"I should like to go fishing," I said, and so it was arranged that we would go on the following day.

Frank Cummings came to take tea with us, and we all went to Oakcliffe Park, and afterward we had a ramble in the woods. That evening we played games in the parlor and sang songs.

The next day we went to Crystal Lake fishing. We took a lunch along, and oh, if we didn't hav a good time! We caught trout, pickerel, and at noon we landed and spread our lunch on the grass beneath some pretty trees.

All our time was fully taken up in sight-seeing. One day we rode to the park to see the "big trees," and they were big sure enough. I never saw such trees. One was made into a house with three floors, each floor containing one room, with stairs leading to them. The rooms in the trees were large and furnished nicely. It was all very wonderful to think of a tree with rooms in it like a house!

We only staid three weeks in California, but they were three weeks of pleasure and full of interest. Clara and Alfred and I all had such lovely talks, walks, and rides. I am sure I shall never forget them.

The journey home was tedious, and we were glad when we arrived in New York and papa met us at the depot. We were glad to keep pretty quiet at home for two or three weeks. One day we went on an excursion up the Hudson river. I cannot pretend to describe the scenery, but it is lovely. Afterwards, papa, mamma, and I went to Ocean Grove for a week, and we had splendid times, walking on the beach and bathing in the salt water. We went to Coney Island, too, and I thought it was great fun to plunge in the surf like a fish. There was beautiful music there by a band in which Mr. Levy played the cornet. One day we went to Rockaway and after that we had company, Mrs. Gardiner and her two daughters, Hattie and Clara. We enjoyed their company a great deal. We played croquet, lawn tennis, and other games, and one day we went to Silver Springs, R. I. Hattie, Clara, and I went to a hop one night and danced till twelve o'clock; I thought we were quite dissipated. We picked up pretty shells on the beach and played in the sand and went to a "Rhode Island Clambake" at the Ocean House. After we came home we went on a moonlight excursion to West Point. By the bright light of the moon we saw a dark spot on the river that seemed to come nearer every minute; very soon it was close to our boat, which had slackened its speed. What do you think it was? Well, it was another steamboat, and then there was the greatest time racing with it, but our boat kept about even with it most of the time. The name of our boat was Thomas P. Way, and it is a large double decker and will carry two thousand persons. Miss Woodruff went with us, and we did not get to the dock till past one in the morning and it was after two before we reached our own door. I dreamed that night, or morning rather, that I was going to school, which I did the next day, as the vacation was over and school commenced the following day. I had a splendid time all of my vacation, and saw and heard much that I shall long remember.

Cora Jewell Marshall, Aged 13.

Newark, N. J.

Hollowe'en Rhymes and Ring Games.

The following amusing games are played by children as directed in the lines.

In the one below, the players join hands and sing the verses, jumping around, standing, holding the hands, stamping, clapping, turning around, etc., as indicated in the piece.

Where oats, sweet beans, and barley grow
Neither you nor I may know.
This is the way the farmer stands—
This is the way he holds his hands;
He stamps his foot and claps his hands,
And turns around to view his lands.

He's waiting for a partner—
He's waiting for a partner;
Open the ring and choose one in,
And kiss her as she enters in.

Now you're married you must obey,
You must obey—you must obey,
And live together all your life,
As I pronounce you man and wife.

I knocked at the door, I picked up a pin,
I asked, "Is Mrs. Nellie in?"
She is not in, she is not out;
She's up in the garret walking about.

Down she came all dressed in silk,
The rose at her bosom was white as milk.
She showed me her ring, the pretty thing,
To-morrow, to-morrow, the wedding begins.

Oh, dear! Oh, dear! What have I done?
I've married the father instead of the son.
His back's as crook'd as an old tin pan,
The neighbors all laugh at my old man.

OLD BLOODY TOM; OR, SHEEP IN THE FOLD.

In this game, the players recline upon the ground, with one in the center. Another tramps heavily around the circle, and the one in the center calls out—

"Who's around my house this time of night?"

The outside one responds—

"Old Bloody Tom with his night cap on."

"What does he want?" is asked.

"A good fat sheep," is the answer.

"Take one and begone," which instruction is followed, and the same program gone over with until all the sheep or players hav been carried off by "Old Bloody Tom," when a lively scuffle ensues between Tom and the Shepherd, and in the flurry the sheep players all come home again.

Here is another pretty ring game, the words being sung and acted by the players:

Dissy, dissy, green grass,
Dissy, dissy, duss,
Come all your pretty fair maids
And dance along with us,
And you shall hav a duck, my dear,
And you shall hav a drake;
And you shall hav a nice young man
To love you for your sake.
If this young man should chance to die,
And leave you then a widow,
The birds shall sing, the bells shall ring,
Clap all your hands together.

HEN, HAWK, AND CHICKENS.

One player personates a hen and the others the chickens, who each take hold of the back of the others' skirts, and they hav a lively skirmishing, as the player who personates the hawk tries to capture one or more, which is hard work, as the hen vigilantly protects her chickens.

SALLY WATERS.

This is another pretty rhyme and ring game.

Little Sally Waters
Sitting in the sun,
Crying and weeping
For a dear one.
Rise, Sally, rise,
Wipe up your eyes;
Fly to the east, and fly to the west,
And fly to the one that you love best.

In some parts of England the rhyme runs this way:

Sally Walker, Sally Walker,
Come springtime and love,
She's lamenting, she's lamenting,
All for her love.
Come, choose to the east, come, choose to the west,
Come, choose to the one that you like best.

In Devonshire, Eng., it goes still another way, as follows:

Sally Walker, Sally Walker, sprinkle water in the pan,
Rise, Sally, rise, and seek your young man,
Turn to the east and turn to the west,
And choose the very one that you like best.

The Girl That Ran Away.

There was a little girl that lived in the country. Her name was Rosy and she was four years old. Rosy got very tired of staying at home, and so one day made up her mind to go to her aunt's, who lived in New York. Rosy lived in Pennsylvania. She had not gone far before some gypsies took Rosy in their wagon. "They were going where she wanted to go," they said. Rosy was contented two or three days with the gypsies, but then she wanted to see her pa and ma. The gypsies told her that she would see her Aunt Jane in a day or two. This kept her still for some time, but in a little while she commenced to cry and say they should take her back home. But they said they could not take her home. When the gypsies came to a nice open grove, they wandered in the grove until they reached a small body of water. Around the water were some more gypsies. Now it became very dull for Rosy, for they did not come out of the grove for several months. Rosy's parents missed her and searched long and diligently for their little girl, and at last they incidentally heard of her and followed the gypsies to the grove, where they found her, and took her back home. Rosy said "she would not start to go to her aunt's house alone again very soon." She told an interesting story about her trip with gypsies. We hope we will never be so foolish as to start to go to our friends who are hundreds of miles away.

My name is Mabel Esther Irwin, Union Mills, Indiana.

[A pretty little story to be written by a girl of ten.—Ed. C. C.]

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—RHOMBOID.

Across.—1. A beverage.
2. A newspaper.
3. An armor.
4. A bird.
5. A Roman emperor.

Down.—A letter, completely, a liquid measure, a variety of pigeon, a twist of fine linen, intestins of birds, a plant, extent, a letter.

Pittsburgh, Pa. H. E. Juergens.

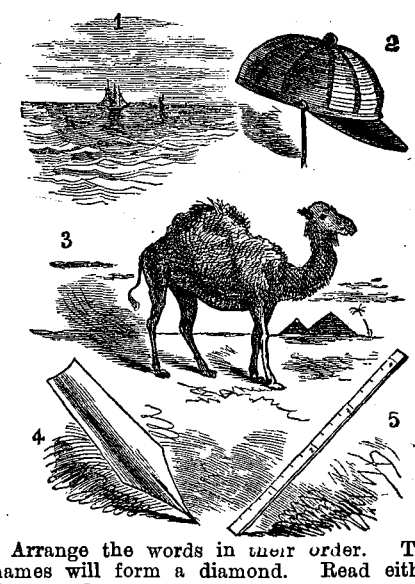
2.—ARITHMETICAL.

What part of three is two-thirds of two?

[Hav our solvers forgotten the prize puzzle offered by our popular puzzlemaker, J. K. P. Baker, in our Puzzle Box, Sept. 19th, or is the "Chapter" too knotty? We will extend the time of solution a few weeks longer, and hope no one of our solvers will giv up beaten.—Ed. C. C.]

3.—CHARADE.

My first is a kind of small nail,
My second is oft found with mirth,
My whole is a hero whose fame
Has spread far and wide o'er the earth.
Melbourne, Australia. David A. Andrade.



4.—CHARADE.

My first is that whose magic power
Moves on and on forever,
Something that on life's stormy sea
Time cannot sever.

My second find in happy homes,
Away from war and strife,
'Tis this that binds with sweet accord
A loving life.

My whole is that which rules the world,
Strengthens our joy, allays our grief,
And in Death's sad and weary hour,
Brings sweet relief.
Alloona, Pa. William J. Burns.

5.—PICTORIAL DIAMOND.

Arrange the words in their order. The names will form a diamond. Read either downward or across.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, OCT. 10, 1885.

1.—Poem. 2.—Murder. 3.—Hanging of the crane. 4.—Pointer. A pointer (dog) has hair, tongue, nose, tail, teeth. He can snarl, point, track, bark, and play.

Solvers, H. E. Juergens, Daisy Rosenbaum, John Ketcher.

[By some mistake of ours, the answer to the "catch" puzzle was printed with the puzzle, Oct. 10th. However, Moses made mistakes, and we are not infallible. We shall try not to hav a similar thing occur again.—Ed. C. C.]

Correspondence.

Syracuse, N. Y., Sept. 18, 1885.

Dear Miss Wixon: My father has taken The Truth Seeker eight years, and I agree with the other children in sending Father Hacker something to winter him, and therefore send you one dollar to send to him. I see that Colonel Ingersoll is going to giv a lecture for the benefit of the Bruno statue. Now, who will giv a lecture for the benefit of Father Hacker, which he truly needs? It may keep him all his life. I hope you will think this good enough to hav printed.

Your friend, Burton Davis.

[Burton's contribution has been forwarded to its destination. Grandpa Hacker must be proud, as we are, of the quality of the young and rising generation, and by and by, in place of these boys and girls, we shall see a band of men and women of whom all the world may be proud. We agree with Burton that a lecture or entertainment in aid of the feeble and aged would be in order, for it would benefit the living, whereas statues are no help to the dead, though they may tend to keep alive their virtues and noble qualities.—Ed. C. C.]

The BIBLE—WHENCE and WHAT?

BY RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B,

A Book of Hints and Suggestions Concerning the literature contained in the Old and New Testaments. 12mo. 232 pages. Price, $1.

THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

Two New Pamphlets

BY

CHARLES WATTS.

The American Secular Union: Its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands.

(Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.)

CONTENTS:

Introduction. (I.) The Necessity for the American Secular Union having Principles upon which all [Secularists] can agree. (II.) The Twofold Nature of the Advocacy Adopted by the Union. (III.) The Catholicity of the Nine Demands and the Ground to be Covered. (IV.) An Exposition and Defense of Each of the Nine Demands. (V.) An Appeal to Secular Fidelity.

32 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

SECULARISM: Destructiv and Constructiv.

CONTENTS:

Introduction. Secularism: Its Nature and Necessity. Its Destructiv Aspect. (1) Biblical Idolatry. (2) Natural Depravity (3). Theological Supremacy. (4) The Alleged Fall and Redemption of Man. The Constructiv Aspect of Secularism. (1) That the True Guide in Human Actions is Reason Assisted by Experience. (2) That Supreme Attention Should be Given to the Facts and Duties of Existence, Regardless of any Considerations of a Life Beyond the Present. (3) That Science is a more Trustworthy Provider for Man than Relying for Help from any Supernatural Power. (4) That Morality is of Natural Growth, and has no Necessary Connection with Any of the Theologies of the World. (5) That the Best Preparation for a Life Superior to this is the Wisest and Noblest Use of the Existence We Now Hav.

22 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

J. E. REMSBURG's November appointments, as far as arranged, are: Wausau, Wis., Sunday, 1st; Menomonee, Wis., Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 3d, 4th, and 5th; West Union, Ia., Saturday and Sunday, 7th and 8th; Lake City, Ia., Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 10th, 11th, and 12th; Ottumwa, Ia., Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th; Prescott, Ia., Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 17th, 18th, and 19th; Nevinville, Ia., Friday, 20th.

N. D. C.

How to Become

A MEDIUM

IN YOUR OWN HOME.

A 16-page pamphlet, containing full instructions and a letter designating all your phases of mediumship, and a copy of the Riddle of the American Spiritual Sphinx, or the Lost Key Found, sent FREE upon receipt of three two-cent stamps to cover expenses of mailing, etc. Address, JAMES A. BLISS, 718 Washington st., Boston, Mass. 39tf.

Something New!

Every Liberal should hav one of our beautiful

MOTTO CARDS,

(7x22), ready for framing, for their homes. Twenty-five cents per copy.

Also Large Cards (14x22), and expressing the NINE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Thirty cents each.

Circulars sent FREE. Address all orders to

LIBERAL MOTTO SUPPLY CO., Troy, N. Y.

40tf

POCKET ATLAS

Of the

WORLD.

Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE.

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-page colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents, by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 33 Clinton Place, N Y.

40

EVOLUTION:

A SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE.

By Robert C. Adams.

Paper, 25 cents. For Sale at this Office.

JUST OUT.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

DR. SUNDERLAND'S LAST AND GREATEST WORK.

IDEOLOGY.

Mental Anesthesia Self-Induced, Miraculous Cures Self-Made, Involution and Evolution in the Human Mind as in the Whole of Things.

By DR. LAROY SUNDERLAND,

(Foundation Fellow of the Society of Science, Literature, and Art, London).

CONTENTS:

Vol. 1: Chapter I.—Selfhood. II.—Experimental. III.—Mental Anesthesia. IV.—Miraculous Cures. V.—Ideology. VI.—The Highest Laws. VII.—No "Royal Road." VIII.—Mentality. IX.—Idiocrasy. X.—"Christian" Science. XI.—The Bible Idea of Inspiration. XII.—The Bible Idea of Its God. XIII.—The Bible Idea of Witchcraft. XIV.—The Bible Idea of Mediums. XV.—Bloody Ideas, All Besmeared with Blood. XVI.—Barbarian Lies. XVII.—Humanity Forever.

Vol. 2: Chapter I.—Gullibility. II.—Mental Epidemics. III.—The South Sea Bubble. IV.—The Mississippi Scheme. V.—The Crusades. VI.—The Trance Epidemic. VII.—Fascination. VIII.—Religious Revivals. IX.—Clairvoyance. X.—The Witchcraft Madness. XI.—Modern Witchcraft. XII.—Mediumship a Wide-spread Epidemic. XIII.—Psychometry and "Deadheads." XIV.—The Contagious Dance of Death. XIV.—And What Then? XVI.—Science.

TWO VOLUMES IN ONE. PRICE $1.50.

Published by J. P. Mendum Investigator Office, Boston, Mass.

4t41

Ingersoll Catechised:

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies $1; 100 copies $3. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

THE MAGNIFICENT

COLORED LITHOGRAPHS

—OF THE—

D. M. BENNETT MONUMENT.

PRINTED IN SEVEN COLORS ON THE BEST LITHOGRAPH PAPER, SIZE, 22½ x 28½.

THE BRONZE MEDALLION

PRINTS AS LARGE AS A CABINET PHOTOGRAPH, THUS GIVING NOT ONLY A PICTURE OF THE MONUMENT, BUT AN ACCURATE

LIKENESS OF D. M. BENNETT.

The lithograph is designed for framing, and will be a treasure for all Liberals.

Sent, postpaid, and securely wrapped, to subscribers to the Monument Fund for 30 cents; to others, 50 cents. Address this office.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, with Sixty-seven Engravings, Preface, and Notes.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.
Zadig; or, Fate.
The Sage and the Atheist.
The Princess of Babylon.
Tho Man of Forty Crowns.
The Huron; or, The Pupil of Nature.
Micromegas.
The World as it Goes.
The Black and the White.
Memnom the Philosopher.
Andres Des Touches at Siam.
The Study of Nature.
A Conversation With a Chinese.
Plato's Dream.
A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.
An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, 4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00

A PHOTOGRAPH

OF THE BIBLE'S FLAT EARTH AND SOLID HEAVEN.

A Picture of the world as described in Genesis, with the texts of the Bible teaching the doctrin, and the passages from profane writer supporting it. Price 25 cents

---

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail:

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study, the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy. The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 33 Clinton Pl., New York.

A New and Useful Work.

WEDLOCK, OR, THE RIGHT RELATIONS OF THE SEXES—Disclosing the Laws of Conjugal Selection, and showing Who May and Who May Not Marry. A Scientific Treatise. By SAMUEL R. WELLS, One vol., 12mo, 250 pages; plain muslin, price, $1.50; in fancy gilt binding, $2.

Among the subjects treated are the following: Marriage a Divine Institution; Qualifications for Matrimony; The Right Age to Marry; Motives for Marrying; Marriages of Consanguinity—of Cousins, when Justifiable; Conjugal Selection—Affinities; Courtship—Long or Short; Duty of Parents; Marriage Customs and Ceremonies of all Nations; Ethics of Marriage; Second Marriages, are they Admissible? Jealousy—Its Cause and Cure; Causes of Separation and Divorce; Celibacy—Ancient and Modern; Polygamy and Pantagamy; Love Signs in the Features, and How to Read Them; Physiognomy; Sensible Love Letters—Examples; The Poet's Wife; The Model Husband and the Model Wife—the Mutual Obligations, Privileges, and Duties; The Poetry of Love, Courtship, and Marriage—Being a Practical Guide to all the Relations of HAPPY WEDLOCK.

The book is handsomely printed and beautifully bound It was intended more especially for young people, but may be read with interest and with profit by those of every age. Copies will be sent by post to any address on receipt of price.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

REPLY

TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S

"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."

By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

GOLDEN THRONE

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA.

INCLUDING

Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.

Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

TRAVELS IN FAITH,

From Tradition to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

Poetry.

Chris'en George.

In Charles Dickens's story of "The Perils of certain English Prisoners," a half-breed is introduced. The inhabitants of the Island of Silver Store are betrayed by the above-named traitor, who is a lazy, worthless scamp, and carried off by the pirates, his companions, into a dense forest in Guatemala. There they are set to work to cut down trees wherewith to build a mansion for their captors. Chris'en George King has charge over them, and as they toil under the burning sun of the torrid zone, Dickens describes him—rolling on the ground in ecstasy, and exclaiming: "Now, you —— English, work! And Chris'en George King—look on!"

O Chris'en George, you are not dead,
  You liv among us now;
Your fingers know not labor's tools,
  The hammer and the plough.
Your face is whiter, though, by far,
  Your linen of the best;
But, Chris'en George, we know you well,
  Although you're better dressed.

You see that genius on 'Change
  A-roaring like a bull,
Who strives by gambling, not by work,
  To fill his pockets full.
With brow austere and eager eye
  He follows on his track.
He's Mammon's slave; but unto us
  He's Chris'en George come back.

Or view that speculator there,
  Who livs upon the poor;
Wi o artificial famin breeds
  Or turns them out of door.
Who robs the miner of his coal,
  The farmer of his grain;
Who tolls our work from West to East,
  He's Chris'en George again.

See Miss McFlimsey, as she rolls
  Through Fashion's crowded street;
Admire her costly velvet dress,
  Her hat—in style complete.
Poor child! 'Twould make her sick to see
  A tailor at his work;
Despite her sex, she's Chris'en George,
  Or else the bard's a Turk.

Remark that great contractor, too,
  His papers in his hand;
Who undertakes to do a job
  His genius never planned.
Whose skull's so thick he couldn't tell
  A pickaxe from a hoe;
Yet takes the work from better men—
  He's Chris'en George, you know.

O Chris'en George, you lazy knave,
  Why don't you go away?
We've worked for you quite long enough,
  To serve you doesn't pay.
We've housed you well and clothed you fine,
  And furnished you with bread,
But all in vain: and 'twill be so
  Till, Chris'en George, you're dead!

A Number of Good Papers.

The Rhode Island Pendulum performs an excursion to this office once a week from East Greenwich, R. I. In its issue of October 9th it very appropriately includes, under the head of "Religious Services," a notice of THE TRUTH SEEKER. The Pendulum contains, besides stories and items, news of a local and general character, presented in a neat and attractiv style. Daniel C. Kenyon, editor and publisher; terms, $2 per year.

No local paper that comes to this office is more welcome than the New England Observer, published at Keene, N. H., which locality is tolerably familiar to the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. It contains all the news of the vicinity, and makes editorial observations about happenings abroad. In its issue of October 15th we find the following:

"In his Sunday sermon, Henry Ward Beecher said: 'The old theology says that Christ came into the world to save a lost race. There was, there is, no lost race. It says that he came to make good Adam's stumble; but Adam never existed, and consequently never stumbled. It is time that all this mechanical, ladder-like machine sort of salvation were done away with. This merit and demerit, deserving and non-deserving, is all artificial, all pagan.' Mr. Beecher will soon be in shape to travel with Ingersoll."

This might be construed either as a compliment to Mr. Beecher or the other way, if it were not clinched by another remark in the same paper. The other remark is this:

"Rev. Henry Ward Beecher is quite as level-headed in political as in spiritual matters."

We warn the editor of the Observer that there is a rod in pickle for him in the form of a charge of constructiv heresy based on these two contiguous paragraphs.

John Swinton's Paper says: "THE TRUTH SEEKER [Oct. 10th] prints a curious article on 'Donn Piatt and Sich.' We are pleased to see that this powerful organ of the Freethinkers and skeptics takes a glance now and then at the 'labor problem.'" We assure Mr. Swinton that THE TRUTH SEEKER has long had the labor question in view, and has its own opinion on the subject. It wishes the laborer well, of course, but has little hope for him while he supports a church which teaches that "prosperity leads to decay, national, individual, intellectual, moral, and physical." Neither can it see the consistency of the laborer who, while he opposes emigration to this country, yet, following the teachings of this same church, fills his own household with laborers whom he must soon either compete with or support in idleness. Away down at the bottom of the labor problem are the church and population questions, which are seldom touched upon. Nevertheless, Mr. Swinton is doing a great work.

The favorit journal among New York society—which is to say, swelldom—is the Home Journal (Morris Phillips & Co., No. 3 Park Place). This paper keeps track of all social, theatrical, and literary events, and describes them with facil pen. It is in all respects the model paper of its class.

We hav often found occasion to reprint items from the Sunday Gazetteer, published at Denison, Texas, and hav observed clippings transferred from THE TRUTH SEEKER to its columns. The editor, Mr. B. C. Murray, is a gentleman of Liberal religious views, as well as a writer of ability. The man who sets the advertisments for the Gazetteer is an artist in his line, and the whole paper is made up and printed in superior style. Subscription price, $2 per year.

The Lackawanna Democrat, a news and family paper, is issued from Scranton, Pa., at $2 per year. It is neat in appearance, ably conducted, and keeps the people of its vicinage informed of events near and remote.

The Banner of Light, the leading paper devoted to the Spiritual philosophy, kindly publishes the contents of THE TRUTH SEEKER in its issue of October 10th. A long notice of it might be written, but everybody knows the Banner of Light, published by Colby & Rich, Boston, Mass; $3 per year.

The Labor Advocate is Liberal in religion, as well as reformatory in its politics, and is devoted to setting forth the ends and aims of the Knights of Labor. It carries an advertisment of THE TRUTH SEEKER with it wherever it goes, and keeps the Nine Demands of Liberalism standing in its columns. Arthur C. Everett, editor.

Moses Hull, formerly editor of Hull's Crucible, now, in conjunction with Mattie Hull, edits and prints the New Thought at Maquoketa, Ia. The paper has this banner at its masthead: "And I heard a voice from heaven saying to me, Write." Of course we don't believe that a voice from heaven ever said anything of the sort, but as Mr. Hull's paper is devoted to progress, and is a foe to Christian superstition, it is welcomed to our exchange list. Terms of subscription, $1.50 annually.

The Occident (Washington street, Chicago $3 a year) is a weekly journal, devoted to general news, literature, science, art, and the interests of Judaism. "From orient to occident my name is great among the nations, saith the Lord God," is an intimation printed at the head of the Occident in Roman and repeated (we suppose) in Hebrew characters. The Occident is a large and handsome print. Its editors are unknown, and refuse to reveal their identity, but they publish a paper that is of interest to all those who wish to know Judaism's opinion of its daughter, Christianity, produced by its unfortunate alliance with Paganism.

Against many adversities the Nonconformist keeps up its fight with priestcraft, prohibition' monopoly, and other things. When Editor Vincent is in good health he writes considerable, and when he is sick he writes more. His articles on "Why I left the Christian Church," contain argument sufficient to justify him in that laudable exit. Tabor, Iowa, is the home of Mr. Vincent's paper; terms, $1.50 per annum.

The Salem, South Dakota, Pioneer Register is a large weekly publication, "a paper for the people," as it declares, and "a friend to the whole human race." It is Republican in politics and Liberal on religious subjects.

It is the enviable boast of the Kansas Blade of Concordia, that it is the first Liberal paper published in Kansas. Its editors and proprietors are Mr. J. M. and J. E. Hagaman. They print the Nine Demands regularly, report local happenings, and discuss national issues. Mr. J. M. Hagaman is an ardent opponent of the Bible in the schools, and keeps the brethren of Concordia continually agitated on that question. He is doing much practical work. The Blade is sent to any address for $1.50 a year.

Lois Waisbrooker publishes a neat little sheet at Clinton, Ia. We will let her describe it. She writes: "Foundation Principles is genuinly practical; believes in a future life, but more especially in this; the only professedly Spiritualist publication that claims all questions of human welfare as a part of its work, and repudiates Christianity in toto. Semi-monthly, $1 per year."

The Winsted Press, published at Winsted, Conn., is as able a paper as that state produces, and taking into account its Freethought principles, is the most valuable one. Mr. Lucien V. Pinney is publisher, and his editorial productions are both witty and wise. The paper is local in its nature, but it discusses questions of general and world-wide interest. Terms, $2 per year.

Mr. Wm. S. Bailey, of Nashville, Tenn., is an old man, and will celebrate his one hundredth anniversary on the 10th day of February, 1906; but besides making activ preparations for that event he finds time to edit the Liberal (135 South Cherry st.), and manages to fill it each week with lively reading. Seventy-five cents per year.

The Antimonopolist issues the following platform:

"1. The abolition of all class legislation, and equal rights to all citizens, whether rich or poor.

"2. The abolition of all subsidies and land grants to individuals and corporations.

"3. The abolition of all legislativ protection to monopolies.

"4. The immediate and unconditional repeal of the Resumption Act.

"5. The repeal of the National Bank Act, and the substitution of United States currency for National Bank Notes and gold and silver currency.

"6. That the Government shall furnish money sufficient for the requirements of trade.

"7. The pay of our bonds according to the original contract, believing that the bondholder has no more right to repudiate his bargain with us than we hav to repudiate the debt."

The paper is published at Rochester, N. H., and devotes itself to championing the cause of the workingman and the Knights of Labor. Price, 3 cents per copy.

Lucifer, The Light-bearer (Valley Falls, Kan.), contains, as leading articles, "The London Outrages," from London Progress; "Prohibition Run Mad," showing that prohibition logically leads to murder; social radicalism defended (editorial); "The Land Question," etc., etc. Lucifer's chosen field is the social and governmental evolution. It asks the co-operation of all who think that paternal governments hav outlived their usefulness, and that they should be supplanted by localized autonomies founded upon individualism and voluntarism. Published weekly at $1.25 per annum.

For a country paper, the Worthington, Minn., Advance is a good one. It is the "official paper of Nobles county" and is edited by A. P. Miller, a gentleman of well-informed and Liberal mind. Terms, $2 per year.

If Mr. Robert Bennefield, editor and proprietor of the Maurepas, La., Gazette, had a better press he might print a paper that would do him as much credit by its appearance as it now does by its sentiments. Nevertheless we would cheer Mr. Bennefield in his effort to plant Freethought in Louisiana, which has been hitherto a soil uncongenial to its growth.

Spirit Voices speak as follows of the THE TRUTH SEEKER: "With great pleasure we welcome this paper to our book-table. It is a stanch advocate of mental and religious freedom, and certainly must be dreaded by all theological bigots. Among its contributors may be found the names of the ablest men and women in the ranks of Liberalism; and its editorials are all finely written and filled with matter for the deepest thought. We hav been deeply interested in the perusal of 'Letters from Friends,' containing thoughts from the people in all sections of the country. From a perusal of these letters we may pick up many new thoughts, and also ascertain the kind of work needed in different localities to make Liberalism a success. We have also carefully read the 'Children's Corner,' edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, of Fall River, Mass., and would recommend this department to all Liberal-minded parents as suitable, entertaining, and instructiv reading for the young." The contents of October number of Spirit Voices are: The Autobiography of Lenivra Williamson, The Annal of the Tlaskans, Postal Discriminations, Inspirational Poem, Editorial Correspondence, Renewal of Subscriptions, Right to the Point, The M. S. Ayer Temple, A Condemnation of Mediums who show for Money, Prayers asked and needed by The Liberal, Is Eugene Beste a self-confessed Fraud? N. D. C. Department, N. D. C. Editor's Salutatory, Editorial Briefs, N. D. C. Records, Spirit Message Department, Messages from Sunshine, Roy, Frankie, Chauncy Barnes, Wm. H. Young, Ralph J. Shear, Rev. Luther and J. Fletcher; Score one for the Rejected Science of Astrology; Man, The Visible Manifestation of God in the Flesh; Among our Workers, Our Letter Box, Our Book Table and Advertisments. Terms, $1 50 per annum; single copies, 15 cents. Address James A. Bliss, Business Manager of Spirit Voices, 718 Washington st., Boston, Mass.

THE RISE OF
INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY
From Thales to Copernicus.
By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $2.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Marriage and Divorce.
By R. D. Westbrook, D D. LL.B,
Author of "The Bible—Whence and What?"
CONTENTS:
The True Ideal of Marriage.
Free Love.
The History of Marriage.
The Old Testament Divorce Law.
The New Testament on Divorce.
Divorce as a Question of Law and Religion.
Rational Deductions from Established Principles.
Objections to Liberal Divorce Laws Answered.
Prevention Better than Cure.
Price, 50 cents. Neatly bound in cloth. For sale at this office.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

WAIFS AND WANDERINGS
A NEW AMERICAN STORY,
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
AUTHOR OF
"GOLDEN THRONE," "PROMETHEUS," "INGERSOLL AND JESUS," ETC.
Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cts.

"A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day,—John Swinton's Paper.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 CLINTON PLACE, NEW YORK.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. McDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By WILLIAM McDONNELL, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages, $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

ALL in a LIFETIME,
A ROMANCE.
BY MISS SUSAN H. WIXON.

"The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks. . . . But what pleased me most in this charming story was the unflinching honesty with which its author holds up to the derision of the world the rottenness of average ministerial character, particularly that of revivalist type. I hav not space here to treat, in detail, of the characters of this truly absorbing novel. Suffice it to say that it is safe to predict that anyone who reads its first chapters will be loth to lay it down till the denouement is reached. Miss Wixon has long been doing a noble work in educating our children into the ranks of true Liberalism, thereby robbing the church of hundreds of those who, in after years, might hav become its willing dupes and servil tools, and she certainly deserves the generous and substantial recognition of all Freethinkers. Let everyone send for a copy of 'All in a Lifetime.' It will yield a liberal reward for the outlay."
ELLIOTT PRESTON.

Price, $1.50. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE
PROBLEM OF THE UNIVERSE,
AND
Its Scientific Solution,
WITH SOME
CRITICISMS OF UNIVERSOLOGY.
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.
Price 20 cents. For sale at this office.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark,' "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

MONKS, POPES,
AND
THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.
Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

A NEW BOOK!
By Andrew Jackson Davis,
entitled
Beyond the Valley
a sequel to the
MAGIC STAFF
An Autobiography of
Andrew Jackson Davis.
Six Illustrations Picturing what Mr. Davis says he has seen.

"Beyond the Valley" is a record of events and scenes in his private and public career, beginning where the Magic Staff ends, and bringing his psychological and private experiences truthfully up to the present day. This attractive volume will interest thousands who hav never read his preceding works. It will answer the ever-recurring questions concerning remarkable events in Mr. Davis's private life, and fully explains his various public labors for mankind.

"Beyond the Valley" is a companion volume to the "Magic Staff," and resembles it in style of workmanship—in paper, press-work, binding, etc. 408 pages. Price, $1.50.

For Sale by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORKS OF DR. W. F. EVANS.

The Primitiv Mind-Cure. The Nature and Power of Faith; or, Elementary Lessons in Transcendental Medicin. This work is a complete exposition of principles underlying the system of mental healing. It contains a full course of instruction in the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure. Price $1.50.

The Divine Law of Cure. A standard work on the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure, a reliable text-book in all the schools of mental healing. No work has ever been written of more practical value to physicians of all schools. The book is the result of the extensiv learning and research of the author, and exhibits a familiarity with the literature of the subject. It is profoundly religious without being offensivly dogmatic. It has been received with universal favor by all who are seeking light on the subject on which it treats—the cure of disease in ourselvs and others by mental and spiritual agencies. Price $1.50.

Mental Medicin. A Theoretical and Practical Treatis on Medical Psychology. This book contains a full exposition of the nature and laws of magnetism, and its application to the cure of disease. Price $1.25.

Soul and Body; or, The Spiritual Science of Health and Disease. Price $1.00.

The Mental Cure, illustrating the Influence of the Mind on the Body both in Health and Disease, and the Psychological Method of Treatment. Price $1.50.

All the above books sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

A COMMON SENSE
GUIDE TO CORRECT ENGLISH;
IN WHICH THE
DECLENSION OF THE NOUN
AND THE
CONJUGATION OF THE VERB
Are superseded by a few simple rules; and comprising the most rational and progressiv views of the best grammarians of the 19th century.
By J. L. BARKER,
Author of "An Improvement on I. J. Morris's Grammar."
PRICE, - - - 35 CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth
TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price, $2. 33 Clinton Place, New York

PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,
WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

Man. Whence and Whither.
By R. B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,
Author of "The Bible.—Whence and What?

About all that can be said for the existence of God and the future life of man, is here pungently presented, with an incidental discussion of many collateral questions, from a rationalistic standpoint.

1 vol, cloth. Price, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place. New York

St. Matthew Before the Court on a Charge of Forgery.

BY SECULARIST.

Price, 10 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TO APPEAR IMMEDIATELY.
MOSES BEFORE THE COURT.
By the same Author.

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the Bible Exposed.
BY O. B. WHITFORD. M.D.
Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.

SECOND EDITION.

Price, 25 Cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Bible Analyzed.
BY
John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:
The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY
BETTER THAN
Eternal Punishment.
BY M. BABCOCK

The subjects discussed in this finely-printed pamphlet are, besides the title above given, Satan and Hades, Some Reasons Why I am Not a Christian, Divinity of the Bible, Theological Logic, Preachers are Not Honest, Preachers Sometimes Differ, Infant Damnation, Prayer, The Cloak of Charity, The Clergy were Afraid, No Fear of Being Damned, But What are We to Do? But Why Should I Be Damned? Why Not Pray for the Damned? Conclusion.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
A HISTORICAL SKETCH.
By G. F. RINEHART. Price 25 cts.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK.

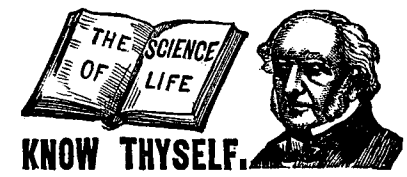
BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00



Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
POPULAR JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.

Headquarters for Fine Goods in the line of Genuin Diamonds; Fine Gold and Silver Watches; Ohains; Bracelets; Wedding and Presentation Rings; Jewelry of Latest style; Gold Pens; Silverware; Optical and Fancy Goods; 3 ounce Coin Silver Elgin Watch, $10; 4 ounce, Full Jeweled, Adjusted Pat. Regulator Stem Wind, $22; this same, fine movement, in best gold filled case, $35; with cheap movement, $25. Ladies' Solid Gold Elgin stem wind watches, $20, $24, and $32—14 karat, upward. Watches cleaned, finest work in the world, $1. Springs, $1, and returned per. reg. mail or ex., paid one way. Work for the trade at reduced rates and agents sending work once a week from every state in the Union are making lots of money. Best spectacles in the world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back on demand. Try me! OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Patentee of Wettstein's New Freethought Badge. The most beautiful badge ever placed upon the market. Immense sale. Elegant present for Lady or Gent. Solid gold, $3; $3.50; extra heavy, $4; with diamond, artistically enameled, $10.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. ONLY $1.
BY MAIL POST-PAID.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14 HEAL THYSELF is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y8

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.
3tf

WHY DON'T HE LEND A HAND
AND OTHER POEMS.

By S. P. PUTNAM, Author of Ingersoll and Jesus, Prometheus, Golden Throne, Waifs and Wanderings, Problems of the Universe, etc.

CONTENTS: Why Don't He Lend a Hand? The Golden Age, The Ideal and the Real, Not Dead but Living, Fruition, Hope, Thomas Paine, Nature's Gospel, Address to Deity, Giv us Light (Holdreth's poem often recited by Charles Watts).

PRICE 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

IMMORTALITY INHERENT IN NATURE.
BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.
Price, 60 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Gems of Thought.

THE vast amount of human wretchedness that exists without any apparent effort from on high to mitigate it is an unanswerable argument against the existence in the universe of a kind and benefi cent being who rules the affairs and marks out the destinies of men.—D. M. Bennett.

THE lover may
Distrust that look which steals his soul away;
The babe may cease to think that it can play
With heaven's rainbow; alchymists may doubt
The shining gold their crucibles giv out;
But faith, fanatic faith, once wedded fast
To some dear falsehood, hugs it to the last.
—Lalla Rookh.

MILTON had been intended for the church, and had been sent to college with that view. By the time he left Cambridge, at twenty-four, it had become clear, both to himself and his family, that he could never submit his understanding to the trammels of church formularies. "The church, to whose service by the intention of my parents and friends I was destined as a child, and in mine own resolutions, till coming to some maturity of years, and perceiving what tyranny had invaded the church, that he that would take orders must subscribe slave and take an oath withal . . . I thought it better to prefer a blameless silence before the sacred office of speaking, bought and begun with servitude and foreswearing."—Mark Pattison's Milton.

A MAN that is of judgment and understanding hall sometimes hear ignorant men differ, and know well within himself that those which so differ mean one thing, and yet they themselvs would never agree; and if it came so to pass in that distance of judgment which is between man and man, shall we not think that God above, that knows the heart, doth not discern that frail men, in some of their contentions, intend the same thing, and accept it of both?—Bacon's Essays.

SURELY no one who is cognizant of the facts of the case, nowadays, doubts that the roots of psychology lie in the physiology of the nervous system. What we call the operations of the mind are functions of the brain, and the materials of consciousness are products of cerebral activity. Cabanis made use of crude and misleading phraseology when he said that the brain secretes thought as the liver secretes bile; but the conception which that much-abused phrase embodies is, nevertheless, far more consistent with fact than the popular notion that the mind is a metaphysical entity seated in the head, but as independent of the brain as a telegraph operator is of his instrument.—Huxley's Hume.

WE may observe that, notwithstanding the dogmatical, imperious style of all superstition, the conviction of the religionists in all ages is more affected than real, and scarcely ever approaches in any degree to that solid belief and persuasion which govern us in the common affairs of life. Men dare not avow, even in their own hearts, the doubts which they entertain on such subjects; they make a merit of implicit faith, and disguise to themselvs their real infidelity by the strangest asseverations and most positiv bigotry. But nature is too hard for all their endeavors, and suffers not the obscure, glimmering light afforded in their shadowy regions to equal the strong impressions made by common sense and by experience. The usual course of men's conduct belies their words, and shows that their assent in these matters is some unaccountable operation of the mind between disbelief and conviction, but approaching much nearer to the former than to the latter.—Hume's Natural History of Religion.

"HE who believes and is baptized shall be saved," Christ had said; he, therefore, who is not baptized shall be damned. But is it always man's own fault that he is not baptized? What of the little children, for example, who die before baptism? Or of those millions of pagans who died before baptism was instituted? Or of those millions of heathens who even now, in distant regions, know scarcely anything of baptism and Christianity? The Augsburg Confession expressly says: "We condemn the Anabaptists, who assert that unbaptized children can be saved." Only Zwingli, the noble Swiss reformer, was humane enough to translate virtuous pagans like Socrates, and Aristides, and Antoninus to heaven, in spite of their unbaptized condition, without further ado.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

THE contrary of every matter of fact is still possible, because it can never imply a contradiction, and is conceived by the mind with the same facility and distinctness as if ever so conformable to reality. "That the sun will not rise to-morrow is no less intelligible a proposition and implies no more contradiction than the affirmativ "that it will rise." We should in vain, therefore, attempt to demonstrate its falsehood. Were it demonstrativly false it would imply a contradiction, and could even be distinctly conceived by the mind.—Hume's Essays.

IT is notorious that, to the unthinking mass of mankind, nine-tenths of the facts of life do not suggest the relation of cause and effect, and they practically deny the existence of any such relation by attributing them to chance. Few gamblers but would stare if they were told that the falling of a die on a particular face is as much the effect of a definit cause as the fact of its falling. It is a proverb that "the wind bloweth where it listeth," and even thoughtful men receive with surprise the suggestion that the form of the crest of every wave that breaks, wind-driven, on the sea-shore, and the direction of every particle of foam that flies before the gale, are the exact effects of definit causes, and as such must be capable of being determined deductivly from the laws of motion and the properties of air and water. So, again, there are large numbers of highly intelligent persons who rather pride themselvs on their fixed belief that our volitions hav no cause, or that the will causes itself, which is either the same thing or a contradiction in terms.—Huxley's Hume.

EVERY man is by nature the rightful judge for himself (and for nobody else) of every subject presented to his mind.—Waters's Through Rome on.

To the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York:

The Constitution of our State guarantees that "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State to all mankind." The general principle of American Government is equality of all men before the law. This, as Your Honorable Body is aware, involves the principle, already acknowledged in theory, of the Total Separation of Church and State. But Church and State are now practically united by the following statutes:

1. The law exempting Church Property from Taxation.

2. The laws appropriating Money from the Public Treasury for the support of Institutions founded and managed chiefly by Sectarian Denominations.

3. The law compelling the Observance of Sunday as a religious holy day.

The undersigned, Citizens of the State of New York, do therefore respectfully but earnestly petition Your Honorable Body to repeal all the laws or parts of laws of this State which are violations of the above principles. Our reasons for asking this are:

1. The Churches are voluntary associations properly to be supported by the voluntary contributions of their members. 2. The State is compulsory. Every citizen must pay taxes. And we submit that it is unjust to a large and growing body of voters to be compelled to pay for the support of Churches which they cannot conscientiously attend; for the hire of Ministers in our Legislature and Public Institutions, in whose doctrines they are unable to believe; and to observe as holy a day to them no more sacred than any other. We also submit that the exemption of Churches from taxation, the appropriation of money for the hire of Ministers and the support of Sectarian Institutions, and the Legal observance of Sunday as a holy day, are discriminations in favor of one form of religion, are abridgments of the free exercise of religious preferences, and are therefore unconstitutional.

NAMES.	RESIDENCE.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17
The National Liberal League,	28
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73
Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardener,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,	Elizabeth Cady Stanton,	J. D. Shaw,

Gottlieb: His Life. A romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written by S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By Mrs. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office

Odds and Ends.

A MISSIONARY out West, bragging how well he had instructed some Indians in religion, called up one of them and asked if he had not found great comfort last Sunday after receiving the sacrament. "Yes," replied the redskin, "but I wish it had been brandy."

A RECENT tornado in Wisconsin swept away a church filled with worshipers, and out of the entire congregation only two escaped unharmed. They had gone fishing. It is such things as these that make the lives of Western preachers the dismal failures they often are.

LADY (in an angry and shrill voice): "Conductor, why don't you stop the car when I tell you?" Irascible bachelor: "Conductor, the lady wants to know why the devil you don't stop the car!" Lady (more angry still: "I didn't say so, sir." Irascible bachelor: "No madam, but that's what you meant."

Two men were discussing material used for building purposes, and among the rest laths. Commenting on the fact that the price of laths was comparativly high, one of them remarked, "I don't see what in the world keeps laths up," when a third party, who never lets a chance go when he sees it, made the simple reply, "Nails."

"WHERE are you going, my Concord maid?"
"Into the henceness of wherefore," she said.
"May I go with you, my Concord maid?"
"If you hav whatness of whyness," she said.
"What is your father, my Concord maid?"
"He is a whichness of howness, sir," she said.
"What is your fortune, my Concord maid?"
"The amness of to be, sir," she said.
"Then I sha'nt marry you, my Concord maid."
"Go to the thenceness of thereness," she said.
—Chicago Sun.

THE children of light often borrow their phraseology from the children of darkness, as witness the following dialog: First deacon: When is that affair up at Brown's? Second deacon: What? That church snap? F. d.: Yes; that festival fake. S. d.: Oh, you mean that hash blowout. F. d.: Yes, where the sisters trot out the ice cream and sich. S. d.: I believe that's on tap for to-morrow eve. F. d.: Guess I'll hav to take it in. S. d.: Think I'll hav to waltz around to that lay-out myself, and gather in some of their fodder.

THEY had been using the village hay-scales for seven or eight years when a weighmaster from the city came out to test them, and discovered that they were "off" about five pounds on the hundred. Confusion followed. Farmers who had sold hogs and cattle and sheep and hay by weight were petrified when they figured up the loss of one hundred pounds on every ton. Speculators who had bought where others had sold, and had thus been benefited by the scales, felt no particular gratification, because none of them seemed to hav got ahead any faster. It was a stunning blow. What should be done? Call a public meeting, of course. It was called. Everybody was there. There was an earnest determination to go to the bottom of the affair. They had gone to the bottom of the scales and repaired 'em, but that was not enough. Somebody or other, or something or other, must be condemned or vindicated. There was a painful pause after a chairman had been selected. Everybody expected somebody else to offer a resolution or move the appointment of a committee, or do something or other to preserve the rights and liberties of American free men, but each individual seemed to be tongue-tied. The chairman finally arose and said: "Gentlemen, a resolution of sympathy for the family of the deceased would hardly be in order. Again, this is not a case wherein we can appeal to the patriotism of our fellow-coutrymen. Neither can we petition the legislature to right our wrongs, nor hav we just grounds for seceding from the United States. Will some of you make a suggestion?" Some one did. After a long ten seconds an eminent citizen slowly arose and solemnly—very solemnly—said, "I suggest that we go out and take a drink." Which was dopted by a large majority.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 45. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, November 7, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

In a recent sermon the Rev. Carlos Martyn said that "the Bible reveals God as a person exquisitly sensitiv to right and wrong."

An exchange thinks that whisky will soon be made of old rags. Hardly. Old rags don't make whisky; it's whisky that makes old rags. —Burlington Free Press.

The Rev. Thomas Thomas, of Fayetteville, Ark., is one hundred and fourteen years old. On the death of Harrison, he expects to succeed to the title, "The Boy Preacher."

A writer in the Church Eclectic objects to "the name 'Protestant Episcopal'—which means (as our missionaries, who hav labored to translate it into Chinese, tell us) 'The Contradictory Bishops' Church!'"

The Owners' and Business Men's Association continues its crusade against the immoral women who walk the streets in the vicinity of Sixth avenue and Twenty-seventh street. The women are thereby driven elsewhere.

A curious metal box has been unearthed at Canterbury. Its purpose was unknown until, being opened, there was found inside three buttons, a piece of tin, and a scrap of paper. Then they knew that it was an ancient contribution box.

The government appropriates sufficient "Bible money" each year to giv each redskin in the country six of the sacred books, but a recent investigation showed that not a Bible had been received for five years by any of the reservation tribes.

The Sun says: "One of the most remarkable instances of the reconciliation of science and faith is found in the case of the Rutgers College seismologist, who noted at New Brunswick the shock of the Flood Rock explosion just one minute after the appointed time, and just fifteen minutes before the explosion actually occurred."

"I'll want a lot of blanks for assault and battery cases," said a Texan justice, entering a printing establishment. "Are you out of blanks?" asked the printer. "No, but I will be pretty soon. There is going to be a colored Pan-Evangelical Council of preachers here in a day or two and I want to be prepared for the rush of business. This is my busy season."

Of Santos, the "boss" of Uurguay, a correspondent of a daily paper writes: "He was the son of a common soldier and born in a barracks, never saw the inside of a school-house, and, when a child, was not considered of consequence enough to receive the baptism of the church. Yet it was this man's destiny to introduce free schools in Uruguay, secure the passage of compulsory educational law, demolish the monasteries, drive out the nuns, banish the papal legate, and forbid the discussion of political questions from the pulpits of the Catholic church."

The Rev. Dr. Hitchcock, president of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of this city, who wastes his brains by butting his head against the aspirations of the working classes, had better look after his theological pupils. The New York correspondent of the Galveston News speaks thus about a subject of which we hav no knowledge: "The spiciest talk on this topic concerns the Union Theological Seminary, whose divines in embryo are accused of providing more delegates to the audiences in bad resorts than a sober, unamused study of vice can excuse."—John Swinton.

The Christian Advocate says: "A recent tornado in a New Jersey town destroyed a distillery, and sent 13,000 gallons of cider, together with a large quantity of the celebrated Jersey 'apple-jack,' where no thirsty topers will be able to gather it up. Some of the interpreters of special providence will no doubt see in this a divine judgment upon the whisky traffic; but unfortunately the same tornado destroyed the church and the school-house. This concatenation of events plays as much havoc with some common theories of special providence as the tornado did in the most impartial manner with churches and distilleries."

We hav received a copy of an able "Freethought Hymn," published at Toronto. The last stanza runs as follows:

The men of the church are the men you may trust.
Not much! Not what? Not much!
But the preachers are honest; admit that you must.
Not much! Not what? Not much!
They love Robert Ingersoll, Charles Watts, and the rest,
And fervently pray to meet them with the blest,
They are gentle and kindly, it must be confessed.
Not much! Not what? Not much!
But they're better than no preachers at all?
Not much! Not better than nothing at all?
Not much!

These ministers must be looked after. They are entirely too frisky. The Troy Press says: "The Albany Presbytery, which is in session at Schenectady, acted upon the matter of granting a license to preach to a Schenectady student named Ford. In speaking of the action, the Star says: "The defendant had obtained a church in Washington county. It was said that he dressed too well; he lived in too expensiv a house; he traveled too much; in Washington county he acted in an unseemly manner, played hilarious and giddy games, such as hunt the slipper, puss in the corner, copenhagen, clap in and clap out; but, worse than all, he is accused of plagiarism." The case was put off until the spring meeting of the Presbytery.

The Jamestown Sunday Sun publishes a story of a firm just closed out by the sheriff—L. M. West & Co.—and a correspondent adds some facts of interest to church people. Mr. West is a leading member of the Baptist church. His attorney is also a member of the same church. He livs ostentatiously, and his wife is a leader of fashion. The company has been his wife and two sons, but he has most of the time handled the money. He borrowed the pittance of a widow, only $300, and through the winter refused to pay her $10 out of his store when she was in great need. He has never paid her a penny. He has for years had judgments against him in favor of wholesale grocers, bakers, and, in fact, almost everybody. "Of such is" the church.

The percentage of persons aged 15 years and upward who can read is in Germany 94, in Great Britain 91, in Austria 88, in France 88, in Italy 74, in Spain 69, and in Russia 53. The percentage of those who can read, write, and work out simple arithmetical problems is in Germany 89, in Great Britain 81, in France 77, in Austria 75, in Italy 63, in Spain 49, and in Russia 39. The percentage of those who possess a fair acquaintance with more than one modern language is in Germany 69, in Austria 61, in Great Britain 34, in France 29, in Italy 28, in Russia 23, and in Spain 13. And, finally, the percentage of those who hav some knowledge of the classics is in Germany 32, in Great Britain 21, in France 20, in Italy 16, in Austria 13, in Spain 7, and in Russia 2.

"Is Mr. Jones at home?" said a deacon from the North, who had made a pilgrimage to the habitation of Sam Jones, the Western revivalist, to see about getting the famous snake-waker to visit his locality, and drive a spike in the tail of the green dragon. "No; he's gone away," said the little girl who opened the door for him. "Will he return soon?" inquired the deacon, in an anxious voice. "No, he won't be back for a week," replied the child. "What!" exclaimed the deacon, as he tugged at his beard in great disappointment, "not back for a week? Well, that is too bad! But I must see him—yes, I really must see him, and I can't go back without doing it. Where is the good man, sissy?" And the deacon bent toward the little girl eagerly to catch the reply. The child had eyed the deacon closely, and seemed to take it for granted that the cause of his great anxiety to see the evangelist was similar to that of another class of callers, whose visits had no doubt become quite frequent, so she looked up into the face of the anxious man, and with an artless look of pity in her blue eyes she said, in tones that made him him feel as though he had stolen a horse and been caught with the bridle under his coat: "Well, you poor miserable sinner, I s'pose you can come in. I reckon maybe mother can pray for you." The deacon kissed the child and gave her a dime to send to the heathen, as he turned sadly away.

Prof. Paul S. Hinze, of the Brooklyn Art School, delivered a lecture last Sunday evening in the Brooklyn Atheneum. The lecture was profusely illustrated with stereopticon views. Professor Hinze invited his audience to take a walk about Brooklyn with him. "Ah, what hav we here?" he said, as a representation of the exterior of Talmage's Tabernacle was thrown on the screen from behind by the unseen manipulator of the stereopticon. "Why, it's the Tabernacle," continued the professor, taking the spectators into his confidence. "Now let us see if we can break in," and the operator produced an interior view of the Tabernacle. "And now who do you suppose this is?" gayly added the professor. The operator shoved a picture of Ed. Stokes's bar into the stereopticon. Instead of the applause Professor Hinze expected at the appearance of Talmage's picture there was a painful silence. The professor looked up at the picture and dived through a side-door leading to the operator. Then the spectators applauded.

The death of Canon Anson, who has for forty years held a stall worth $5,000 a year in St. George's chapel, Windsor, affords a convenient opportunity of calling attention to one of the grossest scandals of the Church of England. St. George's Chapel is maintained as a Cathedral establishment, having a dean and four canons, who draw between them $30,000 a year for purely ornamental services, while four minor canons get $1,000 a year each for doing the bulk of such work as there is to do. All the canons are pluralists, and find time enough to occupy good livings in the country where the pay is good and the work light, the population being sparse. During his lifetime as a clergyman, extending over forty-four years, Canon Anson drew of church funds $360,000—$4,000 a year being from the little parish of Sudbury, in Derbyshire, in which there is a population of only a few hundred souls. He was presented to the living in 1837 by the Lord Vernon of that day, in whose family the patronage lies. He subsequently married Lord Vernon's daughter. There is a still older canon at Windsor, drawing his $5,000 a year, Lord Wriothesley Russell, who has also a fairly good income from a living in Bucks, to which he was presented by his relativ, a former Duke of Bedford.—London Correspondence Manchester Times.

The Rev. Mangasar M. Mangasarian, who has been pastor of the Spring Garden Presbyterian church, in Philadelphia, for three years, has publicly renounced the doctrins of Presbyterianism, and tendered his resignation to his congregation, who had but a few hours' intimation of his intention. In his sermon he said: "I hav ceased to be a Calvanist. I hav decided to renounce the doctrins of orthodox Presbyterianism. If Calvin, Wesley, and Edwards had the right to make articles of faith and differ with good and holy men who went before them, hav I not the same right to make articles of faith and differ with Calvin, Wesley, and Edwards? I hav outgrown the creed of Calvin. I love the Presbyterian people for what they are and what they believe—their character and not their creed. I shall hav no creed save the words of Christ. My sympathies are with all sects having liberal views. My future church shall be a church governed by the people, a people's church, a congregational church essentially, where no authority comes between the minister and his flock. By my act I subscribe myself to the Congregational doctrin. Your creed says that mankind is born and livs under the curse of God; that in Adam's sin all mankind fell, and for his transgression God sentenced his children to unending sorrow. Your creed shows me a heaven thinly settled, a hell peopled; few saints, many sinners. Your creed tells me that under the eternal law of predestination nothing can change the number of souls ransomed. This is fatalism. What need, then, of preaching the gospel?"

News of the Week.

Canon Farrar is lecturing in America, and making money at it.

Nearly $93,500 has been contributed to the Grant monument fund.

In Tuesday's election New York and Virginia went Democratic; Iowa, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania Republican.

It has been decided that the remains of General Grant shall rest for all time where they now are, at Riverside Park.

The small-pox scourge continues in Montreal. More than three thousand deaths hav been caused by the disease.

The effects of John McCullough, the great actor, were sold at auction last week. McCullough is hopelessly insane.

The 368th anniversary of the Reformation was celebrated at Steinway Hall, New York, last Saturday, by the Martin Luther Society.

Public sentiment in Canada opposes the execution of Riel, the rebel, and it is expected that his sentence will be commuted. Riel is confident that he will not be hanged.

Eleven arrests for selling liquor were made in this city last Sunday. Yet it is safe to say that the law against Sunday liquor-selling was broken more than eleven thousand times.

Otto Funk alias J. N. Talbot, the noted dynamiter, book thief, and former divinity student, committed suicide at Cambridge, Mass., on the 30th ult. He was 27 years old.

The Taber divorce case in Boston attracts large crowds. All the testimony points to the fact that the Rev. Mr. Downes is an habitual adulterer, and that Deacon Taber is not much better.

An attempt was made on the 29th ult. at Paris to assassinate M. de Freycinet, the French minister of foreign affairs. The assailant, who is a Corsican, fired a pistol at his intended victim, but missed.

J. P. Myers, a painter, was rigging a scaffold about the spire on a Methodist church at Clinton, Ill., on the 29th ult., when his foot slipped and he fell to the ground, a distance of one hundred feet. He was instantly killed.

Financier Ward, the Wall-street partner of General Grant, was convicted of fraud and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment at hard labor, which sentence he has already begun serving out. Warner is on trial for aiding and abetting Ward.

Owing to strikes in Western nail-mills, causing an advance in the price of nails, the nailers and feeders at the Brooks Iron Company's works at Birdsboro, Pa., hav had their wages advanced ten per cent. The increase affects about 225 employees.

Jonathan M. Roberts has been convicted of criminal libel in the Brooklyn Court of Sessions. The complainants were Thomas S. and William R. Tice, of Brooklyn. The libel was printed in Mind and Matter, a Spiritualist newspaper, owned and edited by Mr. Roberts and published in Philadelphia. The jury in its verdict of conviction recommended Mr. Roberts to mercy on account of his age.

George Brinton McClellan, formerly major-general of the United States army, and commander of the armies of the United States, and more lately governor of New Jersey, died early on the morning of Oct. 29th at his home in St. Cloud, on Orange Mountain, near Orange, N. J. He was fifty-nine years old. The burial took place on Monday last. There was no public or military demonstration.

The last issue of the Boycotter, the organ of the printers, announced that a compromise had been made with the New York Tribune. A meeting of the Typographical Union last Sunday repudiated the compromise, and declared that unconditional surrender was the only terms upon which it would settle with the Tribune. The compromise was thought to hav a political meaning, coming as it did on the eve of an election, and extra exertions were put forth through the press to correct the false information which had gone out.

Selections and Communications.

Introduction to "Men, Women, and Gods."*

Nothing givs me more pleasure, nothing givs greater promis for the future, than the fact that woman is achieving intellectual and physical liberty. It is refreshing to know that here, in our country, there are thousands of women who think and express their own thoughts—who are thoroughly free and thoroughly conscientious—who hav neither been narrowed nor corrupted by a heartless creed—who do not worship a being in heaven whom they would shudderingly loath on earth—women who do not stand before the altar of a cruel faith with downcast eyes of timid acquiescence, and pay to impudent authority the tribute of a thoughtless yes. They are no longer satisfied with being told. They examin for themselvs. They hav ceased to be the prisoners of society—the satisfied serfs of husbands or the echoes of priests. They demand the rights that naturally belong to intelligent human beings. If wives, they wish to be the equals of husbands; if mothers, they wish to rear their children in the atmosphere of love, liberty, and philosophy. They believe that woman can discharge all her duties without the aid of superstition, and preserve all that is true, pure, and tender without sacrificing in the temple of absurdity the convictions of the soul.

Woman is not the intellectual inferior of man. She has lacked, not mind, but opportunity. In the long night of barbarism physical strength, and the cruelty to use it, were the badges of superiority. Muscle was more than mind. In the ignorant age of faith the loving nature of woman was abused, her conscience was rendered morbid and diseased. It might almost be said that she was betrayed by her own virtues. At best she secured, not opportunity, but flattery, the preface to degradation. She was deprived of liberty, and without that nothing is worth the having. She was taught to obey without question, and to believe without thought. There were universities for men before the alphabet had been taught to women. At the intellectual feast there were no places for wives and mothers. Even now they sit at the second table and eat the crusts and crumbs. The schools for women, at the present time, are just far enough behind those for men to fall heirs to the discarded. On the same principle, when a doctrin becomes too absurd for the pulpit, it is given to the Sunday-school. The ages of muscle and miracle—of fists and faith—are passing away. Minerva occupies at last a higher niche than Hercules. Now a word is stronger than a blow.

At last we see women who depend upon themselvs; who stand self-poised amid the shocks of this sad world without leaning for support against a church; who do not go to the literature of barbarism for consolation, nor use the falsehoods and mistakes of the past for the foundation of their hope; women brave enough and tender enough to meet and bear the facts and fortunes of this world.

The men who declare that woman is the intellectual inferior of man do not, and cannot, by offering themselvs in evidence, substantiate their declaration.

Yet, I must admit that there are thousands of wives who still hav faith in the saving power of superstition; who still insist on attending church while husbands prefer the shores, the woods, or the fields. In this way families are divided. Parents grow apart, and unconsciously the pearl of greatest price is thrown away. The wife ceases to be the intellectual companion of the husband. She reads the Christian Register, sermons in the Monday papers, and a little gossip about folks and fashions, while he studies the works of Darwin, Haeckel, and Humboldt. Their sympathies become estranged. They are no longer mental friends. The husband smiles at the follies of the wife and she weeps for the supposed sins of the husband. Such wives should read this book. They should not be satisfied to remain forever in the cradle of thought, amused with the toys of superstition.

The parasite of woman is the priest.

It must also be admitted that there are thousands of men who believe that superstition is good for women and children; who regard falsehood as the fortress of virtue, and feel indebted to ignorance for the purity of daughters and the fidelity of wives. These men think of priests as detectivs in disguise, and regard God as a policeman who prevents elopements. Their opinions about religion are as correct as their estimate of woman.

The church furnishes but little food for the mind. People of intelligence are growing tired of the platitudes of the pulpit—the iterations of the itinerants. The average sermon is "as tedious as a twice-told tale vexing the ear of a drowsy man."

One Sunday a gentleman who is a great inventor called at my house. Only a few words had passed between us when he arose, saying that he must go, as it was time for church. Wondering that a man of his mental wealth could enjoy the intellectual poverty of the pulpit, I asked for an explanation, and he gave me the following: "You know that I am an inventor. Well, the moment my mind becomes absorbed in some difficult problem, I am afraid that something may happen to distract my attention. Now, I know that I can sit in church for an hour without the slightest danger of having the current of my thought disturbed."

Most women cling to the Bible because they hav been taught to giv up that book is to giv up all hope of another life—of ever meeting again the loved and lost. They hav also been taught that the Bible is their friend, their defender, and the real civilizer of man.

Now, if they will only read this book—these three lectures—without fear, and then read the Bible, they will see that the truth or falsity of the dogma of inspiration has nothing to do with the question of immortality. Certainly the Old Testament does not teach us that there is another life, and upon that question even the New is obscure and vague. The hunger of the heart finds only a few small and scattered crumbs. There is nothing definit, solid, and satisfying. United with the idea of immortality we find the absurdity of the resurrection. A prophecy that depends for its fulfilment upon an impossibility cannot satisfy the brain or heart.

There are but few who do not long for a dawn beyond the night. And this longing is born of, and nourished by, the heart. Love wrapped in shadow, bending with tear-filled eyes above its dead, convulsivly clasps the outstretched hand of hope.

I had the pleasure of introducing Helen H. Gardener to her first audience, and in that introduction said a few words that I will repeat.

"We do not know, we cannot say, whether death is a wall or a door, the beginning or end of a day, the spreading of pinions to soar, or the folding forever of wings, the rise or the set of a sun, of an endless life that brings rapture and love to everyone.

"Under the seven-hued arch of hope let the dead sleep."

They will also discover, as they read the "sacred volume," that it is not the friend of woman. They will find that the writers of that book, for the most part, speak of woman as a poor beast of burden—a serf, a drudge, a kind of necessary evil—as mere property. Surely a book that upholds polygamy is not the friend of wife and mother.

Even Christ did not place woman on an equality with man. He said not one word about the sacredness of home, the duties of the husband to the wife—nothing calculated to lighten the hearts of those who bear the saddest burdens of this life.

They will also find that the Bible has not civilized mankind. A book that establishes and defends slavery and wanton war is not calculated to soften the hearts of those who believe implicitly that it is the work of God. A book that not only permits but commands religious persecution has not in my judgment developed the affectional nature of man. Its influence has been bad and bad only. It has filled the world with bitterness, revenge, and crime, and retarded in countless ways the progress of our race.

The writer of this little volume has read the Bible with open eyes. The mist of sentimentality has not clouded her vision. She has had the courage to tell the result of her investigations. She has been quick to discover contradictions. She appreciates the humorous side of the stupidly solemn. Her heart protests against the cruel, and her brain rejects the childish, the unnatural, and the absurd. There is no misunderstanding between her head and heart. She says what she thinks, and feels what she says.

No human being can answer her arguments. There is no answer. All the priests in the world can not explain away her objections. There is no explanation. They should remain dumb, unless they can show that the impossible is the probable—that slavery is better than freedom—that polygamy is the friend of woman—that the innocent can justly suffer for the guilty—and that to persecute for opinion's sake is an act of love and worship.

Wives who cease to learn, who simply forget and believe, will fill the evening of their lives with barren sighs and bitter tears. The mind should outlast youth.

If, when beauty fades, Thought, the deft and unseen sculptor, hath not left his subtle lines upon the face, then all is lost. No charm is left. The light is out. There is no flame within to glorify the wrinkled clay.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

New York, July 22, 1885.

*MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. The Truth Seeker Co., 33 Clinton Place, New York.

Morality: What Is It and How Did It Arise?

Perhaps there is no one word having reached historical recognition about which greater difficulties hav been experienced than the word heading this address. Ethics, virtue, benevolence, right, that which makes for righteousness and justice—all of these hav had a hearing, and hav been classed under this word, morality. We only need to study it in a few of its historical gestures to find the cause of these difficulties. They hav evidently appeared in the attempt to find the true value of this word, instead of seeking for its value in the genesis of history, an assumed value is given to it, and this value is to be taken without questions. This assumption draped this word in the terms of immutable, and in this we are told that the question is settled, and its value is forever fixed. It is a very easy matter to put a quietus upon an investigator in this way—but unless the assumption conveys to the mind some rational idea, it is not likely to be received. The limits assigned to consciousness reveal to us at once the terms in which the revelations of consciousness must be considered, or understood. In the first place, an immutable law—whatever that is—is not, nor is it a possible, fact, as consciousness. Thoughts coming to us under the limits of consciousness are ever termed in the words or gestures of limitation—that is to say, if we receive from them any rational idea. We only know through succession in consciousness, and hence by a strict logical necessity all that does not come in this way does not come at all. An immutable moral law, an immutable standard of moral action (if it has any meaning, it is placed beyond all that is possible to us), is not in thought, nor is it possible to thought. To know ourselvs in such a revelation would be annihilation. To see ourselvs in such a presence would blot out consciousness. This is fundamental, founded upon the fact that consciousness can only bear witness to that which comes within its own limits—but then, it is thought that it sounds well and looks well to dwell in the shadows of terms which hav no meaning; it is at least fashionable, and this makes it right. We hav ever been told by those having divine authority (if anybody knows what that means) that we hav an immutable standard—a moral law being the same yesterday, today, and forever—and we are damned if we do not obey it. Yet, notwithstanding this divine authority, a very serious question comes up. In this way it is presented: Is this standard divine? I mean, is it right, because the divine has willed it, or is it right, and therefore the divine wills it? Whoever he may be that is wicked enough to suggest this question, it ought not to come from a theologian. To him, and in fact to all Christian devotees, there is nothing which can excuse the wickedness of such a question. If it should be for a moment conceded that a thing is right, and hence God wills it, this would at once be destruction, from the fact it postulates, that right is outside of the immutable standard, and then the pertinent question would come up, whence came this right? If a thing or an act is right, and therefore the divine wills it, then this right was before his will, and not dependent upon it. This will not do; this then compels us to the old definition, morality is an immutable law. That which it pronounces right is and must forever be right, and that which it once proclaims worong, it must forever remain wrong. All are and must be judged in the light of this immutable law. In the second place, we find that this definition is not sustained in the genesis of of history. We find that its truthfulness is excluded by a law of necessity; that it is not, nor can it be, a factor in consciousness, and now, we will find that in its historical life it negativs every claim set up for it. The life of the race must be our text-book; this, and this only, contains the source of reliable information. The multifarious experiences of our humanity will reveal to us the true standards in the light of which we take the value of human actions, and score a point against the immutable.

First in the order of sequence we find consciousness through constantly changing environments, and from the moment of that experience to this moment we are free to testify to the fact that it is only in this constant change that we liv, move, and hav our being. The next step in this order of sequence is the classification of the changes which hav taken place in the individual and national life, as well as the race life. These constitute the sources of our information bearing upon the question before us. We find that there is no growth, no budding, no flowering, no consciousness, without a change of environment. But wonderful changes hav taken place in the individual, national, and race life, and hence the progress which has been made.

These facts force us to a definition of morality; that is to say, the growth of mankind has defined relations existing between the members of this commonwealth and the duties consequent upon these relations. Nature in its methods does not make any discriminations. It never pronounces one innocent and another guilty, has never heard the prayers of sinless lips, nor noted those through which curses came. Of sin it never speaks, nor of good. When its pestilential vapors come they pass not by the innocent more than the guilty. Its cholera does not ask, "Is it a house of prayer or of profanity?" Its diphtheria and scarlatina do not knock at the door and ask if the children within are baptized or unbaptized, do not ask if they hav or hav not been consecrated to God or the devil. No, no. It throws its fatal arrows at these little hearts alike. It makes the mother on her knees weep not less than the mother who never knew prayer. When it rocks this globe, and breaks its rocky ribs, and drops a city out of sight, it does not stop to ask who belongs to God, or who to the devil. All meet one common fate, and this solves the enigma of the universe. The question as to what is morality is now answered.

The methods of nature hav sharply defined life—in the making of us—for in this it has sharply individualized that life, and morality is that which defines that as the relation existing between the individuals. And here is the forced conclusion to which we are driven: that morality is in the human, and it only stands as the representativ of the relations existing between each other. We hav now reached that point from whence we can take the value of morality. Any treason against the relations thus established in the present environment is immorality; a recognition of these relations is, practically, morality.

We are now in the presence of our second question: How has morality arisen? Much might be said in answer to this question. In the first place, modern science legitimates the statement that the higher in structure came from the lower, civilized man came from the savage, and that the law of this outcoming is evolution, through variation, implied in that evolution. Morality has arisen in a system of mutations—in a mutable universe. And herein we hav a rational explanation of the constant changes that hav taken and are taking place in the moral standards of the peoples of this world.

In the genesis of evolution, from the low to the high, it came to pass that certain organized beings hav been so completely differentiated from the homogeneous mass of organized life that thoughts arose, and in their birth we find the antecedents of that which has evolved thought. And then, one step further, thinking will find improved methods through experiences, which in time leads to the recognition of relations existing between those who think, and as soon as this takes place we see the first form of morality. And as the experience becomes more varied and complex, the more definit the existing relations become. The more varied our culture and experiences become, the more exact that relation also becomes; and the wiser we become, the better and more moral we are. Not only this, but we are then in position to contribute to the elevation of those who hav not had the advantages which we hav had. This moral standard, having come in the way defined, invents or promulgates no creed that may not change to-morrow. It has no infallibles, no popes, no gods. The needs of our race are the first to consider, and the gods, surely, need not the tribute of our hands or tears. This flexible standard of morals, founded upon the experiences of life, has help for all. It is human, and hence sees and feels human needs. There is no help for man but man; and hence, as the experiences of the race are classified, tendencies are seen of constant improvement. The arts and the sciences enter more and more into the individual and national life. And as these become higher, the moral sense becomes much clearer, and evils are seen with greater clearness which enter into associated life. And the individual and national consciousness become more awake to those things which are needed to secure the highest good of the individual and the commonwealth. And thus it is, in the presence of higher evolution in the sciences and arts, that measures are devised at the earliest moment to secure guarantees for reaching the mass of the people, and elevating them. They will encourage education in such direction, so as to secure the means necessary for self-support.

The way to this end will be in connection with the general education of the people; to cultivate systematized industries upon the basis of adequate remuneration, and so, as the world of thought has become more practical in its methods, on account of its divorcement from the supernatural, and the natural following sequence that we are to look out for self, this present standard of morality has arisen. The world is not turning back. The mandates of the gods are no longer taken. The era of man has come, and in its coming old things hav passed away, and we no longer deserve death, because we do not think to-day as we did yesterday. Not only this, but we no longer fear death, since the tribunal is a human one and not divine. Tell us not, ye redeemed of earth, washed in the blood of innocence, that Freethinkers hav no rules of action, that they, being without God in this world, are damned. Say not these things to us, for we know that you know that we are as good as you are, and that our chances are as good as are yours, even if your doctrin is true. Freethought has a record along the pathway of the centuries—men and women whose lives are our record, as brave, as good, as noble, and as pure as any upon whom Gods hav smiled, through whose experiences this flexible moral standard has arisen before which the Gods may blush for shame. In their reign through all of the centuries they never placed innocence' baby in the lap of motherhood. No mother, through the dominions of the gods, ever rocked a cradle in which an innocent baby was sleeping. No, never. The best that the gods hav ever done was to place upon the lap of motherhood a depraved baby. The inflexible moral standard of the gods only produced monstrosities. They saw no way to correct the mistake of a mistakeless god, or the mistake of a man who was mistakeless, as his high origin must hav excluded mistakes. This moral law of the gods could do no better than to curse the coming centuries with total depravity. On bended knee, in sobbing sighs, the great heart of the race has wept the centuries away on account of this curse. This cruel curse has turned the crystal tears into an aggravating blister upon the cheek of innocence. But changes hav overtaken us. This is the era of man, and not that of the gods, and our babies now open their eyes upon a universe uncursed by sin. They come now with a consciousness in the mother's heart that "I no longer kiss and caress the depraved childhood of the gods. My child is mine, as innocent as that love which would die for it." Oh, the sublime pride that must light and thrill the mother's heart, feeling, as she now must under the reign of the human, that "my child is no longer a demon, but it is as pure as a flake of snow!" My heavens! what a boon to be born of a mother living under the reign of the human, knowing that in such an event we come with a blessing on our heads and not a curse. Again, we see in the reign of the Gods how cruelty was the order. See the wars under this reign, the most cruel and revengeful possible. The blackest pages of all history are those where the wars of the Gods and their priesthoods are written, savage and barbarous beyond all description, but since the era of man, the truth of Freethought, all of these things hav changed. True, indeed, is this where the sciences and the arts are cultivated. The time was, under the reign of God and his priests, when the ends of justice, so-called, demanded the invention of the most cruel instruments of torture, and their use upon the offender, that the dignity and majesty of the law might be vindicated. All the suffering possible was forced upon the offender, and even this only partly atoned for his offense, for the fires of hell were kept uncomfortably hot for him; when this suffering in the name of God had killed him he would hav a warm reception down below, with the assurance that there should be no end to his sufferings; but now, under the new creed, the ends of justice are met with the least possible suffering of the offender and his friends consistent with the demands of justice. Such is the method in the reign of man.

The immutable monarch of the universe has passed beyond the human and is forever a fixture seated on some silent desert throne in eternity, and the priesthood of this monarch is gradually becoming human. Their hell has cooled, their devil has lost his kingdom, and the Bible of this priesthood is now ridiculed in the conclave of mitred bishops, and they hav translated it so that it suits the devil better than it does their God. These are the changes that are taking place under this flexible standard of right. We will not close our eyes to the possibility that on to-morrow the new experiences of to-day may result in some new demand for to-morrow. We will not complain at this, nor persecute the experience which has rendered this new demand necessary. This is, or ought to be, the age of authority—that is, if we are to hav such an age. No age is as far advanced as this; no age could make a Bible as good as this; no age ever had such noble men, women, and children as this age; no age by which we can pledge our all, equal to this age. The past has formed no dictums which bind us; we possess all; we sum up the past, and add to it the now, and hence we are in possession of that which no other age ever had, and herein lies our advantage. But we as Freethinkers are confronted with the charge that we are ever tearing down but are not building up, taking away but giving nothing to take the place of that which we hav taken away. We say that this charge is not sincere—at least, it is not true in the mind of the person making the charge. If made by an intelligent person, such a person must well know that there is no tearing down without rebuilding in some form. We are doing what nature has taught us. We are using its methods. Nature has only one way by which it makes itself known to our consciousness, and that is variation as change. This is the law of progress in every field of thought possible to us. This bone, this segment, this tissue, this muscle, will reveal to the expert the work of changed environments and thereby enable him to see that nature has hypothecated a modified form, if not a new variety, and even it is possible—and this possibility has been seen to the extent that a second modification, or a new variety, is hypothecated in that hypothecation. Bones in a structure which nature has soldered together will contain a revelation to an evolutionist; he will see what we hav stated above. To the florist like changes in his department cast their shadows before him. This method in the hands of modern Freethinkers must be applied to modern society. Improvement is on the line of making new environments and thereby modifying and improving the condition of society—apply to it nature's methods if we would succeed.

The method of education in the past has had for its great object the making of God known, and, in the next place, preparations to meet him. These demand the surrender of everything else that we might by this surrender escape the damnation of hell. In education proper we substitute the natural and leave the supernatural out. We grant untrammeled investigation in the place of a permit to think just such things only and nothing more. Instead of an education which shows us how to die, we call for one that teaches us how to liv and make this life a benediction to ourselvs and others. Instead of educating the people to hate the world and the things therein, we instruct them to love both. Instead of doing right so that the favor of the gods is secured, for Christ's sake, we demand the doing right because it is right, and that we should do it at any rate without the bribery which heaven offers, or the threat of hell-fire. Instead of love to our parents on account of a God's promis, we love and obey them because it is their due, and they deserve it. Instead of searching the Bible to find out what crime is, we study the laws of the land and the history of the race, and we find many things which the Bible would call virtues are crimes—selling murrain beef to an alien, for instance, because you are a holy people, which the statutes of the state hold to be a crime.

This is what we, in part, giv for the price of superstition. Nature is our Bible. Study its methods, and we hav the sciences and the arts. By a knowledge of its methods, we hav our industries. In the light of its methods, we hav our homes. These hav all been wrought out in the methods of nature. Our ethics complement our genius; our arts, the love of the beautiful, complement our persistent devotion to nature's methods. In the last analysis, we formulate this postulate: morality is the relation which the experiences of the past hav established between us and the duty consequent upon these relations. The origin of morality, thus defined, is found in the genesis of history. It belongs to no one age—it has arisen in the natural order of sequence as all other knowledge has. Morality is the gift of mankind, formulated through the centuries, and it will ever be an increasing complement to the devotion of the intelligent men and women to nature. J. H. BURNHAM.

Mr. Heywood and God.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In your issue of Oct. 17th, Francis Barry thinks I am God-struck because he and you misinterpreted a sentence in my epistle to you in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Sept. 26th. In saying that Seward Mitchell would not obey anything "this side of, or beyond, God," I did not mean to imply that he would, could, or should obey the theological opinion called God. If you cut off head and feet—both ends of Infinity—what does the belly, the middle of God, amount to, anyway? About as much as Mr. Barry's idea of Liberty does when he advocates tyranny to settle temperance or financial questions. When Yankees or Ohioans "go it blind," "drift, and let the current find the way," the venture comes out "by guess, by God," or some otherwise haphazardly; but, if we are to hav a sure thing in human action, Personal Enterprise must drive where Fate rides; so Mr. Barry may yet liv to learn that, in Rum and Money, as in Love, we must hav Individual Freedom to do wrong, power to go to hell at our own risk and cost, before social salvation can be assured temperance-and-finance-wise.

Playing that the Most High represents traditional wisdom in living sense of Truth and Right, Union Reformers sometimes speak of Stephen Pearl Andrews as God's successor—meaning thereby, of course, no disrespect to Mr. Andrews; for, while the Pantarch rarely is so far gone, personally, that he either swears or prays—thereby admitting that there is a God able or willing to decree or damn us into better shape here below than Universology can put us—he (the Pantarch) always has practical sense to see and say that living inspiration, the AIR, to-day is of more real service than all the dead leaves or lumber of past endeavor, where God, as the first and last "nigger in the wood-pile," hides himself to seek his prey. Regarding him (as Christians pretend to do) as a power outside of Reason and Conscience which ought to be obeyed, the one devil to be *dis*obeyed, defied, or ignored, is God. But, not to waste any more space on this heavenly nonsense, I want to know why so naturally bright, sensible, and serviceable a man as we all think Francis Barry is can advise people to go on the temperance-drunk called Prohibition, or advocate financial Comstockism under guise of Greenbackery. As in Love, so in Rum and Money, Liberty is not only an inalienable right, but absolutely necessary to work out personal and social salvation. Rejoicing in Mr. Barry's life-long, fruitful service for social freedom, the scratch of his pen for tyranny, anywise, makes me sick. Personally, I may or may not be a wilder boy than he; but if anything could make it my religious duty to drink and sell rum, take interest on money, get married, or do any other ethically indefensible thing, it would be Francis Barry's prohibitory theory of morals.

Truly yours, E. H. HEYWOOD.

Princeton, Mass., Oct. 23, 1885.

THE plant which is often transplanted does not prosper.—Seneca.

IN this world a man must either be anvil or hammer.—Longfellow.

The Liberal Club.

It cost the man with the badge-pin half a dollar to attend the 386th regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club, but he is free to admit that the entertainment afforded was worth far more than that sum. The hall was nearly filled. The ladies were numerous and attractiv, and it was noticed that many of them had tacked on an extra piece of lace or a ribbon or something of the kind in honor of the occasion, which was a lecture by Prof. Thomas Davidson in behalf of the Bruno statue fund.

Mr. Wakeman introduced the audience and the professor to each other, and the one applauded while the other bowed. Professor Davidson is of Scotch extraction. He is of pleasing appearance and address, and created from the first a favorable impression, which lasted to the end of his somewhat lengthy address.

The lecture was prefaced by a short sketch of the life of Giordano Bruno. This martyr to Freethought was born at Nola, Italy, in 1548. His name was Filippo. The name of Giordano was adopted when he became a Dominican monk. He had a theory of his own about the infinit, and once made the dangerous remark that a priest could be in more profitable business than contemplating the seven joys of the Virgin Mary. He also hinted that the theory of transubstantiation was somewhat absurd. Only his youth preserved him from the Inquisitors. Finally, on account of his outspoken heresy, Italy became too tropical for him, and he became a wanderer, supporting himself at one time by teaching, at another time as a proof-reader. He taught grammar to the young and astronomy to the men. At Milan he became the intimate friend of Sir Philip Sydney, whom he afterward met in England. At Geneva he met with no better reception from the Protestants than he had found with Catholics at Rome. He therefore journeyed to Lyons and thence to Toulouse. At this latter place he had the audacity to remark that the earth revolved continuously and persistently upon its axis. The Aristotelians tackled him upon this subject and he was obliged to flee. From one place to another he was either led by his desires or forced by the enmity of the church, until in 1593 he was placed in the dungeons of the Inquisition. Seven years later, being condemned to death for heresy, it was ordered that he should be put to death without the shedding of blood, which meant the stake. He informed his judges that they inflicted the sentence with more fear than he received it. A crucifix was held up before him while bound to the stake; he told them to take it away. He was burnt to ashes, and his dust scattered to the winds.

Such was the life and death of Bruno. The remainder of the lecture was devoted to his philosophy and Freethought. His philosophy, as set forth by Professor Davidson, was wonderfully like Universology. It consisted of being (unism), process (duism), and result (trinism). The lecturer did not so define it, but students of Mr. Andrews readily recognized the similarity. Different philosophers had taken up separately the three postulates of Bruno, and had founded a system on each one of them. For instance, Hegel's philosophy was that of pure being; Leibnitz's of process, and Spinoza's of result. (That is to say, if the professor's meaning was grasped. It requires great and sustained mental effort to follow where metaphysics leads). Shakspere knew of Bruno, and many passages in his plays were explainable only by reference to Bruno's works. Examples of these were given.

Bruno was the only man on earth in his day who understood Copernicus, and drew the logical conclusions from the heliocentric theory which he propounded. He saw that the infinity of worlds did away with the old theological heaven above, and the theological hell beneath. It left no place for an external God, and Bruno therefore located God in his own soul. Giordano Bruno, said the lecturer, was a greater savior and a nobler martyr than Christ. The crucified Galilean did not suffer a tithe of the torture endured by Bruno, and with his latest breath he inquired why God had forsaken him. Bruno died composed; having a God within, he knew that God would not forsake him unless he forsook himself. Incidentally the lecturer remarked that the church claimed to be the representativ of the theological God, and the worst thing to be said about the church was that it represented him very faithfully.

The lecture closed with the recitation of two sonnets of Bruno, translated by Professor Davidson, and repeated with fine effect. The professor is a close student of his subject, and is now engaged in translating the works of Rosmini, who, he claims, although a priest, is the true child of Bruno.

Everybody was pleased with the lecture to which they had listened. It was found that the proceeds of the meeting amounted to about fifty dollars, which will be added to the Bruno Statue Fund. The badge-pin which Mr. Wakeman offered to the person selling the most tickets to the lecture was worn home by the lady secretary, who disposed of nearly fifty admissions.

Mr. Wakeman announced that as usual the card for the coming month was by all odds the best yet published. It was surprising, he said, the resources of that club. They were as inexhaustible as the seasons, which come around with invariable regularity. The program for November is here appended. It is certainly a very attractiv one: Nov. 6th, "An Exposition of the Nine Demands of Liberalism," by Samuel P. Putnam; 13th, "Teetotalism, Temperance, and Prohibition—Last Call," by Dr. Dio Lewis; 20th, "Spencer vs. Harrison; or, The Suppressed Book," by Dr. R. G. Eccles; 27th, "The Knowable vs. the Unknowable; or, Harrison vs. Spencer," by T. B. Wakeman and Dr. R. G. Eccles. This last will be of the nature of a debate, and is worth going miles to hear; yet the admission to the Manhattan Liberal Club is only five cents, and ladies and Presbyterians are let in free.

The Freethought Lecture Field.

On Friday evening, Oct. 16th, J. E. Remsburg lectured in the Opera House at Hagerstown, Indiana, to a large audience. The next morning at four o'clock he took a train for Cincinnati. Arriving there, a cab hurried him across the city in time to catch a train on the Cincinnati and Eastern for Winchester, where he staged it fifteen miles to West Union. He spoke in the Court House at West Union, Saturday night. On Sunday, he gave three lectures, and organized a society in a grove adjoining town, and at night lectured in the Court House again—his fifth lecture in twenty-five hours. After his lecture Sunday night, he was taken back to Winchester in time for the morning train to Cincinnati. From there he went to Ottawa, O., nearly two hundred miles away. A meeting had been arranged at Gilboa, seven miles from Ottawa, with the understanding that Mr. Remsburg could not reach Ottawa until 8 o'clock. The train was late, the rain came down in torrents, but a fast team was in readiness, which left the seven miles behind them in half an hour. At Gilboa, the lecturer delivered "False Claims," and organized an Infidel society in a Methodist church, and before the astonished Orthodox brethren could recover their breath was again in Ottawa. After two or three hours' rest, he took a train for Toledo. From there he went to Detroit, from Detroit to Port Huron, and from there across to Sarnia, Canada, where he spoke in the City Hall to an audience of six hundred. When he arrived, the Salvation Army had besieged the building from without, and were making night hideous with their orgies; within the Young Men's Christian Association were occupying seats in various parts of the hall. The speaker was introduced, and began his address. He had not proceeded far, when, at a preconcerted signal, these beardless followers of Jesus arose, and began a stampede for the door, expecting that their example would prove contagious. But it was too late, the speaker had captured his audience. The seats vacated by the babes were quickly filled by men, and save this momentary interruption, the first Freethought meeting ever held in Sarnia was carried through without a jar.

A pleasing episode connected with the meeting, happened here. It was not until long after dark that Mr. Remsburg reached Sarnia, and landed at a dock not far from the hall. Friends were awaiting his arrival at another dock. He was the only passenger that landed where he did. The moon was shining brightly, but excepting a lonely custom-house officer, there was no one at the wharf. Presently two pretty, well-dressed girls, of eight or nine, fairy-like, came running down and said, "Are you the gentleman that lectures at the hall to-night?" Receiving an affirmativ answer, they continued, "We want to hear you, but they won't let us go in." They were told to go to the hall in fifteen minutes, when they would be admitted. When Mr. Remsburg reached the hall, they stood waiting at the door, and although children were excluded, two little girls occupied front seats that night.

During his brief stay in Sarnia, Mr. Remsburg was the guest of the American Consul, Dr. Pace, a stanch Freethinker. On Wednesday morning, accompanied by Dr. Pace, he was rolling away into the forests of Michigan.

Thus, in a little more than four days, Mr. Remsburg delivered eight lectures, organized three societies, traveled sixty miles by team, and nearly a thousand miles by boat and rail. Such is the life of a Liberal lecturer.

J. E. Remsburg has just held a successful meeting at Mancelona, in the north woods of Michigan. It was supposed that not a dozen Liberals could be found in the town, yet Mr. Remsburg succeeded in organizing a society of nearly fifty members. The Mancelona Herald gives the following notice of the meeting:

> John E. Remsburg, of Atchison, Kan., delivered three Freethought lectures at the Town Hall this week. Monday evening the subject was "Sabbath Breaking," Tuesday evening, "False Claims," and last evening, "Bible Morals." Mr. Remsburg spoke to large and attentiv audiences, and it was easy to be seen that his hearers were deeply impressed by the eloquence of the speaker. His lectures were gentlemanly throughout and wholly devoid of abuse, yet he handled his opponents fearlessly and without gloves. Of course, it could not be expected that his audience would accept his entire discourse as solid truth, yet many of his claims were backed up by apparently unimpeachable evidence, and it was simply impossible for anyone in that audience to reject it all. The speaker made every point concise and comprehensiv. Unlike Colonel Ingersoll, his forte does not lie in ridiculing the Bible, but rather in bringing forward solid facts and logical arguments in support of his claims. He has certainly given his hearers food for thought and study, especially as this was the first opportunity many of our people ever had of hearing the opposit side of the question presented in such a clear and forcible manner. In conclusion it is but just to say that Mr. Remsburg has made many friends in Mancelona and should he ever return he will meet with a sure and hearty welcome.

Mr. Bell to Labor in Illinois.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I am making an earnest effort to rally the forces of Illinois into activ service this coming winter in the cause of the Secular Union. This state, some few years ago, was one of the best fields for Liberal work to be found in the whole country, but now it is almost as dead as Chelsea. There are, however, many good Liberals within her borders, but she needs a revival all along the line, and I am willing to do the necessary work if I can only hav some encouragement from the veterans of the post, who are resting on their arms. I hav written almost all of them. I hav told them that I would like to travel all over this state lecturing wherever an audience can be had, for whatever they choose to giv me. Is not this a missionary spirit? Will the Liberals of Illinois promptly and enthusiastically support me in this work? I should like to hear from all the Liberals of every shade who are willing to push forward the work of the Secular Union in Illinois. My address is 302 State street, Chicago. W. S. Bell.

The Bruno Statue.

The following list shows very well, and leaves no doubt, that America will raise the promised one thousand dollars toward the statue for the Martyr of Science.

Since the last report the great event has been the admirable lecture before the Liberal Club at New York by Prof. Thomas Davidson, October 30th. It was in every respect a masterly effort, in itself a monument to the great Martyr, and distinguishing the lecturer at once as a historian, scholar, philosopher, and in the highest sense a Liberal. At its close nothing but delight and praise were heard. The evening was stormy, and the receipts, therefore, somewhat less than had been expected. But the wish was general that this lecture should be repeated until it could be heard by thousands. Our Leagues, Liberal and Ethical Societies, could not do better than to invite Professor Davidson to deliver this lecture before them this winter. It is a revelation not only as to Bruno, but of the history and philosophy which underlie our modern era. While at Rome he had carefully collected the materials for a life of Bruno, and obtained a first-hand knowledge of him and of his times, works, philosophy, martyrdom, and influence, which only those who hav made a special study of the subjects in Europe can possess.

Professor Davidson will be absent in St. Louis for two or three weeks, but may be addressed at Orange, N. J. We all need just such an education as his lecture givs in order to appreciate the oration which Colonel Ingersoll has projected upon the general influence of Bruno and the science he represented upon modern progress.

It will be seen that six hundred dollars still remains to be raised, and no time should be lost to hav it done by subscriptions, collection lists, lectures, etc.

I expect soon a letter from Rome reporting the progress there. Yours truly, T. B. Wakeman, Authorized Agent, 93 Nassau street, New York.

Subscriptions on second instalment of $200:
John Baker, Vera, Ind.,	$2.00
From members of Walkerville L. L., Mon., $7, viz:
David Hall,	1.00
George Delveridge,	1.00
Charles Ellis,	1.00
George E. Curtis,	1.00
William Ereckson,	1.00
John Brann,	1.00
Peter M. McCabe,	1.00
Wm. Hodgson, Nauticoke, Pa.,	2.00
James Yates, Nauticoke, Pa.,	1.00
Dr. L. C. Heineman and wife, Globe, Arizona,	2.00
John Meckel, Weaverville, Col.,	1.00
G. W. Baldwin, Linesville, Pa.,	1.00
Julius Fehr, Hoboken, N. J.,	2.00
Walter C. Wright, Boston, Mass.,	4.00
R. Frank Smith, Rochester, N. Y.,	1.00
Dr. L. Crittenden, " "	1.00
Anson C. Allen, " "	1.00
Moses Hays, " "	1.00
James B. Pike, " "	1.00
A. F. Mahlmann, Little River, Col.,	2.85
Paul Wellm, Port Ludlow, Wash. T.,	.50
Proceeds of Prof. Thomas Davidson's lecture before the Liberal Club at New York, $62, viz:
Tickets sold chiefly by Mrs. A. C. Macdonald, Drs. Foote, and Madame Hernri Delescluze,	23.00
By Mr. James Morris at the door,	14.00
Prof. Davidson's sales and gift,	10.00
Courtlandt Palmer,	5.00
Mrs. C. Errani,	3.00
Dr. R. G. Eccles,	2.00
Capt. Clart and names not given,	3.50
Mr. and Mrs. John W. Lovell,	1.50
Previously acknowledged on second instalment,	99.30
Received by The Truth Seeker and acknowledged in its issue of Oct. 31st,	13.00
Total,	$204.65

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.
Vice-Presidents.

CHARLES WATTS, JOHN E. REMSBURG, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, MATTIE P. KREKEL, ELIZUR WRIGHT, JAMES PARTON, HORACE SEAVER, PARKER PILLSBURY, WILLIAM ALGIE, ROBERT C. ADAMS, TITUS L. BROWN, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York. COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com. E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$1,376.22
Photius Fisk (paid),	10.00
Elizur Wright (paid),	10.00
Ingersoll Secular Society (paid),	15.00
George N. Hill (paid),	1.00
James Crowley (paid),	1.00
James Harris (paid),	2.00
L. K. Thomas (paid),	1.00
A Friend (paid),	5.00
H. Seaver (paid),	1.00
Setchell (paid),	.50
Mary S. Newton (paid),	1.00
Alonso W. Presby (paid),	1.00
Harvey G. Colby (paid),	1.00
A Friend (paid),	.50
Total,	$1,426.22

PLEDGES PAID.—Samuel Hunt, $50; John C. Rowe, $25.

News and Notes.

On Sunday, October 18th, I lectured before the Newark Liberal League on "The Ideal Republic." The hall was crowded, and the year's work of this prosperous society begins with great promis. There was quite an interesting debate in connection with the lecture, and the most important questions of future reform were pretty well discussed, showing the growing interest of all classes of people in the industrial progress of the day, by which the riches of the earth shall be most fully developed, and labor be justly rewarded. As Ingersoll says, "The gods may hav the sky; giv us the earth." Without their help it shall be a paradise.

On Sunday, October 25th, I had the pleasure of meeting again our friends of Troy and Albany. I spoke in regard to the work of the Union for the coming year, and the plans laid out by the Congress met with cordial approval. The organization at Troy will be known hereafter as the Troy Secular Society. New officers were elected, a fine hall has been rented for the year, the interest is on the increase, new members are coming in, and no doubt the coming year will present a good record for our Trojan allies.

At Albany the Secular Society is having a very interesting course of lectures from Professor Gunning, and I hope that, wherever possible, these scientific lectures will be given to our societies. Professor Gunning is a delightful speaker; he is a thorough master of his subject; he has the insight of the poet, and his facts giv beautiful and instructiv lessons of the mighty past. Such expositions of the achievements of science are what will take the place of theological exhortation, and furnish the mind of man with nobler motivs for heroic action out of the heart of nature itself than all the heavens of theology.

In thus carrying forward the work of Freethought by the application of science to life, the Albany Society displays the real aim of a Secular philosophy.

On Sunday, November 1st, I was glad to meet our noble Boston friends, Elizur Wright, J. P. Mendum, Horace Seaver, Geo. N. Hill, and others, and to speak of our work before the Ingersoll Secular Society, which is accomplishing so much in the way of constructiv organization. Its president and efficient corps of officers keep the flag a flying, and there will be no retreat.

In addition to my own address, which was an exposition and defense of the Nine Demands, short but telling speeches were made by Elizur Wright, Horace Seaver, and J. P. Mendum. Mr. Mendum especially noted the difficulties of the work, the apathy of many Liberals, and reverted to the old-time triumphs of the Freethought movement, which in some respects seem greater than any that we hav won in the present. There has been loss, indeed—action and reaction, advance and retrogression. The church itself has changed front, has adopted modern ideas, and so it becomes more difficult to accomplish its downfall, for it is a cunning adversary, and makes use of all its resources. The battle before us is by no means an easy one. The half-century work of Mendum, Seaver, and Wright must be followed by another and still another by those who come after them. We cannot expect to win by a spasmodic effort.

There must be a continuous struggle and there must be no yielding; though but little seems to be attained, much after all is attained. The barbaric ideas which were popular fifty years ago could not be preached even in an orthodox pulpit to-day without the resistance of Christians themselvs. We must still, however, do the pioneer work, and meet all its discomforts and disadvantages. We are in a minority, and shall be for centuries no doubt, but we are right, the truth is ours and we know it, and the world must advance upon those lines which we hav chosen. The indifference of some Freethinkers cannot lessen the greatness of those ideas for which we labor, nor their value to human progress. Whatever, therefore, may be the discouragements of to-day, like Horace Seaver, we will endeavor to hav the virtue of persistency, and by not giving up, we are sure to win.

I like to go to Boston, the fires of Radicalism burn brightly there, and we meet the veterans of our cause. Many a good fight has been fought in Boston. Its history is grand. The spirit of freedom is in it still, but with it also a mass of conservatism.

To show how much we hav to contend against in the minds even of educated people, I quote the following from a recent address by President Elliott, of Harvard college:

> The great problem is that of combining religious with secular education. This was no problem sixty or seventy years ago, for then our people were homogeneous. Now the population is heterogeneous. Religious teaching can best be combined with secular teaching in the way followed in countries of heterogeneous population like Germany, Austria, France, and Belgium, where the government pays for the instruction and the religious teachers belonging to different denominations are admitted to the public schools at fixed times. That is the only way out of the difficulty, and it is the way in which American governments hav treated American churches. I see growing up on every side parochial schools—that is, Catholic schools—which take large numbers of children out of the public schools of the city. That is a great misfortune, and the remedy is to admit religious instructors to teach these children in the public schools. This is what is done in Europe. And all those who are strongly interested in the successful maintenance of our public school system will urge the adoption of the method I hav described for religious education.

This astounding proposition from the head of our most Liberal university in America staggers us with the vast amount of work that is yet to be done even among the educated classes in order that simple justice may prevail between man and man.

Elizur Wright sends the following greeting to the American Secular Union:

Oct. 21, 285.

DEAR MR. PUTNAM: You are laying out the work well. It ought to begin to go. As long as I am above the sod count on me as being enlisted in the Secular cause for all I am worth.

Yours truly, ELIZUR WRIGHT.

W. S. Bell writes as follows:

My heart is in this work, and I am not content to engage in any other occupation. With Ingersoll as our leader we ought to accomplish wonders. There is enough work for all, and all should co-operate. I hav the satisfaction of having spent nine years in the Liberal ranks. I am now hopeful of the future of our cause. I shall continue to devote my time and energies to dispelling the superstitions and despotisms which shadow the path and crush the hearts of men. I rejoice, in looking over the past ten or twelve years, to see what Freethought has done. Ours is the cause to which the best men and women, with the loftiest ideals, can devote their talents. No banner was ever half so beautiful and glorious as the banner of humanity. Fraternally yours, W. S. BELL.

Let our good friend Bell be kept steadily at work this winter. He has many a useful word to say, and his years of service make him a welcome soldier in our ranks, whose voice has ever had the genuin ring of liberty. Mr. Bell's address is 302 State street, Chicago, Ill., and we hope for him a vigorous campaign in that field to which he is so enthusiastically devoted.

Wm. Reynolds, of Utah, writes what is cheering news to us all:

WANSHIP, UTAH, Nov. 3, 1885.

DEAR FRIEND: We (about twenty five or thirty Liberals in Utah) this day start a man to make a trip through Utah in the interests of our cause, to lecture where favorable, visit friends, and particularly to canvass for our (Secular) papers. His remuneration will be contributions from friends. I do not expect we will be able to keep him in the field very long, and we do not expect to accomplish very much, only brighten up a little by visiting friends who hav become torpid.

His name is Robert Wilson. I hav never yet met him. He is said to be given to debating on any subject, a fair speaker and enthusiastic Liberal. WM. REYNOLDS.

Let the great states of the East follow the example of the brave Liberals of Utah. Organize state associations, and put men into the field for activ work, and a good deal of "brightening up" can be done and new interest created. The opportunity is most favorable. Make an advance all along the lines.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Comments Upon the Congress.

From the Spiritual Offering.

The Ninth Annual Congress of the League convened in Cleveland, Ohio, last week, and from our exchanges we learn was numerously attended. Several changes were made, the most important, changing the name to "The American Secular Union.

The objects of the association are not changed, the Nine Demands of Liberalism remaining, as before, expressiv of the purposes of the Secular Union. As a National Liberal League, owing to unfortunate dissensions, it has accomplished but little; starting under new management, old differences may be forgotten, and a more successful career open before it for the future. The Demands are extremely radical. Some of them ought to hav the cordial support of every American citizen, but for others, it will take a long time to educate the people up to the standard of their support. At the head of the society is placed the most popular radical of the age. If he devotes his wonderful powers to further the interests of the association, it will unquestionably bring it into greater notoriety, than ever before, and lead to excited controversy whether for the highest, best good of the cause, and a healthy progress, time alone will unfold. All who love their fellow-man, and labor for the advancement of truth, will hope for the best.

From the Nashville, Tenn., Liberal.

The great Freethought Congress in Cleveland, Ohio, on the 9th, 10th, and 11th inst., was a most glorious gathering of the well-wishers of posterity—noble men who are laboring to undeceive the good people of America, who hav been trained to believe in miracles, witches, Gods, a big devil, and a hole in the ground without a bottom, filled with brimstone burning the dead, who are long since rotten in their graves.

We rejoice to know that so many able men are engaged in this humanitarian work.

Let "Freethought and Liberty" be the watchword, and love to do good while we liv.

Charter Celebration.

The first annual Charter Celebration of the Friendship Liberal League of Philadelphia was held on Oct. 25, 1885. Never in the history of the state of Pennsylvania has a charter been granted by the powers that be to an organization of avowed Liberal principles until last May, when the Friendship Liberal League succeeded in obtaining one from the Court of Common Pleas, Judge Ludlow presiding. The members considered the event worthy of especial notice, and Sunday, October 25th was set apart for the first annual Charter celebration. The exercises consisted of vocal and instrumental music, addresses, recitations, supper, etc.

The afternoon entertainment opened with piano selections, followed by a vocal duet, after which Mr. J. C. Hannon made a very eloquent address—subject, "Secular Progress"—in which he made many cutting and sarcastic thrusts at ancient creeds and modern dogmas.

Piano and violin duet; recitation by Dr. Lavinia J. Palmer, entitled "The Modern Christian Business Man;" bass solo, by F. Wilde, and choral selections.

Then followed an eloquent address by the president, Mr. C. H. Osgood, subject, "Organization: Its Cause," in which he showed that the object of all organizations was concentrated power, and that the friction caused by the continued wrangling and clashing of the different religious organizations necessarily produced new thoughts, and new thoughts are the principal cause of Liberalism. The speaker then went on to say that the only way for Liberals to obtain and maintain their rights was to organize for mutual protection, and it was their duty to use their combined efforts to crush out from the brain of mankind the hydra-headed monster of superstitious ignorance.

After the president's address Miss Keyser gave a recitation entitled, "A Tribute to Jeremiah Hacker," who was present as a guest of the League. By request the veteran Liberal made a few remarks, which were well received. Many a coin was left in the old man's hand by those who greeted him. The afternoon exercises concluded with vocal and instrumental music.

About two hundred of the guests adjourned to the banquet hall, where a bountiful repast was served under the direction of Mrs. S. A. King, who was ably assisted by other ladies of the League. The evening's entertainment opened with music, followed by an address by Prof. Wm. Seymour, president of the State League, who eloquently showed the many advantages which Liberalism offered to humanity when they became sufficiently educated to grasp them.

The charter was then read by W. H. Bishop, and Hon. Chas. Keyser, solicitor of the League, gave a legal explanation of the same. The speaker said that this was as legally a chartered body, having all the rights and privileges, as any organization in the state. A few years ago such a document could not be obtained, but the time has now arrived when organized Liberalism demands a fair share of respect, and the new constitution of Pennsylvania contains a clause which is favorable to Liberal associations.

President Osgood's continued address was very appropriate and to the point. After giving a brief history of the League from its foundation in 1876, in a 7x9 room, with an audience of fifteen, down to the present time, with an audience of eight hundred, he said that the contrast speaks volumes in favor of organization.

Miss Zeigler followed with a very beautiful recitation, after which a grand choral selection by the members ended the first charter celebration of organized Liberals in the history of the world.

It is intended to make this Charter Celebration one of the annual features of the League.

Obituary.

Died, at his residence in McHenry, Ill, Sept. 17, 1885, John R. Durkee, aged 76 years, 8 months, and 27 days. Mr. Durkee was born in Stockbridge, Windsor co., Vt., Dec. 21, 1808. He was the grandson of John Durkee, and the son of John Durkee, Jr., and the oldest member of a family of eleven children, four of whom are still living—one of them, his younger brother Abial, who resides at Lake Geneva, Wis., being with him for many weeks and contributing much to cheer and sustain his suffering brother during his last illness. Mr. Durkee was no ordinary man. He was proverbial for his honesty, his sterling integrity and strict fidelity to justice, and his highest conception of truth. He was an uncompromising enemy of myths and superstitions, of the dogmas and creeds imported from among the barbarians of the Old World and of ancient times; but he claimed for himself the right to think, to reason, and to act according to his highest sense of right, and for the best interest of humanity, regardless of the fiat of public opinion, which often is merciless in its demands upon credulity. Still his sense of justice demanded for others the same freedom for private opinion that he claimed for himself; hence he won and retained the esteem of all who knew him. He was a kind and affectionate husband of a faithful wife, an indulgent father, and a genial neighbor and friend. Death came as a welcome messenger, and he calmly and resignedly passed the portals where the "wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest." As previously arranged by the deceased, the obsequies were held at the house, Hon. George Gage officiating as speaker.

Communications.

The Harmony and Meaning of the Scientific Gospels.

VII.—THE CHIEF OBJECT OR SUMMUM BONUM OF THE INDIVIDUAL LIFE IS TO ACHIEVE THE HIGHEST DEVELOPMENT AND HEALTH IN ORDER TO BETTER SERVE, GLORIFY, AND ENJOY THE GREAT HUMANITY OF WHICH ALL MEN, NATIONS, AND PEOPLES ARE BUT PARTS.

Thus the meaning of man's life and his destiny is expressed in one sentence. This solution that man must live by, in, and for MAN harmonizes another great philosophical controversy of the ages as to what is and what ought to be the summum bonum, or chief end, of man.

The Epicureans said it was the greatest happiness; the Stoics said it was the greatest manliness, that is, vir-tue (from the Latin vir, a man); the theologians said it was in the blessedness of devotion and sacrifice in glorifying God, and enjoying him and his approval forever.

Now science comes and settles this great question of duty and morals by harmonizing them, and showing that each is but a part of the completed solution of the lot and fate of man on earth.

The Epicureans have always had the facts on their side, that man always has and always will live to enjoy life, to have a good time, and to get the greatest satisfaction he can out of his earthly days. In a word, life is the "pursuit of happiness" in one way or another. It has been too readily taken for granted that Epicurus taught that this happiness was to be obtained only, or chiefly, by the pursuit of personal and sensual pleasures. This was not his view, however, for he, by precept and example, taught that the higher pleasures could only be attained by cultivating the higher moral, intellectual, and social nature of man. "The sty of Epicurus" has only existed in the foul imaginations of his detractors.

The Stoics, who boasted of Zeno as their chief master, taught that the renunciation of self and its pleasures and pains, in order to attain by contemplation and discipline to an ideal of manliness and nobility above the contemptible and transitory conditions of ordinary existence, was life's chief good and satisfaction.

Lastly, the theological religionists attempted to enforce, but really enfeebled, this life of devotion, sacrifice, and discipline by the promise and hope that a crown of glory, an infinity of joy, and an unspeakable blessedness in the approval of his deity would reward man in an eternal life for the renunciation of the joys of this. We say, enfeebled, because this promise of individual enjoyment as the ultimate end of life here or hereafter is an appeal to selfishness. That each of these views of life contains an element of truth is evident as soon as social science brings us to consider the relations of the individual to his race, and its evolution and progress. This controversy, as to the summum bonum and object of life, has been vigorously prosecuted for ages, simply because neither of these views has covered the whole of the facts of human life and its relations. The advocates of neither of these schools have risen high enough to see how their own philosophy had need of the others to complete it.

This discussion must have been of the ages, perhaps as old as the human race itself, since every religion and philosophy is an attempt to solve the world so as to inform man what his chief end and duty in it may be. The summum bonum, or highest good, is the end, therefore, towards which they have all imagined that they were striving, and all have been limited, confused, and partial as to that end, because until the discovery of Humanity in solidarity and continuity the whole of the facts entering into the problem could not be regarded or harmonized. The nearest approach to it in antiquity is found in the so-called moral treatises of Cicero, especially his works on "Duties" (De Officiis), and on the "Ends of Life" (De Finibus).

Imagine that Epicurus, or his great expositor, Lucretius, and Zeno, and St. Paul could have met at Rome, under the hospitable roof of the great republican orator, statesman, and philosopher, Cicero. Imagine them to have listened to his eloquent presentation of his views of the ends of life as they are set forth in the twenty-third chapter of his, for that age, wonderful treatise, "De Finibus Bonorum et Malorum." They could not have seen nor have felt the deep meaning of his expressions; the interdependence of men among men (conjunctio inter homines hominum); the society and interchange of utilities (societas et communicatio utilitatum); and, above all, his utterance of that first voice of the united heart of man—et ipsa caritas generis humani (and the endearment itself of the human kind) which he traces step by step from the family hearth to the relatives, the neighbors, the friends, the city, the country, and finally to the embrace of the whole human family (deinde totius complexu gentis humanæ). This affection of the mind, giving to each his due, and defending the social relations equally and yet munificently, is, as he says, the sublime justice from whence spring piety, goodness, liberality, nobleness, and all the virtues. This lofty patriotism (the prelude to the enthusiasm and patriotism of Humanity), which was the bond of Cicero's ideal Republic, was indeed beyond his age. Epicurus and Lucretius had not risen to it. St. Paul taught that only Christians were members of one another in his Christ and his celestial, unearthly kingdom. The rest, the vast majority of the human family, were children of the devil. To him the caritas generis humani, the love of the human kind, had not dawned only as the love of Christ and of his brethren in Christ. The rest of mankind were outside of his integration, and doomed to the eternal wrath of his God.

There was no one to take up the inspiration of Cicero's fruitful words but the Stoics and the Roman jurists. What might not the world have been if they could have organized this love of mankind into a grand federal representative republic of all the peoples under the control of Rome? But the brutal Cæsarism which murdered Cicero struck down the republic and all hope of anything but a reign of force and selfish conquerors. The Stoics came to partial control under the Antonines, and gave, as Gibbon says, in the third chapter of his history, "the period in the history of the world during which the condition of the human race was the most happy and prosperous." But then came the "Asiatic mildew" of St. Paul's Christianity. The empire passed under Christian influences and degenerated, divided, and fell. The popes reigned over the souls of civilized mankind until 1600. There were, indeed, noble dreams of the Humanists in the Middle Ages, but they were repressed as heretics. The precious seed—the caritas generis humani—which Cicero planted has not until the present century had any fitting soil or environment which would permit its culture and growth into a religion and a republic of the advanced peoples of the human family,

The modern discovery of the solidarity and continuity of the whole human race as an organism adds meaning never dreamed even by Cicero to his own words. All the peoples of the world, individually and collectively, are bound to be parts of a grand organism, and therefore necessary organs in its life and progress. The human being can be an individual only in so far as he is a carnivorous animal, hunting alone, like a tiger or a gorilla. The moment he becomes socialized, he becomes an organ of society, and thereby only he becomes a man as distinguished from an animal. He depends upon his tribe, family, society, state, church, or humanity in some of its suborganic forms, and he must act as an organ to sustain that society of which he is a part to his best, so that he may not only best be sustained by it, but best developed in all the functions of life. To perform his functions as a social organ of the great humanity in the best way possible, is therefore the great object, the summum bonum, of life, and the greatest happiness and blessedness attainable. All enjoyment, all egoism, defeats itself unless it is developed in the service of an altruism, a devotion, a blessedness, in achieving the scientific, evolutional, organic object of life in the great Being from whence our existance came, by which it is snstained, and to which it is due.

VIII.—THIS NEW OBJECT OF LIFE, DEVOTION TO HUMANITY, REQUIRES AND WILL COMPEL A REORGANIZATION OF THE SENTIMENTS, THE PHILOSOPHIES, THE GOVERNMENTS, THE MORALS, AND THE EMPLOYMENTS OF CIVILIZED MANKIND IN ORDER TO INSURE AND FURTHER THE DEVELOPMENT, PROGRESS, AND WELFARE OF MANKIND AS A WHOLE.

As parts and organs of the great continuous organism MAN, living, growing, and advancing through the ages of time, a new point of view has been discovered in relation to which all human relations, political, social, practical, and moral, must evidently be readjusted. All hypothetical or imaginary motives of theology and metaphysics are replaced by a new devotion and purpose. There is indeed a change of heart and of world consequent upon the change from the egoistic to the altruistic view of life. Health, enjoyment, happiness, and, finally, blessedness, will be found in living in and working for the higher interests and emotions which make for righteousness, that is, for the advancement of the great Realm of MAN.

All other religions, philosophies, and purposes of life will be laid aside, as not only unverifiable or untrue, but as so much waste, and therefore fundamentally inhuman and immoral. There can be but a limited amount of individual or human emotion, thought, or activity. All of these capacities which are expended on other worlds, gods, and purposes other than Humanity and its world are misspent or lost. For a time it may not be possible for many to make a decided change of their religious base, but gradually they will learn to make their other worlds subservient to, and therefore, to a degree, useful to, this world, and its dominant morals and interests. Not a few, perhaps, will try to balance their imaginations and emotions with practical realities and human demands, in the vain belief that it is possible to make the best of both worlds. But in the end it will be found that Humanity is a jealous god and requires an undivided service. Nor less mistaken are those who act upon the short-sighted notion that happiness is our being's end and aim in the sense of mere individual enjoyment of the senses or appetites or vanity or curiosity. The person who is making a fuss about the saving of his soul gives good evidence that he has none worth saving. If he had he would have found that in these days the only way of saving it is to invest it in some good, honest, useful work of some kind, as silently as possible. To do otherwise is contemptible, because it is but an emphasis upon selfishness in some future. Nor less contemptible is the person who places the end and good of life in his own enjoyment, by means of gratifications ending with self. This mistaken epicureanism is sure to end in disgust or a feeling that life is a vanity not worth living.

Health, enjoyment, satisfaction, and pleasure are necessary to the free development of our faculties, physical, mental, moral, and social. But over all that development and all its means must preside that higher object of life, to wit, that life is a service to the whole, the true, and the good, as it is revealed in the evolution and progress of MANKIND as a whole.

At this conclusion we usually hear more crying out and lamentations over the slaughtered Gods, and the emotions which their worship for ages has made hereditary in the human heart.

A little consideration will tend to replace or to heal these lacerated feelings. For it will be found that the old religious feelings need not to be destroyed, but to be divided, and directed from the old to the corresponding new ideals in the new world into which science has brought us to live. In a word, the time has come for a relocation of religious conceptions and sentiments.

In the new world consider what has supplanted the old conceptions and naturally the old feelings, and you will soon became reconciled to and harmonized with the new objects of proper regard service, or worship. This is the key which evolution furnishes to all of the creeds and which opens them all out into the new, true, and universal faith of our race now dawning upon us. A hint of this process of relocation must suffice.

1. An infinite personal God became inconceivable under the new Astronomy, and the INFINITE WORLD has taken its place. To that new object—that grand fact—go out the feeling of wonder, awe, dependence, curiosity, and questioning, which formerly were the feelings to the ancient OF DAYS, the I am, BECAUSE I AM. Underlying the conceptions of God or World, will be found the common idea of eternal existence, as an order external to man. This was to the unscientific people, person and will; to us, it is fact and law. Read the book of Job, and the conclusion of Professor Tyndall's book on Light, and observe that the scientist has only caught a higher strain of awe and worship, as he passes from infinite will to infinite law, as the foundation of our human world. How easily Goethe in "Faust" makes this transition step by step from the "word to the fact," to the actual world which is the fact, the God! Thus:

It stands written, "In the beginning was the word."
Here at once I balk, who can ever help me on?
It is impossible that I can rate the word so high;
Quite otherwise must I translate,
If by the spirit I am enlightened aright.
Now it stands written: "In the beginning was the thought,"
Bethink thee well over this first line,
That thy pen pass not too hasty on!
Is it the thought that works and forms the all?
No, it should stand, "In the beginning was the power."
Yet even as this I am writing down,
Something warns me that by it I can never stand;
The spirit aids me; all at once I see the truth,
And confidently, I write: "In the beginning was the FACT."

2. So with the conception of Christ; it is not lost, but passes into Humanity as its higher conception—the ideal Christ. Whether any such person ever lived as the Christian gospels portray as Christ, is more than doubtful. But that all of the ideals of the Son of Man, and the Son of God, are realized in the powers of Humanity which make for righteousness and mercy, is more and more certain. That real Christ is crucified from day to day to make possible our salvation which can only be achieved by trust and participation in that sacrifice. Thus only is the past atoned for and the future redeemed. Thus ever must the earth, as a Golgotha, underlie the earth as a Paradise. Only by heredity, which makes us parts of this Christ, and so gives us the accumulated experiences of our race, have we the capacity to read or understand aught of the world about us, and so be able to approach the Father World, or God, as objective reality.

3. By this reading of the external world, or order, we have gradually accumulated the body of knowledge called science. That is the true creed which takes the place of all older traditions, and corrects them.

But why need I explain what every student of the New World can unravel to any extent by his religious fancy? The Bible is replaced by the Literature of the whole race, instead of one ancient people or sect. The Virgin Mother becomes Womanhood itself. The Holy Ghost is revealed anew as the comforter in the acts of charity and the glow of Human Love. The Heaven above the clouds vanished under Galileo's telescope, to be rediscovered in the hearts in which it is reflected from a human future sure of realization on this earth. The true Immortality is that which disciplines us to drop our selfish personality willingly, in view of that heaven we help to create, so that, by our leaving others may take our place to continue our love, and service. The Day of Judgment is every day—in which errors and misdeeds are remanded to the past to be forgotten and overgrown by new efforts for the right and good.

But you must follow this clue further as you need or will. Remember, not in vain did Swedenborg translate the Bible into a higher New Jerusalem, or Comte use Dante and Thomas á Kempis's "Imitation of Christ" to make real to him the glories of the real Christ which science proves to be Humanity itself.

Potiphar's Wife.

The exhibition at Mr. H. B. Pettes's store of certain objectionable pictures having been discontinued, it may perhaps be well. with a view of preventing such mistakes in the future, to quote from the city revised ordinances. 1881, the following, which may be found on p. 609, Art. II., Sec. 2: "Any person who shall in this city exhibit, sell, or offer to sell, any indecent or lewd book, picture, or other thing. shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof be fined not less than ten nor more than three hundred dollars." —St. Louis Republican, Oct. 5, 1885.

The above is an editorial taken from the leading daily paper in St. Louis. This paper in particular, and others less vigorously, hav tried to prevent the exhibition of four works of art now displayed by Mr. Pettes, the leading art-dealer here. The pictures were brought here to be placed in the art display of the Exposition; but the newspapers and other influences prevented them from securing space there; whereupon Mr. Pettes hung them in his art rooms, and charged twenty-five cents admission, with, of course, the natural result in such cases.

Many people read the papers, made up their minds there was a very vile sight to be seen for the moderate price of twenty-five cents, and after feeding their imagination on the matter until a convenient season, slipped in Mr. Pettes's side-door, and met a hundred or two other persons standing before four large pictures of nude and semi-nude art. Two of the four are beautiful in themselvs, and suggest to the mind nothing foul either by their subjects or their treatment. The third is fairly artistic, not particularly beautiful, but wholly free from obscenity in suggestion or treatment. The fourth is perhaps artistically good, but it is a coarse subject, handled literally by a realist in Biblical studies. It is a lewd picture of a lewd subject treated literally. It is its own protection against either admiration or salability. Yet it is the only one of the four which is not "nude art." The woman, Potiphar's wife, is clothed, and hers is the only figure in the picture; but she is represented as coarsely as art could represent her, and is left without even the attraction of physical beauty or symmetry of form and features, and with a face lascivious to repulsion. It leaves Joseph with but little credit perhaps for virtue that he was repelled by so beastly a face and so unattractiv a personality. This being my opinion of the picture, I need hardly say that it is objectionable to me both in subject and in treatment. But when I read the above editorial (which is one of many such which hav appeared within two weeks) I could not refrain from speculation upon what can and will be done in such a case: "Any person who shall in this city exhibit, sell, or offer to sell an indecent or lewd book, picture, or other thing, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof be fined not less than ten, nor more than three hundred, dollars."

Now, this one picture is the only one of the four that is either indecent or lewd, and it is a faithful copy of a Bible story. It is simply an illustration for the pages of a book which is sold daily without legal inferference under the above ordinance, and whose sale this same editor aids and encourages in many ways. Now, the ordinance says "book or picture," making no exception in favor of the printed as against the painted indecency. Why, then, should the one stir our editor into a bitter and untruthful attack, while to the other he lends his aid and support? I say untruthful attack, because, added to the fact that the other pictures are unobjectionable, the editor states that the "exhibition has been discontinued," which is simply a gratuitous untruth, designed to prevent people from going to see them, and hence is a direct effort to "injure a man in his property," which I believe is a punishable offense by law. For some centuries painters were encouraged, indeed, forced, by just such fanatics, to take biblical topics wholly in which to labor at their art. Can they be blamed now for so doing? If this story is put in the hands of every child in the land as glorification of one of the "holy men" by direct will or inspiration of God; if they are taught to believe that the Almighty did not scorn to record the story and assure its universal diffusion for all time, should they be taught at the same time, and by the same men, that it is a topic either unworthy of, or too unclean for, the brush of a painter? Should an ordinary artist be above the work of the deity? If Joseph's great virtue called forth the admiration of an all-wise God to such a degree as to insure an inspired record to be left in the only volume vouchsafed to the ignorant sons of man by a tender father, eager for them to know the best and most important facts in regard to himself, and their own welfare and future happiness, should it not command the attention and talent of one delineator of sacred history who labors with brush instead of pen? Can the Almighty be accused of indecency? If his works and records are holy, can the earnest effort to reproduce them faithfully be impure? We are commanded to strive to be like him, and, in the little details of the story of "Potiphar's wife," this artist has not lost a point, and the record of Joseph's superior virtue, as well as the moral and physical ugliness of the lady in question, are most faithfully pictured. And we must remember it was a virtue wonderful enough to command divine recognition and permanent record in a book whose every word must be precious, and where no wicked waste or unnecessary verbiage would hav been permitted by an all-wise God to occupy the limited space so all-important to races sunk in ignorance, and struggling for knowledge. Can a subject be too low for the brush of man, while it is lofty enough to command the pen of a God? Can a law of indecency touch the work of a deity? Shall a police judge stay the pen of the Almighty? Will the editor dare attempt to suppress the book and picture given us upon Sinai? And yet this city ordinance, which he so glibly quotes, strikes the book first. Are you ready, Mr. Editor, to take the consequences of your words? Remember the book comes first in time and in condemnation. When will you swear out your warrant of arrest for all who may sell or expose it for sale within the gates of your city? I would like to be there when you do. H. H. GARDENER.

Our London Letter.

The question of disestablishment and disendowment of the Established Church of England is being prominently brought forward at the present time in view of the parliamentary elections shortly taking place. It is only natural that the clergy who fatten on the present iniquitous system should stoutly defend its morality and necessity, and, of course, are only too willing to prophesy the speedy downfall of the country if the program is carried out by the next Parliament, as no doubt it will be if the Radicals obtain the majority of representativs. Of course, the parsons contend that "the laborer is worthy of his hire," but this is a slightly ambiguous truism, however they endeavor to show that they do labor, and that very hard too, and therefore are justly entitled to all they can get in the way of greater and lesser tithes, pew rents, presents, glebe lands, and the other plunder they acquire. At the same time, although it is very sad that all these good men should be despoiled of their living, that does not grieve them so much as the great insult paid to their deity, who will be justly angry if this is done, and England will lose all her prestige among the nations of the world, and all the inhabitants of the land will become grossly immoral and quarrelsome, and the goodness for which we are so famed will no longer exist. In those evil days the devil will exercise so much power over the minds of men that they will no longer subscribe so handsomely to missionary societies, and the wretched heathen will hav no Bibles sent out to him, and if this happens he will not know how he is sinning against God by going naked, and therefore will not be willing to exchange the products of his country for heavily-sized calicoes and old guns; consequently our trade will rapidly decrease, and we shall hav to resort to eating one another to keep from dying of starvation.

This is a very horrible prospect, and ought to deter the sons of Belial from interfering with the Lord's anointed. Unfortunately for the unanimity of the church party, one rector, the Rev. Thos. Norton, of Wychling, has declared his adhesion to the proposed plan, and givs it as his opinion that there ought to be no difference between the church established and other denominations. He says: "If you can't stand on your own base, you hav no right to stand at all. As to extraordinary tithes, I would abolish them as a rank, downright robbery." Such outspoken language is somewhat remarkable in a in a church clergyman, and such a man is far too good to be trammeled by any creed.

At his diocesan conference, recently held, the bishop of Oxford attacked the Liberation Society, repeating the usual ridiculous arguments that hav seen so much service, and convinced so few people. Of course, he maintains that disestablishment means plunder pure and simple, quite ignoring the manner in which the Protestant church robbed the Roman Catholics of their churches and lands. However it may be in other branches of the profession, the religious thief is always remarkably tenacious of the property he has stolen, and cries out lustily of the great wrong done him if anyone suggests that restoration should be made to the rightful owners.

I gather from a perusal of the Church Times that the church congress at Portsmouth last week was a fair success from a monetary point of view, as the average number of tickets appear to hav been sold, but that the rubbish talked there has made the slightest impression on the country I hav failed to learn. Certainly no one's mind could possibly be improved by anything said. Attacks were made on other sects, and grief was expressed that it was getting more and more difficult to obtain money and members. It seems to hav dawned upon the minds of the elect that people were getting more enlightened and devoting their attention more to arts and science than supernaturalism, through the spread of Atheism, which fact was deeply deplored. But, unfortunately for themselvs, no way of overcoming the difficulty, but extra prayers, suggested itself to the parsons. How they must hav regretted the good old times, when the church was all-powerful and could use coercion with decided effect on the backsliders and heretics! It certainly seems inevitable that the weak organization known as Protestantism is doomed to extinction in the not very remote future, and the battle will hav to be fought out between Atheism and Roman Catholicism. J. D.

One or Two Matters.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In your last issue, under "Prayer as a Prophylactic," you refer to the anti-sanitary riots in Montreal. You say, "If the Canucks once learn that prayers and the exhibition of images are of no avail, while disinfectants are," etc., etc.

As a Canadian (not a "Canuck"), I beg to protest against this general impeachment. Canadians generally hav already learned what you suggest they are ignorant of. Because some ignorant and superstitious devotees of the Romish church (not the "Catholic" church, as you are in the habit of designating it) in Montreal get up a riot against the sanitation of the city is no reason why Canadians generally should be slurred. Instead of saying, "If the Canucks once learn," etc., you might, with equal truth and propriety, hav said, "If these ignorant Romanists once learn," etc. Or if you had even said, "these Canucks," meaning that particular class, instead of "the Canucks," which is a general term, we might hav passed it over; but as it is, Canadians must ask to be excused from your classification, and relieved from your "soft impeachment." Without admitting that I am unduly "thin-skinned," either nationally or patriotically, I might as well say while I am about it that I hav had my Canadian sensibilities offended before by THE TRUTH SEEKER'S discourteous and unfair allusions to "Canucks." Nor do I wish to be misunderstood in this matter. I hav no objections to the severest criticism from abroad of ignorance in Canada, or superstition in Canada, wherever it may be found, but I do object to inculpating the whole country and the whole people in the sins of the few. As well might we, on occasions when the ignorant and violent element of your population show their nether parts, slur the whole American people, opprobriously calling them "Yankees," as for you to slur the whole Canadian people, opprobriously calling them "Canucks," when a few ignorant Romanists of Montreal raise a riot.

The other matter to which I wish here to refer is Mr. Remsburg's recent lectures here in Belleville. A few days ago he gave a course of three in that city, and I had the pleasure of hearing one of them, having gone thirty miles for that purpose, and to meet and make the acquaintance of Mr. Remsburg. I was not disappointed. Mr. Remsburg, in quiet mien, gave an excellent address on "Sabbath-Breaking," which was well received by a very superior looking audience of about two hundred, including a number of ladies. Although the clergy had been invited, none appeared, and there was no opposition. After the lecture, I enjoyed an hour's chat with the lecturer and some of the Belleville friends, whose acquaintance I was glad to make. The Belleville Freethinkers are doing nobly. They deserve the highest praise for their vigorous propagandist efforts of late under difficulties. They include in their numbers educated and substantial men—the professions of law and medicin being well represented—but only a few, I understand, are openly avowed, activ workers. "Sleeping partners" are, however, often very useful and valuable members of a coterie, because of their needed sympathy and tangible assistance. Dr. Abbott, one of the leading physicians of the city, occupied the chair during the lecture. The doctor is a thorough-going Agnostic, and lends valuable assistance to the cause. The Messrs. Templeton brothers, F. Asselstine, and Mr. Landsberg, with a few others, I believe, are also activ and energetic workers. I would like to mention the names of other Belleville Agnostics—cultured and venerable gentlemen, who grasped me warmly by the hand—but I do not feel quite at liberty to do so.

Mr. Joseph Templeton writes me since the lectures that this course is likely to prove unusually fruitful, as, besides the excellence of the lectures themselvs, "hundreds of tracts, papers, and pamphlets were distributed, and some will surely fall in good soil." It is intended, I believe, to hav more lectures from Mr. Remsburg in Canada during the winter, and this, in connection with what we get from Messrs. Watts and Putnam, and occasionally from Mr. Underwood, ought surely to keep the car of progress moving. Although I hav not been in a position of late years to do much activ work in the good cause, it still has my love and earnest solicitude, and all true workers hav my hearty sympathy. ALLEN PRINGLE.

Selby, Lennox Co., Ont., Oct. 14, 1885.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - NOVEMBER 7, 1885.

Christian Charity.

The Christian church, and especially the Romish branch of it, makes loud claims to support because of its charities. The church, say the advocates of Christianity, does an immense amount of good by caring for the orphans, the poor, and the sick. In some places good institutions are maintained by sects. This, however, is where there is competition, and where the people are informed as to their workings. In places where the Roman Catholic church has full sway, her institutions are not by any means havens of rest. The small-pox epidemic in Montreal has brought one more case to light. The old Civic Hospital, now St. Roch's, is run by the "Sisters of the Gray Nuns." Recent revelations show a horrible state of affairs in this hospital. With a hundred and eighty patients confined in it, there were only six nurses and two women servants to care for them. The sufferings of the patients were intense. A great many suffered from cold, and when one man attendant was applied to for additional bed-covering for the patients, he brought up a few ragged blankets, saying, as he distributed them, that the nuns were not to know of it, or they "would raise hell with him." Some idea of the cruelty of confining patients in this Romish hospital may be gained from the following, written to the Sun, of this city, by its Montreal correspondent:

"The cries of the patients for a drink of water were often heart-rending. They were frequently met by the response, 'Shut up, you,' from the convalescent patients who were in attendance. The odor of the place was almost unendurable, and very little was done to deodorize or disinfect the rooms.

"A Miss Norris begged for something to relieve a choking sensation by which she was oppressed. The doctor, after much entreaty, made his appearance, and by the application of suitable means gave her relief. This was about ten o'clock at night, and nothing more was done for her. The next day she was removed to the black small-pox ward, and, without any further attention, was allowed to die. After patients were sent to the black small-pox ward no further attention was paid to them They were simply sent there to die. The cries that came from that awful place were heart-rending.

"In another case a woman who had been a cook in the service of the Rev. Mr. Ward, a Church of England clergyman, died under most distressing circumstances. For hours previous to her death, and as long as she could speak even in a whisper, she cried, 'For God's sake, giv me water.' The only attention given her was to tell her to shut up. She died in the night. A little while before her death, she writhed in her agony and fell out of bed, when two men were called, who, lifting and throwing her into the bed, said, 'Now sit on her and keep her down.' She died that night, and when dead a sheet was placed on the floor and she was rolled upon it. Then they pinned up the sheet around her and dragged her downstairs. The thumping of the body on the stairs could be heard in the ward.

"A young woman named Mrs. O'Connor, whose husband died of small-pox in the hospital, was taken with the disease herself, and sent to the hospital. She so far recovered as to be up, and made herself useful as a helper. She, however, became demented on account of her troubles, and then the priest was sent for, who failing to soothe her, the lady superior said that she should be put out into the woodshed, which was a proper place for one who was so foolish as to get into such a state."

In addition to the shameful treatment of the patients, there is to be added a neglect to provide proper food. Breakfast in the hospital consisted of tea and bread and butter. The supper was bread and butter and tea. The dinner was weak soup, sometimes potatoes, and the meat that had been cooked in the soup, and bread. The soup and meat were often burnt, and the bread was brought in the naked hands of convalescents. The sanitary conditions of the hospital, also, are of the poorest, and the wards were kept in a filthy condition from the overflowing of the closets. Everything, in short, is as bad as bad can be, and the city authorities are severely blamed for allowing sufferers from small-pox to be taken there. Their excuse for sending them to the place was that all the other hospitals were full and patients could not be allowed to die in the street.

If any argument were needed to show how infinitly better it is for the state to care for its own sick and poor than to farm them out to ecclesiastical societies, St. Roch's hospital at Montreal would furnish it.

But if the Canadian sectarian hospitals are worse than worthless, the Christian institutions of this country are no better. There is a Catholic hospital in Brooklyn, N. Y., with some of the operations of which we hav been made acquainted, and propose to ventilate. The New York Sun recently printed the following letter, showing the practical uselessness of Protestant institutions:

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN, Sir: Is there any non-sectarian home for aged ladies who are without means, except the almshouse?

"Yesterday I met an aged lady, who, by force of circumstances, is deprived of her home. She was advised to go to the 'Home of the Friendless,' which she did. Upon being asked how much money she had, and replying 'none,' she was politely told that the Island was the place for her. Wearily she plodded on, muttering between her sobs, 'Not there—not there—anywhere but there.' In talking with the writer later she said: 'Surely this place they sent me to is misnamed; for why is it that a 'Home for the Friendless' (heaven knows I am friendless enough) is open only to those who hav either friends or money?' I could not reply.

"This lady of whom I speak has lived in affluence, has had the advantages of education, is refined and gentle. She has lived a long and useful life, benefiting many during the journey. Must women like this be subjected to a life 'on the Island,' where their forced association with depraved people would cause a shock that must incense all their womanhood?

"A SUBSCRIBER."

To this the Sun, after making investigation, was forced to reply that there was "no hope but the poorhouse." There is in this city an "Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor." When the secretary was applied to in this case he said:

"If she has no church connections or private friends she cannot get into any of the institutions, but becomes a charge on the city. The various institutions require good references, and generally a small amount of money, such as $100 in advance. We should be glad to help her in any way, but we hav any number of cases of the same sort."

All of these institutions receive aid from the state amounting in exemptions and donations to many thousands of dollars. But when the state has a poor person to support it must do it entirely apart from the institutions it has already endowed. Common justice would seem to demand that if these church "homes" and "asylums" are exclusivly for church people, the church people should support them. But now the state helps the indigent Christian to liv in genteel poverty, and compels its own poor to liv in an institution which breaks down all self-respect, and is in most ways but little better than a penitentiary. If the state spent on its own poorhouse the money given to Christian "homes" the poor could be made comfortable. As it now is, through the church steals, an unfortunate person of any refinement would rather commit suicide than go to the state institution. About the biggest humbugs on this earth are the church's "charitable" establishments. They are only sieves through which the Danaides' daughters of politics turn money into votes.

Open the Museums.

At a meeting of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of this city, held October 27th, Mayor Grace came out strongly in favor of opening the public places of instruction on Sundays. When the proposed appropriation of $30,000 for the maintenance of the American Museum of Natural History and the Metropolitan Museum of Art was reached, Mayor Grace said:

"The law givs this board the right to make this appropiation; it is optional with us, but I am opposed to granting it unless the trustees of the museums consent to open them on Sundays. They ought to be opened on Sundays, so that people occupied during the week could partake of their advantages on Sunday. The trustees complain that an expense of from $5,000 to $7,000 would be incurred, but that can be obviated by the suggestion that they be closed one week day. The trustees of these museums hold legacies whose provisions are that they shall not be open Sundays. Well, if that is so, let them get along without an appropriation from the city. I propose to test this matter to the end. Museums of like character are open on Sunday in Boston and in England, and there is no reason why these shouldn't be here. The strictest Sabbatarian ought not to object to the education of the people on Sunday."

President Beekman said that last May he addressed the trustees of the museums on the subject of keeping the doors open Sunday. He proposed from 2 to 4 in the afternoon in summer, and from 1:30 to 5:30 in winter. The trustees had paid no attention to his letter. Commissioner Crimmins said he had personally promised to bear the expense of keeping the doors open Sunday from last May to this January, but the trustees neglected to entertain his offer Further consideration of the matter was deferred till the trustees of the museum should be heard.

We hope Mayor Grace will adhere to his determination not to giv the two institutions named a penny unless their doors are opened on Sundays. Last May the park commissioners passed a resolution to open these buildings on Sundays, but the trustees paid no attention to the order. Their objections were all met, but they were too bigoted to comply, and it seems as if the only way to compel them to accommodate the people will be Mayor Grace's plan of refusing to support the institutions until they do.

The Petition.

The petition for the more complete secularization of New York state, which we are printing each week on the last page, should not be lost sight of in the heat of politics, now happily over for a while. The petitions should be circulated vigorously for the next two months, and then sent to this office. The legislature convenes in January, and it is proposed to present the petition whenever the Freedom of Worship bill comes up. Our cause will also be represented in the discussion of the matter by some one of the distinguished Freethinkers of the state.

If any of our subscribers know of any Freethinkers who hav been elected to the assembly or to the senate, we wish they would send us the names and addresses, so that we may find out how much support may be expected from them.

Thinkers and Dreamers.

There is a letter in the Spectator from the widow of an entomologist, asking its editor if he knows "anyone who is in want of a collection of beetles, or would purchase a handsome assortment of dried spiders." The Spectator replies that it cannot find a purchaser, and suggests that the widow will not be satisfied with the returns they produce. It is different now; to naturalists even spiders and beetles hav a marketable value. The bible of nature is studied more than any bible of man's production. It ought to be, for it is not filled with lies.

It is difficult to overrate the world's indebtedness to some of its dreamers and thinkers who are not what is called "producers." It is impossible to compute the effect of the writings of some poets on the character of the peoples in certain localities. Though they sometimes only cultivate, they very frequently plant their own ideas in the minds of the people with whom they dwell, which sometimes ripen quickly, as in the cases of Voltaire and Byron, and sometimes slowly, with a more steady development, as may be perceived in the effects of the writings of Shakspere and Cervantes.

The most trifling causes, also, are sometimes productiv of the grandest effects. Possibly the two most important events of the last century were the falling of an apple and the flying of a kite. The one, being witnessed by the philosopher Isaac Newton, led to the discovery of the law of gravitation; and the other, in the hands of Benjamin Franklin, was the forerunner of our knowledge of electricity, and the foundation of the telegraph.

To these might be added James Watt, who, though not the inventor, was the great improver of the steam engin. The rising and falling of the lid of a tea-kettle is said to be the base of the growth of his extraordinary genius. If the seeming trivialities above mentioned had not occurred, the clock of the world would be set back a thousand years. It is an honor to the present age that the speculations of men of science, and men of thought, are more readily accepted and applied than they were in the dark ages of superstition and persecution, but still there are bigots who vainly attempt to belittle the labors of our geologists and naturalists, because their discoveries cannot be reconciled with the teachings of priesthoods. No sane man, however, ought to lightly condemn even the dreams of the theorists among us, for, in so doing, he may be censuring some superlativ benefactor of our race, and the future glory this period of the world's existence.

Liberal Entertainments.

Cold weather having driven the Tent from the field, C. B. Reynolds has a new missionary enterprise. It will be remembered by readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER that the late D. M. Bennett, when on his tour around the world, procured at great expense the most accurate and beautiful views of all scenes of greatest interest, comprising several hundred. In London, England, he purchased a magnificent stereopticon, designing to illustrate the lectures he proposed giving on his return to the United States. He had about completed his arrangements when his death occurred.

Mr. Reynolds has put the stereopticon in running order, and proposes to lecture for Liberal Societies and individuals who may desire his services. The stereopticon is one of the largest and best manufactured, and the beautiful paintings can be exhibited in any sized hall by the aid of the new and improved calcium illuminator. The views embrace all the celebrated places of the world. He can giv from one to a dozen lectures in any place. The Holy Land is a place specially dwelt upon, and he can show it up in a manner highly detrimental to its reputation. The lectures will be Liberal, and will do good missionary work, as Christians of all denominations can be induced to attend to see the beautiful pictures. Mr. Reynolds will continue the distribution of Freethought books, papers, and pamphlets, and make his winter's work yield as good fruit as his summer campaign with the Tent. Everyone who wants a splendid and instructiv entertainment, as well as Liberal lectures, should write at once, so that the route can be laid out, and all arrangements as to terms and dates made. It will be best to hav several lectures in a place, and afternoon matinees for the benefit of the children and of ladies who may be unable to attend in the evening. For terms and full particulars write at once to C. B. Reynolds, care of THE TRUTH SEEKER office, 33 Clinton place, New York.

Editorial Notes.

WE hav just printed a new and elaborate catalog of the books for sale at the TRUTH SEEKER office. It will be sent free to any address upon application.

WILL "A Member of the League," from Boston, send his name? Not for publication, but for the editor's information, as it is one of our invariable rules not to publish anonymous communications.

W. H. MCNIEL, of Little Elm, Texas, has begun the publication of the Polymathical Investigator, a large eight-page paper of Freethought tendencies, but with a decided leaning toward the vagaries of A. Wilford Hall. Mr. McNiel prints at the head of his editorial columns the Nine Demands of Liberalism.

WE would like to receive information as to time and place of meeting of all Liberal organizations in the country; also information as to all Liberal halls, when built, and other matters of interest of that variety. Will secretaries please correspond with the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York?

GEORGE W. JULIAN, old land reformer and Abolitionist, is doing hard work against land robbers in New Mexico.—John Swinton's Paper.

Mr. Julian is also a Freethinker of many years' standing. He has been a pioneer in almost all the reforms of the past half century. He doesn't hav to be dragged into them, either, as the ministers do.

ST. GEORGE'S church of this city has issued its annual year book. We notice that Pastor Rainsford has omitted any allusion to his favorit church official, Sexton Pudney. The fact is, Pudney was sentenced last summer to a term of twenty years in state prison for attempting to imitate the nobility of London in the maiden tribute line. It would hav been appropriate for Mr. Rainsford at least to say, "We mourn our loss."

THE Cleveland Plaindealer reports that since the Congress of the League-Union in that city the membership of the local Union has been largely augmented, over two hundred members being now enrolled. John M. Wilcox, ex-sheriff of Cleveland, is the president. Mr. Wilcox is an energetic and level-headed young man, and under his vigorous presidency, with the help of the untiring secretary, J. D. Mallonee, the Cleveland Union ought to prosper.

BEFORE the grand jury which investigated the Chinese massacre in Wyoming the Rev. Timothy Thirloway, a Congregational clergyman, swore that the Chinese set fire to their own houses, which statement was given to the Associated Press from Green River, fifteen miles to the west, where the sessions were held. Careful investigation by a newspaper correspondent not only proves the falsity of these assertions, but develops the fact that Mr. Thirloway was a coal digger in the mines there for several years, and is a man of ignorance and low character. At the time of the massacre he lived in a "dug-out" or mud house in the high bank of Bitter Creek, where are a large number of squalid, filthy cabins, in which some of the miners prefer to stay rather than liv in one of the comfortable frame buildings, built by the railroad company for their workmen, the rental being $8 per month. Thirloway left there since the massacre, and has begun preaching at Green River at a salary of $500 per year. On the day the Chinamen were murdered he and his family were present, and are believed to hav assisted in pillaging the Chinese houses, Mrs. Thirloway having been seen to enter one of their cabins and remove from it various articles before it was set on fire, testimony to which effect is in possession of the railroad company.

THERE is a speck of humor in the order to the executors of the estate of Thomas Gunning, of this city, who left some thousands of dollars to be spent in masses for the repose of his own soul, his relativs' souls, and of all the other souls in purgatory. Several of the heirs died previous to the death of the testator, and on an accounting the treasurers were directed to pay about $9,000 into the state treasury under the statute for the benefit of heirs whose whereabouts are unknown.

THE Board of Aldermen of this city adopted on October 20th the following resolution:

"Resolved, That permission be and the same is hereby given to the Pius Society of Missionaries to construct a vault in front of the Church of Mount Carmel on the north side of One Hundred and Fifteenth street, between First and Pleasant avenues, without payment of the usual fee, the work to be done at their own expense, under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Works; such permission to continue only during the pleasure of the Common Council."

The mayor approved the resolution October 26th. We should like to know what difference there is between remitting the fees for a building permit and voting the Pius Society of Missionaries an equal amount of money.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has issued his Thanksgiving Proclamation. Its piety is unsurpassed. Thursday, Nov. 26th, is the day. Mr. Cleveland argues that we should thank God for the following favors, to wit:

"For all that he has done for us in the year that has passed; for our preservation as a united nation and for our deliverance from the shock and danger of political convulsion; for the blessings of peace and for our safety and quiet while wars and rumors of wars hav agitated and afflicted other nations of the earth; for our security against the scourge of pestilence, which in other lands has claimed its dead by thousands and filled the streets with mourners; for plenteous crops which reward the labor of the husbandman and increase our nation's wealth; and for the contentment throughout our borders which follows in the train of prosperity and abundance."

That is to say, we are to thank God because things are no worse than they are, and if things were worse than they are it would be our duty to thank God all the same. As for us and our house, we hav received no favors except such as hav come from friends on this earth. Therefore we hav to say to Mr. Cleveland's God, "Thank you for nothing."

WHEN Colonel Ingersoll lectured in Rochester, N. H., this fall, his lecture was attended by Mr. George G. Berry, the Freethought editor of the Antimonopolist. Mr. Berry was a hopeless invalid, having to be carried in and out of the hall. In the report of the lecture in his paper he said it was the last lecture he ever expected to hear, and he was "content to wind up with Ingersoll." Mr. Perry's words were true. His death occurred on Sunday, October 25th. In the obituary published in his paper the writer says: "Religiously, he believed almost identically with Ingersoll, and never changed his views to the last. If there is a hereafter, he thought we should be prepared to enter the kingdom by leading a good life here. He never disputed there was not, but maintained that he knew nothing about it. Still, he thought he knew as much as anyone. In these views he was sincere, and his last evening away from home was spent listening to Colonel Ingersoll's lecture on 'Myth and Miracle.' All in all, he was an honest, self-made man. In the latter part of his sickness he appeared happy, and realizing full well that he could not recover, seemed ready to go. All was done that kind hearts could do, but disease had done its work and he was called to pass down into the silent chambers of the dead."

IN these days of labor troubles, when Socialism, Anarchy, Communism, etc., are being explained and advocated from innumerable rostrums, it is inevitable that books upon political reform should rapidly multiply. A few weeks ago the Truth Seeker Company published one upon "Rational Communism," as able a work, perhaps, as has appeared upon that side of the question. This week we announce another reform work. "Social Wealth: The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in its Acquirement and Apportionment," is by J. K. Ingalls, one of the land reformers who obtained the passage of the National Homestead law. Naturally, Mr. Ingalls pays considerable attention to the land question, and argues from the standpoint of a land reformer. He also givs a brief review of the origin and growth of economic schools of thought, considers the rise and growth of what he calls "capitalism," how it obtains unearned increase—such as profit, interest, rent; defines the activ and passiv factors in production, and suggests reforms by which the people may, in his opinion, consume a great deal more of what they earn than they now do. Later on we shall notice the work more fully, but call attention to it now that those interested in economical speculations may know where to obtain a very able and interesting volume. Price, $1.

THE Utah commission has made its annual report to the government. The commission reports that in two years eighty-three indictments hav been found for polygamy and unlawful cohabitation; there hav been twenty-three convictions and forty-three cases are now awaiting trial. The commission renews all of the recommendations contained in Senate bill 1,283 (which failed of passage in the House of Representativs during the last session), and submits these additional recommendations: "That the term of imprisonment for unlawful cohabitation be extended to at least two years for the first and three years for the second offense. That all persons be excluded by law from making a location or settlement upon any part of the lands of the United States who shall refuse on demand to take an oath before the proper officer of the Land Office that he (if a man) does not cohabit with more than one woman in the marriage relation, and will support the laws of the United States; or (if a woman) that she does not cohabit with a man having more than one living and undivorced wife. That the laws with reference to the immigration of Chinese and the importation of contract laborers, paupers, and criminals be so amended as to prevent the immigration of persons asserting that their religion teaches and justifies the crime of polygamy, as this would cut off the chief source of supply to the Mormon church." We hav italicized a couple of lines to call attention to the fact that the commission seems to regard plural cohabitation as immoral when a marriage ceremony has been performed over the parties, but sees no immorality in it when not so "hallowed." The commission probably arrived at this view of the case after reading the scriptures.

OUT of the many thousand gentlemen who find snug shelter beneath the government's fostering wing, says the Sun, none enjoy the peace, prosperity, and general happiness in equal measure with the twenty-one who are chaplains in the navy. They toil not and seldom pray, but draw their salaries with elegance and precision. These salaries are large, or would be for an ununiformed worldling. For the first five years of service each chaplain culls $2,500 per year and his rations, if at sea, from a benevolent national treasury, $2,000 if on shore duty, and $1,600 if on waiting orders, the last named being a condition of complete inertia. Ever after the five years mentioned the remuneration is $300 more, in all stages of service. Rations consist in the main of hardtack and pork, with a smack of sugar and coffee thrown in, and can be traded off for canned chicken or anything palatable to wardroom appetites. With the exception of giving the ship schoolmaster an occasional lift in his duty of driving simple educational facts through saline skulls, the chaplain does nothing. He holds no services, except now and then at a stray funeral. The only Sunday features of a man-of-war are extra clean decks and officers in full dress uniforms, including buttons. The chaplain wears just as many buttons as any of them, but he does no preaching. Except for a provision in the naval regulations it would be hard to tell why any ships carry a chaplain. This says they must, and they do. There is no dodging naval rules with salaries attached to them. No chaplain on shipboard wearies himself with stirring up religious sentiment among the men, or worries about their tarry souls. Not every ship carries a chaplain. Only flag ships are thus adorned. Chaplains are too expensiv. The plain leaky cruisers cannot possess them. Four flagships thus ornamented are the Tennessee, North Atlantic squadron; Pensacola, European squadron; Trenton, Asiatic squadron, and Hartford, Pacific squadron. The Nipsic, both fleet and flag ship, cruising alone on the South Atlantic station from Rio to Cape Horn, gets along without a parson. Each of the three training ships, Minnesota, New Hampshire, and Jamestown, carries a chaplain, and one is attached to each working navy yard to look out for the spiritual welfare of tars newly gathered in on the receiving ships. The rest of the twenty-one are on special duty or waiting orders Not a few of the shore chaplains are prosperously quartered on denominational parishes, thus securing pleasing additions to their several incomes. Those stationed at navy yards make the most show of professional usefulness. Local churches or missions usually afford services of some sort on the receiving ships in which the chaplain co-operates. But altogether the lot of a chaplain is a most happy one, and that of chaplains at sea especially so. Without irksome labor of any sort or any responsibility, he can join the captain of marines, another flagship luxury, in a perennial siesta on the wardroom sofas.

Lectures and Meetings.

CHARLES WATTS will lecture in the Opera House at Massillon, Ohio, November 18th and 19th. Subjects: "Secularism: Destructiv and Constructiv;" and "Unbelief: What Is It, and What Has It Done for the World?"

MR. D. A. BLODGETT, of Grand Rapids, Mich., has instituted a course of free Liberal lectures. Mrs. Krekel and J. E. Remsburg hav lectured to large audiences during the course, and Mr. Charles Watts is to visit Grand Rapids soon.

W. F. JAMIESON, the Liberal lecturer, delivered a series of five lectures in this town, commencing last Friday and ending Monday evening. His lectures were all well attended, three drawing full houses. However his views on the subjects he treats of may differ from those of others, he is surely to be commended for the candid and, at the same time, inoffensiv manner in which he puts them before his audience and the willingness he shows to answer any questions which any of his hearers may choose to put to him. His style of address is neither belligerent nor cringing, and the evident care he takes to hurt the feelings of no individuals excepting the dead and gone members of the committees on racks and thumb-screws, who flourished in the palmy days of the Spanish Inquisition, is worthy of imitation.—Republican Pilot, Maysville, Mo. Mr. Jamieson is speaking every night in Stewartsville, Bethany, and other towns in Missouri. He is announced for several lectures in Leon, Iowa, and will probably lecture in Brownsville, Mo., about the middle of November. He had full houses at Maysville. For lectures address at Maysville, Mo.

G. W. KATES, secretary of the Southern Association of Spiritualists, Atlanta, Ga., sends us the following appeal: "At the annual meeting of the Southern Association of Spiritualists, held August 29th, 1885, they resolved to celebrate the thirty-eighth anniversary of Modern Spiritualism by a grand reunion at Louisville, Ky., to commence March 28th, and continue eight days. The local society at Louisville are making generous preparations, having rented Liederkranz Hall, securing hotel rates, preparing a choir, and engaging free entertainment for speakers and mediums, etc. It is necessary that our Association shall make this meeting a great success. We need money to secure the necessary mediums and speakers. In order to be able to do so, this appeal to your assistance is made. Please forward your names as members and the annual dues of one dollar, and also send whatever extra donation you can. Secure new members to the Association and collect the annual fee of one dollar from each. Do not delay, for the necessary funds are needed at once, in order to perfect engagements. The attendance of all friends is earnestly hoped for. Please notify us of the number of persons we may expect from your locality."

Letters from Friends.

EAU CLAIRE, WIS., Oct. 5, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I see in your last that L. Joy wants a few words with C. L. James, which is certainly fair enough, if C. L. James can hav half the words. I do not imagin that I exploded the fiction of the social compact, but supposed it was pretty well exploded by Thomas Carlyle and Herbert Spencer, to whose works I refer Mr. Joy for that part of the matter. In his allusion to the Fuegeans, Mr. Joy commits what logicians call a non distributio medii. The Fuegeans hav neither laws, nor offices, nor priests, he says; neither hav they whisky, nor draw-poker, nor street-walking, nor Anthony Comstock, nor the Salvation Army. Why should the good parts of civilization be laid to government rather than to these other improvements? Mr. Joy says that they are impossible without giving up some of our personal freedom, but I defy him to prove it. I maintain, on the contrary, that every recorded "improvement in the people" was preceded by an "improvement in the government," and that every such improvement consisted in having less government than before. To illustrate: Among the lowest savages every woman is the slave of every man. There is clearly less government when marriage makes each woman the slave of only one man. And a sensible improvement in the people follows, which goes further when divorce laws mitigate the slavery. Better still would it be if the woman were neither subject to all men (rule of the majority), nor to one man (rule of the minority), but to no rule at all except that of her own judgment and conscience. The assertions that savages hav no government and religion are only in a measure true. They hav nothing amounting to a system either of law or belief, but they are slavishly subject to those they consider their superiors (which is the essence of government) and to the dread of an unknown evil (which is the essence of religion). Civilized men are much less so. I am happy, however, to agree with Mr. Joy in one thing—viz., that "many social usages are more troublesome, humiliating, and unjust than our laws." I don't believe I want to be a Ghengis Khan. I know I am as much opposed to Mrs Grundy's tyranny as Uncle Sam's, and, in conclusion, say with Byron:

"I'd hav mankind be free,
As much from mobs as kings—from you as me."

C. L. JAMES.

LONGSTREET, GA., Oct. 25, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I hav one word to say in reference to our grand and noble champion of Freethought, Col. R. G. Ingersoll.

I cannot think it needful or exactly consistent for him to use the word "believe" as applying to himself, as "what his senses certify is true, after cross-examination by his reason," is truth and knowledge to him, and not a matter of belief at all, and cannot be. Why, then, or how, can he use the word "believe" in that relation? Why not use the word "think" instead? T. N. MASON.

JACKSON, MICH., Oct. 27, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: We delivered the funeral address of Mrs. Rachael Elmer, of Arland, Mich., who died October 21st, in the eighty-first year of her age. Both Mr. and Mrs. Elmer are life-long Liberals and Freethinkers. She leaves five children and has buried five. Those remaining are earnest Liberals. They met D. M. Bennett at Jackson on his tour around the world. In their home are THE TRUTH SEEKER and many Liberal works, especially those of our hero, Bennett. We heard nothing but the highest praise of these pioneers of Liberal ideas. Such noble, earnest, and honest Freethinkers compel the church to respect them and their exalted principles. Mrs. McCarther, of Charlotte, Mrs. Atwood, of Eaton Rapids, and Mrs. Haynes, of Leslie, as well as the two sons, illustrate the benign influence of their parents' Liberal instructions. Mrs. Haynes you will recognize as your correspondent. May they and their aged father, who is in the eighty-second year of his age, liv long to demonstrate to the world the exalted pre-eminence of Liberalism over Christianism. Fraternally, J. W. KENYON.

ANDERSON, IND., Oct. 18, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a subscriber to your valuable paper for two years, and would not be without it for twice the amount, as the general teaching in it suits my idea exactly. There are a large number of outspoken Liberals here, but no leader. I think that arrangements could be made for some good speaker to lecture at Anderson. Inclosed find $1.50 for continuation of my paper, and $1.00 for "Interrogatories to Jehovah," by D. M. Bennett; "Clergyman's Victims," by Mrs. J. E. Ball; "False Claims," by J. E. Remsburg; "Christianity a Reward for Crime."

Now, if some good speaker could be induced to giv a lecture or series of lectures at Anderson I will take special time to induce as many to attend as possible. Ingersoll would be the proper man, and if he will come we will get the Dixey Music Hall, and everybody would go and hear him.

Respectfully yours, W. M. JOHN.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WIS., Oct. 18, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2, and credit me as far as it will go on my paper. It seems that I am doomed to pay in instalments. Having no income, I can barely manage to keep my paper up with what little I am able to do; but while I hav one finger that can earn money I will hav THE TRUTH SEEKER. How any mortal that ever saw it can do without it is a mystery (I had almost said miracle) to me. Kelso's "Bible Analyzed" got here all right. Long liv Kelso! and long liv the grand army to which he belongs! And if ever I become able to pay the initiation fees I will join the grand army, in order to be knit closer to the society with the immortal Kelso. I am now between sixty and seventy years of age. I hav never given any attention to money-making, but hav given my youth and manhood to our country. Forty years ago the 4th of next April I enlisted in the Mexican war; I also served in the late war and many years beside, and yet hav received nothing from the government except the humiliating benefits of the Soldiers' Home, which is not an American institution, nor can it ever be made such by force of legislation in America. Men who hav been raised under monarchical or despotic forms of government seem to enjoy it remarkably well, but the average American who has been played out in the service of his country would prefer to receive from the government what it costs to keep him here; then he could paddle his own boat and feel independent.

Nearly forty years hav elapsed since the Mexican war, and twenty-eight state legislatures hav instructed their servants in Congress to pass the Mexican pension bill, and yet, through the influence of that old Hoar of Massachusetts, our bill has been defeated for ten successiv sessions of Congress. Excuse these dismal remarks, and let us prey for something better. Yours always, NELSON HUNT.

AN OPEN LETTER TO C. WATTS.

ADRIAN, MICH., Oct. 20, E.M. 285.

SIR: As I was a little late in getting into the Liberal Congress at Cleveland, Ohio, I did not hear the first of your remarks, but in reading them in THE TRUTH SEEKER I notice you fetch the name of B. F. Underwood forward with those of D. M. Bennett and Horace Seaver as leading Liberal workers. Now, it is true that B. F. Underwood had done some good works for the Liberal cause, and I had been one to help to circulate his literature, but when he hitched himself on with Abbot, Ellis, Bundy, and Comstock, in order, as they said, to crush Mr. Bennett and his paper; called him a culprit, an old sinner, etc.; denounced his paper as indecent and obscene, and its patrons as the rag-tag and bob-tail of Liberals; and finally, after they, with the help of Judge Benedict, got their victim into the Christian Bastile, then for them to go and buy up some old private and foolish letters that Mr. Bennett had written in a playful way, and hav them published while they had him shut up in prison—this, with much more that can be seen by turning to THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 15, 1880, is something that Mr. Underwood must be mentally able to condemn before he can be recognized as of us and with us. Therefore, Friend Watts, I hope that Mr. Underwood's name may not again be mentioned in our Congress as of us until he is ready by word or act to make it manifest that he is a wiser and better man than when he set himself in hostil array against Mr. Bennett and the Liberal League as he did. S. D. MOORE.

ST. JOHNS, ILL., Oct. 21, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Just received the pamphlets all right; very grateful for your kindness and promptitude. Inclosed you will find stamps in payment for the pamphlet, "Sunday not the Sabbath," which I owed for. I hav just received a good letter from W. S. Bell, congratulating me for my letter of recent date in THE TRUTH SEEKER, in my endeavor to impress on the minds of Liberals the importance of harmony among Materialists, Spiritualists, and Agnostics. This we must do—agree to disagree, from the fact that we are differently constituted. We should combine to make battle with the common enemy superstition, the bane of civilized society and good morals. Our liberties here and now are of more importance, to my way of thinking, than all the theories and speculations of previous or future existence; for as sure as the Christian element gets control of this government, our present existence will be anything but pleasant. Myself and wife aim to start on our trip to Arkansas and Missouri to-morrow. We will try to make these pamphlets and the noble old TRUTH SEEKER which I swear by instead of a God do good service on my journey. I am taking a good supply of Liberal books and papers. Fraternally, WM. A. THOMPSON.

NEW ERA, MICH., Oct. 16, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Please giv credit for the inclosed money on my TRUTH SEEKER account. Havn't any advice to giv in regard to the conduct of the paper. Wouldn't if I could. Bad plan this borrowing other people's troubles. The eleventh commandment is the best I ever heard of, and the Gods never had anything to do with the making of it.

Has it ever struck you what asses mankind generally made of themselvs by reaching after the imaginary, when there is so much reality in their environments? One world at a time, one fact at a time, and that fact well attended to, always panned out well in my case, and I am fifty years old, and more than that in rough experimental knowledge.

Just as long as you allow your subscribers to rap each other's knuckles, by giving both sides of every vital question, just that length of time I desire to take THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is certainly the best mental alterativ and sudorific I hav ever found. Long life to you and your co-workers.

If I were not so provokingly poor, wouldn't I soon hav Reynolds out here with his Tent, for of all the fallow fields that were ever heard of, this is certainly the best filled with priestly ragweed, and the ewe lambs of the flock the best attended to. Brother Blanchard was shepherd last year, and he was last heard from in California, and Brother Blake the year before (the candidate for representativ on the Prohibition ticket) was chased into Ohio and compelled to marry.

JOHN M. LOGAN, M.D.

WEST UNION, OHIO, Oct. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Our camp-meeting is over. Remsburg and C. Fannie Allyn hav come and gone, and, like the intoxicated man who was doused with ice-water, the orthodox people hav been startled into thought, though they would crouch in terror did they imagin such thought to be free. Slave-thought they regard as their only safe refuge. Our meeting occupied two days—Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 17th and 18th.

C. Fannie Allyn arrived Friday night, and lectured at the Court House, filling the people with wonder. She delivered a discourse of great power, without premeditation, from subjects proposed by the audience. Then, from some seven other subjects given by the audience, she improvised a poem of great truth and beauty, weaving in all the subjects in perfect harmony. Here is a fact for the students of the mind, and its occult powers, to ponder. She lectured next morning on our camp-ground, but was forced to leave at noon to meet engagements in Cincinnati. That was our great calamity—leaving us without a speaker till Remsburg's arrival at 4 P.M. In the meantime, hundreds drove to the grounds, and, seeing nothing going on, turned homeward and spread the news to the distant corners of the county that our camp-meeting was a failure. However, it proved finally a great success.

Remsburg lectured to a crowded court-house on Saturday night—subject, "Sabbath-Breaking;" and in the grove, next day, he held nearly a thousand people almost breathless with attention, while he discoursed on "Bible Morals" in the forenoon, and in the afternoon on "False Claims." The crowd might hav been three times as great had it not been for our panic on the previous afternoon.

The church-bells kept up their doleful ringing, Sunday, all day long; but it was "no go"—except to hear Remsburg.

Some say Remsburg ought to be burnt, others, that he ought to hav been "fired out." One dark-visaged fellow told me that if he thought the Bible told him to kill me he would do it. Then I quoted to him Deut. xiii, 6-9, which commands, in regard to the worshipers of any other than the Jewish God, that "Thou shalt not consent unto him; neither shall thine eye pity him; neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him, but thou shalt surely kill him." However, he did not kill me; hence, I infer that he doubts his Bible, after all.

Remsburg has made a deep impression here on the minds of our orthodox people. The cruel words of their own holy book, and the bloody deeds of their own Christian church, must continue to haunt their consciences, calling in vain for an answer, and refusing to down at their bidding.

The "pillars of priestcraft!"—where are they? Tottering before the heavy artillery of Remsburg's logic and fact. The pagan Sabbath, the barbarous Bible, and the cruel church are yielding to the assault; and brutal priestcraft soon must find a lonely grave beneath the shattered fragments of those demolished towers.

With a positiv magnetic power, Remsburg conveys his calmly uttered truths direct to the orthodox center of consciousness, and fixes them there in their memory, where they must ever knock on the doors of their conscience, demanding that cruel superstition abdicate her bloody throne, and Universal Mental Liberty henceforth bless mankind.

After hearing him once, some dare not come again, but even these can never wholly recover from the fatal thrusts of his pitiless lance.

On Sunday evening, during the delivery of his beautiful and poetic eulogy on the patriot and hero, Thomas Paine, I almost pitied the faithful devotees of the Christian mythology, while this subtle orator coolly prepared a grave, and buried, right before their eyes, all their long-cherished idols, their creeds, their Bibles, and even their God. At this point in his lecture, it seemed as if the dead God lay before their eyes, and they powerless to rescue, restore, or save. But why should they mourn for this tyrant Bible-God, who is, in fact, but an imaginary terror, born of the cruel, barbarous past?

However angry this Jewish God may hav been with us on account of our temerity in holding an Infidel meeting on his supposed holy day, yet the God of Nature smiled on us most benignantly. Him only we adore! It was a glorious day.

Remsburg was entertained, during his stay, in royal style, at the palatial mansion of our rich banker, Smith Grimes, as was also C. Fannie Allyn. On the evening of his arrival, Remsburg was serenaded by our brass band.

As one result of our meeting, we hav organized the Adams County Secular Society, with a substantial membership, and our next work seems to be the raising of a fund for the purchase of a Freethought library.

We hope to hav C. Fannie Allyn make a lecturing tour through our county some time during the winter, and early next fall we should hav a monster camp-meeting, surpassing this one by far. In the meantime, every genuin reformer should subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is worse than going to war without weapons, to seek to battle with superstition without a Freethought journal. Inspire your manhood and womanhood by extensiv reading of our Freethought literature, and keep firm step to the music of reform. Truth is mighty, and must prevail. J. F. BECK.

OVERTON, GA., Oct. 18, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Probably a short history of this neighborhood would prove interesting to some of your readers. First, let me state that, as far as this district is known, it is known by the name of Sodom. Several years before the war, a minister, who believed that the earth is flat, was sent here to preach. A very respectable congregation gathered to hear each sermon. For a circle of half a mile on either side his voice could be heard expounding the scripture. The people listened quietly and respectfully—none sighed, none wept, and none shouted. The minister was the only one who seemed to be excited.

He preached for two years, and during the whole time this same state of affairs prevailed. At the end of this time, patience had ceased to be a virtue with him, so he delivered a farewell address to the people, which was something like this: "I have preached here two years. When I preached to our colored friends, the spirit of God came down among them and moved them, but you, my white brethren, are as cold as a stone, and immovable as a stone. When I leave, I will shake the Sodom dust off my feet, and never again return, for in two years I hav not converted a single member. I will go back to Conference, and pray to God that I may never be sent here again, and use my best influence to hav nobody sent here. I shall report the people as hell-bent and hell-bound, and should be left to go their own way."

He departed, and through his influence nobody was sent here.

I will quote the below from an article written by a gentleman who remembers well what followed the departure of the priests:

"For a series of years, running back some time before the war, and closing some time after it, we were here in this district almost literally without law or gospel. We were not dissatisfied. We had the glorious heavens above us, the green earth beneath us, a majestic river on either side of us; between them gushing springs and purling brooks; on every hand were fertil fields and golden harvests, luscious fruits and flowers most rare; we had men than whom none were more honorable or intelligent; women wise as Zobieday, and as beautiful as the houris. With them we could sit down under our own vine, and under our own fig-tree, and in our own way send up our heartfelt thanks to him who ordered the casting of our lot in a place even more to be desired than 'fabled Eden.' After the ravages of war had taken a large portion of our property, the lawyers came down to get the rest. They became thrifty. The preachers heard of the lawyers' success, and thought they would come down and help themselvs. So a parson of the Methodist persuasion came down to preach for us in a grove every fifth Sunday. At the end of the year, fifteen dollars was offered him. He concluded that if three men (the three that paid him) were taken out, the fire of Sodom would fall and consume the balance of us; so he pulled up his stakes and left us; other Methodist ministers followed. All were received kindly—some parted with regretfully. A few years ago a school-house was built; it was used as a preaching-place. Soon after its erection, a Baptist minister came down and preached to us at stated times. To verify the adage that when it rains it pours, the Methodists added once a month to the fifth Sunday. A Methodist minister was given a plantation on the terms that he would liv down here. In surveying the land, he and his son stretched the chain to make the acres as large as possible. Each denomination gathered many wandering sheep into its fold. The Baptists organized a church, and with the aid of the Infidels built a miserable shanty, which they called a church; they changed their worship to this. This was the first church that the white people had had in this neighborhood for thirty or forty years.

"Alas! to both sides when pay-day came; money fell short, and the preachers created such a howl as until then had not been heard on earth since his Satanic majesty sparked our mother Eve. The Baptist was offered twenty-five cents by the deacon who had collected it from the members. Instead of accepting it, he threw it on the ground and accused the deacon of stealing the rest. The preacher also accused the deacon of stealing money intrusted to him to buy windows for the church. Great confusion prevailed, which resulted in the departure of the Baptist minister. For about four years the church was supported, each year a different pastor preaching. Not another member joined—one by one all the old members were turned out, some from violating the rules, and others by request. The preachers were never paid, so the end of four years found us pastorless. The church was willed to the negroes who carry on a revival from May to September. The Methodist minister in two years sold his plantation and departed in disgust."

Now, many of the inhabitants are professed unbelievers. Our serenity is not disturbed by the preaching we hav every first Sunday, for our minister is a truly good man and sincere. He is welcomed by the people; he don't ask for one single cent. He does not get one single member when he opens the doors of the church. He believes it is his duty to come down and preach to the priest-forsaken sinners.

Sodom is in the lower part of Elbert county, situated between Savannah river and Broad. The fall of Anthony Shoals, Broad river, is said to be twice greater than the fall at Lowell, Massachusetts, yet there are no manufactories run by it.

D. B.

LABOR ADVOCATE OFFICE, WABASH, INDIANA.
Oct. 20, E.M. 285.

MR. EDITOR: On account of the insufficient support tendered me by the wage-workers of Wabash, and their malignant opposition, I hav determined to run a radical Freethought paper from now on, and that the paper may be more effectiv for good I wish to remove to some small town where I, with my limited means, will not hav to compete with other offices, and a town where there are Freethinkers so I may hav what support they can giv me. Any Freethinker who would desire a paper printed in his town, devoted to radical Freethought (and remember, before you write, that I am no policy man and will not by the slightest act recognize a God, Christ, or the Bible, and govern yourselvs accordingly—I do not wish to locate in a town where this would be required of me even tacitly), write me as below and if arrangements satisfactory to both parties can be made, I will plant an office in your midst that will strike square from the shoulder in the work of destroying superstition and bigotry.

Respectfully, ARTHUR C. EVERETT,
Lock Box 171, Wabash, Indiana.

PROSPECT HILL FARM,
SUSSEX CO., N. J., Oct. 8, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read your paper for about one and a half years, and I must say that on the whole I like it very well; but I am sorry to see some of the contributors of your paper exercise such a bigoted disposition as they do. I hav always thought that molasses would catch more flies than vinegar. I hav been a Freethinker (or what is termed an Infidel) for years; in fact, always, as my father was before me. Now, if I should say to my wife, "Don't go to church," or refuse to see that she had a good horse and wagon to take her there, or refused to let my children go to Sunday-school, I would certainly despise myself. You teach that it is proper for everyone on this planet to get the most happiness out of this life, and to make those around them happy. Now, do you think their families will love and respect them if they are tyrants?

The idea that the Bible is not a fit book for children to read at home is all bosh. If it is not, then Shakspere is equally unfit. It is just as Robert G. Ingersoll says—"If you want to be a Christian, don't read the Bible; and if you want to be an Infidel, read it." The only reason this country is skeptical is that the people read more than they do in other countries that are not skeptical.

One more word on another subject, and I am through for the present. There is a small class of lazy people that are howling about having the wealth of the country divided up. I want to say, right here, those people are always cowards and always lazy. For it is self-evident that anyone that is not a coward, and lazy, will hav an abundance of this world's goods for an honest and good living, unless he or she is a spendthrift. And there are many of that class; but they are not howling for a division, for they are willing to work—and they know they can hav property, if they will be saving of their time and money. I remain yours, with respect,

F. B. NORTHBUP.

BOSTON, MASS., Oct. 26, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: My inability to write much, owing to disability of the right hand, prevents me from making many attempts, even though you were as liberal of space with me as you are with some of those lunkheads that you allow to blow on their superiors. But I would be much pleased to vent a little criticism on two or three of your favorit correspondents. First, the one mentioned by our old and worthy friend, A. B. Bradford, who speaks of a worthy American citizen whose testimony was thrown out of court as though he were a liar or scoundrel for saying he neither believed nor disbelieved in a God. Now, I should hav said, "I know there is a God," which would lead to asking how I knew there was a God. My answer would be: "I learned long ago that there is not an effect without a cause, hence it logically follows that there must be a cause for every cause. I will hav no quarrel as to whether we call it cause of all causes, or God, or Allah, or Jehovah, or Chrishna, or nat*yah*, or whatever yah you hav a mind to call it, or leave belief forever out of the question, as all but fools will do." Further, let me say to those mundane Material blowers, Elmina and old Doctor Winter, We cannot blame you on account of the strata of matter you occupy, away down in the material plane of life. The mineral cannot perceive the vegetable, neither the vegetable the animal; no more can the human the higher plane of life until they hav attained to a condition where they can begin to perceive there is another strata above them, which is as plain to many of us as it is to you that you hav come up to where you now are through a law of evolution.

N. H. DILLINGHAM.

MARK TWAIN IN SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

LAWRENCE, MASS., Oct. 26, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: At a Sunday-school Teachers' Institute recently held here, one of the reverend sky-pilots said that he had derived much benefit in his preparation for the presentation of his lessons from Mark Twain's book, "On the Mississippi." That is the last book I hav heard of being used as a commentary on the gospels; but as some of Mark's stories are about as senseless as are those of his apostolic namesake, I doubt not they can be made to coalesce therewith. I once had a Sunday-school superintendent recommend to me "Innocents Abroad" as an authoritativ history of the Holy Land, which goes to show how stupidity has absorbed burlesques on its beliefs as proofs of its inanities. I know of no better book to show up the heartlessness of Christianity and the contrasted worthiness of unsophisticated humanity than Twain's "Phineas Finn."

JOHN P. GUILD.

WATSONVILLE, CAL., Oct. 19, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I do not remember of ever seeing anything in THE TRUTH SEEKER from this place, with the exception of one occasion, the acknowledgement of the receipt of $25 donated by self and other friends for the defense of that noble man and martyr, D. M. Bennett. But now I feel constrained to write a few lines for which you may find a place in "Letters from Friends."

I think I hav done as much for Freethought as any other one individual in this township, which has brought down on me the curses of the pulpit, and the clerical declaration that I am the biggest Infidel in the town, and that if there were a few more men like me in town there would be no use for churches, for I get more out than they can get in.

I used to call myself a Materialist, and even then I used to see and hear things which made me fear I was bordering on insanity, and did not then believe in what is now called Spiritualism. But in company with some Spiritualists I made the discovery I was what is called a medium, and now am a much despised medium and Spiritualist, and hav been the instrument of converting to Spiritualism some of the most pronounced Materialists, and many church-members. And some of these are subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and may see this, so you can see I must stick close to the truth—so close that there will be no room for caviling. And they can bear witness that I hav been giving private seances, or sittings, some ten or eleven years, and hav never charged or received as much as a one cent piece for my trouble or time, which might hav been used otherwise for my individual benefit. So it cannot be said of me, as it has been so unjustly said of some other mediums, "They are all frauds, and getting money under false pretenses." There are some people, like T. Winter and "Sich," that are so superstitious that they are afraid they may be called superstitious. It is the most cowardly kind of superstition, and they will confess to it only indirectly, by calling themselvs "Scientific Materialist," "Champion Materialist," "Cremation Materialist." Bosh! The arrogance and self-importance of his opinions, his whole demeanor of dogmatism, his arrogant egotism, are hardly equaled by those of Charles Guiteau, the assassin of President Garfield. And, Guiteau-like, T. Winter and "Sich" call the other more rational thinkers or truth finders and seekers, "maelstrom spookites, aberrationists, cranks, insane, fanatical, blank-minded," and "sich."

Where did T. Winter ever show that he ever had any scientific attainments, more than Guiteau, except perhaps in no less than three letters in one issue of the Liberal, of Nashville, with, perhaps, a postscript or two?

"T. Winter, Scientific Materialist," puts me in mind of a tramp who slept under a fence the night before a United States census-taker asked him his nationality, and so on, and to the query as to his business, answered he was a capitalist.

Just think of Professor Hare, Wm. Denton, and Gunning, and hosts of others like them, real scientists all Spiritualists and Liberals, in contrast to that self-styled champion, scientific Materialist, T. Winter. There are here a few Liberals whom I hav heard express themselvs, and they seem to be—and I believe they are—as disgusted with T. Winter as some church people are with Charles Guiteau. T. Winter is doing more to create bad feeling between Liberal Spiritualists and Materialists than an army of Jesuits.

I hav heard more than one say: "It is hard for us [referring to T. Winter] to take and pay for papers which hav so much abuse as the Liberal. Think I'll quit it when my time is up." I think if that Cincinnati "scientific, champion, cremationist, Materialist" should cremate his egotistical self or pen, there would be at least a better feeling amongst genuin Liberals.

I despise bogus scientists as much as I do bogus mediums, and bogus capitalists, and genuin egotists. T. Winter would be friendless, indeed, if he had not one—but he has one—friend who would tell him of his faults.

E. T. SLIGHT.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Oct. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: "If there is anything we really need, it is more prohibitory laws, and if the world is ever reformed, and men made better, it will be in that way, of course," says C. Severance in derision of Prohibition; but if was added, "Together with the proper education of humanity in morality and acts," no better saying could be devised. C. Severance follows up this half-spoken truth, or cynical thought, with much other similar matter of a nature foreign to the subject of Prohibition. If you will notice the illustrations of things to be prohibited, you will see that the articles condemned may hav a worthy use, as might intoxicating drinks, used differently, which is all foreign to the subject. You might as well prohibit knives and pistols, to stop murder; condemn property, to suppress thieves; part with the tongue, to avoid slander; or prohibit love, to remove a cause of suicide, as C. Severance intimates. To be honest with the subject of Prohibition, taken in its proper light, of banishing drunkenness and its consequent evils, I ask the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, What is the thing desired to be prohibited? Is it intoxicants—as we would prohibit a crime? No! It is the criminal part—the traffic. We must demand the Prohibition of breweries, distilleries, and saloons, and every selling-place of intoxicating drinks. I would illustrate the subject as a murderer (places of drink-making) having in his keeping concealed weapons (intoxicating drinks) ready to plunder and kill his victims (the drinkers). We must condemn and destroy the places of drink-making the same as we do murderers. We must teach men the use of weapons, also the use of intoxicating drinks. If we allow the first parts we must expect the last part. If we allow the murderer liberty, we must expect the victims. If we allow the dram-shop, we must expect drunkards. This view of Prohibition has only an indirect effect upon the vice of using intoxicants. It does not prohibit intoxicants from being made and used, but from being made and sold as a drink.

C. Severance proposes to prohibit morphia indulgencies, opium usages, and all vicious tendencies. This idea of Prohibition would truly so protect society that there would be nobody to protect.

This is, indeed, a ridiculous aspect, which only the imaginations of the cynic could devise. The consistent Prohibitionist does not attack the views of men, but the crimes of society, and seeks to prohibit the injurious acts of some against others.

We prohibit murder, robbery, slander, incendiarism, and all other malicious acts of one to another, but is not the keeping of a saloon, the running of a distillery, persistent effort on one's part to the injury of others? What is the difference in effect if I, by force, overpower a person, and take his property, or I weaken his faculties by poison so he givs me his property?

If I know the power of the drug, and, by intent, giv it to him for purposes of gain to myself, and loss to him, I commit a robbery in every sense of the word. If I know the power of a poison, and a person wishes a potion which I know is fatal, and I giv it to him, knowing its use, for money and lack of conscience, I commit as much of a murder as it would be to raise the fatal pistol, and fire the fatal shot.

Herein is the pretext for Prohibition, that men are allowed to deal in stuff which is an invariable injury to others in its intended use.

We hav nothing to do but censure those who will make and use the intoxicating stuff, but for those who will place upon the market anything that is injurious to others—Prohibition. I will admit the subject is full of doubts and liable to distrust, and I should like to read some articles from some of our ablest writers.

There is a question of moral and legal rights involved, as well as the difficulty to manage vices and crimes, and then the different means of procedure against this evil system. I reason about the matter thus: We as a government hav a right to prohibit crime by punishing the criminal and protecting society. Now, that part of the evil system which is a crime we should prohibit, punishing the criminal to protect society. I claim that a crime is an injury commited by one unto another, thus claiming that giving or selling or in any way dispensing an injurious article is a crime; for to prove that intoxicating drink is an injurious article is unnecessary, as everyone knows that drinking alcohol dilutions is an invariable injury.

I do not consider the moral rights of making and using injurious articles as infringed upon by prohibiting crimes, neither would I attempt to command the vices of man to be abolished. I would discover the crimes, and prohibit the same from the field of natural rights.

FRANK MARTIN.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

ANOTHER PRIZE TO WRITE FOR.

Wm. Scott very kindly offers a copy of George Eliot's poems for the best poem written for the Children's Corner within a given time, which we will set at four weeks from this issue. Below is Mr. Scott's offer in his own words:

"I will furnish a copy of George Eliot's poems, neatly bound in cloth, with gilt edges, to be given to the one who writes the best poem for the Children's Corner during a certain time, which the editor shall set for that purpose. Yours truly, WM. SCOTT."

Now let our amateur poets try their very best for this appropriate and beautiful prize. All manuscript poems to be sent to the Editor of the Children's Corner within the next four weeks.

Where Dolly Was Lost.

KITTY TELLS HER STORY.

Oh, yes, there were lots of boys up there,
And I liked them all, but then
The very nicest boy of all
Was only little Ben.
The other boys teased him many a time,
But I liked him the more for that,
And his face was as nice as any of theirs,
For all his old torn hat.

Mamma used often to say that I
Must play with the boys of our set,
But Bennie was so much nicer than they,
I often used to forget.
And many a time when he drove the cows
I'd help him all I could,
And Bennie would often whisper to me
He liked me for being so good.

Well, just before we came home one day
I took my dolly to walk,
And there was Bennie under a tree,
And he wouldn't even talk.
But he looked so sorry I almost knew
'Twas 'cause I was going away,
And he didn't smile till I promised I
Would think of him every day.

Then I thought, you know, that he'd like to hav
Something to 'member me by,
So I said, "I love you, Bennie, the best
Of all the boys, don't cry;"
And I gave him the bestest thing I had,
My own dear dolly, you see,
Because I s'posed when he looked at it
He'd make believe it was me.

His face grew awfully red, but still
He was glad to hav it, I know,
'Cause I wouldn't hav given my doll away
If I hadn't liked Bennie so.
And that is why mamma thinks she's lost,
For I do not like to tell
That I gave my dolly to Ben, because—
Because I liked him so well.

—M. D. Brine in Harper's Young People.

Looking the Wrong Way.

Among the many pleasant memories that my life thus far has furnished none are more vivid and precious than some that had their origin in a few of the first years of my existence. Redmile, Leicestershire, England, was the place where I first beheld the "peep o' day." It is a pretty rural village, quite near Belvoir Castle, that always had a flag floating from its high tower when its ducal proprietor was at home. It was the seat of the Duke of Rutland, and in some way or other we felt a great deal of local pride in belonging to the village nearest to it. Our village had, when I was quite young, but one church, Episcopal, built in the fifteenth century. It had three bells, and when they rang in unison their music (to young ears at least) was very pleasant. The many forms of the church, with its holy days, had an air of the more liberal or careless stripe of the Catholicism of to-day, and the rector or parson was about as important as a Catholic priest. The great gala or holy time was Christmas, and all that pertained to the Annunciation was a matter of great import. For a boy, I took a large amount of stock in the angel visitation, with the "Glory to God in the highest; peace on earth, good will to men." The reason of my great faith and interest (I think) arose from the fact that my brother next older was one of the church singers, and as we slept together and were put to bed early, we would sing nightly,

"While shepherds watch their flocks by night,
All seated on the ground,
The angel of the Lord came down,
And glory shone around."

And so on through the hymn. To my ears his voice was the sweetest I ever heard, and it ever continued thus.

The frequent repetition of these words, with the added charm of my brother's voice, so deeply impressed the sentiment that the conviction of their truth became a part of my being. Under this inspiration I hav sat, I think, hundreds of times at the end of the house that was only separated from a fine farm field by a few feet. Just on the border of the field adjoining our front yard, near the flower beds, was a tall, fine tree. I do not recollect what kind it was, though I think an oak. It was quite high, so much so that, to my boyish fancy, it seemed that were I on the very top, I could touch the clouds, just beyond which was plainly seen the blue dome or walls of heaven. As I sat and gazed, my eyes, or sight, were always directed to the top of that tree, anxiously hoping and expecting to see the angel, or angels, as they are pictured in religious works of art. Oh, how often I gazed, and how intently! and not till after quite a number of years did I discover that I looked the wrong way. When I was fully satisfied the angels would not come in that way, I contented myself with the thought that it was possible that at some future time I would see a multitude of them. I was soon compensated for my disappointment by finding a regular angel without expecting it. Now, don't laugh, for I was not the only little fellow of eight years who had such a find, and strange as it may seem, boys of such tender years always discover that it is some pretty-faced little girl, with winning ways and sweet disposition. As if by magic these angelic influences put the little men on their good behavior, and bring out the best side of boy nature. Young as I then was, this truth was apparent, that all that is good and pure is often manifested in its best and highest form in the actions and sayings of boys and girls.

The right way to look to find the beautiful is to observe the manifestations of nature that surround us, for on every hand, above, around, beneath, there is an inexhaustible fountain, whose ceaseless flow never satiates, but always teaches and inspires. While I believe in a future heaven, as I believe in continued life, the present heaven is the important one, and angelic associations of the now time the more precious. It seems to me that I hav always walked with angels, always or most of the time been in heaven. When a little lad it was my delight to sit a great deal with my mother, and I would look into her sweet, loving face, and wish every boy had so good and sweet a mother as myself. She always seemed an angel to me. At another time in my life it was a delight to lead a little girl of two or three summers (I was twenty-five years old then) by my side, and it was not possible to walk far without looking down (that was the right way) to see (to me) the sweetest of all sweet faces. At such times what did I care if at the top of every high tree the winged angels put in an appearance, the one by my side would hav discounted the whole of them. Since then I hav seen the world's good angels among boys as well as girls, and in about equal proportions among women and men. Let me relate an incident to show my idea of the true angel. As I was traveling by cars a few years ago, I had taken my seat but a few minutes, when I observed a young lady, whom I thought about eighteen years of age, take a seat just opposit. Her face was simply exquisit in outline, and her color as rich and clear as I ever saw. Her cheeks were slightly tinted with red, and as she was rather a brunet (not decided) she had a delicious peachy look. I own to being fascinated, and it did seem as though her character must be beautiful. Very shortly I observed, on the same side as the "beauty," a mother traveling (apparently alone) with two or three small children. One was a baby at the breast. It was not long before the baby began to fret, and, do what the poor, tired mother could to quiet it, the babe broke out in a severe fit of crying.

Quicker than I can write it I discovered that I had looked the wrong way again, for the young lady was in fidgets, and the lines of beauty marred by a selfish impatience. And at last she said, "Oh, dear! I wish that woman would take that baby out." While she was playing her part, an elderly woman, whom I took for a dear, good mother, and equally good grandmother, left her seat, and went and took the child, and talked words of comfort to the babe's mother. She was a very plain-looking old lady, and but plainly clad, and yet she looked beautiful in my eyes, while the young lady had shed all her charms. If it had been in my power at that time, that young lady should hav had wings, so she could hav mounted out of my sight, even if it was above the tallest trees, where the cry of no baby cloud ever disturb her petulant selfishness. You, my young readers, can tell the kind of angels that are best for the world, and the kind of heaven these help to make, and best of all they are not made of that sort of material they manufactured the saintly little men and women out of that figured so largely in orthodox Sunday-school books twenty-five or thirty years ago. Don't look the wrong way for angels, but look around you and see how much there is to love, and how many there are with noble hearts and pure minds, and whatever there is in the future in store for us, let us try to make true what Gerald Massey so well expressed,

"That this world is full of beauty,
As other worlds above,
And if we did our duty,
It might be full of love."

GEORGE LYNN.

[We invite particular attention to the above story. It conveys an excellent and useful lesson. We trust none of us will ever be found "looking the wrong way for angels," but that our eyes will be open to see them all around us. We are obliged to our friend for his contribution and the interest he has in our Corner. May he ever be blessed by the presence and friendship of human angels!—ED. C. C.]

The Oldest Ruins.

At Ipsambul or Abousambul, in Nubia, are strange temples cut in the solid rock, and these are supposed by some to be the oldest architectural ruins in the whole world. The largest temple has fourteen rooms, all hewn out of the rock, the largest of which is fifty-seven feet long by twenty-five feet broad, supported by two rows of massiv square pillars, four in each row, and thirty feet high. To each of these pillars is attached a standing colossus, or figure of enormous proportions, reaching to the roof, overlaid with a kind of stucco, and painted with gaudy colors, apparently as brilliant now, after four thousand years, as when first laid on. In front of this temple are seated four large figures, two of them sixty-five feet high, supposed to represent Rameses the Great, oftener termed Sesostris, whose wonderful military exploits are shown in paintings on the walls of the temple.

Society Like a Dish.

A maid in the Orient used to say, "Society is like a dish." A wise man heard these words and said, "Fair maid, what do you mean?" "Sir," said the maid, if you wish to know what I mean you must hav dinner with me." "Agreed," said the wise man. The maid laid before the sage plates of salt, pepper, fish, and other articles, each by itself. He could eat none of these. Last of all the maid brought a dish of curried fish, and the sage had his dinner. "But where is the meaning of your saying?" said the sage. "I hav explained it," said the maid. "I don't see it," said the sage. "Why," said the maid, "you would not eat the salt, the pepper, the fish, each by itself; but when they came together you had your dinner." "You are quite right, fair maid," said the philosopher; "the salt is the witty man, the pepper the tart man, the fish the dull man, and all together make one social man. There is philosophy in the kitchen, as I hav found out."

WE hav received, through THE TRUTH SEEKER, a number of Perpetual Calendars from the inventor, Mr. Luther Martin, who will please accept our thanks for the same.

This is a curious and interesting calendar, and is just as good next year, and for ten thousand years to come, as it is this year. It takes a little time to study it out, but once mastered it is always useful. To each person sending us an original puzzle we will forward one of these curious calendars until the number we hav had sent us is exhausted.—ED. C. C.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—RIDDLES.

(1) My 1 can drive hens.
My 2 is half a cigar.
My 3 is hard to beat,
My whole is a useful vegetable
Which most people love to eat.

(2) Three-fourths of all the solid earth,
And gold enough to buy it.
The source of joy for music's worth,
And a dish—ah! do not try it,
For 'tis the bane of single men,
Yet, all combined, delights again.

(3) My first you've seen; it parts complete,
It adds a grace to memory's joys;
My next in silence leaves your feet,
Or in its wrath affrights with noise.
Yet, strange to say, beneath our feet
The darkness every trace destroys;
My whole's approved with roasted meat,
But much abhorred in little boys.

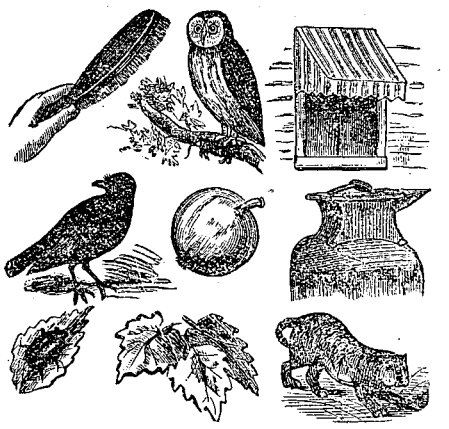
Escanaba, Mich. ISAAC A. POOL.

2.—BURIED WORDS.

In the first sentence is buried the name of a world-renowned hero; and in the second sentence is buried the field of his heroism:

1. He sees his pa in every picture.
2. My thoughts run free, though tyrants chain my limbs.

MORE BURIED WORDS.



"Why, Pat, I am ashamed of you."

"At Senegal, I, leopard-like, sprang at him, so excited was I at the time."

"Through mismanagement, they've had the job run on for three years before now."

Melbourne, Aus. DAVID ANDRADE.

3.—HIDDEN WORDS.

Find the names of these objects, write them down in the order in which they come, and then find hidden words with the following meanings: 1. An excuse; 2. What sleepy folks enjoy; 3. A trace; 4. Solemn; 5. A hunting horn; 6. A smooth piece of grass-land; 7. A fancy rural mansion; 8. An exhibition.

ANSWER TO WM. J. BURNS'S PORPHYRITIC PUZZLE IN TRUTH SEEKER, OCT. 10, 1885.

With a geologic hammer
And a little miners' drill
I open up the porphyry
Against the builders' will.
So to a waiting audience
The first I hav to show 'em
Beneath the busy microscope
Is a funny little Poem.
Beside the limpid, rolling Po
We see the charming 'Em.
Where Poe recites his lines to Me
And Mopes while reading them;
Then, in the melancholy grave,
To silent dust he turns,
While I receive by "early mail,"
From Burns my "Bobbie Burns."

ISAAC A. POOL.

Escanaba, Mich., Oct 11, 1885.

[There were six answers to the porphyritic puzzle, five of which were correct. As Mr. Pool's solution was first, the prize, a copy of Robert Burns's poems, has been awarded to that gentleman.—Ed. C. C.]

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, OCT. 17, 1885.

1. Whole length of fish, 60 inches; tail 22 1-2 inches; body, 30 inches; head, 7 1-2 inches. 2. One man would receive seventy cents, and the other ten cents. 3. Nag, Ohio, negro, eland, wren, shoe, iw, spoons, "No news is good news." 4. Carol, heart-burn, robust, harrow, idea, carpet, harebell, chestnut.

[A friend, J. E. B., writes that in his opinion our Corner, especially the Puzzle Box, is, according to the space occupied, fully equal to any similar department in any paper in the land, and quite superior to some. We thank our friend for this high appreciation of our Corner, whose activ and intelligent friends second all our efforts.—ED. C. C.]

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN!

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS;

A STORY OF THE RIGHTWAY ALMSHOUSE.

BY JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE

Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"APPLES OF GOLD."

A story-book for the young folks. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXON. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellen work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles

Price 20 cents.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Price, $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

The BIBLE—WHENCE and WHAT?

BY RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B,

A Book of Hints and Suggestions Concerning the literature contained in the Old and New Testaments. 12mo. 232 pages. Price, $1.

THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

Two New Pamphlets

BY

CHARLES WATTS.

The American Secular Union: Its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands.

(Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.)

CONTENTS:

Introduction. (I.) The Necessity for the American Secular Union having Principles upon which all [Secularists] can agree. (II.) The Twofold Nature of the Advocacy Adopted by the Union. (III.) The Catholicity of the Nine Demands and the Ground to be Covered. (IV.) An Exposition and Defense of Each of the Nine Demands. (V.) An Appeal to Secular Fidelity.

32 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

SECULARISM: Destructiv and Constructiv.

CONTENTS:

Introduction. Secularism: Its Nature and Necessity. Its Destructiv Aspect. (1) Biblical Idolatry. (2) Natural Depravity (3). Theological Supremacy. (4) The Alleged Fall and Redemption of Man. The Constructiv Aspect of Secularism. (1) That the True Guide in Human Actions is Reason Assisted by Experience. (2) That Supreme Attention Should be Given to the Facts and Duties of Existence, Regardless of any Considerations of a Life Beyond the Present. (3) That Science is a more Trustworthy Provider for Man than Relying for Help from any Supernatural Power. (4) That Morality is of Natural Growth, and has no Necessary Connection with Any of the Theologies of the World. (5) That the Best Preparation for a Life Superior to this is the Wisest and Noblest Use of the Existence We Now Hav.

22 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

J. E. REMSBURG'S November appointments, as far as arranged, are: Wausau, Wis., Sunday, 1st; Menomonee, Wis., Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 3d, 4th, and 5th; West Union, Ia., Saturday and Sunday, 7th and 8th; Lake City, Ia., Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 10th, 11th, and 12th; Ottumwa, Ia., Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th; Prescott, Ia., Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 17th, 18th, and 19th; Nevinville, Ia., Friday, 20th.

N. D. C.

How to Become

A MEDIUM

IN YOUR OWN HOME.

A 16-page pamphlet, containing full instructions and a letter designating all your phases of mediumship, and a copy of the Riddle of the American Spiritual Sphinx, or the Lost Key Found, sent FREE upon receipt of three two-cent stamps to cover expenses of mailing, etc. Address, JAMES A. BLISS, 718 Washington st., Boston, Mass. 39tf.

Something New!

Every Liberal should hav one of our beautiful

MOTTO CARDS,

(7x22), ready for framing, for their homes.
Twenty-five cents per copy.
Also Large Cards (14x22), and expressing the NINE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.
Thirty cents each.
Circulars sent FREE. Address all orders to
LIBERAL MOTTO SUPPLY CO., Troy, N. Y.
40tf

POCKET ATLAS

of the

WORLD.

Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE.

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-page colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents, by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N Y.
40

EVOLUTION:

A SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE.

By Robert C. Adams.

Paper, 25 cents. For Sale at this Office.

JUST OUT.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

DR. SUNDERLAND'S LAST AND GREATEST WORK.

IDEOLOGY.

Mental Anesthesia Self-Induced, Miraculous Cures Self-Made, Involution and Evolution in the Human Mind as in the Whole of Things.

By DR. LAROY SUNDERLAND,

(Foundation Fellow of the Society of Science, Literature, and Art, London).

CONTENTS:

Vol. 1: Chapter I.—Selfhood. II.—Experimental. III.—Mental Anesthesia. IV.—Miraculous Cures. V.—Ideology. VI.—The Highest Laws. VII.—No "Royal Road." VIII.—Mentality. IX.—Idiocrasy. X.—"Christian" Science. XI.—The Bible Idea of Inspiration. XII.—The Bible Idea of Its God. XIII.—The Bible Idea of Witchcraft. XIV.—The Bible Idea of Mediums. XV.—Bloody Ideas, All Besmeared with Blood. XVI.—Barbarian Lies. XVII.—Humanity Forever.

Vol. 2: Chapter I.—Gullibility. II.—Mental Epidemics. III.—The South Sea Bubble. IV.—The Mississippi Scheme. V.—The Crusades. VI.—The Trance Epidemic. VII.—Fascination. VIII.—Religious Revivals. IX.—Clairvoyance. X.—The Witchcraft Madness. XI.—Modern Witchcraft. XII.—Mediumship a Wide-spread Epidemic. XIII.—Psychometry and "Deadheads." XIV.—The Contagious Dance of Death. XIV.—And What Then? XVI.—Science.

TWO VOLUMES IN ONE. PRICE $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Ingersoll Catechised:

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies $1; 100 copies $3. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

THE MAGNIFICENT

COLORED LITHOGRAPHS

—OF THE—

D. M. BENNETT MONUMENT.

PRINTED IN SEVEN COLORS ON THE BEST LITHOGRAPH PAPER, SIZE, 22½ x 28½.

THE BRONZE MEDALLION

PRINTS AS LARGE AS A CABINET PHOTOGRAPH, THUS GIVING NOT ONLY A PICTURE OF THE MONUMENT, BUT AN ACCURATE

LIKENESS OF D. M. BENNETT.

The lithograph is designed for framing, and will be a treasure for all Liberals.

Sent, postpaid, and securely wrapped, to subscribers to the Monument Fund for 30 cents; to others, 50 cents. Address this office.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, with Sixty-seven Engravings, Preface, and Notes.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.
Zadig; or, Fate.
The Sage and the Atheist.
The Princess of Babylon.
Tho Man of Forty Crowns.
The Huron; or, The Pupil of Nature.
Micromegas.
The World as it Goes.
The Black and the White.
Memnom the Philosopher.
Andres Des Touches at Siam.
The Study of Nature.
A Conversation With a Chinese.
Plato's Dream.
A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.
An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, 4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00

A PHOTOGRAPH

OF THE BIBLE'S FLAT EARTH AND SOLID HEAVEN.

A Picture of the world as described in Genesis, with the texts of the Bible teaching the doctrin, and the passages from profane writer supporting it. Price 25 cents

---

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail:

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study, the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy. The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

REPLY

TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S

"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."

By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

GOLDEN THRONE

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA.

INCLUDING

Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.

Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

TRAVELS IN FAITH,

From Tradition to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

Poetry.

"Getting Religion."

Once a woman, low in languor,
Moaned in melancholy clangor
To the titled God of glory,
Singing sadly from the Psalter,
Till the organ's tuneful thunder
Filled her frantic brain with wonder,
While the rest in reeling gesture
Mingled madly round the altar.

While the torpid air is tainting,
In this chamber foul, now fainting,
She beholds in glaring glitter,
Looming up in lurid luster,
Heaven's glowing angels gleaming,
With their brazen faces beaming,
And her savior, wrapped in splendor,
In a burning, bloody cluster.

"I," said he, "from sphere supernal
Come to save you from infernal
Regions of the earth's interior,
Through the gilding power of grace.
Mountains now on mountains crashing
Indicate that earth is dashing
From its orbit, and will wabble
O'er the boundary line of space."

Still in saddest sorrow sobbing,
Still her burning bosom throbbing,
She awoke, but floods of madness
Tossed her simple mind insane,
And these gory gods and devils
Still about her hold their revels,
Marching mighty hosts of heaven
O'er the spectrum of her brain.

Thus our common superstitions
With their fancied apparitions,
Blighting, blinding human reason,
Drive mankind through death's dark portals.
Thus the fiery fiends of fancy
In nocturnal necromancy,
Bringing tidings from perdition,
Maim the minds of many mortals.

Osceola Mills, Pa. WM. SCOTT.

Book Notices.

MISTAKES OF MODERN INFIDELS. Comprising Evidences of Christianity and a Complete Answer to Colonel Ingersoll. By Rev. Father Northgraves, Parkhill, Ontario.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of August 22d this book was alluded to as the work of a Roman Catholic humbug. Mr. Northgraves takes exception to being styled a Catholic humbug and feels convinced that an impartial reading would command a more respectful consideration. To that end he has forwarded to this office a copy of his book. It is "presented to E. M. Macdonald, Esq., Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, with the author's respectful compliments." The work is humbly dedicated "to the Right Reverend John Walsh, D.D., Bishop of London, Ont., Canada," and is prefaced with a "Letter of Approbation" from that gentleman.

Mr. Northgraves opens with a warning against allowing liberty to degenerate into license, and by quoting the unfortunate remark of Madam Roland, "O Liberty! what crimes are committed in thy name!" For that sentence the priests owe Madam Roland an infinit debt of gratitude. They could not very well get along without it. As to license, perhaps the best illustration of the contrast between it and liberty is afforded when we see Freethinkers exercising their liberty to tell what they know, and priests, under license of the church, forever telling us what they do not know.

It seems impossible for a Christian to be fair. Hear what Mr. Northgraves has to say:

"I doubt if among those who professedly propagate Christianity there is any class who hav sunk so low as the Infidel high priests, the New York propagandists of Infidelity, whose barefaced propagandism also of immorality obliged the United States government to step in to arrest their proceedings."

This statement is impregnated with falsehood from the first word to the last. Infidelity has no high priests; the New York Infidel propagandists never propagated immorality; and Anthony Comstock, who persecuted D. M. Bennett, is not by any means the "United States government," though it is true that he used a "befouled bench" as his tool. Again, we would ask Mr. Northgraves to point to a leading Infidel who has "sunk so low" as the London clergymen who, while "professedly propagating Christianity," bought twelve-year-old girls of procuresses to satisfy their beastly lusts. A priest may falsify with impunity while in the pulpit; when he rushes into print he is liable to be tripped. But accusation and punishment do not always prove guilt. Socrates was accused of "corrupting the morals of youth," and Jesus Christ was executed as a malefactor. Mr. Northgraves, however, defends or apologizes for the Jewish law which made the teaching of error an offense punishable by death, and would therefore consider the crucifixion justifiable under the circumstances.

We cannot follow Mr. Northgraves through his book, as to do so would require as much space as he has occupied. One of his loose methods of dealing with figures, however, may serve as an indication of what reliance is to be placed upon the rest. Speaking of the increase of the Israelites in Egypt, Colonel Ingersoll said:

"Every sensible man knows that this [the scriptural] account is not and cannot be true. We know that seventy people could not increase to three millions in two hundred and fifteen years."

To this Mr. Northgraves opposes the following from THE TRUTH SEEKER of Nov. 29, 1884:

"The wonderful expansion of the church's power, through increase by immigration and the birth-rate, has made the Romish organization bold and arrogant. In fifty years it has developed from half a million of believers to nearly eight millions."

This, says our author, is rather under than over the correct estimate. As he holds that the colonel's statement is exaggerated, we will set the underestimate of the one off against the overestimate of the other. Mr. Northgraves then observes:

"According to THE TRUTH SEEKER's statement the Catholics doubled every twelve years six months, while the tribe of Dan required twelve years eight months to double. I know that it will be answered, 'But there was a large Catholic immigration during that period.' I hav not overlooked this fact in what I hav said. I appeal to the experience of every resident of every state in the union for an answer to this question: Did Catholic immigration in any year since 1834 equal one-third, or even one-fourth, of the natural increase by births? The answer to this will certainly be, No. Then I infer that if the families of the tribe of Dan were one-fourth larger than those of a Catholic of the United States, their increase would hav been much larger than it is stated by Moses to hav been. Where, then, is the impossibility? It exists only in the brains of the Infidel objectors."

In his estimate of the proportion of immigration to increase by birth-rate, Mr. Northgraves is very much in error. Take the ten years from 1860 to 1870 for an illustration. The total increase of population during that time was 7,115,050. The increase by immigration was 2,491,209, which would leave 4,623,841 births. A short sum in division will show that 2,491,209 is considerable more than one-half of 4,623,841; and therefore the rate of immigration, instead of not equaling "one-fourth the birthrate," as Mr. Northgraves erroneously reckons it, is really more than one-half. And everybody knows that the great swarms of emigrants who come to this country are Roman Catholics. They are what is popularly known as the scum of Europe, and drift into the Catholic church here as naturally as water finds its level. It is safe to say that half of them, or 1,245,600, were papists. Here, then, we hav a source of increase that is nearly sufficient to account for the growth of the Catholic church in this country.

The births hav little more than covered the loss by deaths and defections. Converts must hav been very few indeed. Mr. Northgraves will be obliged to accept the story of the wonderful increase of the tribe of Dan without attempting to explain it.

And thus it is in nearly every case where Mr. Northgraves has endeavored to refute "The Mistakes of Moses." He has not answered Ingersoll; he has merely replied to him, and the case rests just where the colonel left it. Meeting one passage of scripture with another, which is Mr. Northgraves's favorit method, proves only that the Bible contradicts itself.

On the whole, Mr. Northgraves has done as well as could be expected, considering that he was overmatched.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM. The Present and the Future Republic of North America. By a Capitalist. New York. The Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place. Price, $1.50.

I cannot outline the contents of this book and giv the reader an estimate of its value in ten lines or so of formal word-carpentry. If a thing is unique, and we can speak of it as good, let us make something of it.

The obituary columns of the press almost every day announce the passing over to the majority of one of a distinct type of New Yorkers. They came from New England in their youth, forty or fifty years ago, and engaged in business here when perhaps the best opportunities ever given to men to grow rich were open to them. They had imbibed the spirit of acquisitiveness with their mothers' milk, had had it encouraged by their fathers' teachings, and had been mastered by it with the development of their early ambition. New York made them rich men, and they contributed their share in making New York sordid. They are now dying off. The press is sending them away to eternity with unstinted praise. Granting that these men achieved material success, they had among them as they grew old many a skinflint, curmudgeon, killjoy, hypocrit, and narrow-minded censor. The point of their wise saws was that they erected themselvs. Their proverbs were framed to exaggerate their own merit.

Now, here comes one of the honest men of this tribe with a book. He is advanced in years, wise in experience, brainy from nature, courageous in heart. Most significant of all, he has been successful in business and is a man of wealth. He says what he thinks and speaks from his soul. And he exposes the fraud, inhumanity, and wolf-like selfishness which foster the growth of our superfluously rich under the system of competition, wages, and private property.

First, our author describes the future republic as he has seen it in a vision. It is a paradise on earth. Every city is more beautiful than boulevard Paris; the country is lovely as the garden of Eden. Government has been simplified; courts and lawyers hav been abolished; free trade is established; a cheap money passes current; laws are made and administered to the approval of all; each citizen has, as the reward of his labor, all the wealth that it is possible for mankind to enjoy; no man has power over his neighbor; nine-tenths of all crime has disappeared, for there can be no theft. The advantages of the highest civilization are extended to every human being.

Men work but four hours a day. All work, and laborers, with no thought of care, sing and make merry while at their tasks. The young are carefully educated, two years' travel around the world completing their equipment for their life-work. The talent that nature so freely bestows is given ample opportunity for development. Rewards and honors are given to merit only, the reward of abundance to eat and wear reaching even those whose merit merely compasses common labor. Men liv to be centenarians; there is no cause to worry, none are injured by idleness, science has removed most of the causes of ill-health, intemperance is almost unknown.

The millennium has been brought about by Communism.

After describing his vision, the writer reviews our present civilization in the United States. With the full knowledge of one whose experience has brought him into frequent intercourse with things as they are, he considers the effects of our "school-boy" farming, our "hit-and-miss" production, our ludicrous politics, our hard money, our legislativ mills, our stock-jobbing and railroad rings, our mercantil sharpers, our enslaved wage-workers, our social castes, etc. No discontented, jealous, unsuccessful man could depict the results of the established order of affairs in more striking colors. Every phase of life, our author believes, is marred by our system of private property, and facts to support his views are brought forward on every page of his work. He treats his subject from the standpoint of first principles, and in chapter after chapter disposes of much that our youth are taught to accept as right or wise—law founded on force, property acquired from other men's labor, sham charities, selfish patriotism, business morality, and the like.

Believing with Mr. Mill that the Communists hav "a case for trial," the author proposes the organizing of communities on a strictly Communistic basis. If at first successful, he thinks they would soon "dot the earth," and that they would eventually take the place of society as now organized. Our author is a Communist rather than a Socialist. He quotes frequently from writers on Communism, but he does not seem to be familiar with the principles of Socialism as put forward by the German authorities on that question. Perhaps his book is the more interesting from the fact that he writes as an American dealing with America.

I do not know but that I shall tear out a few pages from my copy of this book—those dealing with "morality and religion." The matter is extraneous. I wish to lend the book to some people whose prejudices are in favor of the Christian religion, and they, with the irrationality of the human kind, may reject all the teachings of the book because of their ire at what it says contra their cherished way to salvation.

The plain style of the author must be noticed as a feature of the work. It is refreshing. While literary finish would apparently be his least care, his attention to a complete expression of his ideas is apparent. If he is at times diffuse, he stops short of loquacity. If his syntax is occasionally uncertain, the thought is there. If his sentences are not marshaled in rhythmical order, they follow the sequence of connected narrativ. If the phraseology is not at every point selected from classic English, it at least possesses the significance of colloquialism or the directness of homely vernacular. He has given the world a work of high merit, and it will raise much thought.—J. W. S. in John Swinton's Paper.

This book takes bold ground against individual title to property, and, as its name indicates, proposes collectiv or communal ownership of everything. The author holds that "Association in Equality" is the only method by which mankind can dwell peacefully and harmoniously together on the earth. The fruits which he claims would appear upon the abolition of the present system of individual property, and the introduction in its stead of his plan, are happiness and contentment on every hand, and a total absence of poverty and want. He insists that there would be neither self-aggrandizement nor self-abasement, but all would associate upon terms of mutual respect and equality. Intemperance, wantonness, slothfulness, injustice, and evil of every kind would disappear, and mankind would reach that altitude of human possibility in which the soul may rest in peace. There would be trust and confidence, respect and affection, in place of the present distrust and suspicion, and existing selfishness and oppression. These results he would bring about by education and the development of men upward in a progressiv order. He does not propose bloodshed, but peace; not a sword, but patient effort to accomplish his designs for the good of his fellow-men. But it is insisted that if we go on as we are going, our children will inherit conditions which will involve them in unutterable woes. He would prevent the transmission of such an estate of misery. "I know well," he says, "that many, yes, probably the greater portion of mankind at the present day will regard such a work as I hav written with indifference, contempt, or abhorrence, perhaps all of these. I shall be charged, no doubt, with the 'sowing of dragons' teeth,' as others hav been before me, but this matters little. No, write me, if it so please you, as a society-disturber, an ignoramus, or a madman, but write me withal 'as one who loves his fellow-men.'" No fair-minded reader of the book will fail to recognize in it a spirit of love and good-will to men, however he may disagree with the author. It is well written, and the portrayals of strife and poverty are drawn with graphic fidelity to truth, while the pictures of the good time coming, as he thinks, are indeed attractiv, whether or not they are attainable. It is a book worth reading by all who like to keep up with the radicalism of the property and social questions.—Day Star.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By WILLIAM MCDONNELL, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages, $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

THE RISE OF

INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY

From Thales to Copernicus.

By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $3.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE

PROBLEM OF THE UNIVERSE,

AND

Its Scientific Solution,

WITH SOME

CRITICISMS OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Price 20 cents. For sale at this office.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

MONKS, POPES,
AND
THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.

Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.

Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

A NEW BOOK!
By Andrew Jackson Davis,
entitled
Beyond the Valley
a sequel to the
MAGIC STAFF
An Autobiography of
Andrew Jackson Davis.

Six Illustrations Picturing what Mr. Davis says he has seen.

"Beyond the Valley" is a record of events and scenes in his private and public career, beginning where the Magic Staff ends, and bringing his psychological and private experiences truthfully up to the present day. This attractive volume will interest thousands who hav never read his preceding works. It will answer the ever-recurring questions concerning remarkable events in Mr. Davis's private life, and fully explains his various public labors for mankind.

"Beyond the Valley" is a companion volume to the "Magic Staff," and resembles it in style of workmanship—in paper, press-work, binding, etc. 408 pages. Price, $1.50.

For Sale by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORKS OF DR. W. F. EVANS.

The Primitiv Mind-Cure. The Nature and Power of Faith; or, Elementary Lessons in Transcendental Medicin. This work is a complete exposition of principles underlying the system of mental healing. It contains a full course of instruction in the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure. Price $1.50.

The Divine Law of Cure. A standard work on the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure, a reliable text-book in all the schools of mental healing. No work has ever been written of more practical value to physicians of all schools. The book is the result of the extensiv learning and research of the author, and exhibits a familiarity with the literature of the subject. It is profoundly religious without being offensivly dogmatic. It has been received with universal favor by all who are seeking light on the subject on which it treats—the cure of disease in ourselvs and others by mental and spiritual agencies. Price $1.50.

Mental Medicin. A Theoretical and Practical Treatis on Medical Psychology. This book contains a full exposition of the nature and laws of magnetism, and its application to the cure of disease. Price $1.25.

Soul and Body; or, The Spiritual Science of Health and Disease. Price $1.00.

The Mental Cure, illustrating the Influence of the Mind on the Body both in Health and Disease, and the Psychological Method of Treatment. Price $1.50.

All the above books sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

A COMMON SENSE
GUIDE TO CORRECT ENGLISH;
IN WHICH THE
DECLENSION OF THE NOUN
AND THE
CONJUGATION OF THE VERB

Are superseded by a few simple rules; and comprising the most rational and progressiv views of the best grammarians of the 19th century.

By J. L. BARKER,
Author of "An Improvement on I. J. Morris's Grammar."

PRICE, - - - - 35 CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth
TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Price, $2. 33 Clinton Place, New York

PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,
WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

Man. Whence and Whither.

By R. B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,
Author of "The Bible.—Whence and What?

About all that can be said for the existence of God and the future life of man, is here pungently presented, with an incidental discussion of many collateral questions, from a rationalistic standpoint.

1 vol, cloth. Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

St. Matthew Before the Court on a Charge of Forgery.

BY SECULARIST.

Price, 10 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TO APPEAR IMMEDIATELY.
MOSES BEFORE THE COURT.
By the same Author.

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the Bible Exposed.
BY O. B. WHITFORD. M.D.

Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.

SECOND EDITION.

Price, 25 Cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY
John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY
BETTER THAN
Eternal Punishment.

BY M. BABCOCK.

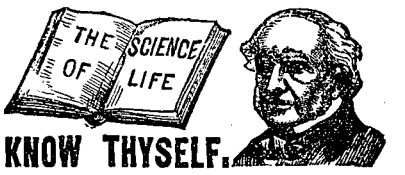
The subjects discussed in this finely-printed pamphlet are, besides the title above given, Satan and Hades, Some Reasons Why I am Not a Christian, Divinity of the Bible, Theological Logic, Preachers are Not Honest, Preachers Sometimes Differ, Infant Damnation, Prayer, The Cloak of Charity, The Clergy were Afraid, No Fear of Being Damned, But What are We to Do? But Why Should I Be Damned? Why Not Pray for the Damned? Conclusion.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
A HISTORICAL SKETCH.

By G. F. RINEHART. Price 25 cts.



Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
POPULAR JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.

Headquarters for Fine Goods in the line of Genuin Diamonds; Fine Gold and Silver Watches; Chains; Bracelets; Wedding and Presentation Rings; Jewelry of Latest style; Gold Pens; Silverware; Optical and Fancy Goods; 3 ounce Coin Silver Elgin Watch, $10; 4 ounce, Full Jeweled, Adjusted Pat. Regulator Stem Wind, $22; this same, fine movement, in best gold filled case, $35; with cheap movement, $25. Ladies' Solid Gold Elgin stem wind watches, $20, $24, and $32—14 karat, upward. Watches cleaned, finest work in the world, $1. Springs, $1, and returned per. reg. mail or ex., paid one way. Work for the trade at reduced rates and agents sending work once a week from every state in the Union are making lots of money. Best spectacles in the world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back on demand. Try me! OTTO WETTSTEIN.

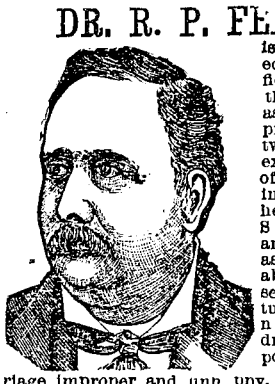
Patentee of Wettstein's New Freethought Badge. The most beautiful badge ever placed upon the market. Immense sale. Elegant present for Lady or Gent. Solid gold, $3; $3.50; extra heavy, $4; with diamond, artistically enameled, $10.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. ONLY $1.
BY MAIL POST-PAID.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.



The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14

HEAL THYSELF

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y8

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co., N.Y.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

WHY DON'T HE LEND A HAND
AND OTHER POEMS.

By S. P. PUTNAM, Author of Ingersoll and Jesus, Prometheus, Golden Throne, Waifs and Wanderings, Problems of the Universe, etc.

CONTENTS: Why Don't He Lend a Hand? The Golden Age, The Ideal and the Real, Not Dead but Living, Fruition, Hope, Thomas Paine, Nature's Gospel, Address to Deity, Giv us Light (Holdreth's poem often recited by Charles Watts).

PRICE 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

IMMORTALITY INHERENT IN NATURE.
BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.
Price, 60 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, N. Y

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

Gems of Thought.

THERE are times when change is really rapid, so rapid that the character of it cannot be mistaken; times when a Rip Van Winkle, who went to sleep in his youth, would awake in manhood to find himself in a world remade, all habits altered, all the most cherished opinions swept away as in a whirlwind. Some violent convulsion may hav done it—a Reformation or a French Revolution shaking society like an earthquake—or the same effect may hav been produced more quietly by a swift, silent operation, as if mankind had broken suddenly from the anchorage, and were hurried away by some irresistible current from all their bearings and associations.—Froude's Science and Theology.

A CERTAIN degree of labor and exertion seems to hav been allotted us by providence, as the condition of humanity. "In the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat bread." This is a curse which has proved a blessing in disguise. And those favored few who, by their rank or their riches, are exempted from all exertion hav no reason to be thankful for the privilege. It was the observation of this necessity that led the ancients to say that the gods sold us everything, but gave us nothing.—Colton's Lacon.

SIR, I am a true laborer; I earn that I eat, get that I wear; owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness; glad of other men's good, content with my harm; and the greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze and my lambs suck.—Shakspere's As You Like It, Act 3 Scene 2

A COUNTRY lad is my degree,
An' few there be that ken me, O,
But what care I how few they be?
I'm welcome, aye, to Nannie, O.

My riches, a' 's my penny fee,
An' I maun guide it cannie, O;
But warl's gear ne'er troubles me,
My thoughts are a' my Nannie, O.

Our auld guidman delights to view
His sheep an' kye thrive bonnie, O,
But I'm as blithe that haud's his pleugh,
An' hav nae care but Nannie, O.
—Burns's My Nannie, O.

JUDGED by the canons either of common sense or of science, which are, indeed, one and the same, all "miracles" are centaurs, or they would not be miracles, and men of sense and science will deal with them on the same principles. No one who wishes to keep well within the limits of that which he has a right to assert will affirm that it is impossible that the sun and moon should ever hav been made to appear to stand still in the valley of Ajalon; or that the walls of a city should hav fallen down at a trumpet blast, or that water was turned into wine, because such events are contrary to uniform experience, and violate laws of nature. For aught he can prove to the contrary, such events may appear in the order of nature to-morrow. But common sense and common honesty alike oblige him to demand from those who would hav him believe in the actual occurrence of such events, evidence of a cogency proportionate to their departure from probability; evidence, at least, as strong as that which the man who says he has seen a centaur is bound to produce, unless he is content to be thought either more than credulous or less than honest.—Huxley's Hume.

THERE is not to be found, in all history, any miracle attested by a sufficient number of men of such unquestioned goodness, education, and learning as to secure us against all delusion in themselvs, of such undoubted integrity as to place them beyond all suspicion of any design to deceive others, of such credit and reputation in the eyes of mankind as to hav a great deal to lose in case of their being detected in any falsehood, and at the same time attesting facts, performed in such a public manner, and in so celebrated a part of the world as to render the detection unavoidable, all which circumstances are requisit to giv us a full assurance of the testimony of men.—Hume's Essay on Miracles.

IT is not every man that can afford to wear a shabby coat, and worldly wisdom dictates to her disciples the propriety of dressing somewhat beyond their means, but of living somewhat within them, for everyone sees how we dress, but none see how we liv, except we choose to let them. But the truly great are, by universal suffrage, exempted from these trammels, and may liv or dress as they please.—Colton's Lacon.

GIV every man thine ear, but few thy voice;
Take each man's censure, but reserve thy judgment.
Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not expressed in fancy; rich, not gawdy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man,
And they in France of the best rank and station
Are most select and generous, chief in that.
Neither a borrower nor a lender be;
For loan oft loses both itself and friend,
And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.
—Shakspere's Hamlet, Act 1, Scene 3.

"DO you every read the Bible?" said Margery. "Not often now. I hav read it." "And how did it strike you?" "I believe it is a collection of very remarkable books, written by various remarkable men—enthusiasts chiefly." "Hav you ever studied the evidences for their inspiration, and weighed both sides?" "I cannot say that I hav," said Hugh, smiling. "Would it not be worth the trouble to study them, praying all the time that if there be a God," said Margery, shuddering at her own words, "he will reveal the truth about them to you?" "I am afraid of being duped. I hav suffered so much. I hav gone down into such depths—if there be a God he forsook me. I am afraid of coming to a false conclusion, and having it all over again. I tell you, I did pray, and it was all of no use, and worse, because it misled me." "Go to a clergyman." "Heaven defend me! No, thank you, I'll fight my own battles. I am beyond the help of any parson."—Margery, A Study.

DEATH only arrives gracious to such as sit in darkness, or lie heavy-burdened with grief and errors; to the poor Christian that sits bound in the galley; to the despairful widows, pension prisoners, and deposed kings; to them whose fortune runs back, and whose spirits mutiny; unto such death is a redeemer, and the grave a place for retiredness and rest.—Bacon's Essays.

To the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York:

The Constitution of our State guarantees that "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State to all mankind." The general principle of American Government is equality of all men before the law. This, as Your Honorable Body is aware, involves the principle, already acknowledged in theory, of the Total Separation of Church and State. But Church and State are now practically united by the following statutes:

1. The law exempting Church Property from Taxation.

2. The laws appropriating Money from the Public Treasury for the support of Institutions founded and managed chiefly by Sectarian Denominations.

3. The law compelling the Observance of Sunday as a religious holy day.

The undersigned, Citizens of the State of New York, do therefore respectfully but earnestly petition Your Honorable Body to repeal all the laws or parts of laws of this State which are violations of the above principles. Our reasons for asking this are:

1. The Churches are voluntary associations properly to be supported by the voluntary contributions of their members. 2. The State is compulsory. Every citizen must pay taxes. And we submit that it is unjust to a large and growing body of voters to be compelled to pay for the support of Churches which they cannot conscientiously attend; for the hire of Ministers in our Legislature and Public Institutions, in whose doctrines they are unable to believe; and to observe as holy a day to them no more sacred than any other. We also submit that the exemption of Churches from taxation, the appropriation of money for the hire of Ministers and the support of Sectarian Institutions, and the Legal observance of Sunday as a holy day, are discriminations in favor of one form of religion, are abridgments of the free exercise of religious preferences, and are therefore unconstitutional.

NAMES.	RESIDENCE.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5	Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17	The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The National Liberal League,	28	The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41	The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45	Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50	Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55	Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62	Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65	A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69	1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardener,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,	Elizabeth Cady Stanton,	J. D. Shaw,

Gottlieb: His Life. A romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written by S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By Mrs. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office

Odds and Ends.

DR TALMAGE addressed an audience at Belfast recently numbering forty thousand persons, many of whom escaped in safety.—Philadelphia Press.

SINCE the revision of the Old Testament, the "Christian scientists" are now of the opinion that the low price of mutton caused Abel to commit suicide, and that Cain was wrongfully accused of murder.

THE girl who yearns to be stylish is now anxiously inquiring how to cultivate freckles.—Boston Globe. They are sometimes produced by the sun—but they must spell it with a u. A sun spelled otherwise will not do.

UNDOUBTEDLY God could hav made something meaner than the sneak who runs in debt for one or more year's subscription, and then refuses to take his paper from the office—but so far as man knows God never did.—Ex.

"WHAT'S the first thing you would do, Jones, if you were stung by a hornet?" asked Smith, who had been reading an article on the treatment of stings. "Swear," replied Jones, solemnly. And the conversation abruptly closed.

JUDGE (to darkey witness): "Do you know the nature of an oath?" Witness: "Sah." Judge: "Do you know what you are to swear to?" Witness: "Yes sah. I'm to sw'ar to tell de truf." Judge: "And what will happen if you do not tell it?" Witness: "I spec's our side'll win de case, sah."

"MR. DUSENBERRY, I don't see how you, as a Christian man, can go to these base-ball matches." "Why, my dear?" "Oh, there's such outrageous things going on! It's a wonder the police allow it!" "To what do you refer, my love?" "To yesterday's game, which, no doubt, didn't differ from any of the others. The paper here says that they knocked the pitcher all over the field. It's absolutely brutal?"

MINISTER (to deacon of the church): "I want to refer to a matter, my dear deacon, that has been preying on my mind for some time. I am sure you will overlook any apparent meddling in your affairs, knowing that I only speak for your own good." Deacon (cordially): "Certainly, my dear sir, speak your mind freely." Minister: "I understand you hav been speculating a good deal of late. Now, aside from the danger of such a business and the consequent misery it may entail upon your family do you consider it just the proper thing for a deacon of the——" Deacon: "Yes, I admit that I hav been speculating some. I cleared $5,000 only yesterday on a wheat transaction." Minister (astounded): "No, is that so? What's wheat worth to-day?"

LET HIM GO.

Now let Mars Jesus take me erway,
Good Lawd, I wanter go home;
Take me up ter de jedgment day,
Good Lawd, I wanter go home.
I uphol's de Bible an' I keeps down de flesh,
Good Lawd, I wanter go home;
'Specially de hog meat when it's sorter fresh,
Good Lawd, I wanter go home.

Oh, yas, good Lawd, I wanter go home,
Wants to put my head on de Good Man's breast;
Doan' wanter stay here wid sinners for ter roam,
But wants de 'possum gravy o' everlastin' rest.
An' er glory ter de Good Man, de Good Man,
De Good Man dat sets up in de sky.

Dat gloyus place doan' seem so fur,
Good Lawd, I wanter go home;
An' I specks dat I's got a wife or two der,
Good Lawd, I wanter go home.
When I gets up dar dunner which one to claim,
Good Lawd, I wanter go home;
For way up dar all de wimmin is de same,
Good Lawd, I wanter go home.

Oh, yas, good Lawd, I wanter go home,
Wants to put my head on de Good Man's breast;
Doan' wanter stay heah wid sinners for ter roam,
But wants de 'possum gravy o' everlastin' rest.
An' er glory ter de Good Man, de Good Man,
De Good Man dat sets up in de sky.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 46. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, November 14, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

ONE of the Indian names of Boston, as recently described by Professor Horsford, was "Great kill mouth."

THE president of Dartmouth College vetoes the opening of the library reading-room to students on Sunday afternoon.

W. C. BRYANT has been expelled from the Ithaca Masonic Lodge in North Star, Mich., because he proclaimed himself an Agnostic.

A JAPANESE court has just set an example to civilization by fining an editor twenty-seven yen for neglecting to acknowledge the source of extracts clipped from a contemporary.

CANON FARRAR says that "not only in the Inquisition, but in the Puritan sternness of Calvin, there is exhibited an intolerance that has doomed his dogmas to the general abhorrence of mankind."

FERDINAND WARD, according to the Boston Transcript, received his financial education at church fairs where returns of two or three thousand per cent. on the original investments are not thought at all remarkable.

A MAN living at Red Wing, Minn., has a pair of golden candlesticks which he says he dug out of an Indian mound at Waukesha, Wis., and which he thinks are the golden candlesticks which formed part of the decoration of Solomon's temple.

IN France female medical students are to be admitted to the hospitals on the same terms as the male students. Sixty students are said to be "rejoicing in the victory," and among them one young negro lady, reported as one of the most zealous students in Paris.

THE history of a Vermont mountain town is thus epitomized by a good observer: "The early settlers cleared up good farms and the children got rich from them. The grandchildren ran them down, and loaded the town with debts. The next generation skipped away to the West."

ONE mother in Wilkesbarre, who discovered that her daughter was being taught physiology and hygiene, not long since, addressed the following note to her teacher: "Dear Miss ——: I don't want my daughter to be taught about her insides. It isn't right, and I don't like it.—Yours truly, Mrs. ——."

A NUMBER of colored children who had previously witnessed a baptizing took one of their number, three years old, in Columbia, La., some days ago, and immersed him in a pond until they were tired of playing at the mock ceremony. The unfortunate little fellow died a few hours after he was found, weak and exhausted, near the pond.

A MAN who tried farming in Montana for two years gathered together his goods and chattels, consisting mainly of a wife, nine tow-headed children, and six lean dogs, and got himself thence. He left the following lines on the door of his dug-out:

"250 Feet to Water.
50 Miles to Fuel.
6 Inches to Hell.
God Bless Our Home."

A MAN who used to preach the gospel in the settlements has written to a friend in Eureka, Nev., that he is running a bar in Ulada, Montana, and that his partner is Vaughn, an old-timer from California, who used to deal faro in Colorado, and was sent to the penitentiary for burglary. "He is a good gambling man," declares his ex-clerical partner, in a burst of admiration, and he adds, by way of personal vindication, "Selling whisky pays better than preaching, and besides, it is no harder work."

IN printing the portrait of D. M. Bennett in the Melbourne, Australia, Liberator, the editor says: "D. M. Bennett, the subject of this week's portrait, was a most ardent worker in the Freethought movement, and a real martyr to our cause. I met him in London in the summer of 1880, and hoped to renew my acquaintance with him in America at some time or other; but, alas! Mr. Bennett died shortly after, worn out by hard work and suffering inflicted by the bigots. Now he is beyond their reach, although his life's work has permanently damaged their superstition. A large monument has been erected by one thousand Freethinkers to the memory of Mr. Bennett, in New York, the scene of his life's work, and where he founded THE TRUTH SEEKER, a paper that possesses a wonderful influence in America."

THE Bishop of Durham thinks disestablishment would be ruinous. His salary is something like twelve thousand a year. But, says the lofty-minded Father in God, "My alarm would be mitigated could I look forward to any form of really earnest Christianity being the gainer. But I cannot. The residuary legatees, I cannot doubt, would be irreligion and Atheism." Dr. Lightfoot, says the London Freethinker, is one of the few learned men left in the Church of England, and his studies hav made him acquainted with the extent to which Christianity is undermined.

POPE LEO has taken up his favorit autumn amusement, lark-catching in the Vatican Gardens. According to a description given by the correspondent of the Independence Belge, this sport seems strangely cruel. Numbers of fine singing larks, it is said, are blinded with a red-hot needle, and concealed in cages in a fine laurel grove, where flocks of larks fly across from seaward during their autumn migrations. The blind songsters decoy their fellows by their loud strains, and nets are then deftly dropped over the unlucky birds attracted. The pope himself often extricates the birds, and kills them in the approved fashion by crushing their heads between thumb and finger.

THE bitter feeling raised in England against Mr. Bradlangh on account of his heretical views is sought to be extended to the Positivists in general. The Rev. W. Macdonald Sinclair, Vicar of St. Stephen's, Westminster, has issued a sermon to the Christians of Westminster against "a new form of Infidelity, that of the Positivists, a name which probably none of you ever heard before these last few weeks." Vicar Sinclair, comments Mr. Bradlaugh, ought to know the exact measure of ignorance of his own parishioners, otherwise we should hav imagined it impossible that Auguste Comte and his philosophy had never even been heard of in Westminster until Professor Beesley had issued his parliamentary address.

M. MEISSONIER is enthusiastically devoted to the memory of his father, of whom he will talk for hours. He is very fond, too, of his children, and they of him. To his grandchildren he is a patron saint. But they hav little regard for his work as an artist. He told me how Mr. Knight gave one of them, on her birthday, a beautiful white satin fan, and how he offered to paint a little picture upon it. The ten-year-old maiden was highly indignant. "I just guess you won't do any such thing, grandpa," she exclaimed. "I don't want my nice fan dirtied up with your old paints!" "Thus," said the great artist, "the child scorned what an empress would hav prized. Which is right, I wonder—the child or the empress?"—Ex.

THE Christian Register says: "In reply to the question of the Independent, Rev. Dr. Talbot W. Chambers, of the Reformed (also Calvinistic) church, briefly said that he had known at least one Jew whose character was such that he could not doubt that he was saved, and he had no reason to doubt that there were other such cases. Our Hebrew brethren will be grateful for this kindly concession of Dr. Chambers. It is reassuring to know that at least one Jew has been saved. When we consider that the Hebrew nation is as innumerable as the sands on the seashore, this seems but a small grain of comfort; but as Dr. Chambers has no reason to doubt that there are other such cases, there is an opportunity here for the development of a large degree of hope. It is interesting to note that Dr. Chambers's confidence of the salvation of this Hebrew seems to hav been founded simply upon a knowledge of his character. Does the doctor incline to the belief of the Christian Register, that salvation here and hereafter depends upon character? If it works well in the case of the Jew, there seems to be no reason why it should not work well in other cases."

THERE are lots of stories told of queer witnesses, and how they take the oath. The Denver Tribune relates that the other day a bright young boy appeared upon a Denver witness stand, and one of the lawyers thought him rather young to understand the nature of an oath. So he began to question him. Said he: "Do you understand the nature of an oath?" The boy replied that he did. "Do you know what will be the consequence if, after taking the oath, you tell a lie?" "Yes, sir." "What will happen if you tell a lie after taking the oath?" "I'll hav to pay the costs, I suppose," said the boy.

ON "The New Criticism" the Interior says: "The same blood circulates from Genesis to Revelation. It is the one book. He who makes Moses a myth makes Christ an impostor. He who denies the Mosaic authorship and the inspiration of the Pentateuch denies the authenticity of the gospel and the divinity of our Lord. But we are told that the Bible must be tested as to its authentlcity as other books are Granted. But when Sir Walter Scott avowed himself the author of the Waverly novels, there was an end of guesses and speculations. Plausible arguments might hav been suggested for attributing the authorship of some of them to others. But the world had confidence in Sir Walter's veracity. His word settled the matter. And why should not the word of Christ settle the question as to who wrote the Pentateuch? What are all our petty canons of criticism when weighed against his word? Not one scholar in a hundred can test for himself the grounds on which Wellhausen bases his conclusions. But all of us can read in our New Testaments what Christ said about the Jewish scriptures; about David and the Psalms; about Moses and the prophets; and that is enough for us." The Interior is more Christian than enlightened, for if Christ's messiahship is staked on the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch, we fear but few would now accept it.

A FRIEND of the New York Sun's in Brooklyn asks: "1. What, according to law is gambling? 2. Would it be against any existing law to hav a wheel of fortune in a church fair, if not money but small articles can be won?" That journal responds: A good definition of gambling or gaming is playing at cards, faro, or any other game of chance for money or other valuable thing. Under our Penal Code a person who exacts or receives money or anything of value won under such circumstances forfeits five times the value of the money or thing received, to be recovered in a civil action. The second query brings up the question whether a church raffle or wheel of fortune is a lottery. A lottery is defined in the Penal Code as "a scheme for the distribution of property by chance among persons who hav paid or agreed to pay a valuable consideration for the chance, whether called a lottery, raffle, or gift enterprise, or by some other name;" and contriving or drawing a lottery, or assisting therein, is unlawful and punishable by fine and imprisonment. For many years lotteries hav been discountenanced in this state. The Constitution prohibits them, and the Revised Statutes contain many provisions against them. The fact that small articles are given by lot instead of money does not evade the inhibition. The test as to whether a scheme is a lottery or not, as laid down by the Court of Appeals in 1884, is this: Does the holder of the ticket run the risk of loss? In case a prize is not drawn, will his money be lost and no return be had? If the purchaser receives a valuable thing for his money, as, for instance, a bond and an additional sum depending upon a contingency, which is to be decided by lot or chance, then it is not a lottery, because in any event he can recover the value of his bond, subject to the fluctuation of the market. But it is clear that this church raffle business is entirely illegal. It may be, however, that the law might be evaded by placing in the wheel of fortune as many prizes as there are tickets issued and sold.

News of the Week.

JOSH BILLINGS left an estate worth $100,000.

THE grand total of the Grant monument fund is about $97,000.

JUDGE CARDOZO, a famous New York lawyer, died on the 8th, aged 57.

DEACON TABER has won his suit for divorce against his wife, seduced by Pastor Downs.

A GERMAN woman living near Toledo, O., recently became the mother of five boys at once.

THERE were eight cases of small-pox in this city last week. An epidemic would not be unexpected.

RIEL, the Canadian rebel, sentenced to be hanged on Tuesday, the 11th, has been respited until the 16th.

CHIEF JUSTICE HAYES, of Utah, has just sentenced eight polygamists to the full punishment of the law.

SEVERAL women endeavored to vote at the late election in New York, but their suffrages were not accepted.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND went to church last Sunday, and Dr. Sunderland preached a sermon to him on reform.

THE Rev. Steve Merritt, defeated candidate for senator, is now sued by a ticket-pedler for his wages on election day.

JOHN MCCULLOUGH, the tragedian, died at Philadelphia on Sunday. He was 48 years old, and was of Irish birth.

THEY are having a great strike at Galveston, Texas, the commerce of the port having been almost suspended for a week.

LAST Sunday was temperance day in the Episcopal church. Temperance sermons were preached in over one thousand pulpits.

THE death-rate in Montreal from small-pox is thought to be decreasing. Last Friday there were forty deaths and thirty new cases discovered.

REPORT of the commissioners of education, just rendered, shows that the whole number of immigrants landed at this port during the year ending June 30, 1885, was 356,906.

THE pope has written an important encyclical letter, in which he endeavors to define the dangers of society. He condemns the liberty of the press and universal suffrage.

THE Rev. Mr. Meeker was taking some exercise in a gymnasium at Bethlehem, Pa., one day last week, when he suddenly fell and expired, it is supposed, with heart disease.

MR. MANTON MARBLE has just returned from Europe, whither it is said he was sent by President Cleveland to endeavor to promote a bimetallic union with other leading nations.

EMIL KIESEWETTER, state auditor of Ohio, fired two shots at W. J. Elliott, editor of the Sunday Capitol, at Columbus last Saturday. The editor was hit in the thumb. The auditor was arrested.

M. BARTHOLDI, the sculptor who made the statue of Liberty which France presented to this country, is now in New York. He has looked at the pedestal prepared for the statue, and pronounces it good.

THE Rev. Mr. Downs, the gay Boston clergyman, had the nerve to remind his congregation last Sunday that they owe him eight months' salary. The church will try Mr. Downs this month for immorality.

A VERDICT has been found against Editor Stead of the Pall Mall Gazette, in the Eliza Armstrong case. The London papers now call loudly for the suppression of Mr. Bramwell of the "pestiferous Salvation Army."

THE Methodist Episcopal missionary conference has voted to appropriate about $200,000 to missions in Buenos Ayres, China, and Europe. This sum will not convert more than a dozen or so of heathen, but it will furnish a soft living to several able-bodied Methodist shouters.

Communications and Selections.

Should Silver Be Demonetized?

"Should silver be demonetized?" Of course not. Why should it? Can anyone tell? There is no proof that it shall be; much less that it should be. (I am speaking from a world, not from a national, standpoint.) Though there is a power "among ourselvs" that may desire to work this unrighteousness, there is also a power in ourselvs that, working in unison with the "power not ourselvs that makes for righteousness," will thwart this evil design. Science, truth, and the right hav become too strong for empiricism, error, and wrong. The reign of science has begun. Science and truth to the front; let the rest retire, with or without pension, only so that we may get rid of them. "Enlightened self-interest" even will carry us thus far.

So much by way of preface, and as a ground for justifying consent to discuss the question at all. The other side assumes the affirmativ. Prima facie the case is all one way. Silver has always been used as money. We might rest here until the plaintiff proves, or attempts to prove, his case, or "shows cause" why silver should be proscribed. It is understood that this is not a question between the bullionists and the anti-bullionists, but between the monometalists and the bimetalists. The general and larger question of money is not involved. Only this: So long as we use the specie-basis system, should we confine ourselvs to one metal, or use both, as we always hav done? The bankers, the creditor class, the money-mongers, the gold bugs (and their apologists) attack silver. Why? The answer goes (or comes) without saying. The question answers itself upon a moment's reflection. Selfishness, self-interest, unenlightened self-interest, is what inspires them. Their argument is therefore one-sided, biased, strained, fictitious, unprofitable. Monopoly, monopolizability, would decrease the quantity on the false pretense of increasing the quality. They catch at catchwords, and resort to chop logic. "Double standard"—ah! what a lucky chance! And they chuckle over it as a discovery of the vulnerable point in the heel of Achilles. This unfortunate ambiguity is their strong point. They catch at it as a lapsus linguæ (which it is) of their opponent. They rely not upon the merits of their cause, but upon taking advantage of a technicality, of the careless phraseology of the bimetalists, who, finding the phrase in use, inconsiderately and carelessly adopted it, but are now abandoning it. Double standard! cry the monometalists—how can there be two standards? The idea is absurd; therefore bimetalism is impossible. It does not stagger them that the bimetalists reply that bimetalism has been already the practice, the fact, of the ages; has always been not only a possibility, but an actuality. But it is not upon facts that monometalists rely, and therefore facts do not affect them. They are like the juryman, who, when he and the facts did not agree, said that it was "so much the worse for the facts."

By a play upon this phrase they sophistically glide from it into the other phrase of bimetalism, and thus attempt to make them appear as synonymous, so that by cutting off the head of the one they may seem to cut off the head of the other. They also act like children in the matter, making "double standard" their "bugaboo" in the play. They play us a farce because they hav nothing better to offer.

But bimetalism, of course, is not synonymous with double standard. It has no necessary connection with the idea even of a double standard. It means that the two metals act or serve together as a unit, much as the union of metals in the pendulum of a clock acts, the one compensating for the other in their respectiv expansion and contraction, and so preserving the stability of the length of the pendulum itself. Or as two connected reservoirs of water which are kept level with each other, and are so far made to act as one, made one by the connection or jointure, and together serve our wants. Bimetalism masses the two metals, and thus makes a broader, sounder, and safer foundation for the paper or fiduciary currency, in the proportion of two to one, and, of course, compared with monometalism, it makes double the volume of metal money itself. Monometalism, therefore, means contraction, which produces spoliation, which involves the exploitation of the many by the few, which means the money-mongers, the gold-bugs, as vampires, sucking away the vitality of industry, the life-blood of the laboring masses. It means retrogression, not progression. It means damnation all round—Samson pulling down the pillars of the temple of industry, and thus in his blindness burying himself with the rest in the common ruin. Mankind is a solidarity; the interests of the whole best serve the interests of all its parts. What makes the "dangerous classes" of either the upper or the lower orders? Who are the dangerous classes? First, those who feel themselvs to be above, different, and separate from the mass of mankind, and act accordingly, regarding themselvs as the elect, who ought to be the privileged class and lords of the race, treating the "remnant" thereof as their tools, serfs, slaves, or lackeys and victims.

Second, Those that are made to feel that they hav not a common interest in the affairs of the world; hav not a common interest in their mother earth with the rest of her children; hav not a joint interest in the earth as an inheritance in common of the whole race; hav not a joint interest in society as an organism of which they are a part, of which they are members; and hav been made to feel that in all the Christian world there is no place yet for the high philosophy of Christ. Hence, the criminal "whose hand is against every man and every man's hand against him." And hence the dynamiter, who feels that he has, through a contest of wits, if not of muscles, sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, and now seeks to impeach the contract, in this emphasizing and startling way, that his complaint and dissent may be the surer and sooner heard and heeded. His method is, no doubt, most criminal and truly horrible. But was not that by which he has been thus made to feel and to act also objectionable? Wherein lies the chief difference between these two dangerous classes but in that the acts of the one are legalized and the acts of the other are unlegalized?

Monometalism leads to these reflections and tends to these consequences.

Bimetalism tends to the reverse of all this. It means expansion, progress, growth, all around. It would equalize the commodity price of silver with its money price, and so raise it to par with gold at the present ratio of the world, and keep it there. (For the purposes of this article by bimetalism is meant international bimetalism.) And by thus raising silver to par, and keeping it there, so great a degree of stability in the value of money would be realized that it would go a long way in preventing excess of flunctuation in values, and thus the greater stability to industry itself be secured, and at once revived—revived all over the world. And this would check, if not stop, the excessiv, rapid, and dangerous divergence of classes now going on, and modify, if not heal or soothe, the rancor between the two orders of the dangerous classes, and also modify, if not put a stop to, the power, and perhaps the disposition, for evil of each, by showing the one a better way to success and the other a better chance of securing his rightful share in the common inheritance and the results of the world's industry in the results of his own labor. It would change the one from a legalized wrong-doer and the other from an unlegalized wrong-doer into dutiful, public-spirited, and good citizens.

Germany, inflated with martial pride by a great and recent conquest, and made, perhaps, a little purseproud by the great war indemnity wrung from France, and foolishly believing that England's monometalism had largely contributed to her great commercial success, sought to imitate her in demonetizing silver, and did so in 1873. This attack upon silver began and largely contributed to its subsequent depreciation, and this depreciation of silver caused the appreciation of gold, which in its turn caused the fall in prices, which brought about the consequent falling off in business, and stagnation in industry all over the world, and in that condition of stagnation we hav been ever since, and we may remain in it until there is an international agreement to rehabilitate silver on terms of a given ratio—say 15 1-2 to 1—by reopening the mints of all the contracting parties for the coining of silver upon the same terms on which they coin gold, and making it, as well as gold, unlimited legal tender. But Germany has since been convinced of her mistake. The International Monetary Conference, held in 1867 in Paris, which sought to secure uniformity in money, made a great blunder in concluding that this object could best be secured by resorting to gold monometalism. This blunder was soon discovered, admitted, and repented of. The two subsequent similar conferences aimed at stability in the value of money. And though they did not reach an agreement as to the method of securing this end, they made as much progress toward it as could hav been reasonably expected, and there has since been large and sure growth in this direction, through our own and others' international bimetalic movements and agitation, and through the writings of the new and freer school of economists, better and later (and better because later) informed than the old school. The latter seems to hav a sort of flesh-pot, Esau-like attachment to gold monometalism.

The rise and fall of nations hav been brought about by the expansion and contraction of money. Rome grew and flourished while tribute money flowed into her lap. Rome declined and fell when it flowed out again for foreign luxuries. The world has advanced into civilization, or has fallen back into barbarism, according as there has been a sufficiency or deficiency of money. Progression and retrogression are companions to enough and not enough money.

W. M. Boucher.

Truth Or God.

Truth is a word the meaning of which is understood—an agreement of representation with the facts represented. God is a word which can never be understood, as it agrees with nothing, and represents nothing—except the ignorance of the user.

Truth is the affirmation of fact; God is the negation of reality, for to regard God as real is to make him natural; but as he is no God only as he is the author of nature, to prove him is to abolish him.

God is a notion to be believed; Truth is what we know. When you mean Truth, say so, unless you cowardly wish to conceal your thought.

God implies a personality, an intelligent being. An impersonal intelligence is an impossibility, since intelligence is a personal attribute, as weight is a property of matter.

Secular philosophy has no power to succeed whilst it is encumbered with theological clothing. We should not call ourselvs, nor allow ourselvs to be called Infidels, for our principle is fidelity to fact, as presented in reason. The religionist is the Infidel.

John P. Guild.

Socialisms.

The New York Herald, and then the Independent, over the signature of a New Jersey clergyman (Bradford), hav been making a display of their ignorance, which, whether real or affected, has the effect not merely of misleading their readers about principles and social facts, but of traducing certain individuals in a manner no less injurious to the interests they hav at heart because the manner of doing it, in confounding them with their opponents, may not expose the traducer to action for libel. Thus the Independent does not openly charge B. R. Tucker and others unnamed, of the Boston Liberty party, with conspiracy for robbery and murder, but it classes them falsely with John Most, of the Freiheit, and "Communist Anarchists," who openly declare war upon property, and goad the proletary masses to outrage. Now, I, as a regular contributor to Liberty, and affiliated with its principles, declare that we hav nothing in common with those revolutionists, apprehending that their "good intentions" are of the sort that "pave the way to hell."

We also hav a revolution in view. This has often been foreshadowed by the Galveston News in its currency and antiprohibition articles, and its censures of abusiv legislation. Our revolution is in direct line of development with the principles of Jeffersonian democracy. Personal liberty is its pivot, and it operates by co-operativ harmonies between producers by labor and produce exchanges. The ulterior purposes of the party with which we hav been confounded are unknown to us. Ours are clearly announced, and their statement suffices to banish any idea of violence in connection with them. Appealing to small proprietors and well-accredited mechanics, we propose commission houses for facilitating direct exchanges of produce or of labor, that is, direct, as avoiding the intermediate ownership of merchants, and consequent speculation by profits on sales, but also avoiding the inconveniencies of private barter. Such houses may be depots for produce, and charged with certain industries of manutention needed in case of grains, wines, or goods generally of perishable character. They will appraise qualities of goods or of labor offered, and their certificates of deposit will serve as cash in circulation, while their certificates of character for laborers may circulate as credit notes within a limited circumscription. The object is to protect labor against exploitation, and to supply a currency elastic in its correspondence to all exchangeable values, like the skin to the body, impartial toward specie, and ignoring the fiatism of governments. For such a currency the price to be paid is faithfulness to contracts, and as this is not at present to be taken for granted, the uses of such certificate currency must be limited to people who know and can trust each other, or are known and trusted by the commission house. This is the People's Bank of Exchange. It is described more completely by P. J. Proudhon ("Idée Generale de la Revolution," etc.,) and by Col. Wm. B. Greene, whose pamphlet is sold for twenty-five cents by Box 3,366, Boston. Some experience with such institutions has been encouraging. Their scope of uses is co-extensible with the faculties of their officers and the credit they enjoy. In a year of bad crops such a bank might protect many farmers from ruinous debts in obtaining at a moderate rate of interest—8 to 3 per cent—supplies for which they pay the merchants 25 to 75 per cent. Where character warranted, men might get provisions from the depot on the security of growing crops or other unfinished work.

Essentially pacific, our revolution would be retarded or frustrated by a civil war of classes, such as the "Communist Anarchists," with whom the Independent abusivly classes us, are fomenting. Call us Socialists, if you choose to. Everybody that is not an anchorite is a Socialist of some sort. But state Socialism, and that compulsory Communism which is avowed as the ulterior aim of the bellicose Anarchists, Internationals, etc., are our special abominations. We openly oppose them, and it ought to be an actionable slander to attribute such purposes to us. Our revolution can be effected under the actual forms of our political constitution, as well as without them. They depend upon the enlightenment of opinion about public interests. Legislation is superfluous, but it cannot hinder people from acting in good fellowship of justice and kindness when they know what is right and choose to do it.

Without such enlightenment, we should not be advanced by the explosion of all existing governments, for the same oppressions would but change their names. Private property, so much abused in its monopolies by governmental privilege, has nevertheless been a necessary condition of social progress from the state of monkeys in the forest. Corporate property rests on a voluntary personal basis of contracts. Associate laborers should become stockholders participant in dividends. Our Anarchism looks to such co-operation, but enforces nothing. Individuals, emancipated from the tyrannies of meddlesome legislation, may and will co-operate in many different ways; some will associate all their interests, others but a few, others liv apart. If we renounce the ballot, it is because it is made the instrument of encroachment upon personal liberty and natural rights. It is an instrument, not a principle. Invented to favor liberty, it has been perverted to the purposes of despotism. The instrument is spoiled, and we let it alone. That is all. Nothing now can take the place of direct personal contract for the security of liberty in social relations. EDGEWORTH.

The Christian Religion.

What is called the Christian religion was nothing but Judaism, nor was it intended to be anything else by those who started it. It had to be taken to a heathen country, and there coddled by mythologists, till it got old and important enough to be entitled to a name. So says its own history: "And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch" (Acts, xii, 26). It was not much of a religion at first, but when the polytheistic gentiles took hold of it they nursed it until it grew into a monster grim and ghostly. Its Greek godfathers could not make it take with their own people, who had so many gods and demons of their fathers to believe in and obey, till they had put gods, devils, and holy ghosts, angels, and spirits into it, so as to fit it to the taste and relish of those to whom it was offered. The further our religion traveled, and in every country where it was introduced, it received new accessions to its monster growth, in the way of trinities, divinities, sphinxes, fables, and legends, and took so many different ghostly shapes and characters that its patrons and friends in one country did not know it when they found it in another. Constantine and his quarreling, contending bishops could not manage this hydra-headed religion when they undertook to find out what it was, or to make something like a system of faith for the different churches and countries to adopt. That profligate, rebellious, bigoted Nicene council of bishops, with a murderer at its head, fixed up a faith—a creed, and decreed that their work must be accepted. What they called Christianity was orthodox, and death, banishment, and exile should be the fate of those who refused to receive it as such.

Attempt to enforce these decrees led to bloody wars, for the more rational and intelligent bishops and churches would not accept as Christianity the absurd doctrins these councils promulgated.

Centuries were spent in calling councils, scores of which were held, to settle what people must believe in order to be Christians. But what was called Christianity had grown into such a huge, crude, undefinable system of mythology and superstition by this time that the believers were only required to accept it to be Christians. The philosophers and more intelligent spurned and ridiculed it then as the same class do now.

In its demoniac desperation the strongest orthodox or church party would seize every opportunity and subsidize every person they could make available to sustain them in magnifying, embellishing, and glorifying this heathenish religion.

That licentious and profligate African, now called St. Augustine, of the fourth century, who lived a life of dissipation till he was thirty, though educated and something of a genius in Greek philosophy, an elocutionist and a brilliant writer, was induced through the persuasion of Ambrose to join the church. His pen is said to hav done more than that of any previous one to construct and reduce to a system, to embellish with poetry and to popularize, this crude, loose theory of compounded Judaism and Greek mythology, now called Christianity. He and subsequent writers in the same line, even so late as Anslem of the eleventh century, and their successors, with the aid of the sword hav kept the people at large well subjected to this superstitious heathen faith.

While most Protestant sects hav rejected portions of this monstrosity, they all hold on to other parts of it with tenacity. As a system, a belief, or an essential in the life of a good man, it must be discredited, exploded, and annihilated. As a forgery of ancient origin, and nothing but the invention of the brains of morbidly religious enthusiasts, it has always been an enemy to enlightened progress, has prompted to persecution, and arrayed itself against the dissemination of the truth. In denouncing it, the moral lessons that may be taught in connection with it are not necessarily any part of it, and should not be included in that miserable system which we, who know what it is, are all warring against.

If the simple precepts and the more self-evident ethical principles attributed to that early teacher in Palestine, who was only a prophet and reformer among the Jews, had been adhered to by the Greeks, after they had received them, and called them the Christos, a Greek word which Paul says in several of his epistles means—according to our English translation—simply to be wise and good, or wisdom and goodness, we would not hav the gigantic myth that confronts us to-day to contend against. It is the horrible transformation and theological absurdities of which these ethical teachings were the nucleus, united with their teacher's tragical end, that hav fastened this delusion on professing Christians, and which they cherish as such a precious legacy.

The unnatural and inhuman character of this religious system in appeasing a vengeful, unrelenting God for the sins of the wicked against him by the sacrifice of the innocent, to placate his wrath and to satisfy his infinit justice, has had a degrading influence on its devotees. They hav believed it a virtue a duty, to imtiate their God in their conduct toward their fellow-men, and to co-operate with him in trying to save souls by torturing and persecution, by cruelty and intolerance, by curses and threats of hell fire. The Infidel and heretic has been the just object for their maledictions and vengeance. To convert him or destroy him was to serve God, is implied if not taught by this infamous faith. It has brutalized its victims, and made men savages toward one another.

Thus our system of Christianity has no other origin, and has grown to its present dimensions from the simple fact that the ethics of Jesus as taught by Paul in Antioch were designated by the nativs there by this Greek word Christos, and the disciples who accepted the teachings as Christians. Subsequent generations personified and defied it. The word became a God, a son of God, a Lord, a Savior. As soon as it became a title, a name, imagination knew no limit in bestowing upon it the most fanciful attributes as the divine provision for the salvation of man. Think what a fabric of superstition human ingenuity and human credulity hav built on the uses of this untranslated Greek word Christos!

The flood of light that has been let in on this subject by modern scholarship through the investigations into the origin and character of Biblical history and the uncertainty or spurious quality of much that has been called holy, is rapidly undermining the whole system with the reading and thinking public. Even many clergymen are ridding themselvs and their congregations of it as fast as they can, or think they dare, without losing their fat offices. We may thank science, education, and the diffusion of general intelligence for what has been done, and for what they will continue to do in undermining and eventually banishing the fraud from civilized communities. THE TRUTH SEEKER is doing its share in the beneficent work. T. E. L.

Ministerial Hypocrits.

From the Tocsin.

It is not our object to condemn the church as a whole for the shortcomings of a few of its representativs who seem to take great delight in slandering the working classes and in upbraiding any body of toilers who, in order to obtain justice at the hands of avaricious and unscrupulous employers, are compelled to resort to strikes. But we do contend that it is within the province of those representativs of the gospel who are consistent Christians to place before the people at all times both sides of the labor question, and not, as has been done in many instances within the past year, attempt to justify the action of capitalists and manufacturers and condemn that of the wage-workers.

To the pulpit we look for impartial utterances and straightforward assertions upon all subjects, and to expect the ministers of the gospel to be guided strictly by the teachings of the Bible in all their comments. True we hav found some ministers who are willing to acknowledge that the toilers hav been justified by circumstances in rebelling against their employers. But the great majority hav taken the opposit view, and denounced the wage-workers at every opportunity. In so doing it is necessary to falsify—and what a spectacle is presented when the occupant of a church pulpit condescends to misrepresent facts in order to substantiate an argument.

The fact that the wealthy manufacturer is always ready to contribute a good round sum to the church coffers; that he occupies the most desirable pew in the edifice, and pays the largest pew rent; that his collection envelope contains a dollar, while that of his employee, who is compelled to trust to luck whether he obtains a seat or stands up, contains but a penny should not enter into the question at all. It does, however, and oftentimes such circumstances serve to mold the words that fall from the lips of some of our prominent divines.

Not very long ago a Philadelphia minister, with one of the largest and wealthiest congregations in the city, denounced strikers and trades union in every way possible, without offering one valid argument upon which to base his denunciation. In the hallway of this very edifice, the inscription which first meets the eye of the worshiper upon entering is: "The rich and the poor meet together." This inscription, however, was not placed there by his direction, but by that of a gentleman who was prominent in the church history of Philadelphia some twenty years ago, and through whose efforts the edifice above referred to was built. At this time the congregation was composed chiefly of the poorer classes, and as soon as the wealthy began to control the affairs his ideas were deemed too conservativ, and his resignation asked for. It was tendered, and a true and consistent exponent of the gospel was thus forced to retire to create a position for one who would disregard the Bible at the wishes of the church dictators, and we may say for a money consideration. Until such conduct is denounced, and measures taken to convince the laboring classes that the church is, as a whole, disposed to treat them fairly and impartially, it cannot but be expected that they will be constrained to remain away sooner than venture to a place of worship with the probability of being compelled to listen to a denunciation from the pulpit as severe, even, as could possibly come from a tyrannical employer, who is directly concerned.

Is Papal Infallibility a Limited Partnership?

The Rev. A. F. Hewit, writing in the Catholic World on "The Divine Authority of the Church," givs the following explanation of papal infallibility:

It is not every official act of the holy see which is a judgment ex cathedra. There is an authority in the church which is not identical with, but inferior to, the divine authority of the church, and although possessed jure divino, like the power of jurisdiction and disciplin, may be called human authority. Questions about mistakes, errors, misuse of power, which make matters of controversy relating to this kind of ecclesiastical and even papal authority, are wholly irrelevant to the subject of the infallibility of the church and the pope. Infallibility is not claimed, in this extension, by the holy see or ecumenical councils. A tribunal not infallible may err; and if it is proved to hav erred in certain cases, no prejudice can accrue against the inerrancy of a higher tribunal. Pope Honorius, acting in his ordinary official capacity, wrote letters of direction to the other patriarchs concerning their conduct in respect to a matter of faith, which incurred for themselvs and their author severe censure by ecumenical councils and by his own successors in the see of St. Peter. His infallibility is in no way compromised by this censure, because he gave no ex cathedra judgment. A tribunal of the holy see condemned Galileo and the Copernican system by an erroneous judgment, which was not only erroneous in respect to astronomy, but also in its interpretation of scripture. This decision was first allowed to become a dead letter, and finally erased from the statute-book by Pius VII. Honorius erred, and the congregation erred; and if there are other errors in official documents of popes, then they hav erred. Infallibility shines out in bolder and brighter relief, its necessity is made more clearly evident, by the exhibition which has been made in some few cases of the liability of the highest human authority in the church to err in its decisions.

It is said that "open confession is good for the soul," and this looks very much like it. Poor Pope Honorius! It is well for the writer that he did not publish the above opinion in the time of Honorius, for if he had done so there would probably hav been another error committed by that pope.

I.H.S., YES, Josh.

Several of the fashionable theaters of New York are close together in upper Broadway, and the pictures and inscriptions at their portals constitute a street show of themselvs. From the opposit side the attention of the passer-by has lately been attracted to Wallack's bill-board, containing what at first sight appears to be I.H.S.; but on closer inspection it is found to be

IN HIS POWER.

This profane use of the sacred monogram is of course shocking to Catholics and high churchmen. I.H.S. is inscribed on many a tombstone, and stands for Jesus Hominum Salvator, Jesus Savior of Men. But the Greek letters IHS, with no points between them, are said to be an abbreviation of Iesous, the capital H in Greek being equivalent to E. Whether the Greek inscription antedates the Latin, we do not know, but we do know that as a Pagan name the Greek IHS is much the older. Long before Jesus was born there was a Pagan deity whose name was IHS or YHS (Yes) alias Bacchus; and he was a good deity at first, but in the progress of ages he has been lowered in dignity, until now he has come down to a beastly level.

The propriety of using IHS as a contraction for Jesus may be questioned when we consider that the real name by which he was called in Palestine was not Iesous but Josbua, the abbreviation of which would be Jos. or Josh.

The National Reformer announces the establishment of a new Portuguese Freethought Association, the Associacao Propagadora do Livre Pensamento. Its address is Rua das Canastras, No. 22, 1° andar, Lisbon. The Secretary is Signor Antonio Fernando Silva, Rue St. Bernardo, No. 21, 2° andar, Lisbon, who will be glad to exchange communications with various Freethought societies throughout the world. The organ of the Association is O Livre Exame (published monthly), and one of the special points in its program is the abolition of all oaths, political or judicial.

The Harmony and Meaning of the Scientific Gospels.

A LECTURE BY T. B. WAKEMAN (CONTINUED).

We hav gone far enough now to pause a moment to appreciate the value of this harmony which science has brought, and which we hav just indicated as to both Morals and Religion.

1. In Morals we hav shown that the egoistic, or enlightened self-interest, view includes fundamental facts of human nature which are indisputable; but that these lead to the greater fact that the individual happiness and welfare is impossible without concurrence in the general welfare and happiness of the human race as a whole, and without a life dominated by that purpose.

But the welfare and happiness of the human race is to be sought, why and how?

Why? Because the fundamental fact of life compels, in order that life may continue, the constant increase of its capacity to live, to develop, to enjoy both in the individuals and in the mighty organism of which the individuals are organs. This law, which is the commonest in the lower organisms of Biology, is the grandest in the great Humanity, and in all individual and collective organs which are its parts. The most complete and perfect development and life possible is the ultimate necessity and object of every organism. The plant strives for this unconsciously, man strives for it consciously, and with the help of consciousness, reason, and joy in its attainment. Liberty, truth, and duty are the chief means of its attainment, and to these, therefore, everything has been sacrificed by the heroes of our race. Happiness, good name, health, comforts, wealth, even life itself have a thousand times been cheerfully yielded to this absolute imperative of duty. Bruno at the stake rose above happiness—to the blessedness of a a complete sacrifice. By heredity this impulse has throughout the ages become the instinctive conscience which enforces the decrees of right and wrong, with the penalties of remorse, fear, and an unconquerable sense of degradation.

But there is nothing supernatural or really "mysterious" about this high moral idea or sense of duty. All nature compels us "to use the powers of the good," or to die. The voices of the spirits, the voices of the masters, and of the ages, have incessantly repeated the admonition, until it has come to us from the skies, from the whole world, and all the past of human history as instinctive conscience, and as the ultimate imperative and condition of our being. Nor has this imperative of righteousness come into existence all at once. It has been like pure abstract Geometry, the cumulative growth of multifarious experiences. The evolutionist will see that each of its steps has not only been of use in the past, but that its lower stages of progress still remain indispensable, and of practical use to-day. The confusion of our moral and religious teachers, and their theories, arises from overlooking this fact which evolution teaches.

Thus, as to some things and in some ways, we are still and must always be Egotists. Morals begin at home.

But the Egoism becomes tributary to Altruism as civilization advances, until finally it too is a "duct for sympathy." And then Altruism is seen to be dominated by the ultimate natural law which dominates all organisms, which is the feeding and pruning process of nature, of the world, or God, which is the Not I, and which ends in the imperative of duty and conscience.

Thus the moralist who now teaches that the egoistic, altruistic, and instinctive views and ideals, are inconsistent or exclusive of each other, is like a conductor who is confused by the number of the cars at his disposal, because there are more than one, and he does not know how to make them up as a train and send it forward to its natural, evolutional, scientific, and ideal Heaven on Earth. All of these three distinct conceptions as to the origin and the sanctions of morals are the complements and supplements of each other, and he is behind the age who does not teach, harmonize, and use them all as the basis of character and of daily life.

2. Nor is the religious reconciliation of less importance. Goethe said that in Philosophy he was a Pantheist, in Art a Polytheist, in Morals a Monotheist. These are all merely different points of view of the Great Fact which is the World, or God, or Not I. In its unity we conceive it as One under the law of the correlation and equivolence of forces. As the objective order it says to us do or die, and thus it is the basis of the categorical imperative of the highest moral instinct and necessity. Thus it is Monotheistic as the base of Ethics, and becomes poetically impersonated as One. But to and for our enjoyment it is multifarious. Each emotion has its separate object and god, and so the world is impersonated as many, or Polytheistic. Under the regime of Polytheism there sprang to light the great ideas and ideals of Art. Our Artists are ever naturally returning to this phase of emotion and religion, and very properly.

Of Pantheism need we say more than, in the words of Littrè, that it is "the Atheism of Poets?" Yes, it is also the Theism of Scientists. When all is one, One is all. The Infinite is unlimited and one. There is no inside nor outside in Nature except as we imagine to please ourselves.

From Bruno came this view of the world as one and infinite, thence came Spinoza, thence Goethe with such sayings as these:

> Seize with no more delay
> Nature's holy open secret:
> Must in viewing nature,
> Always one as the all regard;
> Naught is within and naught without,
> For what's within is also without.
> Rejoice in the truthful seeming,
> Rejoice in the earnest play;
> No living thing is a one,
> Alway is it a many.

And again he says:

> And now, once for all I say again:
> Richly and gladly she gives us all!
> Nature has, nor kernel, nor shell.
> Thyself test most of all,
> Whether thou art kernel or shell.
> The kernel of nature, is it not
> In the heart of man?

This fruitful expression, "The Heart of Man as the kernel of the Infinite," brings us back to the conception of Humanity as our center of the world. Upon that center it acts, and by its action, its constant impingement, we have the consciousness of that ultimate fact which continuously surrounds and compels our individual and collective action, and whose laws we must obey or die. Our consciousness, thought, will, and action are but parts of the play of the World, or God, upon Humanity, and our reply or reflex action to that play. The knowledge and laws of that play and of man's reaction are the two great leaves of the book of science.

In them we read that the phases of morals have been enlarging by continuous integrations from age to age, from tribal egoism to altruism and thence to the absolute concept of truth and duty, with an ever-increasing power and sanction of conscience. And so, conjointly with moral progress, the Fetichism of Religion has also enlarged by continuous integrations to Polytheism, to Monotheism, and thence through Bruno to Pantheism with the conception of the world as the one infinite, eternal FACT. Now, our point is that it is really a loss to Humanity to forget or lose any of these manifold feelings, views, and concepts of moral and religious evolution; that they are cumulative steps and not inconsistent with each other, but the supports of each other; that morals and religions really never die, but that when they seem to do so they only become unconsciously sub-organic. Like the inside of a tree, they, as its heart and center, should not decay but support the new society though the living sap no longer flows through the older fibers.

Egoist, Altruist, Moralist, Idealist,
Fetichist, Polytheist, Monotheist, Pantheist.

These concepts, not forgotten, but harmonized and used, as Science and Evolution now teach may be done, will make the completer Man who will preserve and sum up the past so as to better serve the future. Next we must show HOW that is to be done.

The Liberal Club.

It was the serene and high privilege of a considerable number of people to attend the 387th regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club. The first secretary was absent, and the second secretary not being an elocutionist, the minutes of the previous meeting were omitted. The offering of prayer by President Wakeman was suggested in lieu of the minutes, but the suggestion, for some reason or other, was not acted upon. The president, however, directed attention to a new book on the table, by Mr. J. K. Ingalls, entitled "Social Wealth." He hoped everybody would read it.

The lecturer of the evening was Mr. Samuel P. Putnam, secretary of the American Secular Union. Mr. Putnam prefaced his lecture by saying that perhaps it was bringing coals to Newcastle to present the Nine Demands of Liberalism to the Liberal Club; nevertheless it might be necessary with Freethinkers as with Christians to administer line upon line and precept upon precept. He then proceeded to take up the Nine Demands one at a time, and to show their justice. Churches should be taxed, because their exemption laid a burden of millions of dollars upon other property. Chaplains in army and navy should be abolished on account of their worthlessness. The speaker was in the army, and knew whereof he spoke. The soldiers rarely attended religious services except at the point of the bayonet. Appropriations to religious and charitable institutions controled by the church were only so much money given to propagate superstition. The Catholic church gets seven hundred thousand dollars annually from the city of New York. Christians accuse Freethinkers of maintaining no charitable institutions. If the Freethinkers could obtain seven hundred thousand dollars annually from the city they could afford to be charitable also.

The Bible must be excluded from the public schools because its teachings conflicted with facts. The appointment of Thanksgiving days by governors and the president was a piece of impertinence. We all know when we are thankful without being told, and the most that we can be grateful for, anyway, is that things are no worse. The oath now exacted in courts of law the speaker would abolish. It placed, as Colonel Ingersoll said, a hypocrit above an honest man. The court must accept a witness's word as to his belief; why, then, should not his word as to the facts be accepted also? On the subject of the Sabbath Mr. Putnam said he would preserve Sunday as a day of rest and recreation, but would abolish the gloomy ecclesiastical Sabbath. So-called "Christian morality," the abrogation of which is called for in the Eighth Demand, was not the morality adapted to this century. It was unjust that a rich man, as in the case of Dives, should be condemned to hell because he was rich; and it was equally unjust, as in the case of Lazarus, to send a man to heaven simply because he was poor. This, however, is the Christian morality taught by the New Testament. The lecturer ended his hour with a fine peroration and was long and heartily applauded. Everyone had listened attentivly excepting Madam Delescluze and Mr. Weston, who sustained an animated conversation until rebuked by Treasurer Morris.

Robert Blissert was the first critic. He said the lecture had a great deal of peppermint in it, but he was suspicious of any organization that had "Bob" Ingersoll at the head of it, because he believed that Ingersoll was selfish and never did anything for the workingman. Liberals, Mr. Blissert maintained, told just as big lies as theologians.

Dr. Weeks reminded Mr. Blissert that Liberals were at least consistent, and voted as they talked. The workingmen would hooraw for their candidate, but they do not vote as they hooraw. Dr. Weeks then proceeded to tell why the Christians supported churches and Sunday laws. It was for the sake of the authority over others which they were thereby enabled to exercise.

Wilson McDonald likened Mr. Blissert's attack on Ingersoll to a consumptiv sparring with John L. Sullivan. Mr. McDonald said it did his aged heart good to listen to Mr. Putnam, who, he believed, was a coming man. But the Liberals had a big contract on hand. A visit to an establishment where Catholic images were made had astounded him by its immensity. There were Jesuses and virgins and saints without number. He remarked, casually, that the proprietor of the place was a Jew. Mr. McDonald interpreted the Catholic monogram "I. H. S." to stand for Ignorance, Hypocrisy, and Superstition.

Dr. Foote, Jr., did not know that he could either enthuse or amuse, but, for the sake of argument, he would inquire whether the Secularists were not seeking to supplant one system of religion or ethics with another. Might not the charge that we are also religious enthusiasts be brought against us? Dr. Foote evidently did not feel that he was presenting a very powerful argument, and so admitted.

Dr. Kinget was sorry to see a secular party growing up. The most important question he held to be that of food. The logic of the stomach came first. The real philosophy was the food for to-day and to-morrow. He did not like to think on the subject of religion, because the thought of its atrocities made him shudder.

The next speaker to take the stand was Madam Delescluze. She glanced briefly at Mr. Putnam, like an executioner momentarily contemplating a victim before kindly proceeding to kill him. Then the fountains of her great eloquence were broken up, and trouble began. She was amazed that the charge of ignorance had been made against Christians—amazed. "Search the records of history," said the madam, "and you will find that the great writers and inventors all humbly believed in Christianity." The trouble with the church, Madam Delescluze explained, was that it did not liv up to the teachings of its founder. Nevertheless it wouldn't do to ridicule the Catholics. Such conduct would raise the determination in the hearts of all Christians to fight Liberalism to the death. Mr. Putnam's argument was a club argument. Madam Delescluze eloquently denied that the human race was ruled by its stomach.

Colonel Sweet, who is a stranger to the club, offered some remarks in a large and sonorous voice. He had no expectation, when he came there, of addressing the large and intelligent audience which he saw before him. He esteemed Mr. Putnam's address a very able effort, and was convinced that great good would crystallize around the Liberal Club. This association was like a rose. If that flower were picked to pieces it would be discovered that no two leaves were alike. So with the club—the people forming it differed widely, but together they made a fine appearance under God's canopy.

Mr. Putnam, in closing, denied that Liberalism used the "club argument." That was the argument of the Christian, and always had been since Jesus came on earth to bring a sword. He realized that the contract to secularize the government was a large one, but it had got to be fulfilled. Of Ingersoll, said the speaker, Mr. Blissert had a false idea. He did not know the man. No one in the world had a deeper insight into the wrongs of labor; no one had more sympathy with the oppressed, and when the workingmen were ready to vote and to act, they would find no grander leader than Robert G. Ingersoll. The Liberal Club the lecturer held to be the best educator in the world. He had learned more there himself than he had learned in going through college. At the close the speaker broke through the formality of prose and argument and recited a poem that gained the admiration of everybody.

It would be wasting space to say that this lecture was an admirable and interesting one. Anybody not already apprised of that fact has never heard Mr. Putnam speak.

At the next meeting we hav Dr. Dio Lewis on temperance and prohibition. Dr. Lewis is an interesting speaker and his wisdom will be absorbed with avidity. Yet the ignominious sum of five cents is all that is required of the visitor at the door.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents.

CHARLES WATTS, HORACE SEAVER,
JOHN E. REMSBURG, PARKER PILLSBURY,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, WILLIAM ALGIE,
MATTIE P. KREKEL, ROBERT C. ADAMS,
ELIZUR WRIGHT, TITUS L. BROWN,
JAMES PARTON, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York.
COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com.
E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$1,426.22
Mrs. Helen Celler (paid),	14.00
Wm. Reynolds (paid).	6.00
Carl Edelheim (paid),	25.00
Total,	$1,471.22

PLEDGES PAID.—Charles Eckhart, $10.00

News and Notes.

The New York Liberal Club is a unique organization, and is quite a place of resort for intellectual athletes. Even Christians who hav a somewhat combativ disposition enjoy a tilt occasionally upon its platform, and make a desperate effort to argue, which sometimes produces very interesting results. The club is quite an educational institution for all classes. Every subject is discussed, and at times with remarkable ability. All sorts of minds come into contact, and the sparks fly sometimes with delightful interplay; and since no one can appeal to the sword, there is no injury, and considerable information is obtained. Calmly in the midst of the varying conflict sits President Wakeman, and if at any time the entanglement becomes so deep that chaos apparently prevails, a few words rearrange the storm of discussion, and the drama proceeds without an earthquake. Before the heterogeneous but cultivated audience of the Liberal Club the Nine Demands were presented on Friday evening, and although there were some slight waves of opposition, they were received with general approval, and the practical work acquired an impetus that will be felt. New York has many forces for Liberalism. If they can be concentrated much will be accomplished which will be of benefit to the cause throughout the country.

On Sunday evening, Nov. 8th, I lectured before the Philosophical Society of Williamsburg, Brooklyn. This society was organized about seven years ago, and I addressed the first meeting. It has had quite a successful career, and has done much toward the broadening and enlightening of public sentiment. James B. Truesdale, its efficient president, Mr. H. Nelson Gates, Mr. Warwick, and others hav been the leading spirits of the organization. I started on Sunday evening, in the midst of a pouring rain, and expected only a baker's dozen for audience, but I found the hall quite full, and the lecture on "The Nine Demands" was quite acceptable. None could dispute the justice of them. An intelligent Roman Catholic was present, and admitted that he was in favor of these demands; he wanted no union of church and state, and such, he believed, was the sentiment of many members of his church. No doubt it is so, but, for all that, when it comes to the real battle there will be comparativly few sincere Christians that will cordially support the Demands. In reply to some criticism made upon the lecture, Mr. Warwick made a ringing speech, which declared what the real issue is, and the importance of meeting it, for the dangerous tendencies are constantly increasing. A vigorous effort will be made to push the petition by this society, and no doubt Brooklyn will add thousands of names to our demand for political justice.

Charles Couderman, one of our most vigorous workers at Hornellsville, N. Y., writes: "The petition you hav sent me has already received nearly one hundred names, with favorable prospects of receiving as many more before January. If the bill for which the petition calls passes the assembly and senate it will undoubtedly receive the sanction of Gov. Hill, judging from his speeches, especially one delivered at the Onondaga county fair, at which place, speaking of imperfect tax laws, he said: 'The true remedy for whatever evils now exist in our tax laws lies in their thorough revision, and among other things placing all species of property upon an equality, and exempting none.'"

MEETING OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors, held Thursday, Nov. 5th, it was voted to devote the first funds received in the treasury to the publication of documents setting forth the aims and methods of association of the American Secular Union, explaining the Nine Demands, urging state and local organization, and advancing legislativ action for the Nine Demands. Colonel Ingersoll will address some legislature this winter on these all-important topics, and so bring the attention of the people to the matter of state secularization as it has never been brought before. A committee was appointed to take measures for the incorporation of the Union, and another committee to use the influence of the Union in combination with the Liberal citizens of New York city and the action of Mayor Grace for the opening of the Art Museum, etc., on Sundays. Organized action in this regard will hav a most important effect in this practical triumph of secularization.

A REPLY TO SOME CRITICISMS.

It is asserted that the Congress at Cleveland was manipulated by a few workers. I am aware of nothing of the sort. From the beginning to the end the business of the Congress was wholly in the hands of the Congress, and at no moment was the liberty of a single member violated. There was freedom of speech, and no suggestion was made by anyone but it was acted upon so far as the time allowed. The committees appointed were representativ. They were from all sections of the country, and the conclusions they reached were, no doubt, in harmony with the wishes of the Congress. There was opportunity for debate, but no one seemed disposed to discuss the reports. They were accepted unanimously. The only thing "cut and dried" was the arrangement for addresses and lectures. Concerning these, there must be some direction before the meeting of Congress, and the Constitution places this in the hands of the board of directors. I presume no one can find any fault with the speakers chosen. They gave a noble presentation of our cause. It is objected that there was no opportunity given for general discussion of our work. This is an error. Every report of every committee was open to discussion—the nominations and the resolutions; and in these latter were contained all the vital points of the work prepared for next year, and on both the chair invited remarks. The door to debate was thrown wide open, and if it was not entered, it only showed that none of the delegates were going that way, and it is unfair and inaccurate to now say that anyone tried to suppress anything.

But as for myself, I do not believe in a general extemporaneous discussion at a Congress. I believe that we should giv results, and not processes. There should be a selection of speakers, and they should hav time to prepare their best thoughts. The Congress is not merely the coming together of Liberals for a talk among themselvs, however beneficial and pleasant that might be. It is for producing an effect upon the public mind universally, and by ample reports in the press, giving power and significance to our work in the minds of all the people. It is the choice moment when the words spoken will hav a world-wide hearing. The time of a Congress is valuable. It costs money. The expenses of the Cleveland Congress were over $600. Is it not apparent but little time should be spent in desultory debate, however instructiv it might be? Is it not wiser to hav prepared addresses by our leading thinkers and workers, that what is presented should be the best we can giv to the general public? In a debate there might be several good speeches—there would surely be some bad ones—and the bad ones would be reported with the good ones, and sharp-sighted enemies would take advantage. It strikes me that most discussions can take place in committee, not precluding discussion, of course, in the general assembly; but if the committee is representativ, and wisely understands the wishes of the mass of Liberals, the results they present will be so harmonious with the convictions of all that there will be no need of discussion. Besides, most of the questions to be brought before the Congress are in the minds of the people months beforehand, and through the papers a most wide and advantageous discussion can be held, and a popular verdict reached before the meeting of Congress, and thus a quick decision be rendered and no time lost.

The question of a change of name was before the Liberal public a year, and was practically settled before the Congress assembled. What was the use of discussion on that point when so many other things were to be said? I think that almost everybody is satisfied with the action of the Congress. There was no forcing through of anything, but a desire to meet the general demand, and to save all the precious time possible for the best utterances. There must be a selection, for the time is not infinit, and all that is desirable cannot be spoken. I say, then, let our main debates and criticisms be in our Liberal newspapers, and in committee meetings, but let the Congress, so far as possible, be devoted to those expressions of our thought which will be of the most permanent value, and which will compel the attention and the respect even of our enemies. I appeal to the good sense of Liberals in this matter. It is for them to decide as to what shall be the method of our Congresses in the future. This is a democratic movement, and allows of no dictation. There has been none. The Liberals are an independent body, but it does not follow because they work harmoniously together that somebody has been manipulating. No wise man would undertake to do anything of the kind. He would be sure to fail. No one can be master. He must seek as far as possible to understand the unity of Liberals, and to express that unity for common action. I do not think one can point to any moment when a particle of dictation has been used. There has simply been a constant study to understand the wishes of the body of Liberals, and to bring those wishes to some practical issue.

It must be understood that the American Secular Union is for work and not merely for thought. If merely for thought, then every possible thought on every possible subject, by every possible reformer, might be expressed. But our Conventions and our Congresses are for work, therefore they are limited by the work in hand; they cannot fly off to every issue, and pass resolutions concerning every particular evil and injustice in the land; they must choose a line of battle and stick to it, and it is not cowardly to refuse to be shifted off to some minor point. If we are to succeed we must accept the limitations of practical activity—we must conform to conditions. The Nine Demands make our line of battle; here we concentrate our forces, here we can strike the most powerful blow, and here we mean to stick. Is not this liberty, is not this courage, is not this devotion to principle? If one wishes to engage in a forlorn hope, let him do it; but let him be brave and just enough and Liberal enough to take the consequences. If he expects that the whole army must be turned to his relief, and forsake the central line of conflict, it seems to me that he projects his personality as the be-all and the end-all of the Liberal movement. I do think that a Convention has some rights that one is bound to respect, and the Convention is no traitor to humanity because it will not be made the instrument of every man's particular fancy.

The accusation of "false pretense" has also been made against our method of work. Because we plow deep and show the errors of Christianity and the danger of certain forms of doctrin, therefore we go beyond our particular work of state secularization in which it is supposed that some Christians may be disposed to join. There may be a difference of opinion as to the method to choose—the merely political or the political and philosophical. For my part, I choose the latter; so do all our speakers and workers, and they hav never concealed their method. Not a dollar has ever been asked of Christians and not a dollar, to my knowledge, has ever been given by a Christian. If Christianity were a perfect religion, it should not even then be supported by state law, but, being far from perfect, still less should it be supported; but in trying to dislodge it from its present position of state support it is right and it is wise for us to show its errors, its assumptions, its history of crime, its origin in the fears and superstitions of men. In this way only, I believe, can we make our battle effectual. I do not believe that state secularization will be accomplished until the majority of people hav lost faith in Christianity itself. So long as the majority of voters are sincere Christians they will not change the laws. Their sense of duty to God will always overcome their sense of justice to man.

We shall not win for state secularization until the secular philosophy itself has the heaviest battalions, and can cast the largest vote. Our method, then, is plain and straightforward—not simply to fight organized superstition as organized, but as superstition itself, as essentially wrong; not wrong because in the wrong place, but wrong anyway in the very nature of things; and so the argument for removing it from state support is a thousandfold augmented. The charge of "false pretense" is utterly without foundation.

I hope that every Liberal who is interested in the American Secular Union will carefully consider these statements I hav made; and I heartily welcome all arguments that may be presented for the other side of the questions at issue. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Business Is Business.

"Messrs. Moses, Aaron & Co.,

"GENTLEMEN: You and your people obtained a loan of me and my people of sundry gems, gold and bronze rings, and nose and ear ornaments to the value of 500 shekels of silver, of which an itemized bill is inclosed. Please return the same, or remit the amount by certified check, and oblige.

"Respectfully yours, PHARAOH."

"Mr. Pharaoh Rameses,

"MY DEAR SIR: Yours inclosing bill received and contents noted. We inclose you statement showing balance due. We hav put our wages at the lowest figure short of starvation, and they amount to 12,000 shekels of gold. Please deduct the amount of your bill, and ship the balance in specie, via Joppa, and much oblige. Very respectfully yours,

"MOSES, AARON & Co."

Communications.

Both Sides of a Great Question.

I.—OPPOSING MR. PALMER.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: For a principle, and not to gratify any personal feelings, do I reply to the sophistical letter of Courtlandt Palmer in the last Truth Seeker. First let me say, there was no concert of action between my friend E. H. Heywood and myself about attending the Convention, though that has nothing to do with the subject at all, and concerns ourselvs only, and no one else; nor did I receive a "complimentary ticket," but went there as I did to many other cities to sell my paper to do good, and get money to support myself, the same as all other men do; the only difference being, I am more consistent, for I am a producer, a farmer, while Mr. Palmer is a non-producer, and livs on other people's bread.

Neither hav the contents of my paper, which Liberty calls a "hotchpotch of sense and nonsense," and Mr. Palmer seems pleased to quote, anything to do with the question.

Mr. Palmer occupies nearly two columns in The Truth Seeker without touching the question at all. No matter how much he may try to screen himself and the officers of the Convention from any responsibility in the matter, history will record the fact that neither Courtlandt Palmer nor the Infidel Convention at Albany, N. Y., nor The Truth Seeker, nor the Boston Investigator, has ever entered any protest against the outrageous arrest of a man engaged in the inalienable right to sell his paper unmolested by any power in the world.

All the papers that hav spoken on the subject except the Nonconformist hav been on the side of despotism, and Mr. Palmer's letter to the Albany Journal places him by the side of an editor in Albany who said, "Twenty years in a dungeon would be inadequate punishment for them;" and Mr. Palmer, an Infidel, joins with the universal Christian howl against the freedom of a brother-man. In a case like this there is no middle ground to stand upon. If the Convention uttered an earnest protest against the outrage, signed by all the officers of the Convention against the arrest, then they were free from any charge of complicity in the affair; otherwise they will be held responsible alike with the three ruffian officers and government who committed the wicked deed by arresting an innocent man who had committed no crime.

The silly twaddle of C. B. Reynolds, likening the selling of my paper to the singing of a comic song at a funeral is not worth replying to.

Whether my paper was obscene or not is not the question, for reformers cannot stand a moment on that ground; but it is the right unmolested to sell anything, be it obscene or otherwise. If we put it on that ground, that we hav a right to circulate pure reading matter and suppress obscene reading, we hav an interminable controversy, like the theologians, who are forever "hurling texts" and never settle anything.

As I want all the light and knowledge I can get, I will thank Mr. Palmer or anyone else to tell me where a "committee," or any other body of men, got the right to say what, when, or where I shall sell anything anyone chooses to buy.

When D. M. Bennett was arrested I wrote in The Truth Seeker that he had a right to sell anything, be it obscene or otherwise, subject to settlement to the one he sold it to, and no one else. I attended every meeting of the Convention, and heard every word—though that has nothing to do with the question. I am contending for a principle—my right to sell my paper unmolested by any power in the world.

To ask a "committee" if I might sell my paper would place me on a par with some Methodist women at a Methodist conference in Chicago, Ill., who asked the self-constituted lords of the meeting if they might hav the right to preach the gospel.

The word slave could be seen written on every forehead; and so it could on anyone who would slavishly consult with a "committee" about what he should sell. Such subserviency would do in the time the people were taught the slavish doctrin, "The king can do no wrong."

Brother Palmer, and all others concerned, allow me to inform you that this is the latter part of the nineteenth century, and I hav not for the last forty years been in a Rip Van Winkle sleep; and though for some sixty years my hands hav held the plow-handles and the hammer, I hav learned that none but slaves submit to any authority but their own individual souls. Seward Mitchell.

Newport, Me., Nov. 1, 285.

II.—INDORSING MR. PALMER.

To Mr. Courtlandt Palmer, Sir: Permit me to thank you for the noble stand you took in the Mitchell-Heywood case in Albany, for your card to the Albany Journal, and your excellent letter in The Truth Seeker, October 31st. If Seward Mitchell's World's Reformer was the organ of the Albany Convention I would withdraw from the organization instanter. I hav no use for such people, nor their publications, and I hope their sale at the next Convention will be forbidden.

I would write something for The Truth Seeker, only I feel you are able to conduct your own warfare, but I could not refrain from expressing my gratitude for the truly discreet manner in which you repelled the insult intended to be cast on the Association and its grand Convention. E. E. G.

III.—OPPOSING MR. PALMER.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker Sir: Mr. Palmer's able and spirited statement in your issue of Oct. 31st does me injustice, which I am sure he did not intend. He says of Mr. Mitchell, Miss Tilton, and me:

"They, instead of attending the lectures of the Convention on their tickets, as did others, practically took possession of the vestibule of the hall, bright and early, with bundles of literature in favor not only of Freethought, but of freelove and Anarchy, and offered them for sale. They did not apparently frequent the Convention as guests, or take part in its proceedings, but came there in the interests of Anarchy to wreck the Convention."

In these and other adroit sentences Mr. Palmer implies that Mr. Mitchell, Miss Tilton, and I were an "airy synod" of evil spirits conspiring against editor-in-chief of the Convention, Mr Putnam, and his athlete lieutenants, in old witchcraft style, riding hellish broomsticks in sky and on earth to impose our ideas on those rejecting them. Mr. Mitchell and Miss Tilton are abundantly able to fight their own battles; for myself, only please allow me to say that I knew nothing whatever of Mr. Mitchell's attendance until I met him on the streets of Albany, or of Miss Tilton's possible action in the ominous "unknowable" woman's purpose until I saw her drinking in wisdom from one of the hospitable seats of the Convention. As to my standing armed full of documents in the vestibule persistently vending Word-ocratic or other literature, it is untrue. I merely had a few documents in my hand for friends I am constantly meeting when away from home. Possibly I might hav stopped with others in "the vestibule" to talk with friends here and there a few minutes, but I did not make a business of vending or giving documents of any kind whatsoever; on the contrary, in nearly all of the nine sessions of the Convention I was a quiet listener. Mr. Palmer accuses me of not taking "part in its proceedings!" To assure Messrs. Wakeman and Putnam that I would "be good," I wrote them both beforehand, that I should come simply as a listener, and would not try to press on them the repeal of the savage Comstock "laws," or any other pertinent issue. It certainly was not my fault that I did not "take part" in Mr. Putnam's three-days-and-nights drama; nor did any act of mine tend to make Mr. Palmer father "the wildest notion that the wildest crank" begets. When, therefore, he insisted, in the Delavan House, that I ought to write letters to the Albany papers repudiating Seward Mitchell, of course I declined to do so.

I concede fully the rights of Conventions as Mr. Palmer states them. Persons who hire a hall hav entire jurisdiction as to what, orally, may be said, or what printed words may float therein, or along passageways thereto. But judicious use of power is the test of intelligence and of character. I, who learned Convention business and served reform apprenticeship under those great leaders who always wrote "Welcome" all over their public assemblies—Garrison, Phillips, and Pillsbury—I am surprised to meet, at this late day, any "Freethinkers" who suppose they can afford to be inhospitable to inspiration omnipresent in volunteer speaking, or who can possibly meet and be silent under legalized assassination of liberty in Comstock's "laws!" For the time being Ingersoll's unrivaled eloquence and his generous purse make a numerical and financial success of any public gathering he serves, however restrictiv its policies or pointless its proceedings. But what shall be said of men, claiming to voice freedom, yet, while backed by such ability as Elizur Wright, Parton, Ingersoll, Krekel, Remsburg, Watts, Reynolds, and Dr. Brown embody, dare not trust their own resolutions, even, to open debate—such is their chronic fear of "cranks" in the seats who may raise bayonet interrogation points before or level rifle-shotted ideas at them? Right glad was I to be privileged with nature's call to stand by Liberty struck down in the venerable person of that clear-brained, well-courageed, and divinely-purposed old farmer, Seward Mitchell, whose luminous service to progress makes Maine respectable, in spite of stately diabolism personated in James G. Blaine and Neal Dow. Journeying from Newport-Jerusalem to Albany-Jericho, he fell among savage-bigots, resident and stranger "Freethinkers" passing "purely" by on either side; "he came to his own and his own received him not," regulation essays and "cultured" avoidance of free speech issues having higher market value there than pioneer civilization, which served in Joseph Warren at Bunker Hall and John Brown at Harper's Ferry.

Of course wit and talent under able generalship assured "a good time" at Albany and Cleveland, but where is the constituency, the staying, growing power of this picnicking? Never had the church, in all American history, such invasiv, deadly hold on the throat of liberty as it has now in the Comstock "laws;" never before were the highways and by-ways of intellectual commerce so infested with masked savagery, ecclesiastical banditti; yet all is "quiet on the Potomac" of alleged Freethought! Burke said, "A contented slave is a demoralized man;" whatever character there is in men and women will appear now in those who dare hav souls of their own in bodies visible. But, Mr. Editor, I must not take up your space further. All honor to Messrs. Wakeman, Palmer, Putnam, and the rest, for their solid, timely service to liberty in days past; personally I am under lasting obligations to them for noble deeds well and seasonably done. But, as M. D. Conway said in 1863, "the war will not be over until slavery is over;" so now sensible citizens cannot sleep nights; be otherwise than insurgent until alleged "laws," which make physiological intelligence "criminal," are swept from state and national statute books.

Princeton, Mass., Nov. 4, Y.L. 13. E. H. Heywood.

IV.—INDORSING MR. PALMER.

Courtlandt Palmer, Esq., Dear Sir: This communication, which I feel confident will at least meet with a courteous reception, is called forth by your article in the last issue of The Truth Seeker, concerning "That Albany Arrest." I thank you most heartily for having written it—'twas due to your cause and yourself to do so, and I most emphatically indorse every line of it.

I hav been an Infidel, for I like that good old term best of all, for more than thirty years, and am now only just turned fifty, and the most persistent and, to me, most horrible charge that I hav had to battle against, is, that Infidels, Freethinkers or Liberals as a class, are freelovers, and advocate promiscuous and indiscriminate sexual intercourse. I am thinking of becoming a member of the American Secular Union, but in the future will attach myself to no society, association, or organization of any kind, until I know exactly what the platform is, what principles I am expected to indorse, and under what banner I am to fight. I am pleased to subscribe myself, with kind regards, Benjamin F. Clark.

New York, Oct. 30, 1885.

V.—OPPOSING MR. PALMER.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In reading Mr. Palmer's article on the "Albany Arrest," in The Truth Seeker of the 31st ult., I was filled with questionings in regard to the status of Freethought in this country, and its outcome if his ideas of its rights and in what it consists were correct.

He places a Freethought society on the same basis as a creedal one, and cites as parallel case his invitation to a Christian meeting and his rights there—what would be impoliteness there, and what would be the rights of an individual and comity at a Freethinkers' Convention.

I see no parallel in the two cases. The Christians hav a creed, a measure beyond which they do not propose to go, nor to allow others, if in their power to prevent. They assume to tell what is right, not only for themselvs but for all mankind as well, and that it is their duty to prevent, by all possible means, any views but their own from finding expression.

If we accept their hospitality, it is with the understanding that they are the umpire to decide what is right and wrong.

Freethinkers, if I understand their position—and I think I ought to by this time—claim the right of any man to express his honest thought, no matter what it may be, and its mission is to protect him in so doing. "Universal Mental Liberty." With that position what view can be counted an intruder? Now, with this position, which has always been assumed, that each individual has a right to express his honest thought, and be respected in so doing, where, I would like to ask, could be a more appropriate place to do so than at a Freethought Convention?

If majorities are to decide that some man shall not express his views, if he does so in an orderly manner, under the same rules that apply to all others (which we call parliamentary law), then let us forever cease our pretense to a belief in freedom, erect our standard, and admit only those that come within its prescribed limits.

If no ideas but those indorsed by the majority are to hav a hearing, how did it happen that the Rev. Mitchell was engaged to present the views of orthodox religion. Were his views more in consonance with those of the majority than were Seward Mitchell's, and would not ninety-nine out of a hundred disavow the Rev. Mitchell's ideas as surely as the Infidel Mitchell's. What made the association desire the attendance and expression of ideas of the one and not the other? Was it not simply this? The Christian church, although our deadly enemy, is popular and powerful, and some professed Liberals are fools enough to cater to it, while ignoring the rights of unpopular reformers, while she treats us with as much contempt as some of us treat Radicals who advocate something from which we dissent, or propound some conundrums we know we cannot answer. The position, however, of the church is more consistent than ours; she assuming Infidels hav no rights she is bound to respect, while we claim every other man has an equal right with ourselvs to express and liv according to his views, no matter what those views may he.

But says Mr. Palmer, "We assembled at Albany as a Freethought, not as a Freelove or Anarchist Convention." Really! Is it only in one line of life that we are to hav the right to think; that is, only on religion? If so, then we should so state, instead of claiming universal mental liberty.

How can anyone claim to believe in equality of rights, irrespectiv of sex, and then disallow the discussion of our infamous laws which makes woman the sexual slave of her husband, and in every other respect his inferior and dependant? These subjects are not to be allowed to be discussed, or if discussed, it must be at some other place than a Freethought Convention. And with our country on the verge of ruin, with poverty, want, and woe staring us in the face on every hand, we must shut our eyes, close our ears, and not allow a discussion of the methods proposed by different individuals to save it, and promote the prosperity and happiness of our people. If this is Freethought I'll hav none of it.

I would like to inquire when the Freethinkers in New York, as an association, pronounced that it would not champion freelove.

I hav been a member for several years, and hav never known it to take any action on the subject, and supposing it had, would that hav prohibited anybody else who did believe in it from offering for sale their views on that subject? It "does not champion" orthodox religion, but I suppose it would hardly forbid any Christian from offering orthodox literature in its precincts. If it would I should consider it had stultified itself as a Freethought convention.

If Mr. Wakeman wrote Mr. Heywood asking him not to attend the Convention, I am disappointed in him, both as to his principles and his courage, and that, too, after his deserved eulogy in connection with his publication of grand old Elizur Wright's letter.

"Better for the cause" that such a man who has fought our battles for a free press and mails so grandly, and suffered as hav other martyrs for their love of liberty, liberty for us, for the world, better such should not attend our Convention! Shades of Paine, and Bennett, and Garrison, and old John Brown defend us!

But the worst of all the crimes or misdemeanors, according to Palmer, was impoliteness on the part of the offending parties. It he had taken Mr. Heywood's proffered hand, "By so doing I would hav shown I was insensitiv to impoliteness." Too bad! A professed Liberal refuse to shake hands with a fellow-Liberal who has worked in the reforms of the day with self-sacrifice, courage, and heroism nearly as many years as he has lived, because of a claimed impoliteness. Is that the aristocracy of Freethought?

When I cannot insist upon the same right of any individual to giv his honest thought, although I wholly dissent therefrom, as I claim for myself, I will forever cease to call myself a Liberal.

One more point and I am done. Does the fact of some of the Liberals choosing Colonel Ingersoll as our president, our servant—for a president's duty is merely to see that the will of the people is executed—place them in the slavish position of being expected to advocate no idea he does not indorse? If so, it was a sorry day for Liberalism when he was elected.

JULIET H. SEVERANCE, M.D.

Milwaukee. Nov. 3, 285.

VI.—INDORSING MR. PALMER.

COURTLANDT PALMER, My Dear Sir: You deserve the respect and gratitude of every true Liberal in the land for your well-timed, clear-cut letter in to-day's TRUTH SEEKER.

It is about time for us all, whenever occasion demands it, to publicly refute the often-repeated monstrous lie that "Liberals as a class are unclean." Nearly all who giv currency to this slander know that it is false, and it ought soon to die a natural death, but a few wild cranks who call themselvs Liberal giv just enough color to the charge to keep it alive.

When Anthony Comstock lectured in the Centenary Methodist church in this town seven years ago, I publicly rebuked him for casting an aspersion upon the whole Liberal element simply because a crank had published and sold the senseless twaddle called "Cupid's Yokes." Mr. Comstock came down and apologized handsomely.

When a Sunday-school teacher and prominent member of the Young Men's Christian Association turns out to be a defaulter, there is but one manly course for all honest Christians to pursue, and that is to say without reservation, "This man does not represent the code of morals which we teach. We repudiate him henceforth and forever." So with the cranks referred to in your letter, who seek to tarnish Liberalism with their nasty literature. If we fail to throttle this dirty incubus now in its infancy, it will grow until the masses will tacitly believe the often-repeated lie that Liberalism is the father of obscenity.

JOHN W. TRUESDELL.

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 31, 1885.

It Is Coming.

Cities hav thoughtlessly given up to corporations or individuals the right of way, states hav given privileges and land-owners hav given the right of way to companies, all to build railways. And now the prime necessity of modern life, transportation, is administered for us by the privileged few. If we investigate we shall find that throughout the country nearly all the surplus earnings of two-thirds of the people go to the transportation companies, and but a very small sum is redistributed back again to the rural districts. We are becoming like Ireland, where all but the scantiest means of sustaining life goes to the distant landlord, who expends the rent abroad. Certainly that is the nearest thing to social suicide of anything we can imagin. Our labor is of little or no benefit to the region where it is performed. In the cities, if the street railways are owned by citizens there, of course there is a redistribution on the spot. But throughout the country, with respect to the railways, it is not so. Here, for instance, is one-third of a very fine county owned by three or four families. The products are corn, hogs, and cattle. Tenants occupy the land who pay rent in corn. They sell their own share to the landlords and are paid a trifle for feeding their lords' hogs and cattle. The whole product goes ultimately to Chicago at a cost for carriage that leaves almost nothing to the land-owner or tenant. But it is found that two of the large land-owners get their profit in railway and express stock they own, just as many railway owners got their profits enhanced by owning the rail mills and other supply establishments some years ago and perhaps do so yet. But let us take a farmer who owns his 160 acres. He has some cattle and hogs. His experience will be that if he fattens and ships his stock he has done well if he has realized enough to pay him thirty cents per bushel for his corn. At the end of the year, after he has paid all his bills and for a few necessary trips on the railways and a few telegrams, the probability is he will hav barely enough left to take his family on the next excursion to Chicago, Omaha, Kansas City, or elsewhere.

Take the cowboys who are out on the plains, or the workmen on the roads. By the time the job is done it often takes the most of what is left to pay their fare home. In old times, when we had to attend court as jurors and witnesses, one or two farmers would hitch up and a dozen would pile into the wagon. Little or no money was needed. Now we walk over to the nearest depot or platform and pay from fifty cents to a dollar each. You see the railways are getting about all. It can't be helped as things are. Nor is there any redistribution through the country. Even meals are eaten on many trains. It all goes whence it never returns.

Now, amid all this striking and rioting, these repeated and constantly renewing disturbances, I wonder—and I wonder because we hardly ever see in the newspapers any reference to what must be the solution of this great, monster, and growing trouble. There is but one solution. It must come! Why not face it and demand it? Shall we act as we did about slavery—like fools, till we hav to fight about it?

That solution is the ownership and control of all the roads by the people, through their state and general governments. This is giving back to us the powers that hav slipped from us. Cheap freight and carriage—very cheap, like postage—and general taxation to supply deficits; far better light taxing to favor all the people than deep robbery to fill a few pockets. Instead of giving power to the government, it will be, if done properly, giving it all to the people. Instead of a few stockholders choosing directors, let us hav the people do so. To this it must come, peaceably or otherwise.

CLARKE IRVINE.

Oregon, Mo.

Sectarian Dogmas in the Free (?) Public Schools.

"Keep the church and state forever separate" was the wisest sentiment of our honored dead. Forced sectarianism in any shape or shade is a libel on that beautiful word, freedom. It transposes it to "dumb-free," and a law requiring the reading of either version of the Bible is an infraction of our Constitution. A book speaking with such discordant tongue that no two sects, or even individuals, agree upon it; a book that all sects take as their only guide, differ as they may; a book that has been the cause of more dissensions, wars, and bloodshed than all other books; a book replete with God's unfulfilled promises and defeats, portraying alike God's infamy and man's foolishness, and still is the procuring cause of the school war—is this the book above all others to educate and impress upon the young minds "that wisdom which cometh from above, which is first pure and then peaceable?"

To uproot this fatal evil, prophetic of something more than a war of words, in the near future, every state should at once pass laws forbidding the use of any Bible, sectarian book, papers, prayers, or hymns in the public schools supported from the people's money. This is a simple cure for the growing school disturbance. Then the divine words, "Let us hav peace," will hav real significance. Otherwise this pampered kitten will grow to a tiger, whether nursed by Catholic or Protestant, and so sure as jealousy carries a concealed dagger, so sure will this culminate in a bloody religious war. Don't forget the price of liberty. There's

> "Much in the Bible which I love and bless;
> I could love more if God I could love less."

And there is still more in that long-venerated book which might be called effete, if it ever had substance enough to deserve even that honor. Most of its compilers and adherents to its authority must hav become demented, if, indeed, they were not born so.

A teacher once asked me (when a member of the school committee) if I required her to open her school sessions by reading the scriptures, or other religious exercises. Said I: "I do not require it, and if you choose to do it I shall require you to stop when any objection is made from any source."

In reply to another teacher's inquiry (who felt under obligations to legal requirements): "Yes, I will select a passage for you to read, and require you to repeat it, and no other verse in the Bible—'Jesus wept.'"

And I am sure he would weep to see such false play made in his name.

This sectarianism in schools is only one insidious attempt at the dominating power of religious despotism. Liberals, "above all watch and work while ye wait" not.

ELIJAH MYRICK.

Ayer, Mass.

Mistaken Clergymen.

The Post-Office Appropriation Act, passed by the last Congress, and approved by the president of the United States, March 3, 1885, provides for the immediate delivery of letters at the post-offices of this country; where the free-delivery system is in operation, and at those in cities and towns having a population of four thousand and over, as shown by the last federal census—if, in addition to the lawful or regular postage thereon, a special delivery stamp of ten cents is attached to a letter.

This immediate delivery system went into operation at the post-offices named on the first of this month, and for the special delivery of letters not regular letter-carriers, but messenger boys, are employed. It is a matter of course and of common sense that the special delivery of letters, prescribed by law, has to take place on all days of the week, month, and year, Sundays included. But some of the clergymen of this country seem to think differently. A reliable daily newspaper of Washington, D. C., the national capital, in its issue of Monday, October 12th, contained the following article, viz:

A COMPROMISE WITH THE MINISTERS.

Local letters not delivered by special messengers on Sunday. The arrangement of the special delivery service on Sundays has been left by the Post Office department largely with the postmasters. In this city, as in other cities, protests against the employment of the boys on Sunday hav been made by ministers, who think the boys should be in Sunday-school. The post office authorities think that letters with special delivery stamps arriving here Sundays are entitled to immediate delivery. Yesterday, according to the postmaster's instructions, all such letters were delivered, but local or drop letters were not. This arrangement required keeping only three messengers on duty at the main office in the morning and three in the afternoon, and thus reduced the evil complained of by the ministers to the minimum.

The clergymen referred to in this article are plainly mistaken. The Constitution of the United States, the supreme law of the land, says: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thoreof." Religion means moral truth and is a strictly individual affair. Its exercise, according to the Constitutional clause quoted, is a strictly private affair, and legally compulsory to no one in this country. A free exercise of religion meant an an exercise free from churches, free from clergymen, free from Bible authority, free from Sunday laws, and free from Sunday schools, in which latter young minds are trained to submit to Bible authority.

The American fundamental law, by the noble clause cited, obviously means that the American people shall be entitled to do their thinking themselves in religious matters, or in other words to be Freethinkers, and not that they shall be a priest-ridden nation of church slaves and Bible bigots.

Constitutionally, in this country, the clergymen are nothing but private business men (earning their living by preaching and praying for money), who hav strictly to obey the laws of the land, while the public officers, intrusted with executing and administering the laws, are not and cannot legally be compelled to heed the dictates of the clergy. Clergymen, like the rest of the people of this country, should always be law-abiding citizens.

JOHN GEO. HERTWIG.

Washington, D. C.

THE life of man consists not in seeing visions and in dreaming dreams, but in activ charity and willing service.—Longfellow.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - NOVEMBER 14, 1885.

The Rev. James Buckley's Error.

The New York Christian Advocate uses a column of Mr. Buckley's precious editorial space for an article on "Infidelity and Bad Morals," in which the writer asserts:

"The most serious result of skepticism in a land is seen in its effect on the morals of the people. We admit that it is bad enough when we look only at the result upon the mind—its general want of faith, its breaking loose from the old moorings of trust in sacred things. But, unfortunately, Infidelity has a further and deeper reach. It goes into the very vitality of our daily life, and disjoints all the firm articulations of the morals of society. It is useless to say that a man may be a skeptic and yet a very pure head of a family; that he can doubt the entire Bible and yet love his wife and children, and be true to every social tie to which he finds himself related. If such be the case—and we will admit it for the sake of argument—the fact is in spite of his want of faith, and not because of it."

It seems to us that this is a very inopportune time to print the foregoing, for the intelligent reader, if he reads any secular papers, will be forced to make comparisons, and comparisons just now are particularly odious. With the trial for adultery of the Rev. Mr. Downs occupying a column or two daily in the Boston papers, with the confession of one of his congregation that married women had precipitated themselvs upon his bosom; with the revelations of the Pall Mall Gazette, and the subsequent unmasking of an English seaside rector, still fresh in the memory of the public; with about an average in this country of a clerical scandal a day, to say nothing of the ministerial peccadiloes covered up by congregations, we should judge that the Advocate would hav made a greater impression with its article by deferring its publication until there were no clerical criminals prominently before the public. Perhaps, however, the editor despaired of such a good time coming.

When we laid down the Advocate in which the above was printed, we picked up the New York Times. The headline of the first column on the first page caught the eye: "English and Irish News. Campaign Events and a Church Scandal." Still thinking of the Advocate's professed opinion of Infidelity, we scanned the column down, wondering if a wicked Infidel had not committed some gross wrong and had it charged up to the account of a saintly churchman. We read the following. The dispatch was dated November 6th:

"The Rev. Stewart Ross, formerly rector of Christ Church, at Belfast, Ireland, was addressing the Plymouth Young Men's Christian Society last evening, when Charles Joy, the Canadian Emigration Commissioner, burst into the room and shouted, 'You hypocrit, you eloped with my wife!' Ross turned pale and fled from the room. His audience were surprised and greatly excited. The moment many of them realized what was the matter, they became a howling mob, and pursued their lecturer for a mile, yelling all the time. At this point Ross, who was breathless and driven to bay, turned suddenly and stabbed two of his most activ pursuers. Others coming up at the moment seized and disarmed the murderous rector. The police then arrested Ross. He was taken before a magistrate to-day, when charges were made against him and he was remanded for a week without bail. It is learned that Ross disappeared from Belfast two years ago, leaving a wife and three children. Mrs. Joy, who was a teacher in his Sunday-school, also disappeared at the same time, which led to a report that the couple had eloped. This rumor was confirmed when Mr. Joy received a letter from Ross, in which the latter said: 'Your wife has undergone malpractice, and you had better arrange for obtaining a divorce from her.' Mrs. Joy was found in the prisoner's lodging, and when informed of her paramour's arrest, gloried in her connection with 'the Lord's anointed,' as she called her illicit lover. She attended court to-day, and sat in a brazen manner throughout the whole proceedings."

According to the Methodist organ, the Rev. Stewart Ross ought, just before he eloped with Mrs. Joy to hav become an Infidel, and ought since that time to hav devoted his energies to propagating Infidelity. But, unluckily for our contemporary around the corner, he did not. He was a Christian, is a Christian, and preaches Christianity. Mrs. Joy believes him to be the "Lord's anointed," and clings to him as Bathsheba clung to David after Uriah had been slain in the forefront of battle, and she had finished mourning for him. We hardly know how Mr. Buckley will reconcile this persistent Christianity on the part of Mr. Ross and Mrs. Joy with his assertion that "the most serious result of skepticism in a land is to be seen in its effects on the morals of the people." There seems to us to be a discrepancy between his reasoning and the facts. But he is not the first man who has come to grief through setting up an opinion first, and trying to find facts to sustain it afterward. The architects of the Christian theology are all in the same boat with him.

A Christian Politician.

In the last days of the political campaign in this state our attention was called to the candidate for senatorial honors in the eighth district by the following circular:

"NEW YORK, Oct. 21, 1885.

"To the Citizens of the Eighth Senatorial District:

"Under a misapprehension of the full purport of the so-called 'Freedom of Worship' bill, and previous to its introduction into the senate by Senator Gibbs, I gave it an indorsement in a letter dated Oct. 29, 1884. This year the person who had asked the question, and to whom the letter was written, came with several others as a committee and asked if I would promis to vote for the bill if elected? I answered 'I would not.' They threatened to publish my letter as an electioneering document against me. I said: 'This you may do. I will not vote for that bill. It was misnamed "Freedom of Worship;" it should be called "Restriction of Worship." I am in favor of freedom of worship, but of a separation of church and state.' Respectfully, STEPHEN MERRITT."

The eighth district happens to be the district in which we liv, and we took considerable interest in the triangular contest for senator between Messrs. Dunham, Gibbs, and Merritt, principally because we did not want to see Mr. Merritt elected. We knew he once favored the Freedom of Worship bill, and we did not like to see a supporter of that infamous measure returned to the senate. We knew also that Mr. Merritt was in the habit of preaching to the unwashed Salvation Army at Eighth avenue and Eighteenth street, and that he is a bigoted Christian, who would be simply a tool of the church if elected. One of the claims for support loudest made by Mr. Merritt and his friends was that by his election the "better element" of the district would be represented. Ordinary politicians were in the habit of using the ginmills for obtaining votes; Mr. Merritt would never appeal to that element. By the bedside of a son made drunk by whisky, Mr. Merritt informed a temperance audience, he had sworn to wage a warfare against intemperance which should cease only with his death.

We had given "Steve," as he is familiarly called, credit for honesty in his religious professions, and had, until the Friday night previous to the election, no reason for supposing him to be a hypocrit on the liquor question. But on that evening we learned considerable about the ways of a temperance politician. At 19 Greenwich avenue an enormous wicker bottle and a blue sign convey to a thirsty public the knowledge that George Bischel sells pure California and Ohio wines. A swinging sign further proclaims that beer can be obtained upon the premises. Friday night the passer-by was impeded in his walk by a crowd going out and in this place. As the doors were opened the music of a brass band was heard. Exclamations that Steve was a jolly good fellow were also heard. When the passer-by stopped his passing by and went into the saloon he saw a crowd of a hundred or so of smoking, tobacco-chewing, beer-drinking citizens of the eighth senatorial district. An inquiry elicited the information that Steve Merritt was "setting 'em up," and called out the counter inquiry of "Wot'll yees hav?" Posters with Mr. Merritt's name in the largest sort of wood type covered the walls, and a few officious individuals representing Mr. Merritt made everyone acquainted with the fact that Steve was the generous person to whom they owed the present supply of beer, and would consequently on election day owe a ballot. During a portion of the evening Mr. Merritt himself was present, looking to it that his henchmen did not miss securing any votes whose owners were open to inducements of the kind on tap. When the passer-by went out and continued his way, it was with the reflection that politics seemed to make men pretty much alike, so that church and temperance professions are of no account when a man gets the political fever. Mr. Merritt may possess unusual qualifications for political office, but as a temperance advocate his conduct can hardly be made to square with his words.

It givs us unqualified pleasure to further record that the Rev. Mr. Merritt was defeated in his senatorial aspirations.

School Books.

A few weeks ago we noted that the Freethinkers of Concordia, Kan., had succeeded in banishing the Bible from the public schools. Since then the Christians, at a special town meeting, hav restored the ancient and obscene history. Another special meeting, however, will soon be called at the instance of the Freethinkers, and, from expressions by those who at the last meeting voted to retain the Bible, it is expected that the vote will be reversed.

Meanwhile Mr. Hagaman, editor of the Blade, published in the place, is showing up the text-books used in the schools, and demanding a change because of their sectarian character. "With a single exception," says Mr. Hagaman, "—the arithmetic—religious teaching is found in every book, and in some it pervades almost every page." In the Reader, ten of the seventy-nine subjects are purely religious, and the others are more or less—generally more—permeated with Christian doctrins. One subject, "Things to Remember," is a Sunday-school lesson; another is the Lord's prayer; another replies, in answer to the question, "Who made the stars?" "'Twas God, my child, the glorious one;" another is a "Child's Hymn," and still another is "Holding the Fort." This reader, Mr. Hagaman says, is designed for children of from eight to twelve years of age, the period of their lives when their minds are the most pliable, and therefore the easier molded into religious thought. The Fourth Reader, another text-book in the same schools, is nearly as bad, Sunday-school trash being thickly sprinkled through its pages. To force the children of an Atheist to read these works is gross injustice, and to compel the parents to buy these books intensifies the outrage.

Yet we suppose the state of affairs in Concordia is exactly the same prevailing in ninety-nine out of every hundred school districts of the country. Publishers of school books hav employed preachers to supervise the preparation of the Readers to make selections from standard literature, and naturally they hav included the Christian pieces, until the text-books throughout the nation are saturated through and through with the particular superstition of the Christian church. The remedy must be for committees of schools to demand purely secular text-books, take no other, and the publishers (who hav a monopoly of the business) will be compelled to provide them.

The Failure of Christian Efforts.

The American Board of Missions has spent in seventy-five years twenty-one millions of dollars, and yet can count only seven hundred thousand church-members as a result "in heathen, Mohammedan, and papal lands." That is certainly a very small showing. A large part of this enormous sum has been spent in Turkey, but Turkey has only twenty-three thousand Christian communicants within her borders. These facts fill the Rev. A. J. F. Behrends, D.D., of Brooklyn, N. Y., with mortification. When he thinks of what might hav been had Christians been decent and refrained from cutting each other's throats, he is overwhelmed with shame. "It is a liberal estimate to say that all Continental and American foreign missionary societies hav expended three hundred million dollars since the present century opened. During that time, nominally Christian nations hav spent fifty times as much in cutting each other's throats as in saving their fellow-men." Another source of grief to Mr. Behrends is that "in a single year the American people spend thirty or fifty times as much on fermented and distilled liquors." Taking the work of the Board as a sample, he says, the income of the liquor traffic for a year would hav planted twenty thousand churches.

We deprecate as sincerely as the Rev. Mr. Behrends does the seemingly ineradicable tendency of Christians to fight, but the fact that they will fight must be admitted. We also regret as poignantly as Mr. Behrends that Christians will spend so much money on drink. It would be better for everyone if alcohol were never used as a beverage. But experience teaches that Christians are bound to get drunk. Did it ever occur, then, to the Rev. Mr. Behrends that since Christianity is such a flat and utter failure, after fifteen hundred years of legal existence, it should be given up and some other religion tried? What is the use of appealing for more funds to spread a religion that is acknowledged to be inefficacious, and when the enormous funds that hav been given and used hav produced such very small results? Why send a missionary to Mohammedans? They do not squander fifty times as much on alcohol as on their gospel! Why send a clergyman to the Buddhists? They do not spend fifty times as much money in inventing and using murderous weapons as they do on their missionaries!

Mohammedanism forbids the use of intoxicating liquors; but the Mohammedans are as good fighters as the Christians. Buddhism never waged a war, and it also forbids the use of alcoholic drinks. Its devotees are never drunkards, and Buddhist countries are temperance countries. Then why should not the Rev. Mr. Behrends and all Christians who are sincerely laboring for peace and temperance giv up a religion that has proved itself to be of such little practical utility, and embrace Buddhism?

Precisely as He Said.

In his speech at Cleveland Colonel Ingersoll outlined the manner in which churches acquire vast properties with small or no outlay. He said:

"Do you know that if church property is allowed to go without taxation, it is only a question of time when they will own a large per cent of the property of the civilized world! It is the same as compound interest; only giv it time. If you allow it to increase without taxing it for its protection, its growth can only be measured by the time in which it has to grow. The church builds an edifice in some small town, gets several acres of land. In time a city rises around it. The labor of others has added to the value of this property, until it is worth millions. If this property is not taxed, the churches will hav so much in their hands that they will again become dangerous to the liberties of mankind. There never will be real liberty in this country until all property is put upon a perfect equality."

In the World of October 23d we find an account of the dedication of a three hundred thousand dollar edifice by the congregation of the Bloomingdale Reformed church at 68th street and Broadway. The manner of the acquirement of the property was thus related by the pastor, Carlos Martyn:

"Many years ago, Jacob Harsen left the congregation a large plot of land, bounded by 8th and 9th avenues, and 71st and 73d streets. Since the rise of real estate values in the neighborhood, the trustees of the church raised a large sum by selling the property. and thus were able, two years ago, to begin the erection of the present edifice. And now all that remains for us to do is to be faithful in our allegiance to the church, and see to it that the necessary expenses of its continuance are promptly met. If any young man among you was to marry a wealthy man's daughter, and he gave you a fine house with her, surely it would be asking little if he requested you to keep the mansion in repair. So now that the trustees of the church hav furnished this beautiful edifice, the least we can do is to see that the church is well conducted. I ask you all, my friends, who liv near by, to come in and join us in maintaining this house to the glory of God."

We do not think the people will willingly maintain this house, but they are forced to do it anyway. If Mr. Harsen's legacy had paid taxes, the congregation might exult with some propriety over its prosperity. As it is, the Bloomingdale Reformed church stands to the public in the attitude of a pauper suddenly made well-to-do by the bestowal of alms, and opulence attained by legal robbery.

Good for Princeton.

Mr. E. H. Heywood informs us that on election day, in response to an article put in the town warrant to test the question, the town of Princeton, Mass., voted by a handsome majority to petition the legislature to repeal the law exempting church property from taxation.

No doubt, adds Mr. Heywood, many other towns and cities would do likewise if the case were squarely put to the people in public assemblies.

We believe this to be true, and recommend that in every place where there are two or three Freethinkers they get the selectmen to insert such an article in the next warrant calling a town meeting, and put it squarely to vote. We expect that within a short time the American Secular Union will hav documents ready for such campaigns, to be supplied at cost in return for donations to the Campaign Fund, and surely the friends of secularization throughout the states should each do his share toward achieving true religious independence.

Lithograph of Charles Darwin.

Admirers of the great naturalist, and practically the father of evolution, will be glad to know that we hav a fine lithograph of him for sale—size 18 1-2x24 inches, on heavy plate paper. Framed, the picture will make a splendid ornament for the parlors of Freethinkers. Price, 25 cents.

Editorial Notes.

We would like the names and addresses of all who are prepared to deliver Liberal or Freethought lectures. The list will be published in our Annual for 1886, soon to appear.

The Dennison, Texas, Sunlay Gazetteer has an exceedingly able Christian dummy for the editor to knock over. And the editor knocks him over with neatness and dispatch. The Gazetteer is doing first rate work for Infidelity down in Texas.

Liberals in and near New York city will miss one of the most magnificent orations of the century if they fail to attend Colonel Ingersoll's lecture at the Academy of Music, Sunday evening, the 15th. The other magnificent orations of the century hav been the previous speeches by the same individual.

The series of articles on "The Harmony and Meaning of the Scientific Gospels" is by T. B. Wakeman, being the continuation of a lecture delivered by him before the Liberal Club. His name was inadvertently omitted last week. The articles will be published in pamphlet form as soon as completed, which will be in a few weeks.

In response to the notice that Mr. Remsburg's lecture at Cleveland is being brought out in pamphlet form, E. A. Vidal, of Sarnia, Ont., writes: "I want fifty copies of 'Sabbath Breaking' at once." The pamphlet will be out next week and orders may be sent at once. Price, single copy 25 cents; six copies for $1; special discount on larger quantities. We hope that several thousand will be circulated this winter, as it is the best and most complete Freethought work that we hav upon the Sunday question.

Governor Hoadly of Ohio has again issued a Thanksgiving proclamation with no reference in it to "God," and no other religious nonsense. He asks that the day be kept "in the spirit of him who said, 'It is more blessed to giv than to receive,'" but this is a humanitarian, not a religious, sentiment. The proclamation reads:

"To the People of the State of Ohio:

"By virtue of the authority conferred on me by Section 3,177 of the Revised Statutes, and in accordance with the annual and honored custom, I hereby appoint Thursday, Nov. 26, 1885, as a day of Thanksgiving. That the day may be thankfully kept by all, we should observe it in the spirit of him who said, 'It is more blessed to giv than to receive,' remembering that we hav the poor always with us."

Dr. J. L. York writes us from Sydney, Australia, that Joseph Symes, the Freethought speaker at Melbourne, is quite likely to meet at the hands of the Melbourne Christians a fate similar to that of D. M. Bennett. He has been arrested on three charges under an ancient law dug up from the legal graveyard to do duty again in repressing human liberty for Christ's sake. We congratulate Mr. Symes on possessing the courage necessary to wage the inevitable bitter fight by which every liberty is won, and we commiserate Australia that her inhabitants are bigots of the Middle Age kind. But let them remember that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church" of Freethought as surely as of Christianity. To Mr. Symes we send greeting, and promis that if we can be of service in this far-away land, he may command us. When the bigots are through with Mr. Symes, no doubt it can be said of him, as he said of D. M. Bennett, that "his life's work has permanently damaged their superstition."

Liberty begins in its issue for November 14th a story on Ireland, by Georges Sauton, translated from the French by Sarah E. Holmes. Every Irishman, says Mr. Tucker, and every lover of freedom ought to read this thrilling romance. "The author weaves into a drama of unusual poignancy and melancholy power the story of one of the heroic struggles of the sons of Erin to lift the accursed yoke of the English—the English who hav stolen their lands, burned such cities as resisted too vigorously, exterminated entire and inoffensiv populations, and established as an axiom this monstrosity: 'It is not a felony to kill an Irishman!' He also givs the bloody history of the repression of this noble attempt at deliverance — terrible, frightful, cowardly repression—by exile, banishment, and execution, without trial. He lifts the conquered to their legitimate pinnacle of glory, and puts the conquerors in the pillory of shame." From the above description, our readers can see how lurid the story is likely to be. We really hope that some historical facts will be given in support of these charges.

The Catholic parochial schools in New Haven, Hartford, Norwich, New Britain, Waterbury, and other places in Connecticut hav never been taxed, having been exempted under the general statute which applies to property used by a corporation exclusivly for religious or educational purposes. A dispatch from Willimantic, to the World of this city, says it has been left for the Republican assessors in the town of Windham to discover that St. Joseph's Catholic Parochial school in this place ought not to be exempt. This school was built several years ago by St. Joseph's Society for the education of the children of the parish. It was built nominally by, and for several years held as the property of, Father DeBruycker, the pastor, in order to facilitate construction and management. In 1882 it was first taxed as the private property of Father De Bruycker. The taxes were paid one year under protest, and the property next year was transferred to St. Joseph's congregation, and claimed as then exempt from taxation by the statute because used by the church exclusivly for religious and educational purposes. The Catholic taxpayers claim that the school has nearly six hundred pupils, and saves the public schools the expense of more buildings, and ten or twelve teachers, and they say that as taxpayers, besides maintaining the parochial school, they are assessed for the public schools. The town authorities, relying on the advice of Chief Justice Park, hav brought suit in the Superior Court for unpaid taxes.

The Banner of Light prints the following petition to the lawmakers of our state:

"To the Honorable Senate and Assembly of the State of New York:

"Your petitioners, citizens of this state, respectfully ask your honorable body to repeal the statute passed in 1880 in relation to the registration of medical diplomas, which violates the Constitution of the United States, and the comity existing betwen the several states of the Union, imposes disabilities on citizens receiving professional instruction in other states, prevents the utilization of some of the most advanced modes of remedial practice, and otherwise infringes their civil and personal rights: Our request being based on the following points:

"1. We believe that the inhabitants of the United States hav the constitutional right to employ any practitioner engaged in the healing art, or any mode of treatment that they hav confidence in when disease afflicts themselvs or their families, and no state law has the right to declare them or the practitioners they thus summon to be criminals for so doing.

"2. We know that many of the citizens of this state are naturally endowed with the gift of healing, and yet many others with the gift of second sight or clairvoyance, to detect disease; also that many of the most prominent and influential citizens of the state are successfully employing said persons in cases of sickness.

"3. These gifts not being recoguized or taught at medical colleges, no diplomas can therefore be obtained at said colleges; and as the censors of the (allopathic) medical societies claim to be the guardians of the medical law in the state, and said censors hav caused the practitioners who possess these healing gifts to appear before the criminal courts simply on the plea of their exercising such gifts without registering a diploma as required—when by the facts in the case a diploma is unattainable—great injustice is visited upon citizens of our state, the law being applied by said medical censors for the protection of their own interests, as against those of the so-called irregular practitioners and also the people, since the first are deprived of their constitutional rights, and the people themselvs are compelled to employ the regulars (however distasteful to them) or go without medical treatment.

"4. We believe that honorable practitioners, possessing the natural gift of healing, should be allowed to exercise it when requested to do so by the sick; and believe also that the general law against malpractice will (if enforced) protect the people from all fraud and deception, from whatever source."

All in favor of medical freedom—and what Freethinker is not—are asked to paste the petition upon paper, get signatures, and send them to the Banner of Light office, Boston, Mass.

Lectures and Meetings.

Col. R G. Ingersoll will lecture in this city to-morrow (Sunday) night, November 15th, at the Academy of Music, Fourteenth street and Irving Place; subject, "Myth and Miracle.'

Mrs. Hannah T. Stearns is speaking Sundays for the Spiritualist Association of Elmira, N. Y., and will lecture week-day evenings in the vicinity for such societies as may wish to engage her services. She may be addressed at Elmira, N. Y., general delivery.

Mr. Charles Watts lectures on Sunday, Nov. 22d, morning and evening, at the Opera House, Grand Rapids, Mich., and on Sunday, Nov. 29th, afternoon and evening, at Chicago, Ill. Mr. Watts will not be able to go farther west this tour as he returns to fulfil a six weeks engagement in Canada. Early in the new year, however, he contemplates again visiting the west. All friends requiring lectures from Mr. Watts at that time and at places near or beyond Chicago, will please communicate with him. His address is 82 Berkeley street, Toronto, Ont., Canada. As Mr. Watts is one of the ablest advocates possessed by the cause of Freethought we urge that be he kept busy. His lectures undoubtedly do good wherever delivered, giving Infidels new thoughts and Christians unanswerable arguments why they should leave the church. Parker Pillsbury, the apostle of anti-slavery, in an excellent account in the Investigator of Mr. Watts's recent visit to Greenwich, Mass., says that Mr. Watts's lectures were able and powerful, and that he is a model debater, worthy of all imitation. Mr. Pillsbury ought to know whereof he speaks.

Mrs. A. M. Freeman sends us the following account of her visit to Milwaukee, a city distinguished chiefly for being the home of Dr. Juliet H. Severance, a lady of more vim and ability than many cities much larger than Milwaukee can support:

"Chicago, Nov. 5, 1885.

"Mr. Editor: Although the Milwaukee League was unrepresented by delegates at the late Congress, yet it is by no means dead. Last Sunday evening, Nov. 1st, I had the pleasure of speaking before this very intelligent society, where I found many earnest workers—Radicals, Spiritualists, and Materialists. Perhaps no League in the country has more able debaters than are to be found taking part in the warm discussions following the lectures given every Sunday evening in the beautiful little hall in which they assemble. Mr. and Mrs. McCasin furnish delightful music, and really the society seems provided with everything to make it a power in the Cream city.

"The lecture I gave was theological and radical, but none too radical for the earnest men and women listening to it. It happened to be the night of election of officers, and I had the pleasure of seeing our very earnest co-worker, the former vice president of the National Liberal League, Dr. Juliet H. Severance, unanimously elected president of the society, Mr. McCasin, the president for the preceding term, gracefully resigning his office and placing the new incumbent in the chair of honor.

"With so able and earnest a worker as the doctor, the society must attain a prosperity exceeding even that of the past.

"That there is a working League in Milwaukee is due altogether to the efficient work of this gifted woman, who through her own exertions while secretary of the society for one year paid all its expenses without collections from the society or in any way calling upon it for pecuniary aid.

"It was my first visit to Milwaukee, and I shall not soon forget the warm hospitality extended to me by the doctor and her husband, Professor Severance, in their very pleasant home, nor the kind friends I met in the League."

Letters from Friends.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., Oct. 27, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: As you are probably aware, I had arranged for a campaign of free lectures to be delivered by Mr. J. E. Remsburg at Big Rapids, Cadillac, and this city, for last week. The result has been a very gratifying one.

I met Mr. Remsburg at Big Rapids on the 22d inst., on the evening of which date he delivered his oration on Thomas Paine in the Opera House, before a large and appreciativ audience, composed of the best and most intelligent citizens of that place. The hearty approval of the speaker's utterances was demonstrated by the good attention and frequent applause. The speaker was introduced by Mr. H. F. Burch, a Radical and stanch Freethinker, and whose bountiful hospitality we enjoyed while in that city. We were treated like princes. Big Rapids is sixty miles north of this point..

The next day we went to Cadillac, forty miles farther north, a young and flourishing city, where Mr. Remsburg delivered his "Sabbath Breaking" to a very large audience, composed of doctors, lawyers, the mayor, ex-mayors—in fact, everybody was out to hear the "new gospel." Rev. Beals, Congregationalist, was present, and expressed his hearty approval of the lecture. The lecture was held in a large rink that was comfortably seated. Rounds of applause greeted the speaker.

On Saturday we came to this city, where, in Power's Opera House, Mr. Remsburg delivered both the above lectures, one in the forenoon, to a fair audience, and the other (on Paine) in the evening, to a large and intelligent audience. These lectures are becoming quite popular, and Liberalism is rapidly becoming popular throughout western Michigan. The attention and intense interest manifested at all points where Liberal lectures are given fully demonstrate the fact that it is no longer disrespectable to advocate the Liberal cause. Our claims are being respected, and the superstitious notion of a God, devil, and infallible Bible is rapidly disappearing from the horizon of western Michigan.

On the 22d of November next Mr. Watts delivers two lectures here in the same Opera House, and I fully expect the house to be packed to overflowing, and it has a capacity for seating over two thousand. Everybody wants to hear Watts.

Yours, etc., D. A. BLODGETT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Oct. 18, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I need not speak of the absence of the slightest religious feeling in our Californian metropolis. I can hardly find a person with pretensions to intelligence who would dare say, "I believe in God, Christ, and Virgin Mary." Occasionally I meet some one who claims to possess a belief iu a God, or in a Christ, but it does not take much time to learn that his God is not the one of the obscene book, called "Holy Bible," and his Christ nothing but an imaginary picture of the ideal man, rather of the future than of the past.

The attentiv reader of the daily press of this city could show instances upon instances where religious superstition is masterfully tackled. I do not belong to that class of readers, and can so far remind myself of only a few of them:

A general complaint was once started by the clergy against the non-attendance of the public in the churches, and one Sunday was particularly pointed to, for then the majority of the churches were especially honored with a total absence of every living soul except the clergy folks. The dailies considered it their duty to find the cause, and after finding it, consoled the clergy by the fact that such a Sunday does not happen very often, for it was a dog-play Sunday.

I don't know whether or no the clergy were satisfied with the consolation. If they were not they must be fools; for no matter to what kind of an animal they reduce their God, they certainly cannot take a dog's place themselvs, and so long as they don't do it the citizens of San Francisco will always avail themselvs of a dog-play opportunity, much more if it happens on Sundays.

Another instance I remember when the clergy protested against putting up theatrical plays for the purpose of securing funds in support of churches. Some of the ministers wisely expressed themselvs thus: "If there was no other way to support the churches it was time to close them." The press, to my recollection, did not hesitate a moment to fully agree with them that "it was time to close the churches."

It seems to me that the clergy should commence the "closiug," and look for a job while some power is still in their hands. If they wait too long they may find circumstances doing the work without their aid, and themselvs in a worse condition. True, hard times are upon us and many cannot find employment, but I thiuk that a clergyman could, for mauy business booms hav been put up by them, and many concerns would fear to refuse them employment. Let them strike the iron while it is hot.

We hav a man here who calls himself Lewis the Messiah. He walks up and down the streets and distributes circulars, sometimes signing himself "Jesus Christ," and giving the public hell or sheol if they don't believe in him and in what he tells them. He tells them oftentimes very truthful things indeed. He tells them that the existing churches are humbugs, and tools in the hands of the rich and disgraceful educated classes against the poor and honest intelligent masses. I shall make some extracts from his latest circulars: ". . Lying you are, bound down by the false pressure, being swindled by the chronic liars who are euchering themselvs and you to death. I'm holding back the lightning from striking you, but the blood of the murdered innocent and the ignorant suicide is spurting over Me now, the wailing of starving mothers and destitute children rings in Mine ears, and think you that I'll hold back forever. . . Behold, a people rising out of darkness into marvelous Light; ye fools who hav forsaken me, by them will I make you jealous (Deut. xxxii, 21). . . Patience will soon cease to be a virtue; they will not ever be mobbed and robbed with impunity, they will rise in their might. I alone can deliver you. . . All are reduced to incarnations of the great idol Mammon, Almighty Dollar, the Lord of all. What would the American people, torn with dissensions, be in the hands of the Chinese millions led by my white minions who would sell themselvs as traitors for gold or glory? Ye who believe not My Power, would ye cut Me off only to find it out? Aye, were it possible, then would ye find it out with a vengeance! 'A Holy Terror living, but an Infernal Destroyer dead (Matt. iv, 5, 6). . . Be warned in time, or be damned eternally (Num. xxi, 8)."

In order to show what sort of a messiah he is, Mr. Lewis givs in his circulars Biblical extracts. I shall mention a few:

"Of righteous God I am the Son, (Matt. iv, 2).
I and My Father are truly One; (John x, 36).
What use on earth is there for pelf? (Rev. xvii, 18).
To cheat your brother, who is yourself?" (John x, 16).

Enough.

If history ever records this Jesus upon such a proposition, I for one would be sorry for not inserting my name as one of his apostles. But, alas, I don't think he will ever succeed. He is not a Jew, and I honestly believe that it takes a Jew to make a Christian Jesus. He must not necessarily be a carpenter. A Jew of mysterious birth, and a big liar, and Jesus is ready, well done. Mr. Lewis, Messiah, does not seem to hav any of these qualities, and no reasonable man would ever giv him a serious thought. Some pious people, however, differ from us in opinion, and were seriously afraid that Lewis the Messiah might compete with their Jesus, the Christ. A charge of insanity was brought against him, and he was arrested. Friends who went to his relief told me that they got him out upon the proposition that there was no reason to insult a living Jesus while a dead one is still lawfully worshiped.

Such is the general spirit of the California press and people in regard to religions. Yours, for truth and justice,

M. WAHRHAFTIG.

DORSEY, NEB., Oct. 8, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: If acceptable I will write you a few lines fro m Dorsey, Holt county, Nebraska. This is a new section, few farms having been settled more than four or five years. The wild lauds are generally taken by pre-emption, homestead, or tree claim. The land is prairie, most of it mixed with sand. Fertility of soil, medium. Claims of 160 acres are held at an average of $1,000. Some places are now deeded.

One of the hardships of these new prairie farms is scarcity of fuel. Hay and corn-stalks are often used to cook and warm by, though not so good or agreeable as corn in the ear or cobs, but cobs grow scarce, and the corn can be sold, and the new settler is often pushed to sell his corn to meet expenses. A hay burner is sometimes used, made of sheet iron and in form some like a stove boiler. It is taken out and crammed full of prairie (wild) hay or of corn-stalks, and inverted on top of a stove in which a fire has been kindled and the front cover removed. This will burn one or two hours, but causes more smoke, and is not so pleasant as wood. Coal can be bought at Running Water, east of here, or Oneal, southwest of here—both railroad stations, and both twenty-five or thirty miles distant.

The general intelligence is fair for a new country, the religious condition mixed and uncertain. Presbyterianism, Methodism, Spiritualism, and indifference all are represented; more probably belonging to the latter class than to any other. The Presbyterian church has lately expelled the Union Sunday-school from the Presbyterian church-building. The Christian clergy of this county are claiming the right to stand in the front in politics and that they are by right the wet nurses of Prohibition. Many persons of Liberal opinion are talking over the question of female suffrage and of restraint on companionship between the sexes. God's people are usually conservativ on the latter question. WM. J. ROSENKRANS.

ALTOONA, PA., Oct. 10, 285.

MR. EDITOR: The question of intemperance has been written upon and debated to a considerable extent through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER for quite a number of years. As every person is free to express his honest thought, I venture to giv mine on this great and important topic. I candidly admit that intemperance in alcoholic drinks is one of the greatest curses with which maukind must contend to-day. In looking around us we can readily observe its fearful results. We see people wrecked and ruined in mind and body, thousands brought to poverty aud want, homes made desolate and dreary, tyrants made of men, and slaves of women. The greatest question in regard to this great and growing evil is, "How can it be remedied?" Will Prohibition do it? I answer, no; Prohibition fosters smuggling, engenders political animosity, and strikes at the very liberty of the individual. You might just as well try to force the Germau to cease eating limburger cheese as to pass laws which will prohibit him from indulgiug in his favorit glass of lager. As our country fills up with people from European lands the opposition to prohibitory law increases, and in a few years all such laws would be obliterated.

In again looking at the other side of the question, we are told by science that mankind would be better off without the use of alchoholic stimulants. One of the greatest Germaan chemists, and Dr. Oswald, one of the leading scientific physicians of the day, are good authority, although the whole scientific world almost unanimously agree to the above.

Now, my ideas in regard to the lessening of the evils produced by intemperance are as follows: Scientific education from the cradle to the grave, with a true and thorough knowledge of the laws of hygiene. Then a modification of our civil laws. Make them stronger, and hav them more rigidly enforced. Hav a uniform system of license, and giv it to all that apply. Hav workhouses and confine those that become unlawful through the use of liquor. Compel them to pay a heavy fine which shall go to their families or to the county. Make the adulteration of liquors a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment, and hav inspectors appointed by the government in every locality to see that the law is not disobeyed.

By doing all this we are depriving no men of their liberty or right to satisfy their longing in the flowing bowl. The German can still quaff his lager, the Frenchman his wine, and the Englishman his ale. The members of the only true church can still "praise God from whom all blessings flow" in the morning, and become blind drunk in the afternoon. Hangers on around barrooms can still indulge in their bumpers, while those that are troubled with a weakness upon rising in the morning can still take their little stroll before breakfast.

It might be well to say in conjunction with this that our laws, if we hav any, in regard to adulteration of food should be stronger. Food that is adulterated is very injurious. This is nearly as important as the other question. I again repeat that the question of Prohibition has been nearly settled, and even now is deemed by many of its early supporters as experimentum crucis. But the question of intemperance is a complicated one, and in regard to which there are a thousand theories. But, according to my judgment, and that of many others, I deem it just as impossible to prevent men from obtaining liquor and drinking it as it is to keep them from eating too much, thereby causing dyspepsia, and the ruination of health. WILLIAM J. BURNS.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., Oct. 9, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to say to your many readers, through your most valuable paper, that last Sunday afternoon and evening we had in this city a great revival, not through the efficacy of blood two thousand years old, but through the reason and common sense of the intelligence of the nineteenth century. We were thoroughly baptized from the "unction" of reason administered by Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel, of Kansas City, Missouri.

Mrs. Krekel, wife of Judge Krekel, delivered two philosophic and scientific lectures at Power's Opera House last Sunday; one at 3 P.M. on "Evolution of Thought and Progress of Ideas," to a fair-sized and intelligent audience. Though the house was very smoky, caused by some defect in the furnace, Mrs. Krekel held her audience in profound silence with her masterly logic and her superior metaphysical arguments. The other lecture in the evening was on the "Coming Religion and Coming Church." Inspired by a very large and intelligent audience, Mrs. Krekel delivered one of the grandest lectures that it has been our pleasure to listen to. She proved conclusivly the failure of the church from its own advocates, reading extracts from many of its leading preachers. I admire not only the ability and oratory of Mrs. Krekel, but I admire the noble woman that she is who has the moral courage to stand upon a Liberal platform and declare that she is not a Christian in any sense of the word, which she did. It is no credit, as most intelligent people will admit, at opportune times, but it is very few who hav the moral courage to admit it. In addition to her good thoughts she has a full, round, and clear voice by which she is able to make herself distinctly understood all over a large hall, and she did it to that extent that not one left during the hour and a half consumed, and there were many supposed-to-be orthodox people present. It was a real treat.

Our Liberal and generous friend, Mr. D. A. Blodgett, secures these lectures, hires the hall, and all who will may hear reason and common sense free of charge, simply for the pains of coming—and some hav pains. Mr. Blodgett brings Mr. Remsburg here for two lectures on the 25th inst. in the same way. By his generosity he is "storming the citadel right here in Rome," and, judging from the effects thus far, the churches, monuments of superstition and ignorance, will, in the near future, hav left to support them but the ragtag of ignorance. Freethinkers here are beginning to be respected, and even our orthodox friends begin to think there is an occasional one who is not a horse-thief. This city especially is undergoing a great revolution in religious ideas. As proof of this, it is hard to find even a church-member who will not admit that he knows nothing about God and heaven, and who accepts the Bible as anything but the work of man.

Yours, J. M. JAMISON.

EUREKA, NEV., Oct. 2, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I do love THE TRUTH SEEKER, for it teaches the only true religion in existence, which is that of Humanity and nature. Accept truth and facts when they can be demonstrated; do good, and act unto others as you would hav them act unto you—this is the creed of Humanity. I do not believe in a future life. This is the only one we hav any knowledge of, and I believe all are punished just in accordance to their deeds in this life. It seems to me that if one does wrorg knowingly, his conscience must punish him for deviating from that which is right. I think all the punishment is in this life. I do not see how any sensible man can read the Bible and believe it. It upholds nearly all that is cruel, and wrong and wickedness the most horrible, too brutal to mention. It has killed off millions of innocent people because they dared to express honest opinions, and all from ignorance and superstition; and as for heaven, such a holy place that must be, if all the sinners in this world go there! They rejoiced in all kinds of inhuman crimes, to please their imaginary God. Such a God is worse than a devil. They believe they can do all kinds of wickedness and all they hav to do is to humble themselvs in prayer and ask for forgivness and they will all be as pure as the driven snow. They might pray all their life and it would not do them any good. They must be lost beyond redemption. Such are the mysterious ways of heaven. I never go to church, and would not aid them or Catholic priests in any way, shape, or form. E. J. BURNS.

WAYLAND, MICH., Oct. 7, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Where is the location of the Christian heaven and hell? When I ask Christians at 12 o'clock at noon where is heaven, they point up. Now for the argument I will call up where the sun is at noon. If I ask these same Christians at 6 o'clock in the evening where heaven is, they point up, but naturally they point one-quarter east of the sun; and if I ask them at 12 o'clock in the night they point up, but they point opposit the sun—down; and if I ask them at 6 o'clock in the morning, they point up, but they point one-quarter west of the sun.

If I ask these same Christians where hell is, they point down, every quarter of the day and night, so in twenty-four hours they come round about in rotation.

Some hundred years back some Christians thought hell was under the earth, but astronomy dug the foundation away. Since that time the earth is floating in the universe, in rotation.

According to the Christian pointing, heaven and hell are out of the universe and are all around the universe. If heaven and hell were in the universe, they would come in conflict with suns, planets, and comets. Now, I would like to know which is first. If heaven is first, then all of those who go to hell hav to go through heaven to get to hell, and if hell is first, all those who go to heaven hav to go through hell to get to heaven.

If there is a Lord in heaven, so there will be slavery. Lords cannot exist without slaves, whether in heaven or on earth. Who is on the Lord's side is on the side of slavery. Who is on the side of men, women, and children is on the side of liberty.

JOSEPH WENZEL.

ODESSA, Mo., Oct. 27, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Christians profess to know upon good authority that their God, Jehovah, is the only true and living God, that he is in reality the only God, that all others are frauds. They base this knowledge on a would-be revelation which they say they believe was made by this God himself to the old Jews a long time ago. They believe he is omnipotent, infinitly wise and merciful, the very quintessence of all good; that he created all things and pronounced them good and very good; that man, actuated by an old chap who they say God also created a long time ago, is the cause of all the evil in the world; that this old chap was created an archangel, but rebelled against God and became his bitter enemy, for which God threw him overboard, and cast him into a bottomless pit, and made him boss of it, Prince Satan, the devil; and that on account of a little apple scrape which this old chap led the first human pair into, God brought evil upon the world. And they tell us that nature corroborates this revelation. What bosh! If there is an omnipotent personal God of infinit wisdom, mercy, love, and justice, did he, on account of that little apple scrape, or any other scrape which man and this devil could devise, make some animals with great ugly claws, hooked bills, and others with terrible tusks, hideous claws, keen scent, ferocious natures, to lurk and saunter about their hellish haunts in pursuit of innocent, defenseless animals, which never did them any harm, leaping on them, killing them with merciless brutality, and devouring them with the greed of starvation? Is this makeshift, this apple story, all you Christians hav to reconcile the teachings of nature with the general Christian idea of an omnipotent personal God of infinit wisdom, love, and foreknowledge? Could such a God be the author of such things as the above-mentioned under any circumstances whatever? According to this makeshift all things were very good until Eve and Adam ate the apple contrary to God's orders; then God got angry, cursed Adam, Eve, the devil, and the earth with a curse that is to last forever. All the unborn generations coming after must suffer the dreadful consequences of this curse brought on by the act of these two individuals induced by the devil. What a change came over everything! The lions and the lambs could no longer lie down together; the hawks, the owls, and eagles were taken with hankering appetites for chicken, quail, dove, and such like; the fishes reptils, and insects commenced devouring each other; how their claws, their bills, and tusks, and saw-teeth took shape and dimensions necessary for the work set before them—how carnivorous. What a set of cannibals they became all of a sudden! Oh, how angry that God of love must hav got about that one little apple business! What we hav mentioned is not a patching of what he did do. Because of it he brought famin, sword, pestilence, and all the diseases in the catalog into the world. Verily it looks like he made a little hell of this earth to last his dear creatures while they are here, and we are told he opened up a pit of fire and brimstone for a great majority of them, which awaits their souls after death, and then pointed them all to his eternal plan of salvation, which, we are informed, is full to overflowing with redeeming love. His son, his only son, his well-beloved son, was to die, according to this eternal plan of salvation, for the sins of the whole world. How broad! "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; giv them all a chance. But of course I know," thought he, "I hav chosen but few; I know that I hav made the road to hell broad and easy, and the road to heaven straight but narrow and difficult; that many will sink to hell, and few get to heaven; I knew that long before I made them; I also of course knew that they could not act contrary to my eternal foreknowledge. But this don't in the least affect my character as God; I am God, and beside me there is none other. I propose to do as I please with my creatures, and they hav no right to grumble. Shall the clay say to the potter, 'Why did you make me thus and so?'" This is Jehovah; he according to orthodoxy is infinitly anomalous, independent of all law, all justice, all truth, all everything; but still he is the very essence of all good. Was there ever a greater impossibility than the Christian God? He, being independent of all law, all obligation, etc., had a perfect right to compel Ezekiel to take that nauseous dose we read of in the fourth chapter of Ezekiel. He can stoop to the lowest slums of degradation and filth without in the least affecting his dignity as God; and he is infallible, and if the pope could get the people to believe that he is entitled to the same authority, he would jump at the chance, knowing that it would enable him to do all manner of meanness with impunity. This is the way the thing works. May science, reason, nature, the only god I know, save the people from the evil effects of all such pernicious doctrins, is my heart's desire.

I inclose postage stamps for "St. Matthew," and also "Moses Before the Court," by Secularist. Please send as soon as convenient. I am anxious to read them and let some of my friends read them; I think it will strengthen them in the faith.

WILLIAM L. WORLEY.

ASHLEY, O., Oct. 14, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: On Monday night, September 12th, Mr. John E. Remsburg delivered his lecture "Bible Morals" in this place to a fair-sized audience, taking the weather into consideration. It rained nearly all the afternoon, and at the time for the meeting to begin it just poured down. Mr. Remsburg handled his subject in a masterly manner, and sent some hot shot into the enemy's ranks. His telling words made them squirm, but they had to admit the truth and logic of his great lecture, "Bible Morals." We would recommend to the Freethinkers Mr. Remsburg as a fine speaker and a true gentleman. To those who hav not read Mr. Remsburg's "Bible Morals," "False Claims," and "Sabbath Breaking," we would earnestly recommend to get a copy of each and carefully read them, for they are full of good, sound doctrin. Mr. Editor, let us hope for better times, and urge every Freethinker to liv a pure and good life, and show to our fellowmen that we can do right, if we do not believe the Bible; be honest, and not afraid to own our existence to nature rather than to a God we can neither see nor feel. I am a collector of curiosities, and I verily believe I hav one specimen of fossil that is millions of ages older than the Bible God we read about. We hav men right here in our town who do not believe the doctrin they preach, but they are afraid to say so for fear of losing their trade. They go to church and act the hypocrit, drop their money into the contribution-box, when they had better giv it to some poor widow, to help her to maintain herself and children. It would, I think, be better than to giv it to the lazy, pampered-up preacher. I hope the day is not far distant when they will be obliged to earn an honest living by laboring in the field and workshop like any honest person. Yours fraternally, CHAS. OLMSTEAD.

CONCORD, KY., Oct. 28, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I hav something pleasant to tell you. Not pleasant to the ears of prejudice and bigotry, but to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER it will be most welcome, I am sure. We hav just realized the long-cherished anticipation of hearing two of Freethought's best lecturers, C. Fannie Allyn and John E. Remsburg. Their lectures were delivered at West Union, Adams county, Ohio, and in close proximity to our home. Although to a small band a Freethought meeting was an event of paramount importance, to the community it was only a novelty, viewed as a means of gratifying a growing curiosity—but none thought of making a flattering impression. If it is a source of satisfaction to these two fearless exponents that they expected a paramount change in the minds of their hearers, we feel perfectly safe in making the assertion West Union will never be what she has been. She has, through the courage of these heroic advocates, felt the touch of regeneration that will tell more distinctly as the years go by. Skepticism will evolve into a settled confirmation, and the Freethinking element that lacked only the courage to be demonstrativ will be encouraged to avow itself, and feel for the first time the incomparable pleasure of expression. To say that C. Fannie Allyn won golden opinions is only a trite repetition. To say that she won the hearts of those who had the happiness of forming her acquaintance, and that she will liv in affectionate memory so long as memory lasts, is no deviation, but fully concurrent with testimony earnest and sincere. To speak in terms of eulogy to the Liberal world of John E. Remsburg would elicit a smile for its superfluity. He is fast attaining a national reputation. Had he had his just deserts he would hav attained it long ago, but we must experience a goodly share of the bitterness of patience before we taste of its fruits.

We learn that he left the school-room for the rostrum. He left off teaching the child that he might teach the childish. A happy exchange for the latter. What a blessing it would be were they as capable of learning as he is of teaching! Twenty years hence, should he visit this old town, perched upon its hill of eminence, and mental freedom is not impeded, he will be received as a benefactor, and be made the recipient of the benediction of gratitude. It would be injustice both to Liberals at home and abroad not to mention some of Adams county's people, for they are unquestionably deserving. John F. Beck is a leader in our little band, and in saying that we say that he is energetic, indefatigable, thoroughly imbued with a love of Liberalism, without which action is impossible. We heartily commend him to our Freethought friends everywhere. D. W. P. Eglur is another, speaking his sentiments bravely and without stint.

Should you, good friends, be so fortunate as to ever meet "Dan" in his wanderings, press his hand warmly, for he is yours fraternally. Mrs. Gash and her two sons, James and Gilbert T. Gash, must not be overlooked. They are of the Spiritualistic school, and veterans in the field. Suffice it to say they are a potency for good in any community. We mention John J. Lockhart as a hero in the cause. John would fight, bleed, and die for it. He would giv his last crust to a brother wayfarer, though he never expected to get it back in this world or the next. But John has a wife who thinks and acts in concert with him; besides, he is our brother; so with these advantages you will not be surprised that he is a model. We hav spoken of those in the vicinity of West Union. There are none living immediately in the place who are identified with us as yet, but whenever they wish to enter they will find the "gates ajar." Our lecturers, upon arrival, were met by Mr. Smith Grimes, who escorted them to his home, and who, with his accomplished and generous-hearted lady, entertained with elegant hospitality. The kindness of both Mr. and Mrs. Grimes will be long remembered. We, with other Liberals, were sojourners at the Bank Hotel, of which Uncle Sam Wright is the proprietor. He has been long and favorably known in this county. Both himself and Mrs. Wright are the soul of hospitality. To use his own words, he is a "ladies' man," and as he is in every sense of the word a gentleman, the ladies indorse his claim readily. Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Erwin are members of Mr. Wright's family, and, being cultivated, are, in the general acceptation of the word, Liberal.

We were treated by them not as strangers, but as friends, and we hope some day to repay their kindness. There are others who deserve mention, but lack of space denies to us the opportunity for this time.

The attendance at the several lectures was respectable in numbers and respectful in attention. If there was any preconceived prejudice, or if there were any resolutions to reject the utterances of the speakers, they failed to manifest themselvs. We fully believe the knell of theology has been sounded in the county seat of old Adams, and that C. Fannie Allyn and John E. Remsburg hav done it. All honor to these noble champions here and Immortality hereafter.

NEWTON AND VIRGINIA E. VANCE.

DAVENPORT, IOWA, Oct. 10, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The sample copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER came duly to hand. Thanks. Our League is prospering, and the members are increasing constantly. Our meetings, which are held every Sunday morning at ten o'clock, are pretty well patronized. Prof. L. R. Wetherell, Davenport's well-known orator and scientist, will giv us a lecture to-morrow. Subject: "Why Should Liberals Be Activ?" We shall shortly join the National League, and we hope to be represented at the Congress next year. The officers for the next ensuing year are: president, J. T. Kahrmann; vice-President, John F. Miller; secretary, H. G. Scharfenberg; treasurer, T. H. Dwight.

Fraternally, H. G. SCHARFENBERG.

ALBANY, Oct. 23, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Is it possible that Mr. J. D. Mallonee, of Cleveland, should begin his speech at the Convention by saying, "The just right to govern comes from the consent of the governed," and afterwards make a motion to strike out the resolution favoring woman suffrage? Respectfully,

MRS. HENRICA ILIOHAN.

CORVALLIS. OR., Sept. 28, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The worthy vice-president, in his treatis on the Sixth Demand, has evidently missed the intent of the judicial prescription of unbelievers. It is evident on its face that there is no fear that unbelievers will not tell the truth under oath, for their unsupported word as to their faith is all that is required, whereas if there was real doubt as to what their testimony would be there would be witnesses called to test their competency. Therefore there is but one logical conclusion, and that is that it is a form of persecution intended to drive people into the church by placing them in an odious position, and that's all there is of it. L. JOY.

WATERLOO, IND., Oct. 27, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I was in Auburn yesterday, it being the capital of DeKalb county, Ind. While speaking with a Liberal friend in regard to the best Liberal paper, he claiming the Ironclad Age, I contending for THE TRUTH SEEKER, the result ended with nine trial subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER in less time than sixty minutes. Please find the necessary commodity, together with their addresses, etc., inclosed.

Yours first for truth, E. R. SHOEMAKER.

MERIDEN, CONN., Oct. 22, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find two dollars; one for the Bruno monument and one for the Campaign Fund. I hav been a constant reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for six or seven years, and expect to take it as long as I am able to pay for it, and hope it may liv until the Demands of Liberalism are obtained, and as much longer as necessary. There are a large number of Liberals here, but no organization. I wish there was, as I should be glad to join it, but am so circumstanced that I can not take a leading part to originate it, but if it was started I would do all that lay in my power to support it

JOHN DAINTON.

AYER, MASS., Oct. 19, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: It has been my intention for some time to get and add to my library Dr. Foote's remarkable book, which you now advertise. As a member of the school committee I hav said, and stand by it, "More physiology and less grammar." It is a thousand times better to know our bodies and how to treat them than it is to know how to put words in a row. And I will now say, "More physiology and no theology." The clergy hav always stood at the gateway of our earthly Eden with an unsheathed sword and pronounced the tree of knowledge "obscene literature." They hav a mortal dread of the mirror it holds up before them. The church has always been faithful to guard the way to the tree of life. Its greatest dread is the knowledge of the truth, and the salvation that comes from it.

People are shaking themselvs from despotism, intolerance, and priestly assumed knowledge of God and his plan of salvation, and are taking to the ark of safety of their own making, and learning the true religion—the religion of the body, a religion of this world, a religion to mind your own business, to liv and let liv; to hav temples for the bodies and souls, and tombs for the dead gods.

Please send me the remarkable book that teaches of healthy bodies and consequent heaven on earth.

Fraternally yours, ELIJAH MYRICK.

MELVIN VILLAGE, N. H., Oct. 12, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3 for renewal of my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER. Freethought is gradually gaining ground here, and people are beginning even in this orthodox place to hav their eyes opened and to see the light. The dollar's worth of tracts which you sent me hav done good missionary work, and the call is for more. I am in hopes to send you the names of one or two new subscribers soon. Wishing you every success, I am yours for Freethought, MRS. MARY A. HORNE.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Honr."

The Rain-Wagon.

The air was hushed and breathless,
The day had been very warm,
And a heavy black cloud in the west
Threatened a thunder-storm.

We could hear the terrible rumble
And roar as the thunder burst,
And Teddy was grave and left his play,
Afraid from the very first.

At last came down the shower,
In a full flood from the sky,
And the lightning dazzled us with its blaze,
And Teddy began to cry.

"What is it?" he asked, "that rattles
So dreadfully overhead?"
"The rain-wagon going over a bridge,"
Tha little nurse-girl said.

Ah, that was a pretty notion,
A wagon made of the rain!
Perhaps it ran on an iron track
As runs a railroad train;

And the sound that followed the lightning,
And echoed so far and loud,
Was only the roar of the wagon wheels
When they came to a bridge of cloud.

That comforted little Teddy;
He did not cry again;
But rather grew to like to hear
The wagons made of rain.

Not all the truths of science
That the searching world has taught,
I am sure could hav soothed that childish fear
Like the nurse-girl's happy thought.

—Our Little Ones.

Love and Hate.

AN ALLEGORY.

One day as I sat watching the ever-changing shadows of the clouds as they chased each other over the sides of the mountains, driven by the winds which swept by with an angry roar, my vision seemed gradually to expand, until the whole world appeared to pass in review before me.

I saw that all the actions and varied pursuits of mankind were influenced and controled by two beings of opposit sex and diverse appearance, and who seemed endowed with a kind of ubiquity, as they appeared to be everywhere present.

The male figure was clothed with garments stained with human gore, having in one hand a glittering sword, while in the other he carried a fire-brand, and his fierce and restless eyes beamed with looks of malignant triumph, as from between his teeth came hissing the word, "Revenge!" Upon his helmet was written in fiery letters his name, "Hate!"

The other was a beautiful female form, clothed in simple robes of snowy white; in her right hand she held a starry crown, and in her left the olive-branch of peace. Her eyes were suffused with tears of pity, while from her lips dropped words of tenderest compassion; on a breast-plate upon her bosom was her name, inscribed in letters of gold, "Love!"

Large armies followed in the footsteps of Hate, and rejoiced to do his bidding, destroying cities, devastating fruitful fields, desolating quiet, happy homes, killing thousands of people, old and young, with the sword, or still more deadly rifles, and not content with this cruel slaughter and dire destruction, he inflames his followers with the spirit of revenge; man against man, and neighbor against neighbor, and they seek to kill each other in duels and by assassinations, and wherever he came was heard the cry of vengeance.

I saw that Love followed slowly behind him, weeping over the sad desolation on every hand; at her approach the widow's sighs were hushed, the orphan's tears were dried, while peace and plenty crowned the land with joy, and the faces of the poor and destitute were made to smile with gladness.

Some of the followers of Hate as they passed by threw filth upon her garments, which her pearly tears soon washed away, while those she blessed came near, to but touch her shining garment.

One of the heralds of Hate was loudly proclaiming his great achievements, and scattering abroad the printed leaves of his great exploits of rapine and war, being cheered by the multitude in his wake, when Love approached him and said: "You do not right in thus proclaiming only the wicked works of Hate, nor deign to tell the world the good that I hav done; and, be it known to you and all who hav ears to hear, that I am, ere long, to reign in righteousness over all the earth!"

The herald, with a sarcastic look, replied: "My fair maiden, what honors or rewards hav you to bestow upon either heralds or followers?"

She held up the glittering crown, emblem of life and immortal honors: "This, and the peace and joy of loving hearts, will make all life one bright and eternal day!"

Then in a loud voice, like a silver trumpet, she proclaimed, "Know ye not, ye inhabitants of earth, that the reign of Hate is nearly ended; henceforth shall Love rule in the hearts and kingdoms of men; wars shall cease, the new era of peace is now at hand. Who will leave the ranks of Hate and be my followers?" There went up a loud shout, "I will! I will!" I saw the myrmidons of Hate tremble, and, with muttered oaths, turn away; when Hate came rushing toward me, uttering a dreadful howl that startled me from my reverie, but I hav resolved to evermore be a follower and herald of Love, and shall ever strive to weaken the power of Hate, and I hope none who read this will ever become his subjects.

L. HUTCHINSON.

Kiss Them Good-Night.

The tales are told, the songs are sung,
The evening romp is over,
And up the nursery stairs they climb,
With little buzzing tongues that chime
Like bees among the clover.

Their busy brains and happy hearts
Are full of crowding fancies;
From song and tale and make-believe
A wondrous web of dreams they weave
And airy child romances.

Good-night! The tired heads are still,
On pillow soft reposing,
The dim and dizzy mist of sleep
About their thoughts begins to creep,
Their drowsy eyes are closing.

Good-night! While through the silent air
The moonbeams pale are streaming,
They drift from daylight's noisy shore,
"Blow out the light and shut the door,
And leave them to their dreaming."

Cast Iron and Wrought Iron.

"Tell me the difference, please, between cast iron and wrought iron," said little Robbie D. "I hear folks talking about two kinds of iron, and I'd like to know what is the difference."

"The difference is just this, my dear. Cast iron is iron that is cast or made from the ore direct. It is made into stoves, pans, kettles, and all sorts of articles used for cooking, housekeeping, etc. Machinery is made of it, too. That which is called wrought iron is made from the cast iron by taking from it the carbon. After that is removed the iron can be rolled as thin as letter-paper. Nails are made of wrought iron. Do you know what steel is, my dear?"

"No; I wish I did," said Robbie.

"I'll tell you. Steel is a form of iron, also, though harder and whiter than either cast or wrought iron. It can be polished beautifully. It contains a certain per cent of carbon, and may be made very hard or quite soft. Knives, springs, and various implements are made of steel. Iron in its three forms is very useful, and is applied to a vast number of uses. A bar of iron worth five dollars when made into horseshoes is said to be worth ten dollars and a half. Again, take a five dollar bar of iron and make it into needles and its value is increased ten times, and when made into watch-springs its value is increased to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars! I don't know how we could get along without iron, it is so useful and valuable in such a variety of ways. It is very common and is found in many parts of the United States and in Europe, but we rarely pause to consider what a blessing it is to man. There are springs highly impregnated with iron, the water of which is considered excellent for invalids."

"It's funny how iron grows in the earth," said Robbie, meditativly.

"Not only iron, but other metals, and minerals. Some time we will talk more of the treasures of the earth. A lifetime would not suffice to tell all that is hidden in the deep recesses and caverns of our beautiful globe."

Eddie and the Gypsies.

One Sunny day in June Eddie Livingstone was sitting on the front gate-post. Eddie was eight years old, and a very handsome little boy.

The day before some gypsies had made their encampment on a hill near Mr. Livingstone's house.

Eddie, as I hav said, was seated on the post, watching some birds building their nest. Presently a dirty, ragged boy came along with a basket on his arm. He stopped and told Eddie he had some berries in the basket, and if he would giv him something to eat he would giv him some of the berries. He said his name was Alf Peters.

Eddie ran into the house and brought out two slices of bread. The boy gave Eddie the berries and said, "Now, come with me and I will giv you some bows and arrows."

Eddie went with him to the gypsy camp. An old woman was sitting in front of one of the tents. She gave Eddie some coffee to drink. At first he refused, but she kept urging him so that he dared not refuse, and drank the coffee. There must hav been some sort of drug in the coffee, for after Eddie had drank it he went to sleep.

The gypsies packed up that night, put Eddie in one of the teams, and moved on about a mile from that place. When Eddie awoke everything was so strange about him that he began to cry. Alf told him that if he cried they would beat him.

The next morning, before anybody was up, Eddie jumped from his bed and ran for life. When he had gone nearly a mile, he came to a village. He was very faint, and sat down on a step. While sitting there a lady came along and asked a man not far off if he had seen anything of a little boy with black eyes and curly hair.

Eddie's heart beat quick, as he ran along toward the lady, and said "Mamma, mamma."

The lady caught him in her arms and kissed him many times.

It was his own dear mamma, and she had been searching everywhere for him.

He was sorry he went with the gypsy boy, and promised his mother he would not leave the house again without her permission.

Saugus, Mass. EFFIE SINCLAIR.

[Effie's little story is good, but she must be careful and spell and punctuate properly, so that her manuscript may not hav to be re-written.—ED. C. C.]

Ollie.

Merry little Ollie, with her eyes of brown,
With her sunny hair, on her forehead fair,
Like a golden crown.
Could aught be lovelier than our baby sweet?
Playing 'mid the flowers, through babyhood's bright hours,
Hours so fair and fleet. REKAB ESIUOL M.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—REVERSIONS.

1. If you reverse what means a weight,
To view 'twill bring to satiate.
2. A mineral of limestone a kind,
Reversed a craft you now will find.
3. An institution, however great,
To apprehend, if reversed will state.

Pittsburgh, Pa. H. E. JUERGENS.

2.—A PARADOXICAL CHARADE.

From a "lily of the valley," gay,
A lily take reversed;
Though part of first you take away,
You yet leave all of first.
The first denotes the hawthorn's bloom,
The second is no palindrome;
The whole was christened illy
When 'twas called a kind of lily.
A lily not liliaceous,
A liricon-fancy fine;
Our language is veracious,
Our jargon "just divine!"
Which makes it most capacious
For puzzling themes like mine.
"Lucus a non lucendo,"
For so our wit must shine.

Irwin, Iowa. J. K. P. BAKER.

3.—CONUNDRUM.

What metal is the boy?

SOLUTION TO J. K. P. BAKER'S PRIZE PUZZLE IN TRUTH SEEKER, SEPT. 19, 1885.

Chinchilla can eat
A chinquapin* neat,
For his teeth as a chisel are keen.
By his name he's a red bug,
A little wee bed-bug,
That it comes from a chinch may be seen.

Yet he's no bug at all,
Either big bug or small,
And his soft, furry coat is pearl gray;
So he can't take a chill
On a Chillian hill,
In his own nativ home far away.
From a chalice a charm
Never came to his harm;
He is temperate, never gets drunk,
Like that other, "our brother,"
A chap called a monkey,
Not a chipmunk, or monkey,
But the regular donkey,
Who is always a cheater,
With his keys of St. Peter,
Unlocking at best
But a till or a chest.

Chinchilla is honest and clean,
Achieving his joy
Without others' annoy.
He's a chaster and neater
Than that rogue of St. Peter—
In fact all comparison's mean,
Since the printer has made neither friar nor monk,
Please send me the "Apples of Gold" in a chunk.

FLORENCE R. POOL.

Escanaba, Mich., Oct. 19, 1885.

*Quercus prionides. I suppose the chinchilla eats the acorns of the chinquapin oak, if the species occurs in Chili.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, OCT. 31, 1885.

1.—QUASS.
PAPER.
MOTON.
TOPET.
NEPOS.

2.—Four-ninths.

3.—Bradlaugh.

4.—Loving kindness.

5.—
C
CAP
CAMEL
PEN
L

SOLVERS.—H. E. Juergens, Wm. Scott, Addie Thomas, and others.

Chat With Puzzlers.

"LITTLE JACK."—You are quite old enough to originate puzzles, since you solve them so well.

No, Rosa, we cannot print your pretty pictures. It would cost too much. Send original puzzles without drawings.

H. E. JUERGENS and W. J. BURNS will please take front seats on the puzzlers' platform. Daisy —— says you must hav an "awful sight of learning" to make such rhomboids and things.

DAVID A. ANDRADE.—It's a long way from Australia, but we thank you for "Buried Words," and will cheerfully undertake (all of us) to resurrect all such that you may favor us with.

DOES any one know if "Esprit Fort" is still in the land of the living? Our Puzzle Box has not been graced by his name this long time. And where is Robert B.? and our Texas friend and a dozen others who hav been missed from the P. B. so long?

THIS week has brought many answers to Mr. Baker's prize puzzle, offered September 19th, nearly all of them correct. Florence R. Pool, of Escalaba, Mich., was the first to send a correct answer, and to her has been awarded the prize—a copy of "Apples of Gold."

J. K. P. BAKER writes that when a boy he was taught in Sunday-school that all the good youngsters died early and went to heaven, and he had a hard time to keep from being too good and getting translated to heaven young, and also from being t o bad, so that if he should die young he would hav to be tumbled into the other place, politely termed sheol! We are glad, Mr. Baker, that you belong to the survival of the fittest, and that you hav lived to become one of the best puzzle-makers on earth. We are glad you didn't die young.

ED. C. C.

Correspondence.

SEYMOUR, WIS., Oct. 27, 1885.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Your postal card is at hand; the books were miscarried in the mails and reached here only a day or two before the postal did, but they are here all right now and we are very much pleased with "Story Hour;" think it just about right for children. Lucius is delighted with the pictures, and the bears on outside cover enthused him so that he dreamed about bears all night, and begged of me to get him "two little cubs and a father and keep them in the cellar for him to play with;" so you see he is not afraid of bears. I told him the little bears were playing. and the old father and mother were laughing at them; he thinks that "a pretty good joke on Miss Witson" (Wixon). But the other little boy, he wants to see the bears shooting the man; that "takes the cake," so to speak. Hav not read "All in a Lifetime" yet, but feel sure that it is good as its noble author.

L. A. LEMIEUX.

"Johnny, is your sister in?"

"I don't know. Lemme see—what's your name?"

"Barnes—Mr. Barnes."

"All right, Mr. Barnes. You just sit down, and I'll ask sis whether she's home; but I don't think that's the name."

J. E. REMSBURG's November appointments, as far as arranged, are: Wausau, Wis., Sunday, 1st; Menomonee, Wis., Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 3d, 4th, and 5th; West Union, Ia., Saturday and Sunday, 7th and 8th; Lake City, Ia., Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 10th, 11th, and 12th; Ottumwa, Ia., Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th; Prescott, Ia., Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 17th, 18th, and 19th; Nevinville, Ia., Friday, 20th.

Two New Pamphlets

BY

CHARLES WATTS.

The American Secular Union: Its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands.

(Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.)

CONTENTS:

Introduction. (I.) The Necessity for the American Secular Union having Principles upon which all [Secularists] can agree. (II.) The Twofold Nature of the Advocacy Adopted by the Union. (III.) The Catholicity of the Nine Demands and the Ground to be Covered. (IV.) An Exposition and Defense of Each of the Nine Demands. (V.) An Appeal to Secular Fidelity.

32 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

SECULARISM: Destructiv and Constructiv.

CONTENTS:

Introduction. Secularism: Its Nature and Necessity. Its Destructiv Aspect. (1) Biblical Idolatry. (2) Natural Depravity (3). Theological Supremacy. (4) The Alleged Fall and Redemption of Man. The Constructiv Aspect of Secularism. (1) That the True Guide in Human Actions is Reason Assisted by Experience. (2) That Supreme Attention Should be Given to the Facts and Duties of Existence, Regardless of any Considerations of a Life Beyond the Present. (3) That Science is a more Trustworthy Provider for Man than Relying for Help from any Supernatural Power. (4) That Morality is of Natural Growth, and has no Necessary Connection with Any of the Theologies of the World. (5) That the Best Preparation for a Life Superior to this is the Wisest and Noblest Use of the Existence We Now Hav.

22 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

POCKET ATLAS
Of the
WORLD.

Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE.

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-page colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents, by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 33 Clinton Place, N Y.

40

Something New!

Every Liberal should hav one of our beautiful

MOTTO CARDS,

(7x22), ready for framing, for their homes.

Twenty-five cents per copy.

Also Large Cards (14x22), and expressing the NINE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

Thirty cents each.

Circulars sent FREE. Address all orders to

LIBERAL MOTTO SUPPLY CO., Troy, N. Y.

40tf

REPLY

TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S

"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."

By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

GOLDEN THRONE

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

JUST OUT.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail:

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study, the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy. The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 33 Clinton Pl., New York.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT

IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA.

INCLUDING

Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.

Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, with Sixty-seven Engravings, Preface, and Notes.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.
Zadig; or, Fate.
The Sage and the Atheist.
The Princess of Babylon.
Tho Man of Forty Crowns.
The Huron; or, The Pupil of Nature.
Micromegas.
The World as it Goes.
The Black and the White.
Memnom the Philosopher.
Andres Des Touches at Siam.
The Study of Nature.
A Conversation With a Chinese.
Plato's Dream.
A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.
An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, 4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00

Ingersoll Catechised:

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies $1; 100 copies $3. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

ALL in a LIFETIME,

A ROMANCE.

BY MISS SUSAN H. WIXON.

"The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks. . . . But what pleased me most in this charming story was the unflinching honesty with which its author holds up to the derision of the world the rottenness of average ministerial character, particularly that of revivalist type. I hav not space here to treat, in detail, of the characters of this truly absorbing novel. Suffice it to say that it is safe to predict that anyone who reads its first chapters will be loth to lay it down till the denouement is reached. Miss Wixon has long been doing a noble work in educating our children into the ranks of true Liberalism, thereby robbing the church of hundreds of those who, in after years, might hav become its willing dupes and servil tools, and she certainly deserves the generous and substantial recognition of all Freethinkers. Let everyone send for a copy of 'All in a Lifetime.' It will yield a liberal reward for the outlay."

ELLIOTT PRESTON.

Price, $1.50. Address, THE TRUTHSEEKER.

Men, Women, and Gods.

BY

HELEN H. GARDENER.

With an Introduction by

R. G. INGERSOLL.

Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, $1 00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

The Perpetual Calendar.

Working the Year of Science

And the Common Computations.

An Almanac Forever.

Showing the day of the week for any day of the month for all time past and present and to come, and other useful information. Price, 40 cents; three for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Canvassers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga

THE MAGNIFICENT

COLORED LITHOGRAPHS

—OF THE—

D. M. BENNETT MONUMENT.

PRINTED IN SEVEN COLORS ON THE BEST LITHOGRAPH PAPER, SIZE, $22\frac{1}{2}$ x $28\frac{1}{2}$.

THE BRONZE MEDALLION

PRINTS AS LARGE AS A CABINET PHOTOGRAPH, THUS GIVING NOT ONLY A PICTURE OF THE MONUMENT, BUT AN ACCURATE

LIKENESS OF D. M. BENNETT.

The lithograph is designed for framing, and will be a treasure for all Liberals.

Sent, postpaid, and securely wrapped, to subscribers to the Monument Fund for 30 cents; to others, 50 cents. Address this office.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON

The Greatest of all Anti-theological Works

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN!

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS;

A STORY OF THE RIGHTWAY ALMSHOUSE.

BY JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE

Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"APPLES OF GOLD."

A story-book for the young folks. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXON. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellent work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles

Price 20 cents.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Price, $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Poetry.

A Builder's Lesson.

"How shall I a habit break?"
As you did that habit make,
As you gathered you must loose;
As you yielded, now refuse.
Thread by thread the strand we twist,
Till they bind us neck and wrist;
Thread by thread the patient hand
Must untwine, ere free we stand.
As we builded, stone by stone,
We must toil, unhelped, alone,
Till the wall is overthrown.

But remember, as we try
Lighter every test goes by;
Wading in, the stream grows deep
Toward the center's downward sweep;
Backward turn, each step ashore
Shallower is than that before.

Ah, the precious years we waste
Leveling what we raised in haste;
Doing what must be undone,
Ere content or love be won!
First across the gulf we cast
Kite-borne threads, till lines are passed,
And habit builds the bridge at last!

—John Boyle O'Reilly.

Texas Orthodoxy.

From the Omaha Bee of Oct. 15th.

A special to a morning paper from Jacksboro, Texas, reports a most atrocious affair near that place yesterday, resulting in the killing of seven men and the wounding of several others. There had been a bitter feud existing between James Wilson, proprietor of one of the most extensiv cattle ranches in the state, and Fred Rhodes, the owner of a large sheep ranch. The two men lived about five miles apart, and were formerly on the most friendly of terms, having emigrated to the state from the same town in Tennessee. Both were members of the same church, and were desirous of having a church building erected near their ranches. They agreed to build one between them, but a dispute arose as to where the edifice should be located. The men finally quarreled, and the result was that two churches were built, about two miles apart. As the country is very sparsely settled, there were only a few people to attend the services, but the pride of both men was aroused, and to make a good showing on Sundays they forced their herders and cowboys to attend church. Rev. A. R. Johns, a circuit rider, was engaged to preach at both churches, holding services at Wilson's on the third Sunday in each month, and at Rhodes's on the fourth Sunday. Considerable religious interest had been developed recently, and the minister was invited by Mr. Wilson to hold a series of prayer-meetings in his church during the week. The invitation was accepted, and a meeting was held Monday night. Mr. Rhodes called on Rev. Johns Tuesday morning and asked him to preach in his church Tuesday night, but the minister replied that he had promised to lead the meeting for Mr. Wilson. Upon this refusal to preach Rhodes became very angry, and swore that he would break up Wilson's meetings. Tuesday night, while the people were gathered in Wilson's church, Rhodes rode up, followed by his herders and and three or four neighbors. He demanded that Rev. Johns go with him at once. The minister refused, when Rhodes and his followers made a rush into the church. There were about twenty people present, and a fight ensued. Revolvers were freely used, and after a lively fusilade the intruders were driven out, but not until three of their number had been killed, including Rhodes. The Wilson party lost four men, two being killed outright and two dying shortly afterwards. One of the women received a bullet in her arm, and Rev. Mr. Johns was struck in the head by a ball, making a severe scalp wound. The Wilson party followed Rhodes's men to the sheep ranch, and another fight ensued, but there were no more fatalities. Sheriff Hurd, of Jacksboro, with a posse, has gone to the scene. The names of the herders and cowboys killed hav not yet been learned.

Talmage Defended.

It is with deep regret that we observe that two of our esteemed morning contemporaries hav attempted to impugn the veracity of Dr. Talmage because, when asked by a reporter of this paper whether he had been seasick upon his recent voyage, he replied, "Well, not exactly that; but I didn't much care whether we ever reached home or not." Both the Herald and the Sun conclude that Dr. Talmage's answer was evasiv and calculated to mislead the public, since, as they claim, the first assertion is not compatible with the last, and the doctor has denied the culpable weakness of seasickness out of a spirit of mere bravado.

In order to place the great athlete right before the people it is necessary to explain the seeming looseness of his answer. It is evident that the Herald and the Sun hav been themselvs misled in the first place by the assumption on their part that the last assertion in Dr. Talmage's answer in any way qualified the first clause of his statement. Based upon this mistaken premis, they hav deduced the argument that it was because "not exactly of" seasickness—and therefore of something nearly resembling it—that the doctor did not care whether or not he ever reached home. Careful analysis of his language, however, brings the logical mind to an entirely different conclusion. As a matter of fact, the two statements in Dr. Talmage's reply hav no real connection with each other. The doctor, when asked whether he was seasick, replies: "Well, not exactly that;" and then, mentally recalling his emotions and recollecting their unpleasant nature, he adds, after a mere semicolonic pause, "but I didn't much care whether we ever reached home or not," the latter statement being subjunctiv to the thought then passing through his mind and not to the assertion in the first clause of his answer.

Having made matters clear thus far, it may be well to explain why Dr. Talmage was indifferent, if not possibly averse, to his return to the arena. Students of physiology will not need to be informed that there is no strain quite so exacting as that laid upon professional acrobats; and when we consider how many years Dr. Talmage has been performing in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, we cannot wonder that the thought of getting back to these arduous duties was unwelcome, and that he almost preferred to sink peacefully beneath the blue waves of the wrinkled sea.

There are several pieces of Dr. Talmage's stage business that are particularly arduous and difficult, and one feat, known as the "giant slide," can be performed successfully only by himself and by Mr. Wilson, who is at present engaged at the Casino. The "giant slide" consists in a double contortion and half somersault while the performer is under full sail—if we may be allowed to mix the technicalities of two different pursuits—which shall bring him to an abrupt stop on the very outmost edge of the stage or pulpit, with his back to the spectators and one foot elevated above the head. Dr. Talmage uses the slide to express the rapid descent of the sinner to perdition, while Wilson's portrayal represents a particularly natural and realistic scene in the court of Louis XIV.; but both performances are physically wearing, besides being fraught with considerable personal danger. Another acquirement that Dr. Talmage has possessed exclusivly since the death of Taglioni is the feat of standing on the left big toe and throwing the right leg over an elevation—in the doctor's case his pulpit—at the same time performing two complete revolutions of the entire body, by which convolution Dr. Talmage has been wont to graphically represent to crowded houses the joy of the angels over one sinner that repenteth. There are several other feats, such as the "organ leap," and the "altar handspring," that are excessivly difficult, which the doctor has performed many years and of which he may well be weary—not to mention his congregation.

But in spite of these arduous duties there would hav been—in the language of the poet—no shrinking from the trial on Dr. Talmage's part if the amusement committee of the Tabernacle had not laid out for him a new series of performances. We violate no confidence when we state that the real reason of Dr. Talmage's melancholy and his distaste for Brooklyn was caused not by any common and vulgar sensation such as seasickness, but by a rumor that reached him before he sailed that during his absence this summer the trustees had put up a flying trapeze over the pulpit, and were expecting new features in the Tabernacle services this winter. The doctor rightly holds that he is almost too old to learn an entirely new performance, and it was for this reason that he did not much care whether he ever reached home or not.

It is extremely doubtful whether he will consent to use the trapeze; but, having corrected any false impression that may hav arisen from the unwarrantable attack of the Herald and Sun, we shall leave that matter for the pastor and people to settle themselvs.—New York Times.

Book Notice.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION; AND, SECULARISM, DESTRUCTIV AND CONSTRUCTIV. By Charles Watts. Price ten cents each. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

These two make valuable campaign documents, and are an able statement of our position. In "The American Secular Union" Mr. Watts takes up the Nine Demands, and treats them with lucid and powerful expositions of their justice, and this part of our work and aim could not be put into a more compact or useful form. Those who wish for an eloquent answer to the attacks of our enemies will find it in both these books. Our destructiv work is exhibited, and its necessity and seasonableness demonstrated, and its benevolence also, for we only destroy that which is unjust and wrong. We retain the good, and add to it more good out of the advancing knowledge of the world. Our constructiv work is admirably expressed by Mr. Watts, and we can heartily recommend his books as adapted to the promulgation of the latest and best results of Secular philosophy. Mr. Watts is up with the times, and his experience of twenty-five years in the Freethought field keeps him still open to all the new truths of to-day. He wields a vigorous pen, and his good strong Saxon can be easily understood. As an advocate of our cause Mr. Watts is without a superior, and all those progressiv minds who wish to benefit themselvs and others by a clear and unanswerable defense of our cause will purchase these books, and spread them broadcast. They are quite readable, and Christians themselvs will find much to entertain, while they receive solid instruction in the true philosophy of life.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote; five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR the YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," presenting the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10c.; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

Freethinkers will find this, for an outline history, the best for their use, as Professor Cottinger is a Freethinker, and in his reports of the church's actions has stated facts with a truthful freedom not found in ordinary histories. He dates his work from the beginning of historical certainty and not from the mythical Eden, as do most "universal" historians, and brings it down to 1883, with a brief mention of subsequent important inventions and discoveries.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:
OR,
MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who have helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

PRICE, - - - - - - $1.25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
PROBLEM OF THE UNIVERSE,
AND
Its Scientific Solution,
WITH SOME
CRITICISMS OF UNIVERSOLOGY
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.
Price 20 cents. For sale at this office.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By WILLIAM MCDONNELL, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages, $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

THE RISE OF
INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY
From Thales to Copernicus.

By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

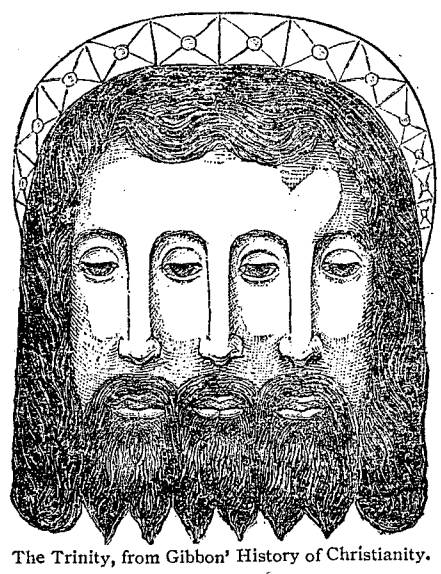
"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $3.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Marriage and Divorce.

By R. D. Westbrook, D.D. LL.B.
Author of "The Bible—Whence and What?"

CONTENTS:



The True Ideal of Marriage.
Free Love.
The History of Marriage.
The Old Testament Divorce Law.
The New Testament on Divorce.
Divorce as a Question of Law and Religion.
Rational Deductions from Established Principles;
Objections to Liberal Divorce Laws Answered.
Prevention Better than Cure.

Price, 50 cents. Neatly bound in cloth. For sale at this office.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

WAIFS AND WANDERINGS
A NEW AMERICAN STORY,
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
AUTHOR OF
"GOLDEN THRONE," "PROMETHEUS," "INGERSOLL AND JESUS," ETC.
Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cts.

"A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day.—John Swinton's Paper.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 CLINTON PLACE, NEW YORK.

The Trinity, from Gibbon' History of Christianity.

History of Christianity
AND
A VINDICATION
of some passages in the "History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" by
EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With a Life of Gibbon, preface and notes by the editor, including critical notes by Guizot, Milman, Wenck, an "English Churchman," and other scholars.

1 vol. 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With 65 engravings. $2 00

This book shows when, where, and how Christianity originated, who were its founders, and what were the sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

"I know of no book that contains more real and valuable information upon the origin of Christianity."—R. G. INGERSOLL.

"One of the most learned and interesting books ever written and published."—Boston Investigator.

FOR SALE AT TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00 In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25 Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

MONKS, POPES,
AND
THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.

Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.

Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

A NEW BOOK!
By Andrew Jackson Davis,
entitled
Beyond the Valley
a sequel to the
MAGIC STAFF
An Autobiography of
Andrew Jackson Davis.

Six Illustrations Picturing what Mr. Davis says he has seen.

"Beyond the Valley" is a record of events and scenes in his private and public career, beginning where the Magic Staff ends, and bringing his psychological and private experiences truthfully up to the present day. This attractive volume will interest thousands who hav never read his preceding works. It will answer the ever-recurring questions concerning remarkable events in Mr. Davis's private life, and fully explains his various public labors for mankind.

"Beyond the Valley" is a companion volume to the "Magic Staff," and resembles it in style of workmanship—in paper, press-work, binding, etc. 408 pages. Price, $1.50.

For Sale by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORKS OF DR. W. F. EVANS.

The Primitiv Mind-Cure. The Nature and Power of Faith; or, Elementary Lessons in Transcendental Medicin. This work is a complete exposition of principles underlying the system of mental healing. It contains a full course of instruction in the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure. Price $1.50.

The Divine Law of Cure. A standard work on the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure, a reliable text-book in all the schools of mental healing. No work has ever been written of more practical value to physicians of all schools. The book is the result of the extensiv learning and research of the author, and exhibits a familiarity with the literature of the subject. It is profoundly religious without being offensivly dogmatic. It has been received with universal favor by all who are seeking light on the subject on which it treats—the cure of disease in ourselvs and others by mental and spiritual agencies. Price $1.50.

Mental Medicin. A Theoretical and Practical Treatis on Medical Psychology. This book contains a full exposition of the nature and laws of magnetism, and its application to the cure of disease. Price $1.25.

Soul and Body; or, The Spiritual Science of Health and Disease. Price $1.00.

The Mental Cure, illustrating the Influence of the Mind on the Body both in Health and Disease, and the Psychological Method of Treatment. Price $1.50.

All the above books sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

A COMMON SENSE
GUIDE TO CORRECT ENGLISH;
IN WHICH THE
DECLENSION OF THE NOUN
AND THE
CONJUGATION OF THE VERB

Are superseded by a few simple rules; and comprising the most rational and progressiv views of the best grammarians of the 19th century.

By J. L. BARKER,
Author of "An Improvement on I. J. Morris's Grammar."

PRICE, - - - - 35 CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth
TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Price, $2. 33 Clinton Place, New York

PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,
WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

Man. Whence and Whither.
By R. B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,
Author of "The Bible.—Whence and What?

About all that can be said for the existence of God and the future life of man, is here pungently presented, with an incidental discussion of many collateral questions, from a rationalistic standpoint.

1 vol, cloth. Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place. New York

St. Matthew Before the Court on a Charge of Forgery.

BY SECULARIST.

Price, 10 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TO APPEAR IMMEDIATELY.
MOSES BEFORE THE COURT.
By the same Author.

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the Bible Exposed.
BY O. B. WHITFORD. M.D.
Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.

SECOND EDITION.

Price, 25 Cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY
John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY
BETTER THAN
Eternal Punishment.

BY M. BABCOCK.

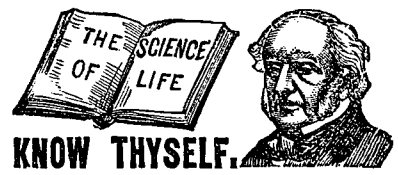
The subjects discussed in this finely-printed pamphlet are, besides the title above given, Satan and Hades, Some Reasons Why I am Not a Christian, Divinity of the Bible, Theological Logic, Preachers are Not Honest, Preachers Sometimes Differ, Infant Damnation, Prayer, The Cloak of Charity, The Clergy were Afraid, No Fear of Being Damned, But What are We to Do? But Why Should I Be Damned? Why Not Pray for the Damned? Conclusion.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
A HISTORICAL SKETCH.

By G. F. RINEHART. Price 25 cts.



Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
POPULAR JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.

Headquarters for Fine Goods in the line of Genuin Diamonds; Fine Gold and Silver Watches; Chains; Bracelets; Wedding and Presentation Rings; Jewelry of Latest style; Gold Pens; Silverware; Optical and Fancy Goods; 3 ounce Coin Silver Elgin Watch, $10; 4 ounce, Full Jeweled, Adjusted Pat. Regulator Stem Wind, $22; this same, fine movement, in best gold filled case, $35; with cheap movement, $25. Ladies' Solid Gold Elgin stem wind watches, $20, $24, and $32—14 karat, upward. Watches cleaned, finest work in the world, $1. Springs, $1, and returned per. reg. mail or ex., paid one way. Work for the trade at reduced rates and agents sending work once a week from every state in the Union are making lots of money. Best spectacles in the world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back on demand. Try me! OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Patentee of Wettstein's New Freethought Badge. The most beautiful badge ever placed upon the market. Immense sale. Elegant present for Lady or Gent. Solid gold, $3; $3.50; extra heavy, $4; with diamond, artistically enameled, $10.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. ONLY $1.
BY MAIL POST-PAID.

KNOW THYSELF.
A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated HEAL successfully, without an instance of THYSELF failure. Mention this paper. 1y14 is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisement.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y3

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, the Kirville, Jefferson Co., N.Y.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

WHY DON'T HE LEND A HAND
AND OTHER POEMS.

By S. P. PUTNAM, Author of Ingersoll and Jesus, Prometheus, Golden Throne, Waifs and Wanderings, Problems of the Universe, etc.

CONTENTS: Why Don't He Lend a Hand? The Golden Age, The Ideal and the Real, Not Dead but Living, Fruition, Hope, Thomas Paine, Nature's Gospel, Address to Deity, Giv us Light (Holdreth's poem often recited by Charles Watts).

PRICE 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

IMMORTALITY INHERENT IN NATURE.
BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.

Price, 60 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, N. Y

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

ARIZONA.
J. S. Mansfield, Tucson.
CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
COLORADO.
M. V. Thomas, 344 Larimer st., Denver.
S. B. Wright, 385 Larimer st., Denver.
E. Keith, Animas City.
CONNECTICUT.
J. F. Burr, 449 Main street, Hartford.
ILLINOIS.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street., and Brentano Bros, Chicago.
W. H. Gerbrick, Central Park, P.O., Chicago.
KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.
MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).
MARYLAND.
Oliver P. Taw, 532 W. Baltimore st., Baltimore.
MASSACHUSETTS.
Chas. S. Coburn, 123 Essex street, Lawrence.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.
NEBRASKA.
Thomas Foreman, 1414 Chicago street, Omaha.
NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
W. J. Cushing, 15 Willoughby st., Brooklyn. TRUTH SEEKER and Books.
OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
A. Erwin, Lebanon.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street., and Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior street, Cleveland.
PENNSYLVANIA.
George Longford, 25 Otter st., Philadelphia.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 1-2 North 8th st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
A. M. Stevens, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City.
John S. Juergens, 99 5th ave., Pittsburgh.
TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfeister, Nashville.
UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.
WASHINGTON, D. C.
Brentano Bros.
ENGLAND.
Charles Watts & Co., London.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

Resurrection of Jesus. Showing the contradictions and doubts in which the subject is involved. By W. S. BELL. Revised edition. 25 cents.

Revelations of Antichrist. An exhaustiv work proving conclusivly that no such person as Jesus Christ existed in the reign of Tiberius, but that a Jesus, the son of Mary, was stoned and hanged about a century before, and that his disciples, Simon Kepha, alias Peter, and the apostle Paul, both lived and died before the Christian era. 446 pages and full index. Price, $2.

The Anonymous Hypothesis of Creation. A Brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account. By JAMES F. FURNISS. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Brain and the Bible. By EDGAR C. BEALL. With a Preface by ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, who says of it: "This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world." Price reduced to $1.

The Creed of Christendom. Its foundation contrasted with its superstructure. By W. RATHBONE GREG. One of the clearest and ablest works ever written. $1.50.

The Essence of Religion. From the German of L. FEUERBACH. Author of th Essence of Christianity, etc. In cloth, reduced to 50 cents.

The Godly Women of the Bible. A History of all the women who figure in the Bible. Sharp and telling in style. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Holy Bible Abridged. Containing the choice passages and lovely morceaus particularly pleasing to COMSTOCK. 160 pages. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate. A nine-days' debate on God, the Bible, Christianity, and Liberalism. Between W. F. JAMIESON and Rev. JACOB DITZLER, D.D. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

THE LATEST NEW BOOK.

SOCIAL WEALTH:

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

PRICE, CLOTH, $1 00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17
The National Liberal League,	28
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73
Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardener,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,	Elizabeth Cady Stanton,	J. D. Shaw,

The BIBLE—WHENCE and WHAT?
BY RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B,
A Book of Hints and Suggestions Concerning the literature contained in the Old and New Testaments. 12mo. 232 pages. Price, $1.
THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

A PHOTOGRAPH
OF THE BIBLE'S FLAT EARTH AND SOLID HEAVEN.
A Picture of the world as described in Genesis, with the texts of the Bible teaching the doctrin, and the passages from profane writer supporting it. Price 25 cents

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By Mrs. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office

TRAVELS IN FAITH,
From Tradition to Reason.
BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.
Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office

EVOLUTION:
A SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE.
By Robert C. Adams.
Paper, 25 cents. For Sale at this Office.

Gottlieb: His Life. A romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written by S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Odds and Ends.

BELIEVERS in the faith-cure are generally of that class who are prejudiced against paying doctor's bills.

AN English clergyman lately advertised in a church paper his willingness to exchange a cassock, nearly new for a bull pup with a good pedigree.

"LAY the cat on lightly, please," said the Delaware wife-beater to the sheriff who was about to apply the lash to his back: "lay it on lightly, and you will soothe my angry feelings." "Soothe your angry feelings, sir?" said the sheriff. "Yes; a soft tan, sir, turneth away wrath."

INDIGENT Young Man: "I would respectfully ask your daughter's hand in marriage, sir." Rich Father (in indignant surprise): "What! you want to marry my daughter?" Indigent Young Man (somewhat flurried): "Y-Yes, sir. W-why not? You don't know anything wrong about her, do you?—Newman Independent.

PROFESSOR (to first applicant)—"Name and age, sir?" First student—"Abner Bascom; age seventeen." Professor (to second applicant)—"And you, sir?" Second student—"Phineas Bascom; age seventeen." Professor—"Brothers?" Second student—"Yes, sir." Professor—"Twins?" Second student (doubtfully)—"Well, ye-es; twins on our father's side. We're from Salt Lake."

MINISTER (just before church service)—"How is our worthy brother, Deacon Smith, getting on, Doctor?"

Physician—"He is in a very critical condition. I was at his house three times yesterday, and once this morning."

Minister (with concern)—"Indeed! I will ask the prayers of the congregation in his behalf."

CITY Editor of a Western Newspaper: "Saunders, do you know the Webster family living on Clay street?" Reporter: "Yes, sir." City Editor: "Well, I wish you'd step up there this evening. There seems to be some dispute in the Southern papers as to whether Daniel or Noah Webster wrote the Bible. Just see if Dan is at home, and ask him about it. My impression is that he belongs to that family."

A CHANGE OF BASE.

Upon the garden gate they swung
When nights were warm and fair,
And pale Diana often flung
Her light upon the pair.

To-night among the leafless trees
The autumn wind makes moan,
The gate is swinging in the breeze,
Its rusty hinges groan.

And where are now the youth so gay
And maiden dressed in lawn,
Oh, whither do their footsteps stray,
Where hav the lovers gone?

Go to the parlor warm, go there,
And ask, if you would know,
That double-loaded rocking chair,
That lamp turned down so low.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up. 20 cents.

Sixteen Saviors of None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bibles of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents. cloth, $1.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By PROF. R. A. PROCTOR. 20 cents.

Socialism: Reply to Prof. Roswell D. Hitchcock. The Professor's sophistries fully exposed. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Superstition; The Religion of Believe or be Damned, an Open Letter to the St. John's School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Containing startling and interesting disclosures about hell, its locality, magnitude, climate, employments, etc. By the Rev. GEO. ROGERS. 15 cents.

The Besant-Hatchard Debate. A two-nights' Debate between Mrs. ANNIE BESANT and Rev. A. HATCHARD on The Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity on the World. Held at the Hall of Science, London, December, 1880. 25 cents.

The Clergyman's Victims. A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. BALL. 25 cents.

The Contrast: Evangelicalism and Spiritualism Compared. By MOSES HULL. Paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

The Darwins. A domestic Radical story. By Mrs. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Ghost of St. Johns. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The New Dispensation; or, The Heavenly Kingdom. By D. W. HULL. Price, 25 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 47. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, November 21, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE saloons in Philadelphia are not allowed to sell liquor on Sunday, but they are said to drive a lively bottle trade Saturday afternoons.

THE Rev. W. H. H. Murray has sold out his Montreal restaurant, and will enter the lecture field. He has already made many engagements in Vermont.

The Prairie Dog is a new paper just started at Grand Island, which advocates "no religion, no politics, no hobbies; but land and homes for everybody."

EVANGELIST MOODY, having seen, as he publicly avers, a church fair advertisment "that a man could kiss any girl for twenty-five cents," takes occasion to denounce church fairs in general as an abomination.

THE Rev. George J. Mingins said in his sermon last Sunday that of the 40,000 who died in New York during the past year not one in ten believed in God, and were consequently damned. Mr. Mingins's statistics cannot be relied upon.

A FRIEND of the Rev. Dr. Houghton lost $90 at roulet in Dr. Houghton's parish, and the doctor got a policeman and had the place pulled. It is fair to suppose that the result would hav been different had Dr. Houghton's friend won instead of losing the $90.

DURING the last fifty years Mohammedanism has made great strides on the west coast of Africa, whence it is striking back into the interior, and the prediction is freely made that ere long the Christian missionaries will hav to reckon with it rather than with paganism. The Mandingo merchants are the most sedulous and successful agents in disseminating the religion of the Prophet.

DR. TYNG, SR., managed to accumulate a good many thousand dollars by strict attention to the business of preaching. He died not long ago, leaving a will in which the name of his son, the Rev. Mr. Tyng, Jr., is not mentioned. The omission is accounted for on the supposition that the old man disapproved of the young preacher's fondness for certain desultory widows in his congregation.

SAYS Texas Siftings: "The efforts of the Canadians to stand off the small-pox by processions does not seem to be a complete success. Prayer may be good in mild cases of varioloid, but it takes vaccination to head off small-pox. The Canadian priests should do like the French priest who was called on to bless a certain man's field. The soil was very poor, so the sensible priest said it was no use praying over that kind of soil. Nothing short of manure would help it."

WHILE the English world is laughing at the absurdities of "The Mikado," Japan is quietly taking long strides in social and intellectual progress. She has just—in advance of England, too—settled the question of free popular education. All children between the ages of six and fourteen are compelled to attend school from three to six hours a day for thirty-two weeks in the year, and all expenses are to be paid out of the public treasury. This lays the foundation for a better system of public instruction than many communities of the western world enjoy.

A YOUNG woman of Mr. Beecher's congregation, once upon a time, concluded that she ought to join the Catholic church. Her parents were much annoyed, and they sought by persuasion, argument, and other means to thwart her purpose. Finally, in their trouble they visited Mr. Beecher, and besought the intervention of his influence. "Send her to me," he said; and the girl presented herself to him. "Are you persuaded that you are doing right in joining the Catholic church?" he asked. She was sure that her convictions required her to take that step. She felt, she said, that she could be a better Christian, and get more comfort out of religion in the Catholic church than in any other. "Then," said Mr. Beecher, "take this letter to Father Pise, of the Church of St. Charles Borromeo." Father Pise and Mr. Beecher were old friends. His letter ran thus: "Here is a lamb who thinks she sees better pasture on your side of the fence than she does on mine. Take good care of her.—HENRY WARD BEECHER."

MR. FREDERIC HARRISON has declined to accept a check sent him by the Appletons on account of the sales of the pamphlet published by them and containing the articles by him and Herbert Spencer covering their recent animated controversy. He freely acknowledges the courtesy of the publishers in making the offer. His reason for declining it is his desire to maintain the right of an author to be consulted about the reissue of his works. Had he been consulted before the pamphlet was printed he would hav agreed to any terms the publishers had offered him.

THE story has just started. It is not to be supposed it will stop on its travels short of Australia or Siam: "A deacon in a western town recently died. His pastor soon paid a visit of condolence to the bereaved widow. She asked the minister if he would like to see the funeral wreath. He assented. She led him to the much-prized memento, and pointed out its peculiarities. In a broken voice, she said: 'The red flowers were made of his red flannels; the white ones of his white flannels. The stamens were made of the coffin shavings and the pistils of his beard. The berries and buds were made of the pills that were left when he died, and the feathery part was made of the feathers of the last chicken dear James killed before he was taken ill.' All this she said without a pause for breath, and ended her ghastly description of the treasured wreath by imploring the bewildered clergyman to lead in prayer."—Christian at Work.

WILLIAM E. DODGE, the pious millionaire to whom a statue has lately been publicly unveiled in this city, was not so reputable a man as some to whom a statue has never been reared. There is a customs regulation at this port which admits works of art free of duty. Mr. Dodge was an extensiv importer of block tin, and taking advantage of the above regulation he had the metal run into cheap statuary previous to importation, and landed it duty free. The imposition was at length discovered, and Mr. Dodge was mulcted in the sum of about $130,000, which he paid to the government. Yet no one has hinted how appropriate it would hav been if Mr. Dodge's statue at Thirty-fifth street and Broadway had been constructed of block tin! In connection with this subject it may be remarked that Thomas Paine, who gave everything, and even risked his life, for our government, has not been honored by a public statue. But then, it must be remembered that Mr. Paine was an Infidel.

THE Sunday question is still under discussion in New York. Debate on the propriety of opening the public museums, art galleries, and libraries on Sunday has lately taken a new turn in consequence of a proposition made to the Board of Estimate to cut off $15,000 from the Museum of Natural History and the Metropolitan Museum of Art because these institutions remain closed on Sundays. The proposal has been argued against by the trustees of the Museum of Natural History on the ground that there is a contract between the museum and the city which prevents the collection from being shown on Sunday. This should be enough to settle the matter—if the promis be true — without further argument. The next move would be to hav the contract modified. But one of the trustees added: "We hav received about $450,000 in cash, and less than half this came from the city authorities. Nine-tenths of all the subscriptions hav come from those who desire to see the Sabbath maintained. Many of those who now subscribe would withdraw their subscriptions." If all this be true, there is need of missionary work in the metropolis. At any rate let not New York longer speak contemptuously of Puritanical Boston. Our Puritanism has not survived so long as to fail to see that as a moral, preventativ measure, the opening of art galleries and public libraries on Sunday is desirable. Experience has certainly shown that the opportunities for healthful mental enjoyment, thus offered, here, hav been properly appreciated by the people. It is remarkable that the worthy people of New York who couple with their gifts to museums an expressed or implied wish that the institutions be closed on Sunday, do not see that on no other day can working people gain any advantage from studies of the works of art or nature.—Ex.

"PROFESSOR DODGE, of Princeton," ironically remarks the American Israelite, "has permitted Moses Montefiore to be saved and to go to heaven, not because he was a Jew, as other preachers amiably put it, but because he was a Christian according to that learned professor's theories. He reasons thus: 'It is certain that a man who really rejects Christ thereby rejects the Father who has sent him. Hence the converse is true; that the man who has really recognized the Father could not really hav rejected Christ.' According to this theory all Jews, Mohammedans, and other Monotheists who truly recognize the Father are Christians, whether they know of or believe in Christ, or whether they do not. The professor is getting stoutly heretical."

"DEAR SIR: We desire to place a copy of the inclosed in the hands of each young man employed in your house," etc., etc. This is the beginning of a circular which has come to us accompanied by a small pamphlet, telling the advantages to be enjoyed from membership in the Young Men's Christian Association of this city—such, for example, as Bible classes, song services, prayer and praise meetings, lectures, social receptions, the orchestra, library, parlor, gymnasium, and outing club. The most interesting part of the pamphlet is the list of officers, directors, and trustees of the institution. We recognize more than half of the names as those of Wall street sharps, railroad monopolists, bank bugs, factory-labor grinders, child hirers, money-shavers, profit mongers, social high-flyers and others of the kind—men who hav grown rich by the impoverishment of others.—John Swinton.

THE Commercial Advertiser tells this story of Scotch Sabbatarianism: St Kilda is a dreary island north of Scotland which is surrounded by a raging sea, and which has a population of about four thousand people, who come upon frequent periods of starvation. Lately one of these periods returned, and a ship laden with food was dispatched to the island. After great difficulty it reached an anchorage on a fine Sunday, but the island appeared deserted. On investigation it was found that the people were at church. The chief man of the place being found, the good news of the arrival of the relief party was imparted to him, and a request made for help with which to remove the stores to the land, so that the ship might proceed at once beyond danger. The chief man happened to be the minister, and he resolutely refused to allow the food to be handled on Sunday. St. Kildians, he said, had other things to think of. The relief ship was obliged to wait till midnight. A minute after the hour had struck, the inhabitants set to with a will to disembark the food.

IT is with gratification, remarks Puck, that we observe the wave of religious feeling that is sweeping over Boston, as indicated by the interest manifested in the services at the Bowdoin Square Baptist church, conducted by the Rev. Mr. Downs. On Saturday evening every seat in the church was taken at half past six o'clock, though the services did not begin until eight, and at seven o'clock it became necessary to hav the doors guarded by policemen to keep back the crowds. So hungry was this crowd for the bread of life, that when a side door was opened to admit a member of the church, a rush was made upon it, and about thirty worshipers managed to obtain admittance. Perhaps some ministers might be proud of their ability to draw such houses to hear a lecture upon the by no means new topic, "Jonah and the Whale," but not so Pastor Downs. "The Lord has taken his own way to bring people into the church," he said devoutly, "and I hope you will all be benefited." It is a consoling thought that men and women who are attracted to hear his sermons by the notoriety he has obtained in the courts cannot be made much worse by anything.

News of the Week.

H. B. CLAFLIN, the great dry goods dealer, is dead.

THE missing treasurer of Staunton, Va., is supposed to be in Canada. Deficiencies hav been found in his accounts.

SMALL-POX is decreasing in the city of Montreal, but the disease is said to be increasing in virulence in the suburbs.

THE Rev. Mr. Bache has sued the Rev. Mr. Ray for $25,000 on a charge of slander. Both are highly reputable preachers of this city.

THE Rev. Dr. Kynett, secretary of the Methodist Church Extension Board, is accused of irregularity. He has published a denial of the charges.

A NEW YORK engraver's young wife, piqued by a family quarrel, poisoned her two children and herself last Saturday with cyanide of potassium.

MR. STEAD being imprisoned, the Pall Mall Gazette is furnished with another editor. Stead announces that upon his release he will start a paper of his own.

EARNEST SCHELLING HULSKAMP, the coachman who eloped with Millionaire Morosini's daughter Victoria, is now driving a horse-car on the Sixth avenue line.

KING MILAN, of Servia, has informed the Powers that he has declared war against Bulgaria, and is marching with his troops on to Sofia. The Bulgarians are retiring.

STRAITON & STORM, cigar manufacturers, giv notice that they will shut down until the boycott is removed from their goods. Their action will throw 2,000 men out of employment.

MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON was seventy years old on Thursday, November 12th. The event was celebrated by a gathering of ladies at the house of Mrs. Dr. Lozier, Mrs. Stanton being present and addressing the company.

GALVESTON, Texas, was visited by a $2,500,000 fire on Friday, the 13th inst. Forty blocks of frame buildings were totally destroyed. Jay Gould has sent $5,000 to the sufferers, of whom there are a great many in dire straits for the necessities of life.

RIEL, the Canadian rebel, was hanged on Monday last at Regina, in the Northwest territory. He spent the previous day in prayer, and met death with comparativ fortitude. He was the most religious man in Canada, and his sanity is doubted. There is great indignation in Canada over the execution.

PASTOR DOWNS, of the Bowdoin Square Baptist church, Boston, told his congregation last Sunday that they had probably listened to the last sermon he should ever preach to them. It will be a great blow to the Baptists if this distinguished divine forsakes the pulpit just as he has reached the zenith of his fame.

COLONEL INGERSOLL spoke on "Myth and Miracle" at the Academy of Music, in this city, last Sunday evening. The house, which seats more than two thousand, was nearly filled, and the lecture was delivered amid great enthusiasm. An abstract of "Myth and Miracle" was printed in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Oct. 24th.

W. E. GLADSTONE recently made a great speech at Edinburgh, Scotland, in which he recommends that the question of disestablishment of the state church of England should remain in abeyance for a season. His speech has had the effect of increasing interest in the subject, and both the enemies and the advocates of the movement are now more activ than ever.

AT the funeral of John McCullough, the actor, the Sun reports that Counsellor Wm. F. Johnson brought tears to the eyes of many in the audience by saying: "If every one for whom my dead friend has done a favor were to bring a simple flower to place upon his bier to-day, he would sleep beneath a mountain of roses." These words, nearly as here given, are from the address of Colonel Ingersoll at the funeral of his brother, Ebon C. Ingersoll.

Communications.

Liberalism Stated and Defended.*

There are people who think Liberalism is a system of religion, based on a supposed divine revelation, like Judaism, Christianity, and Mormonism. Others think it a new denomination of Christians, based on some peculiar interpretation of the Bible, like Catholicism, Methodism, and Presbyterianism. Others that it is a sectarian form of unbelief, based on some dogmatic formulary, like Atheism, Materialism, and Spiritualism. Some think it synonymous with Infidelity, that to be an Infidel is to be a Liberal. While all Liberals are Infidels, there are many Infidels who are not Liberal. An Infidel is one who does not believe in the divine origin and authenticity of the Bible, the divinity of the man Jesus, the devil, and hell. Any person who doubts these conceits, one or all, is an Infidel. He is Infidel to the extent of his doubts. Such doubters can be numbered by the million. Thousands of them are in no way allied to Liberalism. Many are il-Liberals, exclusiv, narrow, and bigoted, while others, more hypocritical, belong to the churches, and a few of these preach the gospel for a living. Such Infidels lack the moral honesty to acknowledge their doubts, and the moral courage to make the sacrifices imposed by Liberalism. They are mercenary and time-serving, and seek to advance their business prospects by suppressing their intellectual convictions. They shrink from social ostracism, and seek peace with orthodoxy at the expense of their honor. While they neither believe nor obey the gospel, they readily assume the vows of faith and obedience. These are all Infidels, but they are not Liberals. Some people believe, or affect to believe, that Liberalism is a system of libertinism for the encouragement of vice and immorality. Is this were true, we should expect to find it illustrated in the lives of Liberals. As a class they would be corrupt and vicious; but this is not the case. The police records of our great cities, and the criminal courts of the country, show that the great mass of criminals are orthodox. Full ninety-five per cent of the inmates of our prisons are believers in God and the Bible. There are now more preachers than Liberals in our penitentiaries. Ninety-nine out of every one hundred of those who are hung prove to be believers. Suicides, as a rule, are believers, and so are drunkards. A saloon-keeper once told me that he disbelieved the Bible; "indeed," said he, "I would like to be a Liberal, but it would injure my business."

I do not claim that every Liberal is as good and as pure as he ought to be. Now and then we are disappointed in one. But we confidently assert that in any city, town, or neighborhood throughout this country the people known as Liberals are, as a class, equally as upright, honorable, and virtuous as the church-members. This is a fact that the preachers cannot deny, and it refutes the assumption that Liberalism is a system of libertinism.

Liberalism is not a system of religion. It is not a sectarian denomination of Christians, nor of Infidels. It is not the synonym of libertinism. It is a creedless, unecclesiastical, non-political, anti-theological system of ethical culture, based upon the moral sense of the race, and devoted to the inculcation of truth, honor, purity, benevolence, and freedom: Truth as a cardinal virtue, and as the highest revelation of science and philosophy; purity of life and character; benevolence of action in all community interests; freedom of thought, free speech, and a free press. It is a popular protest against all bigotry, party prejudice, clerical domination, and religious persecution. It prescribes no limit to investigation, requires no credal confession of faith, but leaves every one free to believe what to him seems to be true, requiring only that his morals be good, and his life pure.

I hav said, "It is not a religion;" that is, in any theological sense. If you choose to call it a religion of any kind, I would say it is the religion of humanity, and not of God—of this world, and not of another.

Having thus stated our cause, we will proceed to defend it against a few of the objections so frequently urged by the devotees of superstition.

Christianity, they say, is also a system of ethical culture, and inculcates all the morality taught by Liberalism, thus occupying all the ground sought to be occupied by the Liberals; whereupon they further assume that Liberalism is not needed. This is simply the wail of the old and superannuated in opposition to the new and vigorous. The Jews argued that way with the disciples. The pagans used it against the early Christian church; and the Catholics made use of it to check the Reformation.

That Christianity is a system of ethical culture will not be denied. I further concede that it inculcates morality, and denounces vice. But it does more than this. It teaches that faith in the church dogmas, such as the divinity of Jesus, the fall of man, and vicarious atonement, and subordination to ecclesiastical dictation, are superior to morality, and of more value to the race. It teaches that faith is superior to works, and that the purest morality, the loftiest deeds, and noblest lives are vain unless they are inspired by faith in Jesus. To these monstrous assumptions of Christianity Liberals object. We put sentiments of love, deeds of benevolence, and moral character above faith, superior to it, and as useful without it as with it. Let men believe all they hav reasonable evidence of; but let them be honest, upright, and true, whether they believe or not. There is no moral quality in belief. In actions there is.

To those who urge this objection I reply, Christianity does not cover the ground sought to be occupied by Liberalism. After a trial of more than eighteen hundred years it is rejected by a large majority of the race. The number of people who cannot accept its dogmas is increasing at a rapid rate right here, where it is preached and shouted with the greatest assurance. Christianity can do nothing for those who disbelieve its dogmas. Take my own case. What can Christianity do for me?

I was raised by Christian parents, in a Christian community, and once believed in its teachings. Having a desire to work for the moral elevation of the race, I entered the pale of the church as affording me the best means of doing so. I took upon myself the ordination vows of the ministry, and for twelve years I preached the gospel. I thought I was doing right, and to-day I do not reproach myself for having done so. I was then, as I am now, true to my convictions. By study and research, I was led to doubt the dogmas of the church and the divinity of the Bible. There was but one honorable course left for me to pursue, and that I accepted; which was to tell my conference the true story of my unbelief, and ask their permission to withdraw from the church and ministry, which they readily granted. They dismissed me with their blessing, and we parted in tears; and right here I will say to their credit, they hav never doubted my sincerity, neither hav they scandalized me, though their opposition to my present belief is bitter and relentless. Christianity offers me no place to work in accordance with my desire to aid in the ethical culture of the race, which is just as strong, now that I don't believe, as it was when I did believe. Christianity, not satisfied to damn me in hell, seeks also to damn me in this world. Liberalism offers me a place where I can work for the moral improvement of my fellow-men, and enjoy mental liberty too. Let those who can believe join the church, but those who cannot believe are invited to unite with the Liberals in endeavoring to do some good in their own way.

What can Christianity do for the Mormons? The institution of polygamy, that renders that people so obnoxious to us, is justified by the Christian Bible. You can never correct that evil without a new Bible. Liberalism will go to them and tell them that there is nothing divine or superhuman in any Bible, and when they are once convinced of this fact, polygamy will go. The women of Utah will soon settle the the question of polygamy when they are once led to doubt the divinity of the Bible. If the government would employ Colonel Ingersoll to lecture to those people every Sunday, it would be a more effectiv and far more peaceable means of reforming them than laws punishing them by imprisonment.

Those who urge this objection to Liberalism labor under the delusion that its sole object is to destroy all churches and dishonor the Bible; whereas the real truth is, we only seek to reform the churches by persuading them to eliminate from their creeds all irrational and immoral dogmas. As to the Bible, we subject it to rational processes of investigation, just as we do books of history, astronomy, and chemistry. We are as ready to appropriate the good which it contains as our Christian friends; and as for the bad, we reject it without ceremony.

They say Liberalism is a system of negations, that it affirms nothing. This is like the first objection, another wail of the old in opposition to the new. The same may be said of every system in the world. They are all as negative as they are affirmativ. Every affirmativ proposition implies a negativ, just as every valley succeeds a hill. Christianity is as negativ as Liberalism, and Liberalism is as affirmativ as Christianity. One denies what the other affirms. To illustrate this we call your attention to the following facts: Liberalism affirms the supremacy of natural law, by evolution and the survival of the fittest, over any supposed system of divine providences. This Christianity denies. Liberalism affirms that reason is a better guide for determining the relations of things than any supposed divine revelations. This Christianity denies. Liberalism affirms that human experience is a better criterion of right than divine grace, and that knowledge is better than faith; all of which Christianity denies. Now I submit that we might, with equal propriety, charge it with being a system of negations. Besides all this, what harm is there, I ask, in denying that which is contrary to reason, contradicted by science, and harmful in its effects?

They say Liberals are divided among themselvs into Atheists, Materialists, and Spiritualists. If there was any real merit in that objection, we might retort upon our Christian friends with terrible effect by reminding them of their religious wars and commotions, and of their numerous creeds that are constantly clanging and clashing in discord and strife. Liberals, whether Atheistic, Materialistic, or Spiritualistic, believe in mental liberty, and concede to each other the right to differ in their intellectual convictions. They do not ostracize each other on account of these differences. If men are honest and virtuous they are acceptable to Liberalism, no matter what they believe.

They say Liberalism offers no hope for the future, and ought to be repudiated on that ground, if on no other. Liberals as a class are honest enough to acknowledge their total ignorance of the future, and those among them (the Spiritualists) who think they hav found out a little on that subject giv us a far more hopeful view of it than does Christianity. They hav no hell into which to cast one part of the race, often dividing families, and there leave them to be tormented by flames of fire for ever and ever.

What hope does Christianity offer? I will tell you. It offers us the hope that ninety-nine per cent of the souls born in this world, and among them some of the noblest that ever lived, will be sent to an eternal hell of fire and brimstone. As a class, I believe, the Liberal are happier and more hopeful than Christians. I know that I am far happier and far more hopeful now than I was when I was a Christian. Christianity is the most hope-forbidding religion this world ever had. It is too narrow to inspire hope. When I used to think my chances pretty good for heaven, I was rendered miserable by the thought that many of my best friends, and persons who were just as good as I, would go to hell. No good Christian can be either hopeful or happy. It is utterly absurd to think of such a thing.

They say Liberals are unorganized. That is the unkindest cut of all. Why are they unorganized? Why is it that they are without halls and unsupplied with lecturers and teachers? I will tell you why. Three to four thousand years ago this world did not hav sense enough to produce a Liberalist. Two thousand years ago it crucified all that could be found. For the next fifteen hundred years they were murdered by every Christian nation. Two hundred years ago and later they were imprisoned, and their goods were confiscated for the glory of God.

Notwithstanding his lofty patriotism, and unselfish sacrifices for the freedom of this republic, the honorable name of Thomas Paine has been ostracized by historians, his pictures prohibited a place in many of our public halls, and his name dishonored and despised for three-quarters of a century, because he was a Liberal and had the candor to speak his honest convictions. We hav had a poor chance to organize, and ought to be excused, I think. Fifty years ago we could not hav had a hearing. Only seven years ago, in my state, a gentleman was mobbed for being a Liberal. It is only of recent years that we dared be Liberal, much less undertake to organize Liberal associations. Giv us liberty, and giv us time, and we will organize. We hav about secured the liberty, and the time will come. The last five or six years hav fully attested the power of our movement—the future will fully vindicate us from the charge of being unorganized. A few more years of freedom, and Liberal propagandism by tongue and pen—and, above all, by well regulated lives of honor, purity, and benevolence—and we will dot this land with halls of science, and the voice of Freethought will ring out upon every hill and dale. The people are just waking up to the importance of a more rational conception of our being and environment. They are now giving attention to Liberal thought. Christians can no longer kill, imprison, or even persecute us. One hundred years ago Methodism was more despised, and far less influential, than Liberalism is to-day. Giv us a hundred years of Liberal propagandism, and, basing my judgment upon the last five years, I venture the prediction that Liberalism will be more powerful than all Protestantism.

Let us, my Liberal comrades, be true to ourselvs; true to our convictions; true to the revelations of science, and the future will vindicate us against all the vain and foolish objections that a venal priesthood and a servil church can urge against us.

J. D. Shaw.

* An address delivered before the late Congress of the American Secular Union at Cleveland, Ohio.

Can This be True?

The Rev. J. G. Townsend, by far the ablest preacher of the Methodists, has renounced orthodoxy (which Brother Buckley says means to hav stopped growing), and is preaching to a large congregation composed of big-headed men and large-hearted women at Jamestown, N. Y., near here. The Sun prints this:

"Reading the attack that Rev. Mr. Buckley made upon Dr. Tonwsend, of this city," says an observer, "reminds me of a remark that an old farmer made of said Buckley. It seems that years ago Dr. Buckley changed from the profession of teaching to that of preaching. This old farmer, to whom the fact was made known, was very much surprised and said: 'Jim Buckley! Jim Buckley gone preaching? Why, Jim is the biggest liar on earth!'"

Buckley was formerly from Detroit, is now editor of the Christian Advocate, of your city, and a puffer of Vincent, he of the Chautauqua show. While these gentlemen are faring sumptuously, the churches in the villages are starving, and many of them hav shut up. G. F. LEWIS.

Corry, Pa., Nov. 8, 1885.

Dr. York in Australia.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav before me a paper dated August 15th, entitled the Golden Gate, published at San Francisco by my fellow-townsman and friend, J. J. Owen, which contains an article calculated and intended, as we believe, to place me in a false light as to my attitude toward Spiritualists and spiritual phenomena. It reads as follows:

An Auckland paper reports Dr. York as giving, in one of his recent lectures in that place, the following back-handed slap at Spiritualism:

"Having before our eyes the evidences that all life has been evolved from lower, cruder forms, and that man is but the latest link in this grand chain of being, there was nothing to preclude the probability that this evolutionary process extended into more etherealized forms of life intangible to our grosser material senses. He, therefore, claimed no more for Spiritualism than its probability on scientific grounds. As a religion it had no value in his eyes, but as a fact from which a philosophy of life might be deduced to broaden, deepen, sweeten, and purify the moral nature of man, it would be of considerable importance. He shrank from a religion of Spiritualism, however, for its mediums would become priests, and the system founded by them would be worse than Roman Catholicism, and ten thousand times worse than Methodism. Professional mediumship was professional deviltry, and as for the alleged materialization of spirits, he did not believe in it. In fact, he was ready to admit that seventy-five per cent of the alleged phenomena of Spiritualism were the result of either self-delusion or deliberate fraud, but in the twenty-five per cent residuum there was sufficient to engage the attention of science, and to render probable the existence of human intelligence in higher conditions of life."

The above quotation needs only a little correction to make it my own words, and as corrected I will stand by them.

The Auckland reporter makes me say that professional mediumship was professional deviltry. Not so. What I did say (and can prove) was that professional mediumship, as a rule, leads to deception and professional deviltry. That there are a few exceptions among that class of mediums who travel and exhibit Spiritualism for a livelihood, I hav no doubt; and the history of mediumship and mediums in America, together with my experiences, as a sincere investigator of the various phenomena of Spiritualism during twenty years past, confirm me in the belief, if not the absolute knowledge, that much the larger part of these spiritual show people are consummate frauds and shams.

Perhaps my friend Owen is not aware that about ninety per cent of the great public mediums hav been detected from time to time, and exposed in the most shameless frauds.

Most certainly Mr. Owen cannot be blind to the fact that San Francisco has had her full share of these brazen-faced impudent materializers, such as Mrs. Souther and Mrs. Elsie Reynolds, both of whom hav recently been exposed in San Francisco, Stockton, and in San Jose, and the latter named has been caught and exposed several times in San Francisco as well as at several places in the Eastern states. Does Mr. Owen, as a matter of policy, ignore the fact that Spiritualism is infested by an army of frauds and shams who are causing Spiritualism to stink in the nostrils of right-minded thinking people everywhere? If he does not, why does he seek to put me in a false light to those who are strangers to me and to my work? He knows me well, and if he is not dead to truth, he will admit that for twenty years I hav sought to maintain the import of what I believe to be genuin phenomena and genuin mediums for the manifestation of such phenomena.

I hav never made any fight against any sincere, genuin medium in my life, and hav detected many in their deception, but trust that I hav learned to discriminate wisely between the false and true, as well as between the personal character of the medium and the quality of their mediumship.

"Hard on his friends!" Now there is no one who prizes true friendship more than myself; none can feel more hurt than I do when such friendship is broken, and I am grateful for the kindness and helping hand I hav invariably had from Spiritualists everywhere in my travels and work.

Now, who are the friends that I am so hard upon?

Now is not our old friend aware that Spiritualists, and mediums especially, hav been his truest friends and strongest supporters wherever he has lectured in this country? Is it kind to call professional mediumship "professional deviltry?" His own estimable wife is an excellent medium for automatic writing, and does not the doctor know that Spiritualism has something more than a "probability" to base its claims upon? In the work of "pulling down," in which the doctor is engaged, we deeply regret that he should find it necessary to go out of his way to cast a doubt over what we know he knows to be true?

Brother Owen, you say that mediums hav been my truest friends? Well, why not? I hav always treated them kindly and favored them whenever I could, so long as I found them free from deception and fraud, and I hav every reason to believe that all true Spiritualists and all genuin mediums are still my friends, except, perhaps a few of that unfortunate class of Spiritualists who hav been deceived by and sympathize with frauds, even after repeated exposure by intelligent Spiritualists and their friends. I desire the friendship of all true men and women, but to retain the regard of frauds and shams I must shut my eyes to their iniquity. This I will not do, whatever befalls me. Their friendship has no other meaning to me than that of selfishness, trade and traffic in Spiritualism. The grand and beautiful import of the phenomena, if our solution of it be correct, is nothing to these materializing graveyard ghouls who pretend to drag our dead into the dim light of the spirit show, and night after night trample upon the highest and tenderest affections of the human heart. Of all such I am an open enemy, and their friendship I do not wish or expect. They are the leeches and dry-rot of Spiritualism, which mar it of its beauty and drag it down to the dead level of cold-blooded dollars and cents.

Brother Owen, you say that I went out of my way to hit Spiritualism a back-handed slap. No, Brother Owen, you are mistaken, and the medium from whom you received the intelligence is no doubt one of that class mentioned above, and with whose interests you seem to be in sympathy.

No I never go out of my way to hit anything; I stick to my text. I do not slap things back-handed; I strike straight out in front, and perhaps sometimes I hit a trifle too hard. But, as a rule, I think whatever is worth hitting at all needs to be killed.

The report of my lecture from which you quote was upon the science of spiritual phenomena and mediumship, both genuin and spurious, in which I tried to warn Spiritualists against the evils that hav crept into and corrupted it, and if you will use the Golden Gate to that end you will be doing a good work. You hav told the people that I am engaged in pulling down Spiritualism. You do me great injustice, unless you mean by Spiritualism, to include the noxious crop of parasites which infest it.

You say, Brother Owen, that my wife is a medium. Quite correct—but not a public professional who sells the gift for a livelihood, and subjected to the temptation of deception. And the fact that she is a medium does not imply that I should countenance the shams or pretenders to mediumship.

You say, "Does not the doctor know that Spiritualism has more than a probability to base its claims upon?" No, friend Owen; nothing more. Hav you anything more, if so, what? The first point beyond probability is certainty or knowledge.

Do you know that you will liv after death? I do not. I wish I did know it, for then I might impart such knowledge to others. Belief predicated upon probabilities which take root in the phenomena, and knowledge which is absolute, are two quite different things. I hope and believe, and yet do not know. Why is this? Simply because the proofs do not lift the mind beyond doubt. Knowledge does not admit of doubt; belief does admit of doubt. The appearances in nature hav ever been deceptiv to the human mind, as the study of all natural science will show. Belief in a theory is not a proof absolute of the things believed.

Our theory is that the phenomena such as the raps, independent slate-writing, and the ballot test as given so certainly and so wonderfully by Mrs. Faye, of San Francisco, as well as various other manifestations by other genuin mediums, are produced by the departed intelligences, and yet our solution of the phenomena may be incorrect, and to dogmatize in the absence of absolute proof is folly, and is simply to repeat the religious blunders of the past which hav caused so much mischief in the world.

I say I rest upon probability. My organism will not permit me, like yourself, to declare anything certain which I cannot demonstrate to others.

Brother Owen, you say that I cast doubt over what you know that I know to be true. Now, then, if I cast doubt upon what I know to be true—and upon what you know that I know to be true—I must be a hypocrit and a liar. Well, where else can I stand?

Brother Owen, I do not think you meant to imply so much. And it is barely possible that you do not quite understand the subject upon which you write; for if you did, you would not make such a silly statement. How can you know that I know anything to be true which neither one of us can prove to a certainty? All such logic is the despair of reason and science. Go to, and take on board a little common sense.

Now then, let us make up. We hav known each other too long to fall out about trifles. You know that my work is not to drive the people apart by teaching sectarian Spiritualism and that there can be no affinity for work in a common cause between men and women unless they can see to read their title clear to a life beyond the grave. This smacks too much of religion and theology. True Liberalism lifts the mind above all that, and makes a broad fellowship possible, as well as a unity of action relating to the many great questions which most certainly concern us here and now.

I am glad that you hav entered upon Liberal journalism, and hope that you will be as successful with the Golden Gate at San Francisco as you hav been so many years at the head of the Mercury at San Jose, and that the good angels, if there be such, will guide you into all truth.

We—wife and I—are well and full of work. Next Sunday is our twentieth lecture in the great city of Sydney, and I hav six more lectures under the present engagement, after which we go to Melbourne. Our audiences hav been large and enthusiastic. We like the people here.

Joseph Symes, in Melbourne, is fighting the hypocrits hip and thigh. He was arrested last week, and bound over for trial, charged, under an old law of King Charles of England, with keeping a disorderly house. That is what the old law defines lectures and debates to be, when held on Sunday, and a fee is taken at the door. So you see that lecturing on Sunday is a crime in Melbourne.

And for the benefit of any of our speakers who may desire to visit the colonies, come upon your own merits and responsibility, and make your engagements here after you hav seen the field for yourself, as you will thereby subserve your own financial interests. And there are but few points in the colonies where even the best speaker can do much, unless he can take a theater, manage his own affairs, and reap the profit of his own labor.

DR. J. L. YORK.

The Boston "Index."

I think it is very unfortunate, when Liberals are attempting to organize, that any pretended friend should oppose them, because it tends to create division in our ranks. We must be united and work together, else organization is impossible.

I was led to this thought by reading Mr. B. F. Underwood's complaining article in the last Index, of which he is one of the editors. That paper is the Free Religious organ, but I had supposed that he is a Liberal, and if he is, I think his remarks against the League or the Union are very improper, if not false. He says "the League is run by two or three individuals, with the aid of Colonel Ingersoll's name, for their own personal benefit." I would like to see some proof of this assertion. I never heard it before, and I doubt very much if Colonel Ingersoll will indorse it. Mr. Underwood is not a member, I presume, of the League, and I question his authority to speak for it in the positiv language he uses. If the League sees fit to employ Messrs. Watts, Putnam, and others (whom the colonel strongly recommends), I know of no good reason why Mr. Underwood should complain, or why he need concern himself at all, if he is not a member of the League.

He also insinuates that Messrs. Watts and Putnam hav taken charge of the League, and been lavishly paid, but hav done nothing in behalf of secularization! This is another absurd and ridiculous charge. These gentlemen are very able workers, who hav been constantly lecturing for eight or ten months, and now to say they hav done nothing is false and foolish.

The League is founded on the Nine Demands of Liberalism, which Mr. Underwood himself once supported, but now seems to oppose, for some reason which he does not state, if he has any except jealousy or envy. A MEMBER OF THE LEAGUE.

Well Done, Archbishop!

Touching the "prayers for the approaching election" set forth by the Archbishop of Canterbury the Churchman says:

"To the Conservativ they will be a devout petition for the defeat of the Liberals. To the Liberal they will seem to ask for the success of his own party. Each will read into them his own party hopes and fears, and will employ them for the confusion of his adversaries. It may be gravely asked, we think, whether such use of public prayer is desirable. It is not that the prayers set forth by the Primate are not excellent. On the contrary, they are so admirable that it is to be wished that they might be used at all times. It is only when they are set forth to be used with reference to a particular crisis like the approaching election, concerning which men are sure to differ, that the use of them is open to grave question. The serious employment of them at this juncture by the two opposing political camps will hardly tend, we fear, to promote belief in the sincerity or efficiency of public prayer."

In our opinion the Archbishop of Canterbury would do well to come out here and edit one of our New York dailies, in editing which the art lies in discussing all subjects, and offending nobody except the very poor.

A Division Demanded.

We are requested by Mrs. Waisbrooker to copy the following earnest call:

Whereas, We continue to see increasing evidence that modern Spiritualism is being captured by church spirits; and

Whereas, Certain leaders in the movement claim that there can be "no union between what is called Christian and Infidel Spiritualists" and that "every true medium" is commissioned by Jesus, and

Whereas, The new Spiritual Temple of Boston, Mass., has over its main entrance "the Rosy Cross," or, in other words, the symbol of the bloody cross of Christianity:

Therefore, Believing it to be beneath the dignity of self-respecting men and women to stay among and help to sustain those who repudiate us, we think it time that we withdraw and form ourselvs into a separate body; and we earnestly request all who believe that spirits can and do communicate with mortals, and at the same time repudiate Christianity with all its forms and symbols—we earnestly request all such to send us their names with a view to testing our numbers in reference to future work. Address Foundation Principles, Clinton, Iowa.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.
Vice-Presidents.

CHARLES WATTS, JOHN E. REMSBURG, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, MATTIE P. KREKEL, ELIZUR WRIGHT, JAMES PARTON, HORACE SEAVER, PARKER PILLSBURY, WILLIAM ALGIE, ROBERT C. ADAMS, TITUS L. BROWN, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York.
COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com.
E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$1426.22
Thayer L. White (paid),	10.00
D. P. Willcox (paid),	1.00
Total,	1,437.22

PLEDGES PAID.—S. C. Thayer, $5.00

The Opening of the Museums on Sunday.

An effort is being made to open the art museums on Sunday. A petition has been prepared by the American Secular Union which will be widely circulated throughout the city. It has already received several hundred signatures. It is to be hoped that every Liberal in the city will procure copies of this petition at 33 Clinton Place, and secure all the names possible. An expression of public opinion upon this matter will no doubt bring about the desired result. The Christians say that they hav paid large sums of money for the benefit of these institutions, and therefore they must be run for the benefit of Christianity. So long, however, as the city of New York pays $30,000 a year for the support of these museums, the claim of these wealthy Christians is entirely unjustifiable. Let them pay all the bills if they want the interests of Christianity subserved by these museums. This is an important question. It would be of vast value to the community to hav these museums open on Sunday. It is only a question of time. Push the petition, we ask the citizens of New York.

The Organization of Liberals.

The organization of Liberals is one of the most difficult problems in the Freethought movement. The necessity of organization is apparent. There must be co-operation. Liberals must join, or we cannot successfully meet the tyrannical influences of the stupendous ecclesiastical forces which are in the world to-day. They still retain their power, and will do it so long as there is no common effort made against them. But in resisting the tyranny of the past, we must be careful and not put a new tyranny in its place, for if this is done but little will be accomplished for the freedom of mankind. Liberty must be preserved at all hazards; and the question is, How can we preserve liberty and at the same time become a powerful and united company?

We cannot organize like the orthodox. Their fundamental principle is the absolute submission of the individual, as in the Roman church—or partial submission, as in the Protestant church. In the Liberal or Secular movement there can be no such submission whatever. The individual must be supreme, and there must be no authority. There can be no command—no fiat even of a majority. There must be a constant appeal to each man's reason. Unless this is so, the organization will be of no benefit, for the moment it takes the place of anyone's personal judgment and activity, it becomes an injury; and one had better work apart than in any way surrender the highest action of which he is capable. Unless we can combine the free exercise of individuality with co-operation, the problem of the future progress of humanity becomes insoluble. There is no use to put one tyranny in the place of another, no matter what may be the basis of the tyranny. It is the tyranny that blasts and kills the human mind. The tyranny of a scientific association in essence is no better than the tyranny of the church. The authority of science, as a dictum to take the place of one's free reason, is as much to be revolted against as the authority of faith.

This is the American idea, the absolute supremacy of the individual. This is the keynote of the civilization of the New World. We are not simply to produce material comfort for all, but splendid men and women, with highest faculties and widest range of effort. The new civilization must be the minister of genius as well as of prosperity, and only in the unchecked play of personality can genius produce its wondrous results and adorn the world's advance with the glorious triumphs of art and poetry.

But with individual liberty unrestrained can there be association? Undoubtedly there can be, for man by nature is a sociable being and he does not desire to be a solitary worker.

The mistake of past associations, even in the interest of progress, is that they hav been founded upon compulsion. The associations of the future, if they are to be ministers of freedom as well as of advancement in knowledge and power, must be founded in attraction. No methods can be devised by human ingenuity which can keep uncongenial men and women together. If they do not belong together by some natural affinity, then they cannot be kept together by any outward machinery of organization. They are better separate than in unity. They make discord and not music.

There are, however, congenial spirits who can work harmoniously together and labor for a common result from which all shall receive benefit. There can be vast co-operations, an ideal republic whose government shall be that of attraction, and so of the highest liberty.

The American Secular Union must be an organization of this sort. It must be attractiv in its nature. It must be the expression of the blending life of many. There can be no coercion in its method. It must ever represent the best reason of each one of its members. Such an organization as this is possible, but the difficulties are numerous. It cannot be established at once. It cannot be manufactured. It must be a growth and the outcome of gradually improving conditions. It must be a natural evolution. There can be no rapid advance in the number of organizations. This has been tried somewhat according to the old plan and has been a failure. What is the use of a few persons getting together, making a constitution, electing officers and receiving a charter unless there is sufficient vital fellowship in these to cause them to work continuously together, so that every week, or every month at least, they will assemble for social development, and realize that by thus being associated, their personal happiness and influence is increased, and instead of being confined they hav a larger field for all their individual faculties? There can be many such vital organizations throughout the country. A few Liberals can come together and increase a thousandfold their influence in the community.

In the first place, however, it seems necessary that the national association as such should be maintained, and as far as possible a thorough organization and fellowship be established from one end of the country to the other. To hav thirty thousand, fifty thousand, or a hundred thousand Liberals in harmonious working order throughout the entire land would giv an efficiency to the Freethought movement to-day that nothing else could, and would bring into play vast and varied forces for progress. The national organization can be sustained, its work carried on to unprecedented success by a thousand or ten thousand Liberals becoming annual or life members, and by means of publications, pamphlets, circulars, etc., being kept in constant intercommunication with one another, and informed of what is going on in the general advance, and thus a spirit of fellowship will be created and combined movements be pushed forward which will hav an enormous influence against superstition and tyranny.

Any person can become an annual member by the payment of one dollar, and a life member by the payment of twenty-five dollars. If we had this year one hundred life members and one thousand annual members, representing all parts of the country, and were acquaintance cultivated and enthusiasm increased by the constant circulation of documents, and by general attacks at the most favorable points, the American Secular Union would indeed be a prodigious power, both in social and political life, and would be a mighty bulwark for human rights, and a commanding influence for justice.

This can be done by the generous devotion of even one-tenth of the Liberals of the country. I therefore ask every one who is interested in this associated effort to become an annual if not a life member of the Union.

It is but little for each, but combined it makes a vast instrument for the triumph of those ideas which constitute the real happiness of our daily life and struggle.

In regard to local organizations, there should be some combination of effort, no matter how few the Liberals in any community. In answer to inquiries made in regard to methods of organization, the following instructions will be useful:

FORMATION OF AUXILIARY SOCIETIES.

If it is decided to form an auxiliary society of the American Secular Union the following blank can be used. These blanks will be furnished by the secretary of the Union:

FORMATION OF AN AUXILIARY SECULAR SOCIETY.

CALL.

We, the undersigned citizens of ———, agree to organize an Auxiliary Secular Society, to work in connection with the American Secular Union, and to pay the sums set opposit our names for that purpose.

When ten or more names hav been signed, and five dollars contributed, a temporary secretary can be elected, and the names signed and the fee be forwarded to the secretary of the Union, 33 Clinton Place, N. Y. A charter will then be issued to those thus signing, together with a copy of the constitution of the American Secular Union.

In accordance with this constitution and the Nine Demands of Liberalism, a permanent society can be organized; a constitution adopted; officers elected; meetings appointed for lectures, debates, readings, sociables, etc. Be sure to include in the society, and in all work, men, women, and children, and hav an order of exercises that meets the wants of all. Remember the fundamental idea of the society is Freethought, social and intellectual development among neighbors. Do not hav debates only, but, if possible, hav scientific and literary lectures; hav dramatic and musical entertainments; bring the young and the old together, with the constant purpose of enlarging friendly intercourse and cultivating fraternal co-operation.

If in any community the Liberals are so few—half a dozen—that they do not feel able to take out a charter and form a strict organization, let these Liberals at least sign a few articles of agreement, elect a president and secretary, appoint stated meetings, open correspondence with the secretary of the American Secular Union, who will supply them with documents, circulars, etc., so that they will come into contact with Liberals throughout the country, and secure a great impulse and encouragement to their little struggling band.

THE PLACE OF MEETING.

If a society of Liberals can do no better, let them meet at one another's houses every Sunday afternoon or evening, or once a fortnight, or once a month. If there is no one to giv an original discourse, let some lecture be read, or newspaper article. Let there be a discussion of the topics of the day. Let each one gather together during the week what information he can of Freethought throughout the world, and bring it to the conference. Let there be music by those who hav the talent. Let there be recitations, especially by the children. Let there be conversation, interchange of thought, and a better acquaintance all around. Invite Christian friends to come, and it is possible that they may receieve a spark of intelligence that will do them life-long good. The society will grow, and then a small public hall can be hired and a larger work accomplished, and the attention of the community attracted. When available send for some well-known Freethought lecturer, and thus giv the best presentation of the cause, and show its vast importance and truth. As the finances improve, and the sphere of usefulness increases, lease a hall by the year, furnish it, sublet if necessary to help pay expenses, but make it a sort of home, and when the time comes hav a real home, a hall built and owned by Freethinkers themselvs, paying taxes on it like honest citizens, and thus there will be a continued protest against unjust exemption, and thus science, morality, and progress will hav a place for ample development. Plant the acorn, and the oak will spread its branches in the summer's sun.

LIBRARIES.

At the very beginning of the organization establish a library without fail. Start it with two or three books if need be. A library owned in common is a very neighborly affair. Let there be an assessment of twenty-five or fifty cents a month for the purchase of books. By thus combining, a fine library can eventually be had, and the best and even the costliest Freethought literature brought within the reach of all. The secretary of the Union will furnish all such societies with books of every kind at a reasonable discount. Thus every Liberal can enjoy the advantages of wealth. A bond of union will be established, and a noble means of culture.

THE LIBERAL PAPER.

By all means subscribe for a Liberal paper. Where individuals cannot afford to do so, let the society subscribe for copies, or two or three can join together and do this, and thus they will be kept in sympathy with the world-wide movement. The Liberal paper is the most important factor in the advance of Freethought, necessary to it as a whole and necessary to each individual that forms a part of it. The first thing that a society should do, if none of its members, or only one or two, take a paper, is to subscribe for one, and, as means enlarge, to subscribe for all, for every Liberal paper is of value. These papers can be used as campaign documents and distributed freely in the community. To every Liberal we say, subscribe for a Freethought paper. If you cannot do it alone, combine with two or three others or do it through the joint funds of the society. Hav the paper any way. Next to being a Freethinker yourself, come in contact with every other Freethinker the world over.

READING-ROOMS, GYMNASIUMS, ETC.

If possible, hav a reading-room—open on Sundays if on no other day—a place where Liberals can come together in a free and easy manner, read and write, etc. If possible, hav gymnasiums, scientific apparatus, etc. A piano or organ should be owned by the society, also pictures—especially of the heroes of Freethought—to adorn the walls. In fact, make a common home for all—not to take the place of one's own fireside, but to be an instrumentality by which the individual recognizes his universal interest in the affairs of humanity.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Let there be a Sunday-school also—brightness, beauty, interest, and mental and moral growth for the children of all Liberals. This can be done, for we hav something more than a stale theology to teach—the system of knownothingism. We hav the riches of science, the wealth of human history, all that music can giv, and the glories of art. How to use this material, of course, is not yet understood. We hav not the text-books that we desire nor the trained educators. Time will furnish all, however, and one of the great purposes of the American Secular Union is to bring into use the best means of education, for the mighty promis of its labor lies in the hereafter, in the better children that will be born and instructed in the verities of this world.

The comprehensiv nature of Freethought is seen when we thus consider the various methods to be used for its advancement. The greatness of the work should not discourage the smallest efforts that can be made. Begin with the least beginning. Let two or three subscribe for a paper, buy a book, meet in one another's parlors. The life and organization thus begun will increase and pervade and conquer the community in behalf of knowledge and happiness here and now.

Let every Liberal throughout the country correspond with the secretary on this matter. He will furnish books, pamphlets, and papers at reasonable rates, and giv information in regard to methods of work, etc. It is only by patient investigation, by continued experiment, by unceasing inquiry, that we can find the surest means of success for the secularization not only of the state, but of the social life of humanity. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The Liberal Club.

As the individual wearing Mr. Wettstein's luminous badge-pin went blithely up Third avenue to attend the 388th regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club, he was accosted by a youth who handed him the following card:

ASSOCIATION HALL,
Twenty-third street, corner Fourth avenue, New York.
YOUNG MEN'S MEETINGS,
Every Evening, November 9th to 14th, at 9 o'clock.
Short, Hearty Talks on Living Subjects!
Good Music: Orchestra, Chorus, and Male Quartette.
Admit the Bearer.

Slipping this card into his pocket, the man with the badge-pin kept undeviatingly upon his way. A person who should turn aside, when going to the Liberal Club, in order to attend a meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association, might reasonably be accused of not knowing what was best for him.

There was a large audience in the German Masonic Hall when President Wakeman curbed things into order by tapping the new reading desk with his mallet. Then Mr. Wakeman read a long series of notices of other meetings, remarked on the deeply interesting character of the current number of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and asked everybody to sign Mr. Putnam's petition for opening the museums in Central Park on Sunday.

Dr. Dio Lewis, who had agreed to address the Club on temperance and prohibition, was unable to appear on account of serious ill-health. Professor Rawson had therefore secured the attendance of Colonel Laird, of the Temperance Brigade. Mr. Wakeman had great pleasure in introducing the speaker.

Colonel Laird here skipped to the fore and began his speech. He was a young man, with a head much the highest at the back, and covered with a thick mat of black hair which nearly concealed his ears and forehead. He was a prohibitionist from the word go. He did not, he said, stop to argue with those who claimed that prohibition did not prohibit. He knew that it had the effect in prohibition states of taking the control of politics out of the hands of the liquor dealers, and prohibition was a good thing if it did no more than that. In New York state bribery at elections was first introduced by the liquor dealers. There were from thirty thousand to forty thousand of these in New York, and twelve thousand saloons. The speaker referred feelingly to the Rev. Stephen Merritt, the defeated candidate for senator in the eighth district. He said it was a hopeful sign when an ultra-temperance man like Mr. Merritt, a man who would hav no dealings with the liquor interest, could get five thousand votes in one district. To those who had read the article in last week's TRUTH SEEKER on the "Christian Politician" Colonel Laird's delusion in regard to how Mr. Merritt got five thousand votes was painful.

When Colonel Laird stopped speaking the audience applauded heartily.

Mr. Wakeman said that there were two aspects of the liquor question. One was the physiological and the other the sociological aspect. In the first place we should consider whether or not alcohol is healthful. It had been shown most satisfactorily that it was not under any circumstances conduciv to health, but was always injurious. The sociological view regarded alcohol as it affected the community at large, and this gave rise to the right to tax liquor dealers for the protection of society against intoxicated persons. Mr. Wakeman objected to prohibition as unwarranted legislation; high license would be legal, but a revenue drawn from liquor dealers in the form of a tax he thought would be still better. As for temperance, the only proper way to be temperate in the use of liquor was to let it alone.

A young fellow named Mitchell followed, and essayed to set Mr. Wakeman right in regard to the use of terms. He said the chairman meant pathological, not physiological. He then traced the career of a drink after it is swallowed by the indiscreet dram-drinker, concluding, as to liquor, that there was "no good into it."

Mr. Krahmer took a strong stand against prohibition, and made some brief but vigorous remarks from that point of view. He thought the fact that there was more intemperance in drink among the ignorant than among the educated pointed to education as the best method of reform.

Mr. Rosenburg had a very poor opinion of temperance lecturers; the majority of them had laid in the gutter. Mr. Rosenburg keeps a hotel. He is highly spoken of, and is said by his friends to be doing quite well. He said that in 1845 he belonged to the seventh regiment, and escorted Daniel Webster and Henry Clay to a hostelry where they took something. Webster was one of those funny fellows. He said to Clay: "Harry, you believe in experimental philosophy; I believe in natural philosophy. For instance, you try experimental philosophy and want to borrow five dollars; I practice natural philosophy and don't let you hav it." Mr. Rosenburg was a fellow-student at college with Prince Albert, who afterwards got a situation as husband of Victoria of England at a good salary. In Germany, the speaker said, Prince Albert never knelt in church as he did in England.

Wilson Macdonald, following, picked up the glass on the speaker's desk and inquired if it contained water. Receiving an affirmativ answer, he appeared satisfied, and made a very acceptable address. He opposed prohibition laws as unconstitutional.

The next speaker was Mr. Walford, one of the warriors in Colonel Laird's brigade. He is an Englishman, and had not a letter h in his alphabet. Mr. Walford said we hav too many dudes who don't produce anything. The speaker regarded himself as a public benefactor because he had done numerous days' work. Mr. Walford illustrated his remarks with a chart showing that the people of this country spend nine hundred million dollars per annum for liquor and only ninety-five million for education. Mr. Walford was an ardent prohibitionist. Though sixty years old, he never had a drink of liquor in his life.

Dr. Foote urged that we should distinguish between state prohibition and self-prohibition. Many were self-prohibitionists who were not state prohibitionists. The czar of Russia was about to enforce a prohibitory law against liquor, and it would be interesting to see whether even the despotic power of an emperor could keep liquor away from those who were in the habit of drinking it.

Professor Rawson addressed the audience briefly. It had been some time, he said, since he had gazed upon the faces now before him, but he noted no diminution in their good looks. The professor believed in total abstinence, though he had not yet reached that level. He belonged to the Business Men's Moderation Society. Appealing to the law for protection against intemperance he regarded as a superstition. The law was as much a man-created deity as Jehovah, as big a tyrant, and likely to do the same amount of damage in the hands of bad men. We are becoming freed from the god of religious superstition; let us not pass under the yoke of the legal deity.

Colonel Laird came up smiling for the last round. After some general remarks touching his critics, he pointed his finger dramatically at Mr. Rosenburg and Wilson McDonald and said, "I could tell you something that would raise the hair on your head." Mr. Wakeman encouraged him to go ahead. Then Colonel Laird told about his brother who had died with the delirium tremens, but although the speaker shook his hands and crooked his fingers in the approved style the hair-lifting phenomenon which he had predicted would occur failed to manifest itself. On the contrary, the two gentlemen regarded the antics of the speakers with calm and undisturbed serenity. The colonel thanked the audience for their kind attention.

At the next meeting, if nothing serious intervenes, Dr. R. G. Eccles will defend Herbert Spencer's philosophy and demonstrate his knowledge of the Unknowable. Great interest is manifested in the event. The microscopic sum of five cents will admit the intelligent inquirer. As before stated, Presbyterians are encouraged to attend free of expense.

Mr. Bell's Progress.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav just returned from Indiana, where I hav been trying to get up enthusiasm in the Secular Union. On the 10th inst. I addressed an attentiv audience at Wabash. Mine was the first Freethought lecture ever given in the place, and as a matter of course it created a great deal of wrathful comment, both before and after it was given. I shared the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Everett, who are suffering a vast deal of persecution in consequence of their Liberal sentiments and work, for Mr. Everett is engaged in publishing a paper, the Labor Advocate, which, in consequence of the intolerance of the Knights of Labor, has evoluted into a Freethought journal, and drawn upon his devoted head the curses of the people of God. On my return I stopped at Goshen, not the Goshen of ye olden time that flowed with milk and honey, but a modern Goshen that abounds in superstition and indifference. There are, however, some excellent Liberals here, among whom are Dr. Whippy, Dr. Heatwole, Hobart Little, Lan. Crider, Joshua Tylor, Chas. E. Thompson, John Violet, Oscar Dewey, and others whose names I hav forgotten. I am sorry to say that the Liberal papers are not as well supported as they ought to be. I did not hav the pleasure of making the acquaintance of all the Liberals, but judging those I did not see by those I did, I conclude that Goshen has enough to form a Secular Union. I received encouragement in regard to lectures here next month. Mr. and Mrs. Little very kindly entertained me while I was in town. Their two daughters are inclined to read and study. Edith, the elder, is the youngest girl that ever entered the high school, being only twelve years of age. From Goshen I went to Elkhart, where I found quite a number of Freethinkers, and heard of more. The most pronounced of these are Dr. Hatch and wife, Dr. Hendryx, M. F. Shuey, Hugh McLoughlin and wife, Lucas Evans, Warren Pease, William Forward and wife, C. T. Green, and Mr. Leinenger. I had the pleasure of a short visit with Dr. Hatch, Mrs. Forward, Mr. and Mrs. McLoughlin. I think arrangements will be made for me to lecture early in December.

My purpose was and is to canvass Illinois this winter, but my correspondents are slow to come to the front. "We'll see you later," seems to be their motto. But I am harnessed and want to get right down to work.

302 State st., Chicago, Ill. W. S. BELL.

Mount Holly, New Jersey.

Under the auspices of that earnest worker for Liberalism, Sam. R. Wetherell, of Jobstown, who inspired not alone the Liberals of his own town, but also of Pemberton, Georgetown, and Mount Holly with his own spirit of zeal and enthusiasm, it was decided to hav three Liberal lectures at the Opera House, Mount Holly, N. J., on Saturday evening, Sunday afternoon, and Sunday evening, November 7th and 8th.

Despite the very unfavorable weather and the prejudice—this was the first Liberal lecture ever delivered in the county—we were greeted with goodly numbers of the most intelligent and influential people. On Saturday evening we spoke on "What Liberalism Teaches?" This being an entirely new field, we endeavored to remove, and incline to think we succeeded in removing, the false impression that Liberal lectures were tirades of abuse of all Christians, or that Secularism sought to remove all restraints from the commission of crime and denounced all virtue. We proved Secularism had just claims to the respect of all, since its first great principle was justice, and its sole teaching the duty to promote the best happiness of others as the surest way to insure our own. That a favorable impression was made was evinced by the large attendance on Sunday afternoon, despite the rain trying to dampen the enthusiasm. We spoke on "Why I left the Pulpit," concluding with an analysis of the Mosaic account of creation, which resulted in quite a demand for our Liberal publications.

Sunday evening the rain descended in torrents, as though specially engaged to inaugurate another deluge. Although we missed the inspiring faces of the gentler sex, we had good attendance and most earnest attention. Our subject was "Immortality," and even our orthodox as well as our Spiritualistic friends acknowledged the Bible did not teach the immortality of the soul. There was a big demand for "Bible Inquirers." We sold about $10 worth of Liberal publications, obtained several new subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and made the acquaintance of quite a number of loyal, generous-hearted Liberals, so that we are deeply interested in the state of New Jersey, and are confident, if among the last to fall in on the march to freedom, her sons and daughters are loyal, brave, and true as any in the world.

While at Mount Holly we enjoyed the hospitality of Mordecai Lippincott and his accomplished wife. They were both of good old Quaker stock—Hicksite branch. Mr. Lippincott is a veteran in the cause of Liberalism, a Freethinker all his life, and for over forty years a subscriber to the Investigator, until now the only person who took a Liberal paper in Mount Holly. His sons George and Stacey are proficient musicians and Liberal, cultured gentlemen.

The car of progress has been started, and we feel confident the Liberals we had the honor to meet are not likely to let it halt, but will push on vigorously and unitedly, insuring a grand success for Secularism in that county. C. B. REYNOLDS.

HE that cannot forgiv others breaks the bridge over which he must pass himself; for every man has need to be forgiven.—Herbert.

Communications.

Secularization Through Organization.

The American Secular Union is devoted to the secularization of our government. This embraces—

1. Securing equal rights and liberty to all, regardless of religious faith—or the lack of it; the total separation of church and state, and the repeal of any and every law that infringes the right of conscience, or favors any practices in the name of religion, or aught else, that interferes with private right or the public welfare; and

2. Advancement in all that pertains to truth, science, and sociability. A firm and consistent adherence to our aim and object is a necessity. It is not enough to hav grand and noble purposes. They must be faithfully and consistently carried out.

Experience has taught, if we would erect an edifice that shall stand the fierce storms of time, the first and most important thing is to build a solid, safe, and sure foundation.

The success of the American Secular Union depends on the character, zeal, and energy of its individual members. One of the hardest trials under which the National Liberal League labored was that so large a proportion of its membership acted as if there were no claims upon them whatever. They had no duty to do, were under no obligation to make any sacrifice, or in the least inconvenience themselvs to advance its interests.

Many fail to realize that to declare themselvs Liberals is to obligate themselvs to cultivate every instrumentality for diffusing the light of truth—that doing justice, loving mercy, and diligently striving to make others happy is what constitutes Liberalism.

Secularism is doing as well as doubting. Freed from the shackles of superstition, illumined by the light of truth, we are under obligations to co-operate with heart, energy, and pocket-book in the endeavor to help others to the same joy, peace, and happiness we experience. This is simply justice, and justice is the one first grand principle that actuates every true Liberal.

Before people will heartily co-operate with us they must be enlightened. We must first dispel the dark clouds of prejudice and superstition in which the church has involved them.

If the American Secular Union is to be a success, efficient organization is an imperativ necessity.

Our main hope, our chief reliance, is the printing-press. The only devil we hav to be delivered from is ignorance. The Liberal-printing press is our savior, our redeemer.

We hav talent, devotion to the cause, love of our fellow-creatures, and spirit of self-sacrifice in the Liberal ranks fully equal to that in any Christian denomination. What is needed is unity on some systematized plan of work that shall encourage and incite all to earnest, persistent effort. Let a copy of the following blank be sent to the most zealous Liberals in every school district, with a personal letter from the secretary urging activ canvass, and requesting a prompt reply and report of results:

BLANK NO. I.

FORMATION OF SECULAR SOCIETIES.

We the undersigned residents of the town of county of state of earnestly desiring more united and efficient work in behalf of Secularism, and greater advancement in all that pertains to right living, useful knowledge, and the promotion of sociability, do hereby agree to organize as the Secular Society, and to join and work in connection with the American Secular Union, pledging ourselves, each and severally, to work for the secularization of our government, and the Nine Demands of Liberalism; to sustain regular weekly meetings for instruction and sociability, including science schools on Sundays, and to pay the sum of fifty cents monthly in advance, one-half to be for the use and benefit of the Secular Society, and the other half, or remaining twenty-five cents, to the treasurer of the American Secular Union for Liberal publications. All such publications to be furnished to the full value of every cent so paid, at publisher's lowest retail prices.

NAME. | POST-OFFICE ADDRESS.

Let every Liberal, man or woman, receiving such blank call on every liberal-minded person of intelligence and repute in their neighborhood, talk over the justice of the Nine Demands, the need of a local Secular Society in the neighborhood, and obtain signatures. As soon as the names are obtained call a meeting of all who hav signed; meet at private houses (the grand, handsome hall will come by and by. Do not despise the day of small things). In every school district in which there are five adult Liberals, a local Secular Society should at once be organized.

There is no sense in, no need of, waiting because numbers are small, or because of lack of some great scholar to take the leadership, or because no hall can be had. Seek from the first to depend on and develop home talent. Above all, enlist the women and children. Let every possible endeavor be made to arouse the women to enthusiasm in the work. This done and success is assured. Remember efficient organization is an imperativ necessity. In union is strength. Organization strengthens the bond of human brotherhood. By unity all are stimulated to doing their very best for the general good. At the first meeting let it be understood there will be an election of president, secretary, treasurer, and vigilance, educational, and social committees for one month. At the expiration of the month many more members will doubtless be added. If the best persons for the several positions hav been elected, they can then be re-elected for a year; if any mistakes hav been made they can be remedied.

Establish regular Sunday meetings, including science schools on Sundays.

On notifying the secretary of the American Secular Union of such election of officers he should by return mail furnish each such society local by-laws and full instructions how to start a science school, how to form classes, and how to conduct meetings, including

BLANK NO. II—SUGGESTED ORDER OF EXERCISES.

(Not an imperativ cast-iron order that must be followed, but a guide or suggestion of how to conduct weekly meetings, and insure all being interested and profited by them.)

BLANK NO. II.

PROPOSED ORDER OF EXERCISES AT WEEKLY MEETINGS OF LOCAL SECULAR SOCIETIES.

1. Music, vocal or instrumental.
2. Roll call.
3. Letters and excuses on account of absence from last meeting.
4. Reading minutes of last meeting.
5. Propositions for membership, and reference to vigilance committee.
6. Report of vigilance committee.
7. Admission of new members.
8. Inquiry: Is any member of the society known to be sick or in need? Are there any cases of extreme poverty, sickness, or destitution in the neighborhood? Any person in the neighborhood suffering persecution on account of religious convictions?
9. Reference of any such cases to the vigilance committee for their prompt action.
10. Recitation in concert.
11. Musical calisthenics and march.
12. Recitations and select readings.
13. Mottoes.
14. Music.
15. Classes, fifteen minutes: Astronomy, hygiene, physiology, languages, etc.
16 Intermission, five minutes, for the payment of dues, handing secretary weekly report of distribution of Liberal literature, and obtaining blanks for next week's report.
17. Vocal music.
18. Address, or reading of essay on subject selected at last meeting.
19. Three-minute speeches.
20. Questions.
21. Report of secretary: Sum total of number of pages of publications given away by members during past week; also number and price of all books and pamphlets sold, and number of new subscribers obtained for Liberal papers.
22. Three-minute recitals of incidents of interest and experiences in doing missionary work.
23. Report of the educational committee.
24. Selection by ballot of subject for all to read up on, and of speaker to prepare speech or essay on, for next meeting.
25. Report of social committee.
26. Announcement of lectures, meetings, classes, and amusements for ensuing week.
27. Miscellaneous business.
28. Music. Adjournment.

HOW TO GET ALONG WITHOUT AN EXPERIENCED TEACHER.

At each regular meeting a subject should be named for all to read upon during the ensuing week. The "Humboldt Library," published at fifteen cents each number, renders this a simple and economical possibility. Decide upon the subject by ballot. Elect a member to make a speech, or read a written paper on such subject, not to exceed fifteen minutes.

If members so elected are ignorant of the subject—unable to make a speech—they can read up, borrow books on the subject, copy out just what they think most instructiv and interesting, and read it before the society. Let this be followed by two to five-minute speeches by all the members. Not for the purpose of showing superior smartness, or desire to eclipse the first speaker, but for the interchange of honest convictions, to impress the facts on the memories of all present. Let the chair keep all sharp up to the subject and time. Let all strive to excel in simplicity of expression; and, above all, take great care to make all remarks interesting to the children. When anyone uses hard or long words, if anyone raises their right hand the speaker must stop and giv definition of such words.

The object of the organization should not be simply to benefit acknowledged Liberals, but the thousands of honest hearts who are looking for beacon-lights to lead them from the errors of the past—from useless rites and ceremonies—to principles of reason, right, and truth; and to the harmonizing that large class who are seeking a higher plane of thought and action.

Every member should be instructed in the judicious distribution of Liberal literature, and to watch for opportunities to secure subscribers for our best Liberal papers. To be ever on the alert when any friend or neighbor becomes interested; to increase that interest by loaning suitable books or papers, and at each meeting of the Society relate items of interest in this connection.

THEN TO ADVANCE SOCIABILITY,

The one field on which the church now concentrates all its power and energies. She realizes the human craving for sociability, the passion to assemble in numbers for the purpose of enjoyment. So long as the church can hold the keys of social life, and control the religious training of the children, we may expose the fallacy of her teachings, but her influence will be undiminished. Our local Secular societies should be made in every respect, alike social and educational, superior to the church and Sunday-school. If there is any musical ability, vocal or instrumental, it should be cultivated to the utmost. Rehearsals should be arranged, and care taken to insure all present a real enjoyable, social time. Encourage and develop all dramatic talent; each local society should hav its monthly socials; music, singing, recitations, select readings; each lasting one hour; after literary exercises, dancing till 11 o'clock P.M. (under no pretext continue later, then all are eager for the next; none tired or unfitted for next day's work. All home in due season). Hav chess and card tables for the old and sedate.

Ladies and children who attend the science school on Sundays admitted free. Gentlemen pay twenty-five cents each to defray expenses. The walls of the rooms where socials are held should be adorned with appropriate mottoes, and pictures of distinguished Liberals; thus affording topics of conversation, awakening interest and a spirit of inquiry. Every member should be prompt to follow up such interest or inquiry by loaning papers, books, or pamphlets on such subjects.

It is the especial duty of the vigilance committee to make all who attend acquainted. But this does not relieve each member of obligation to increase sociability, and make all who attend welcome. All non-members should be invited to attend the science school on Sundays; not formally, but incidentally; yet always most cordially. In the summer, excursions and picnics, carefully planned, can be made a source of additional revenue, as well as promotiv of sociability, and the means of interesting and inducing many to join the society.

DISTRICT UNIONS.

Each state and territory should be divided into districts of about twenty miles square. All local Secular Societies within each district should be organized as a district Secular Union, and hold regular quarterly meetings, at such time and place as shall from time to time be determined on by majority vote of members. All members in good standing of local societies are members of the district union in which they reside. District union officers should, if possible, meet with each local society in their district at least once during each quarter. District union meetings should be attended by one of the American Secular Union officers or proxy, appointed by the board of directors, who shall deliver lectures on such subjects as members of such district shall elect, and shall advise, counsel, and instruct in the best methods of the work, without cost to such district union other than actual expenses while present, and fare to and fro. When practical, a ball and supper should form part of the program of every district union meeting.

At each weekly meeting of local society, ever member, at intermission, hands to the secretary, filled out, blank No. 3.

BLANK NO III.

REPORT OF MEMBERS' MISSIONARY WORK.

Week ending

1. Number of new subscribers to Liberal periodicals obtained.
2. Number of books and pamphlets loaned.
3. Number of periodicals loaned.
4. Number of books and pamphlets sold.
5. Number of pages of tracts, pamphlets, books, and papers given away.

Secretary at each meeting reads sum totals of all reports handed in and reports such total to secretary of district union.

BLANK NO. IV.

LOCAL SECULAR SOCIETY QUARTERLY REPORT.

1. Total number of members in good standing.
2. Average attendance.
3. Occasion and particulars of any extra meetings.
4. Number of new members received during the quarter.
5. Total amount of membership fees and dues received during the quarter.
6. Number of new subscribers to Liberal periodicals obtained.
7. Number of books and pamphlets loaned.
8. Number of periodicals loaned.
8. Number of pages of leaflets, pamphlets, and Liberal papers given away.

At each meeting of district unions the secretary reads sum total of all such work of all local societies in the district, and causes same to be published in Liberal and local papers.

(At meeting of state union, state secretary reports the sum total of all such work, from all the districts in the state, and causes same to be published in THE TRUTH SEEKER, Investigtor, and, as far as practicable, in leading newspapers.)

This will insure large, interesting, and influential meetings in each district every three months, at which all can compare methods of labor and results, learn just what each society is doing, meet officers of American Secular Union for advice and consultation, and all the Liberals of the district become acquainted, thus all be strengthened and encouraged.

Thus every three months throughout the whole field there would be a grand revival, a mighty impetus, given to the cause of universal mental liberty.

All the earnest and ambitious workers would find just the desired field of labor, and all be animated with a spirit of emulation, and determination that their next quarter's work shall exceed that of all others.

The grand, chief aim of the American Secular Union is to strengthen its members and awake thought and investigation among the honest-hearted.

We can do this only by judicious distribution of Liberal literature.

We need publications on the aims and objects of the American Secular Union, carefully written, giving the facts and arguments showing the justice of the Nine Demands, written in such a spirit of kindliness and candor that we can hand them to even the most devout Bible-worshipers; publications that will awaken thought, but lull prejudice, yet of such interest that they will be read and re-read with avidity by all classes; leaflets especially adapted to new fields, showing the gross injustice and evil results of our government granting especial power and privileges to churches, priests, and parsons; publications that the members of the local Secular societies can carefully distribute in the strongholds of the enemy, that shall incite people to discussion of and help them to understand the justice of our demands. We ought to place two million such leaflets in the hands of the people during the ensuing year. When such publications are carefully scattered, they should be followed by the sale or loan of Paine's "Age of Reason," Ingersoll's "Orthodoxy," and Remsburg's "False Claims."

How are these publications to be paid for? We profess to be devoted to the happiness of our fellow-creatures. How can we provide the needed Liberal literature? How secure its careful and judicious circulation? If we had a donation of $15,000 worth of Liberal literature, what could we do with it? How avoid wasting it? How insure its distribution among people really interested to read?

If every member will purchase from the American Secular Union and carefully distribute, or cause to be distributed, twenty-five cents' worth of the best Liberal literature at lowest retail prices, the American Secular Union can obtain the publications by purchasing such very large quantities at about half-discount. Thus all the needed blanks, forms, instruction, etc., the expenses and salary of secretary, can be paid, and a fund left to send out and pay lecturers in new fields, whenever and wherever, in the judgment of the board of directors, it is decreed advisable. Yet no member paying to the American Secular Union twenty-five cents monthly would be one cent out, for each would receive the full value of every cent paid in just the very publications they most need to help make Liberals in their own neighborhood, and without which it is vain to hope for success in securing the Nine Demands, or gaining release from the exactions and dictations of priestcraft.

For illustration, suppose the total membership of our Union was only 5,000; this would giv us $1,250 per month, or $15,000 worth of best Liberal publications carefully distributed in one year. Would not this create material for organization?

The publications would actually cost $7,500. Say $500 more for blanks, forms, instructions, lesson leaves, postage, and express. The American Secular Union would then hav $7,000 out of which to pay services of officers and able workers, and remunera- pioneer lecturers.

Suppose our numbers are reduced to only 2,500. Yet this would insure the free distribution of $7,500 worth of the best Liberal literature and leave $3,000 toward paying officers and laborers.

This year, if our plan is adopted, we shall hav to depend in part on the generous donations of friends to the cause. But next year, and for all future, be independent — save in some rare, special, great emergency. And remember, every month would add to our membership. By the end of the year we should double our numbers, and thus soon become independent, and a mighty power for good.

In three years we could hav a Tent in every state and territory, and meet all expenses without ever having to take up a collection, while in winter we could keep every able lecturer in the field, and pay liberally for all work done in new fields.

Heretofore it was little advantage to be members of the National Liberal League. Under this system every member will be really helped and encouraged. By this system the exact condition, the progress made, the needs and difficulties of every part of the field, will be known to the officers of the American Secular Union, so that just the help needed can be supplied. Every state, every district Union, the smallest secular society, the most lowly members, will be cared for, helped, cheered, encouraged—thus the weak and timorous gain courage to boldly avow their honest convictions. A substitute for the church and Sunday-school will be provided. All the best lecturers and really able workers will be kept constantly in the field, be liberally paid, and find employment just where their special talent and ability can be made most serviceable, while the Local Secular Societies will afford educational and social facilities, not alone to Liberals and their children, but to all liberally inclined. The District Unions, with their quarterly gatherings, will make Liberals better acquainted. Thus constant intercourse will promote sociability and fraternity. In efficient organization lies sure victory for secularization.

CHAS. B. REYNOLDS.

The Trojan Horse.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Oct. 31st "Laokoon" tells us that Minerva was the tutelary goddess of the Greeks. Minerva was a Roman goddess, and although her identity with Pallas-Athene was well established, it is misleading to speak of Minerva as the tutelary goddess of the Greeks. In speaking of this goddess as a Grecian, and especially as an Athenian, deity, the name Pallas-Athene should be used. The American priest of Troy should be a little more careful in his quotations. He says that the ancient Laokoon said, "Timeo Danaos et dena ferents." If the priest had said that, his countrymen would hav been justified in stigmatizing him "as an ex-priest who did not know much." "Timeo Danaos" means, "I fear the Greeks," and "et dena ferents" means nothing. Laokoon said, "Quidquid id est, timeo Danaos et dona ferentis." Perhaps I shall be considered hypercritical, but it must be remembered that the majority of readers do not readily catch the meaning of every sentence, even when considerable care is used in the construction, hence even a few ambiguous words and inaccurate quotations in an article increase the vagueness thereof. In regard to the plank which Laokoon quoted from the Prohibition platform, I fully agree with him when he says, "The first dangerous principle in this primary article of the Prohibition creed is that the just powers of political government are derived from Almighty God as the rightful sovereign of all men." There are some other good points in the article, but on page 691 he says: "Nearly all the murders and suicides of the day are committed with fire-arms. But who ever thought of forbidding by law the manufacture and sale of guns and revolvers?" Such logic as that is just about worthy of a Trojan oracle who lived more than a thousand years before Christ, but it seems to be the only kind comprehensible by a good many others who profess to be very learned on this subject of temperance. It is not true that nearly all the murders and suicides are committed with fire-arms, but if it were, the question following that statement would be no less absurd. When guns cause men to lose their senses and become worse than brutes, trampling upon the affections, rights, and liberties of those most dear to them; when guns cause shame, poverty, cruelty, delirium, and insanity, in short, when their influence becomes similar to that of liquor, probably their manufacture and sale will be prohibited in some way.

Laokoon says that unnatural habits can be broken up "by showing that personal vices are against the health and character of those who indulge in them." What colossal nonsense! Does Laokoon suppose that any person of ordinary intelligence needs to be shown this any more plainly than it is shown every day to almost everybody? Does he not know that hundreds of physicians, who are perfectly cognizant of the injurious effects of the infernal compounds called liquors, and who can giv scientific lectures showing the particular forms of injury caused by different intoxicants, do nevertheless continue to drink those beverages? Does he not know that there are tens of thousands of persons continually following habits which they know to be detrimental to health, and often, to say the least, of no benefit to character? Then Laokoon says: "But the Prohibitionists make the same mistake that our Puritan ancestors did in imagining that good habits and piety could be injected into a man's character by statute law, just as you would stuff a sausage."

That statement may be very profound, but it is pure assumption. How does this oracular writer (probably from Troy, N. Y.) know that the Prohibitionists imagin any such thing? Hav they ever said so? If so, where and when? Let him leave the dead languages a few minutes and giv us some literal quotations in plain English. We want something more substantial than this assumed power of mind-reading. I am not authorized to speak for the Prohibitionists, but I feel safe in saying that they will giv Laokoon $1,000 per word for all the genuin quotations from their utterances proving the truth of the above oracular assertion.

But the wildest statement of all was left for the last. The writer's mental confusion was there painfully apparent. He says: "The Prohibition movement and all other temperance efforts may clip off some of the outer branches of the upas-tree of drunkenness, but they do not giv one deadly blow at the roots." Now suppose the Prohibitionists should succeed in suppressing entirely the manufacture of intoxicating beverages, leaving out the question of producing substitutes, all persons would then necessarily be sober, would they not? Liquor produces drunkenness, and if you can cause liquor to become non-existent, it is hard to see how you can get much nearer the roots of drunkenness than that. I am not arguing that Prohibition can prevent the manufacture of the least quantity of liquor, but the aim of the Prohibitionists is the total suppression of the manufacture of intoxicating beverages; hence it is clearly wrong to say that the blow is not made at the roots, though the blow may be ineffectual. Think it over again, Trojan.

N. G. W.

A Jew Challenges a Christian.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Since the mere name of your journal indicates its aim and purpose, permit me to contribute my mite of truth for which you are seeking. No doubt you are aware of divers masks used by many not at the Liederkranz or Purim balls, but in the pulpits, a place where purity, truthfulness, and conscientiousness should reign supreme. Too often men of the cloth of all denominations are disguising themselvs according to circumstances. Still the wrong committed by these masqueraders could be overlooked, as they could be recognized by their respectiv origin, whether Jews or Christians. But the class of masqueraders I intend to dwell upon, which says, "We claim everything," belongs to neither Jew nor Christian, as they are Jewish converts to Christianity.

Especially is this applicable to the self-styled Rev. Freshman, who, exhibiting a pedigree of ex-rabbis way back to father Abraham, now claims to hav picked up Christ (at so much a week). This descendant of rabbis succeeded in securing a church in St. Mark's place. While the ground floor is devoted to a temporary waiting-room prior to leaving for heaven, the upper floors are fitted up as a permanent abode for the apostle Freshman and family. That he is a blessing in disguise no one will deny, for, while purifying the camp of Israel of its refuse at ten dollars a head, he is rendering valuable service to a certain class of Christians who, being fettered by chains of bigotry and fanaticism, not allowed to exercise their own reason, are willing to pay a little extra for a reserved seat in paradise procured from the speculator Freshman, who buys up the choicest seats years ahead. His next duty is to assure his duped customers that the train carrying passengers to paradise is under his personal supervision. An extra tip will secure passage on a lightning express without a stop direct to heaven—unlike the stingy unbelievers who are dragged in a slow freight train stopping at every station, especially at the one called Sheol, where they are indefinitly detained, and where invariably it is made too hot for them.

Now I, as a Jew, thankful for the pure monotheistic belief inherited by my ancestors (not ex-rabbis), am free to think and reason that before striving to reach the heavenly paradise, which, according to fanaticism, is a place provided with a elaborate menu of fish and meat served by angelic waiters, a man has first to avoid the sheol on earth by loving mercy and dealing justly in order to enjoy the earthly paradise where he is in duty bound to seek truth, expose deceit, ignorance, and misrepresentation monopolized by that ex-rabbi and Christian teacher, Freshman.

Though this worthy is exacting exorbitant prices for every word he utters—for every roll of his eye so many shekels are rolling down his pockets—I again am willing to pay for my present assertion. I am therefore ready to substantiate it with money, which talks, especially with Mr. Freshman. I therefore propose to challenge this latter-day saint for a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars to be devoted for a charitable purpose, paid by me if this modern St. Paul will be able to answer to the satisfaction of an arbitration two questions from the New Testament that I may propose.

My intention is by no means to slight Christianity; far from it, as anybody can be a good and true Christian even when ignorant of the entire Testament. My object is to prove (and pay for the privilege) how this "son of a rabbi" preaches Christianity of which he is entirely ignorant, and, therefore, is guilty of obtaining money under false pretenses, for which offense many of his high-toned Christian fellow-believers are now enjoying the hospitality of state prison, when not in Canada. As collateral for good faith I will not hypothecate prayer, exhortations, or promises à la Freshman.

Inclosed please find twenty-five dollars of the Uncle Sam denomination as security. The challenge to be open for ten days after date of publication. Whatever the amount will be agreed upon, it is to be deposited with you. One from each side with a representativ of THE TRUTH SEEKER to constitute the judges. If I lose, the money is to go toward the new refuge for converts. The same amount, if lost by the other side, to go to the Montefiore Home for Chronic Invalids. All the other arrangements are left to the option of my ignorant antagonist, Renegade Freshman. Respectfully yours, etc., A. BENJAMIN.

New York, Nov. 9, 1885.

Another Jew for Justice.

From the San Francisco Jewish Times.

The Hebrew Standard notices the petition printed by the New York TRUTH SEEKER, asking for a repeal of all laws exempting church property from taxation, and the abolishment of other laws which virtually make a union of church and state. The Standard warmly indorses the petition and so does the Jewish Times. We believe that every vestige of church and state should be eradicated from our laws. Let each sect stand upon its own merits, without any aid, directly or indirectly, from the states or national government.

A Western Editor's Opinion.

From the San Francisco Universe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is the ablest Agnostic journal in the United States. It is full of deeply interesting articles. Read it!

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - NOVEMBER 21, 1885.

Christian and Chinese Priests Pretty Much Alike.

Recently the San Francisco correspondent of the Sacramento Bee interviewed the Chinese secretary of the Six Companies which import coolies, and the latter's remarks let in considerable light upon John Chinaman. The Chinese, it seems, are very much like other people. They come to this country because "there are as many fools among the Chinese as among the Americans, and distant hills seem just as green to them." When the people of China hear of the high wages paid here, they become wild to get here; but the secretary said he did not know what would become of them if any more should be run in by way of British America, for the country now is full of unemployed Mongols.

As to Christianizing the Chinese, the secretary said it was absurd. They already "hav a good deal more of religion than is good for them, and are even more bigoted than the Christians," which, he remarked, is entirely unnecessary. It is true, he admitted, that the Chinese will attend Sunday-schools, but it is only that they may learn the English language, that they may get better wages. "You see," he said, "a Chinaman who understands English, and is conversaut with European modes of life can get more wages than an ignorant coolie, and why should he not be willing to be taught, when it does not cost anything, except a small libation to his particular god to placate his wrath at his servant for having associated with the 'foreign devils,' and taking part in their absurd religion."

The secretary thought it would be a good thing if the missionaries could convert his people, "not because I think it is any better than the religion of Buddha, or any other religion, for no one has been to the other side, and therefore no one knows who is right, but if the Chinese were Christians it would be the means of opening up a great field of labor in China." That is the way this heathen put it.

The superstition of the Chinese, according to him, is almost unlimited in its degrading depths. There are many good coal fields in China, and also many valuable mineral deposits, but the superstition of the people prevents them from being worked. The mountains in China are covered with graves, and should the dead be disturbed, there would be an insurrection, as the people believe that such an action would result in the damnation of the souls of their departed. Therefore, no matter how willing the government might be to allow these mines to be worked, they are not worked for fear of a rebellion.

The practical religious condition of China is similar to the condition of the United States, and the priests of the Flowery Kingdom very closely resemble those of our own land. "I tell you," he said to the correspondent, "China is a fearfully priestridden country. The priests are a lazy, selfish, good-for-nothing set, and the men do not take much stock in them, but they hav an awful strong hold on the minds of the women, and the wives there hav just as much influence as they hav here. The men don't care to hav any trouble, so they let them hav their own way."

If that isn't this country right over again, then we don't understand the status of religion hereabouts. Men who never go to church, or if they do only as an escort for the ladies, are the ones who support the churches. They are induced to do this through the influence of their wives and daughters. Returned missionaries inform the Sunday-schools before whom they usually talk, that women in China are of no account, being mere slaves to the men. But if the secretary of the Six Companies is correct, Chinese wives lord it over their husbands very much as do some American wives. This news is encouraging, in one way, but it is a pity their influence is not used for a better purpose than to support a lot of non-producing but all-consuming religious parasites. The same remark will also apply to the Christian wives of the United States.

Taking the two systems by and large, there seems to be but little to choose between the superstitions of the Orient and the Occident. The superior civilization of the latter is due to a sparser population, a climate calculated to keep men stirring, a country embracing all sorts of soil, with the additional advantage of comparativly recent settlement. China is in that period of decay which comes to all nations as to manhood.

Open the Museums on Sunday.

A determined effort is being made in this city to hav the American Museum of Natural History and the Metropolitan Museum of Art open their doors to the public on Sunday. The two forces at work for this object are the American Secular Union and the New York Herald. Last Sunday the Herald began the agitation by printing a page of opinions from eminent and representativ men favorable to the opening, and has since kept up the warfare. Previous to this the American Secular Union prepared a petition to the managers of the museums, and Mr. Putnam is pushing it vigorously. The following is a copy:

To MORRIS K. JESSUP, President; HUGH AUCHINCLOSS, Secretary; J. PIERPONT MORGAN, Treasurer; A. S. BICKMORE, and other trustees and managers of the American Museum of Natural History; and to JOHN TAYLOR JOHNSTON, President; L. P. DI CESNOLA, Secretary; H. G. MARQUAND, Treasurer, and other trustees and managers of the Metropolitan Museum of Art:

We, the undersigned citizens of New York, ask that the above-named institutions, under your care, be opened to the public on Sundays, free of charge, for the following reasons:

1. The city of New York, of which every citizen is a taxpayer, contributes largely to the support of these institutions; and as most of these citizens can visit them only on a general holiday, it is an injustice to these citizens that on the most generally observed of holidays the doors are shut in their faces.

2. By opening these institutions many people will be drawn to them, acquiring knowledge which will make them better citizens, thereby adding to the welfare of the community and the stability of the republic.

3. It is the custom of many cities to hav museums, public libraries, and institutions of like character open on Sunday, and we submit that New York should not be backward in a movement that conduces to municipal prosperity, individual education, and public morality.

And for many other reasons that will readily suggest themselvs to you.

The Herald printed the petition last Monday, and the Star of this city indorses it by saying:

"The American Secular Union (Samuel P. Putnam, secretary) is circulating a petition addressed to the trustees and managers of the American Museum of Natural History and the Metropolitan Museum of Art, asking that these institutions be opened to the public on Sundays free of charge. The petitioners assign excellent reasons for their request, not the least cogent among which is the fact that the institutions are largely supported by the city of New York, while, owing to the present policy of the management, the taxpayers, from whom these contributions come, are denied admission to the museums on the only days when many of them could visit them."

It is hoped and expected that the other great dailies will lend their aid. The managers of the institutions will then see that the demand is universal among New Yorkers, and be forced to yield to public opinion. We hope every Freethinker in the city will send for a few blank petitions and obtain signatures.

Nineteenth Century Barbarism.

The following paragraph was not scratched in hieroglyphic characters on baked mud by a Jewish barbarian after he had slaughtered a drove of sheep and spattered their blood on the doorway of his rude house, or slain his daughter as he had vowed to his savage deity that he would do, but by a foremost "divine" of New York, a chancellor of a great university, a "civilized" Christian of the nineteenth century—Howard Crosby, LL.D. It is all about Dr. Trumbull's book on "Blood Covenants:"

"In this book on the use of blood to denote union of life, Dr. Trumbull has brought out into clear light the habits of nations most diverse in character, situation, and age. He shows that the blood was reckoned as the principle of life, and that hence participation in another's blood was the appropriation of his life. The insertion of another's blood into the veins, the drinking of another's blood, the sprinkling with another's blood, are all shown to be in accordance with this root idea. Although this thought is not new, yet Dr. Trumbull has clothed it with new interest and force by the vast number of illustrations which he has laboriously brought forward, and has insisted on a prominence for the thought which heretofore has not been given it. No one can read his attractiv pages without being convinced that his position is just, and that this notion of life union was prominently connected with all blood-ratified treaties and covenants. That this idea is found in the atonement by the blood of the Lamb of God is undoubtedly true, and yet we fear Dr. Trumbull has made a mistake in not expressing the other and still higher blood-idea connected with that atonement. In the expiatory offering of the Lamb of God there is not only a union formed, but also sin punished, and, while the drinking Christ's blood (John vi, 54) is certainly union with his life, the shedding Christ's blood is just as certainly the punishment of sin. Here the blood is not life, but death. That is, here is not the *in*fusion of blood, but the *ef*fusion of blood. Life is taken away, and not given. The sacrificial system which God enjoined represented both ideas—the pouring out of the blood for sin, and the participation in the blood for the union of life; and the former was necessary to the latter. Without the shedding of blood there was no remission."

The American Board of Missions should appropriate at least a million dollars to civilize Howard Crosby. And a few dollars might be advantageously spent on Dr. Trumbull.

Good Advice.

Without asserting that the United States Constitution is, or ever has been, a faultless document, THE TRUTH SEEKER maintains that as a code of laws it comes nearer perfection than any other chart of governmental instructions that the world has ever seen. And, furthermore, let us say that no clause in that instrument is more worthy of public attention and strict obedience on the part of all our citizens than the clause in it which ordains (we are grieved to add, as yet ineffectually) that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or forbidding the free exercise thereof." Such being our opinion, we are glad to reprint the following selections from a late address of the Evangelical Alliance to the Protestants of the state of New York:

"THE FREEDOM OF WORSHIP BILL.

"Those of us who hav watched the progress of this contest and taken part in it discovered that the portion of the press controled by the Jesuits with great unanimity declared the bill to be dead, and we suspected that the object of this apparently meek and unanimous submission was to throw us off our guard while they continued to wage the battle. Our suspicions were well grounded.

"The legislature of 1885 is dead, and so is the infamous so-called Freedom of Worship bill. And one more effort of Jesuitism to destroy our unsectarian institutions is thwarted. But we would express the conviction, in closing this report, that the Protestantism and the thoughtful citizenship of the state of New York will deserve to be brought into subjection to the papal power if they shall supinely wait until this battle is again upon us, while the sleepless enemies of civil and religious liberty carry on a continuous and aggressiv warfare.

"We ask all loyal citizens to aid in this movement for the eternal separation of church and state, regardless of party affiliations. This is a good year for thoughtful men to vote for members of the legislature upon conviction, and not upon party prejudice. The principle we present for your consideration is the chief one now demanding the conscientious consideration of high-minded citizens of the state.

"We appeal to you, the sovereigns, to make your representativs understand that they are servants, not masters."

This is sound doctrin and good advice to all Protestants. Under the right of private judgment a credal Christian church, capable of coping with the papacy, never has been, and never can be, established. England, with all its wealth and power most unscrupulously used, has not in three centuries been able to institute a uniformity of belief in its section of the British Isles, while it has miserably failed to establish its state religion in Scotland and Ireland. To suppose that, on equal terms, using the weapons of intolerance and persecution, the broken and bickering Protestant churches can vanquish their compact and united opponent, the papacy, is the quintessence of folly, and therefore THE TRUTH SEEKER recognizes the wisdom of the Evangelical Alliance because in proposing a new line of operations it virtually counsels its coreligionists that the use of those weapons must now by them be abandoned.

But there is a way in which Catholicism can be met, and in which it can be conquered here and in Europe. The Church of Rome may be compared with those gigantic fern-trees which in an earlier age covered the earth. Like them it has thrived in the miasmatic mists of bigotry and superstition, and, like them, it will cease to flourish when the sun of science illumins the world, and the pure air of freedom permeates the nations. The deadly animosity with which it opposes our public school system proves that it knows its true enemy is the enlightenment of the peoples. When to that is added the purified atmosphere of (shall we say) "spiritual" liberty ordained for all our people in the United States Constitution, its power will soon rapidly decline, and its baleful existence here be terminated.

Spending Next Year's Cash.

The Board of Estimate and Apportionment of this city hav made provisions for the running expenses of the town for next year. Among the amounts appropriated are the following, taken from the City Record, the official paper, of November 12th:

ASYLUMS, REFORMATORIES, AND CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

New York Asylum for Idiots: (Chapter 739, Laws of 1867.) For furnishing clothing for forty inmates, - - - - - -	$980.00
Arrearages of 1884, - - - -	88.00
		$1,068.00
American Female Guardian Society, (Sections 194, 210, and 1066, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.)		25,000.00
Children's Aid Society, - - - (Section 194, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.)		70,000.00
The Childrdn's Fold of the City of New York: (Section 194, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.) Estimated average number of children, 180, at $2 per week		16,640.00
Foundling Asylum of the Sisters of Charity: (Section 194, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.) Estimated average number of children, 1,657, at 38 cents per day each, - - - - - -	$229,825.90
Estimated average number of homeless or needy mothers nursing their own infants, 93, or $18 per month each, - - -	20,088.00
		249,913.90
Hebrew Benevolent Society of the City of New York: (Section 194, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.) Estimated average number of inmates, 545, at $110 per annum each. say - - - - - -		60,000.00
Hudson River State Hospital: (Chapter 446, Laws of 1874.) Estimated average number of inmates, 26, at $4 50 per week, say		6,300.00
Institution for Improved Instruction of Deaf Mutes (Protestant.) (Chapter 725, Laws of 1867.) (Chapter 180, Laws of 1870.) (Chapter 213, Laws of 1875.) For education and support of 50 county pupils, at $300 each -	$15,000.00
For clothing 25 state pupils, at $30 each, - - - - - -	750.00
		15,750.00
New York Institution for the Blind: (Section 194, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.) For clothing 175 pupils, at $50 each, estimated, - - -		8,750.00
New York Catholic Protectory: (Section 194, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.) Estimated average number of inmates, 2.200, at $110 per annum each, - - - - -		242,000.00
Le Couteulx St. Mary's Institution for the Improved Instruction of Deaf Mutes: (Chapter 548, Laws of 1871.) For clothing one state pupil, -		30.00
New York Infant Asylum: (Section 194, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882) Estimated average number of children, 325, at 38 cents per day each, - - - - - -	$45,077.50
Estimated number of obstetrical cases, 21, at $25 each per month,	6,300.00
Estimated number of homeless and needy mothers nursing their own infants, 112, at $18 per month each, - - - - -	24,192.00
		75,569.50
New York Infirmary for Women and Children: (Section 194 New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.) Estimated number of obstetrical cases, 145, at $25 each, say, -	3,635.00
Estimated average number of homeless and needy mothers nursing their own infants, 4, at $18 per month each, say, - -	865.00
		4,500.00
New York Institute for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb: (Chapter 325, Laws of 1863.) (Chapter 386, Laws of 1864.) (Chapter 725, Laws of 1867.) (Chapter 253, Laws of 1874.) (Chapter 213, Laws of 1875.) For furnishing clothing for 184 state pupils, by order of the Superintendent of public Instruction, at $30 each, - - -	$5,520.00
For education and support of 36 county pupils, $300 each - -	10,800.00
		16,320.00
New York Juvenile Asylum: (Section 194, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.) Estimated average number of inmates, 950, at $110 per annum each, - - - - - -		104,500.00
Magdalen Female Benevolent Asylum and Home for Fallen Women: (Section 194, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.) Estimated average number of inmates, 10, at $110 per annum each, - - - - - -		1,100.00
New York Society for the Relief of the Ruptured and Crippled: (Section 194, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.) Estimated average number of inmates, 170, at $150 per annum each, - - - - - -		$25,500.00
New York State Lunatic Asylum: (Chapter 447, Laws of 1874, Title 3, Section 31.) Estimated average number of inmates, 5, at $240 per annum each, - - - - - -	$1,200.00
Deficiency of 1884, - - -	325.50
		1,525.50
Protestant Episcopal House of Mercy: (Section 194, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.) Estimated average number of inmates, 20, at $110 per annum each, - - - - - -		2,200.00
Nursery and Child's Hospital: (Section 104, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.) Estimated average number of children, 620, at $10 per month each, say, - - - - - -	$74,500.00
Estimated number of lying-in women, 134, at $5 per week, each, say, - - - - - - - -	35,500.00
		110,000.00
Roman Catholic House of the Good Shepherd: (Section 194, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.) Estimated average number of inmates, 54, at $110 per annum each, say, - - - - - -		6,000.00
St. Joseph's Institution for the Improved Instruction of Deaf Mutes: (Chapter 213, Laws of 1875.) (Chapter 378, Laws of 1877.) For education and support of 60 county pupils, at $300 each per annum, - - - - - -	$18,000.00
For clothing of 61 state pupils, at $30 each, - - - - - -	1,830.00
		19,830.00
State Asylum for Insane Criminals at Auburn: (Chapter 446, Title 1, Article 2, Section 22, Laws of 1874.) (Chapter 574, Laws of 1875.) Estimated average number of inmates, 7, at $208 each per annum	$1,456.00
Clothing, $25 each, - - -	175.00
		1,631,00
The Shepherd's Fold of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the state of New York: - - - - - (Section 194, New York Consolidation Act of 1882.)		5,000.00
State Homeopathic Asylum for the Insane: (Chapter 446, Laws of 1874: Estimated average number of inmates, 11, at $3.75 per week each	$2,145.00
For clothing and other expenses, $30 each, - - - - - -	330.00
		2,475.00
Five Points House of Industry: (Section 194, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882.) Number of inmates, 200, at $52 each per annum, - - -		10,400.00
Association for Befriending Children and Young Girls: (Section 194, New York City Consolidation Act of 1882) Estimated number of inmates, 230, at $1 per week each, say, - -		$12,000.00
		$1,094,002.90

Some of the above-named societies are worthy institutions, though unconstitutionally Christian in their character and management; but the most of the nearly eleven hundred thousand dollars goes as subsidies to sectarian institutions over which the state has no control, they being managed by churches. Under secular names, and ostensibly for humanitarian purposes, the various sects are consuming an enormous amount of the people's money. The bulk is consumed by the Roman Catholics. The Foundling Asylum of the "Sisters of Charity" gets a quarter of a million—the New York Catholic Protectory nearly as much more. In both of these institutions the city is paying more for the support of children committed to them than it would cost in houses managed by the city; and, in addition, is paying to hav them educated in a religion which not only does not possess the negativ virtue of restraining from crime, but does possess the positiv vice of having been the perpetrator of more cruelty and crime than any other on the face of the earth.

It needs no words to Freethinkers to show the evil in the principle of the state subsidizing private institutions. We hope, however, that the foregoing figures may open the eyes of a few Protestants to the wrong they are doing in permitting public money to be thus used.

FIFTY-FIVE of the aged sailors who hav got their anchors down in the Snug Harbor at New Brighton, Staten Island, hav signed the petition to the legislature for repealing the laws subsidizing the church. This is a large proportion of the entire population of the Harbor.

Editorial Notes.

THE petition copied by us from the Banner of Light asking for the repeal of the medical registration law should be held by those obtaining signatures until instructions are given through the Banner of Light where to send them. We made an error in saying they should be sent to our Spiritual contemporary.

THE Advocate and Independent agree, touching the case of Pastor Downs, of Boston, that pending the settlement of charges of adultery against ministers of the gospel they should refrain from preaching. THE TRUTH SEEKER would gladly join the syndicate of newspapers to agitate that question, only the affair looks like a conspiracy to empty most of the Christian pulpits of our favored land.

PIOUS EDITOR STEAD, of the Pall Mall Gazette, has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment. His accomplice in the abduction and maltreatment of the girl Armstrong, Mrs. Rebecca Jarret, received a sentence of six months' imprisonment. As Mrs. Jarrett was removed from the court she became hysterical, and screamed out, "Thank God, you can't keep Christ out of the prisoner!" This Stead and his accomplices are an ornamental lot of Christians.

READING, Pa., has a "Home for Widows and Single Women." It is proposed to hold a fair for its benefit, on December 1st. Everybody in Reading has been asked by the managers to help the institution by making the fair remunerativ. There is quite a large Hebrew population in Reading, and they undertook to make the fair a success by buying a solid silver tea service worth $500 to be disposed of in a lottery at the fair. While the Hebrew committee was out about the town pressing the claims of the home they learned something to dampen their enthusiasm. By the terms of the charter of the home, no Israelites, Catholics, or Universalists can ever become inmates. Although the Hebrews never expected that one of their religion would need the charity of the home, they thought that such a strict sectarianism should hardly ask for the money of those debarred from receiving its hospitalities, and accordingly they returned what money they had collected, and will let the fair depend for its success on the Christians. If it shall teach the followers of the meek and lowly one to be a little broader in their work, the lesson will not be without its worth.

THE "Life of William Lloyd Garrison" is now being published by his children. Two volumes are out, in one of which appears the following account of Mr. Garison's first public appearance in Boston. During the first night after his arrival in Boston Mr. Wm. Lloyd Garrison vainly endeavored to procure, without cost, a place in which to deliver his lectures, and he finally sent this advertisment to the Courier:

"WANTED: For this evening, a hall or meeting-house (the latter preferred) in which to vindicate the rights of two millions of American citizens who are groaning in servile chains in this boasted land of liberty; and also to propose just, benevolent, and Constitutional measures for their relief. As the addresses will be gratuitous, and as the cause is of public benefit, I cannot consent to remunerate any society for the use of its building. If this application fails, I propose to address the citizens of Boston in the open air or on the common. WM. LLOYD GARRISON.

"No. 30 Federal street, Oct. 11, 1830."

This appeal was quickly answered, but not by any of the Christian ministers or churches of Boston. It was left for a society of avowed "Infidels" to save the city from the shame of sealing all its doors against the slave's advocate, and to offer him their hall for his three lectures, although as a body, and individually, they had no personal acquaintance with him. Two days latter the papers announced that Mr. Garrison would deliver his first lecture on Friday evening, October 15th, in Julian Hall at the northwest corner of Milk and Congress streets. Julian Hall was the one occupied by Abner Kneeland. There, says Mr. Seaver, he held his meetings, and there, in an Infidel hall, when no Christian church of any kind would open its door to Mr. Garrison, he delivered his first antislavery lecture in Boston. His exclusion by ministers, adds Mr. Seaver, though bigoted, was characteristic, for they are never found in the front rank of any reform, but when it becomes popular, they claim to hav been the authors of it! All ministers are great friends of Mr. Garrison now!

Lectures and Meetings.

S. P. PUTNAM will lecture next Sunday (the 22d) at Vineland, N. J.

THE N. D. C. has established a free reading-room at 718 Washington street, Boston, open from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. except Sundays. A large number of journals are upon the tables, the use of which is freely tendered to the public. J. A. Bliss is the moving spirit in the enterprise.

E. C. WALKER lectured at Burlington, Iowa, Nov. 11th. During the remainder of this month and the first part of December he desires engagements in western Iowa and northern Missouri, while the rest of the winter and the early spring he wishes to spend in southern Missouri. Arkansas, and Texas. For terms, dates, etc., address him at Valley Falls, Kan.

W. F. JAMIESON, at the conclusion of his second course of lectures in Savannah, Mo., gave three lectures in Leon, Iowa. He is now on his way to Kansas; has engaged to debate four nights in Savannah, Mo., with Elder J. W. Damon, Nov. 17th, 18th, 19th, and 20th, and will lecture in Morrill, Kan., Nov. 24th, 25th, and 26th. Address him at the latter named place.

THE Spiritualists and Liberalists State Association of Michigan held their semi-annual meeting at Saranac on Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 1st and Nov. 1st. J. H. Burnham, Mrs. H. S. Lake, Bishop Beals, and M. Babcock were the speakers. Also good readings and recitations by others. Music by Professor Beals and the Misses Shaw. Notwithstanding the bad weather the meeting was voted a success.

THE Dunn Co. (Wis.) News, referring to the course of lectures recently delivered in Menomonie by J. E. Remsburg, says: "Mr. Remsburg is a logical and convincing speaker, and the lectures were scholarly productions of unusual merit. His lecture on 'Sabbath-Breaking,' in particular, was an able effort, and pronounced by competent judges to be a most thorough and exhaustiv review of the Sunday question."

Letters from Friends.

STEUBENVILLE, O., Oct. 29, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I want to say a few words in regard to our Convention at Cleveland. It was mentioned or recommended in the secretary's report, I think, that annual members should be eligible as delegates, and the price of life membership should be reduced to $12.00. Neither of the propositions was acted upon to my recollection. I think they both should hav been. Situated as I am where there is no League, and scarcely another outspoken Infidel, as an annual member I should be a mere cipher without any representation, and no voice in a convention. I hope the executiv committee, if they hav the power, will adopt both suggestions at once.

Another thing which I think would add to the attendance and the interest of the conventions would be to giv all annual members a voice on all questions to be decided there. They feel as much interest as any who hav the advantage of living where a League can be formed. And they feel very flat attending a convention where they hav no more to say or do than a disinterested Christian. I know I had that feeling myself at Cleveland, though there was not one there more interested than myself. For full fifty years I hav been looking forward to the day when Freethinkers would be organized as solid as the churches, for, until they are, they can never expect to battle with error and superstition on equal terms; so I hope in future conventions all members of the Secular Union will be called, and hav a voice in the Convention. I believe the attendence would be five times as large. It might do for the different Leagues to send delegates, either their officers or others, and they might hav the first right to sit on the different committees, with a few earnest annual members added to their number. I should like to hear the views of others on this matter, and if there is no serious obstacle, I hope to see the plan adopted for future conventions.

I subscribed on the paper carried round at the Convention four dollars, which I inclose in a postal note, though I see in the list published in THE TRUTH SEEKER you credit it to James Downes, which is not my name. I will send a dollar for annual membership before long. I would like a few Truth Seeker Tracts for that purpose to distribute myself, to do what I can for the only cause that will eventually emancipate mankind from the power of the priests. JOHN DOWNES.

NEW YORK, Oct. 26, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: George Wilson, of Lexington, Mo., in THE TRUTH SEEKER of October 3d, draws comparisons between the former chattel slavery of the Southern states and the wage slavery of the Northern states at the present day, and alludes to their relation to licentiousness and the consequences accruing therefrom. He is much shocked at the stifling of children in embryo or drowning them immediately after birth, which he claims is the custom at the North, and this is a fact no one will deny. But, to our mind, under the present condition of the wage slave, this is the best part of the whole business, and there is a maudlinness connected with Mr. Wilson's sympathy indicating he was not born to poverty. Bless your honest heart, Mr. Wilson, no one but the politician, the banker, the priest, the lawyer, or an idiot (those classes who prey upon society) claims the wage-slave of the North is as well-conditioned as the former chattel slave of the South. Would the negro hav lived on the first floor from the top of a six-story house, which, when on fire (if it did not tumble down before the first catastrophe), he would hav his choice—fall back in the flames or jump on the pavements? Could you hav shut him up in a cotton mill with a thousand of his fellows where he couldn't see from dust or hear from noise? Was he frozen to death in winter from cold, or suffocated in summer from heat and bad air?

He might occasionally change masters, sometimes for the worse, oftener for the better. This change must hav been pleasing to his fickle nature, but he never knew the meaning of the word eviction—a word which makes strong men tremble and mothers clasp their babes in New York. In sickness he was not sent to the dispensary to be experimented upon. When out of work he was fed like a surface-car horse; in this particular the horse of the North is protected. The workman has no such protection. "If I had time I would like to write a book under the title, 'The Epitaph of African Slavery in the United States,'" you say. Well, we trust you will not write a book about the debris of the past. Grant's book ought to suffice for this generation; but if you can get time to write about the present condition of the ninety and nine hewers of wood to the one that neither toils nor spins I will be pleased to read it. Thousands of children are taken from poor parents in New York, their names changed so that brother and sister lose their identity, and sent West. Under this system there must occur intermarriages of brothers and sisters in the future. Does this shock your feelings? What sustains the masses in enduring this inhumanity? Superstition—the story of Dives and Lazarus, when they in their turn can gloat over suffering. In our intercourse with the suffering poor of New York and New England (and we are one of them) we can cite individual cases, the outgrowth of poverty, which is the outgrowth of the church and capital combined, that would sink to the shades the most vivid descriptions of "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

In conclusion, let us drop the past, and turn our attention to the cause of poverty, and remove the cause. Until then the mother that stifles her child confers a blessing on her offspring. GEO. M. DAVENPORT.

VINELAND, N. J., Nov. 1. 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The Freethinkers' Magazine for September, on 233d page, givs the title of my book, "History of Woman's Costume Reform;" says it is what the title implies, and in "spelling reform style;" describes no further, but givs a column of confessions of lack of strength to welcome me to conventions in "short dress," which is termed "gorgeous," speaking as if I attended solely to be heard on dress, and sought conspicuous place, both implications unfounded. I am as anxious for the Secular cause as for the sanitary touching failing humanity. My respectful, rectifying reply, about a column in length, was declined, avowedly for exceeding about a dozen lines. I sent stamp for its return, and waste basket had lost it. The usefulness of a book or its author depends, not on an individual opinion; but to show that I adhere to defense of truth and right is worth these few lines, and their space in a fair paper. M. E. TILLOTSON.

TORONTO, CAN, Oct. 29, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed is a letter that largely speaks for Freethought in Canada. There are thousands of Freethinkers with money and social position here who would gladly see the old theologies replaced by scientific and intelligent Freethought, but who are afraid to come boldly out to fight its battles. You will see by the inclosed letter that there are numbers of others, too limited in their incomes to provide the sinews of war, but who possess the right material to secure the progress of humanity in its religious phases as well as in all other things.

Feeling myself convinced of this, I see but two ways of effectivly reaching this advanced but somewhat cowardly constituency. 1. By well-paid and efficiently-educated lecturers; these would draw out the moneyed class of Freethinkers, whilst (2) the Tent of Brother Reynolds would certainly hive the multitude, and thus would the gospel of truth reach in an effectual manner old and young, the moneyed and moneyless multitude. Yours fraternally, J. ICK EVANS.

THE INCLOSED LETTER.

"ST. CATHERINE'S, ONT., Oct. 23, 1885.

"J. ICK EVANS, Dear Sir: We would like some Liberal lectures delivered here, but cannot secure a proper hall, short of the Academy of Music, the rent of which is too much for the size of our purses. The most of our citizens are fearful of Infidel lecturers, and do all they can to thwart our having any. We do not propose to be compelled by them to take an ordinary hall to be sneered at afterwards, therefore we hav had none as yet. We are on the watch to secure a fit and proper place for holding such lectures, and when we do we shall collect our forces, although small, and giv them battle. I wish Reynolds would pitch his tent here for three or four weeks.

"I am much obliged to you for informing us of the opportunity of securing so able a lecturer as Mrs. Krekel.

"Yours fraternally, C. B. THOMPSON."

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Nov. 7, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Looking over the columns of your ever-interesting paper this week, I am much pleased with the report given of the Charter Celebration of Friendship Liberal League of Philadelphia.

Permit me to say a word of how the work continues among us in this vicinity. On Sunday last, the 1st instant, we had with us Charles Watts, vice-president of the American Secular Union, upon which occasion the League thought fit to secure a larger hall than we had heretofore been accustomed to hold lectures in, and notwithstanding the fact that the hall was much larger, on Sunday evening many who sought admission could not find standing-room within its walls; and to accommodate those who were disappointed on Sunday, as well as to giv an opportunity to those who were seeking more light upon the subject of Secularism, Mr. Watts was prevailed upon to remain with us and deliver on Monday night his great lecture, entitled "Secularism, Constructiv and Destructiv," which, with the admission fee at the door, and Mr. Watts's logic and eloquence upon the platform, proved both a financial success and an intellectual treat.

On Sunday next we shall hav with us Professor Atkinson, of this city, who will deliver a lecture on the subject of "Evolution," illustrated by the aid of the stereoscope, which lecture will be the second in a course to be delivered before the League this fall and winter by the same gentleman. Professor Atkinson is a thorough gentleman, scholar, and scientist, and his lectures will add greatly to the interest of Liberalism in this community. We hope soon to hav Mr. Putnam and other laborers in the field with us who hav done us good service in the past, as well as some of those bright stars revolving in the intellectual firmament of Liberalism whose glory as yet we hav never seen. And now, before I close, I ought to say that the principal success of our lectures in the past is due to the untiring efforts of our faithful secretary, Geo. Longford, whose only compensation has been the satisfaction to know and feel his labors hav been rewarded in the advancement of our cause.

May the success which attends us here be the experience of every League throughout the Union is the earnest desire of your humble correspondent, W. SEYMOUR,
President Pennsylvania State Liberal League.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., Oct. 17, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I will write a few lines on my own thoughts in regard to religion and its bearing on things in this world. I hav lived in this world fifty-nine years. During this time I hav been under Christianity and its teachings until about one year ago. I hav attended church a great many times on Sunday. With all the teachings that an honest mind was capable of receiving, I must conclude I cannot receive them as what they are represented to be. If the churches and their teachings are so powerless to convert the people, do they not show their utter inability to meet the demands of the people of this world or in the future? I think I am speaking the truth when I say that the churches do not add to their numbers, the Catholic church excepted, more than from six to ten members annually each. This is a drop in the bucket compared to the number of children born in the world. I think when I compare this religion to the teachings of Secularism, the latter is far more powerful to meet the wants of the people, as we shall demonstrate to the people of Grand Rapids when Mr. Remsburg comes next week. I will venture to say that the hall will be filled to overflowing with real live, earnest truth seekers that must eventually fill the world with higher and loftier ideas than all the religions of the world afford to-day. The church has had me within its grasp ever since I was born, and earnestly did I seek its Christianizing influences from every source, and I stand as an honest man to-day—at least, so far as church people are concerned. They hav, all that know me, given me their assurance I am an honest man. But they cannot accept me as a Christian. Therefore I cannot accept them as representativs of true Christianity, as Christ said, "Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven." All these beautiful, love-inspiring sentences, from whatever source they hav come, I shall forever hold dear to my heart, as the essential knowledge to be gained for the good of the people of this world and for that which is to come. If an honest and just God does condemn me for these honest convictions, I must be condemned. At the same time I will remain the friend of the people of this world, regardless of all others. CHARLES SACH.

NAPA CITY, CAL., Oct. 3, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I take this opportunity to congratulate you on the excellent management of the grand old TRUTH SEEKER. I had not had the pleasure of perusing it for about three months previous to the one I received of date September 19th, which I find fully up to the old mark, or, if any different, a little better than of yore. Napa Valley is one of the finest agricultural valleys in this state. It is largely devoted to fruit, especially grapes, of which it has some of the finest vinyards in the state, and it is claimed that the wine product is equal in richness and flavor to the best product of the world.
FRED. ROBINSON.

PASSAIC, N. J., Oct. 11, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: ANNUAL to hand. Thanks. I am pleased with it.

I hav watched your paper closely now for over twelve months, and although you call your paper "Liberal," and endeavor to collect all under your banner but dogmatic Christians, I think no man who reads your paper appreciativly is anything else than a Freethinker. No other name will do for your readers, and you must not hav any political aims or ends in view to induce any but genuin Freethinkers to join your Liberalism. Better leave the word out; be destructiv Infidels, you hav work enough to do. The work of destruction is the work of construction. It can't be otherwise. No man would ever become Infidel until he believes by comparison it is better. You will never make people understand what you mean by Liberalism. You are always writing it. Freethought would be implied at a glance. The Sun's ridicule is bosh. I hate—oh, I fear—Christianity! There may be martyrdom yet. I'll glory in it, but I won't turn t'other cheek.

Sincerely yours, T. D. HATFIELD.

HORNITAS, CAL., Oct. 14, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $10 to be applied as follows: $5 to League Fund, $4 to Tent, and one to Bruno statue. I hope Mr. Reynolds will be kept at work during the winter, and take to the Tent when spring opens. Our town is small, with a mixed population; at least three-fourths of the males are Freethinkers. We hav but one church here (Catholic), which is supported by women and children principally. We hav our own Jesus Christ or agent of God here. I hav known him for over thirty years; am on friendly terms with him, therefore I feel perfectly safe as to the hereafter. Please send me "Bible Myths" and charge to my account. Of the few subscribers that I hav procured for you, two hav died recently. I will try and replace their names with others this winter. With best wishes for the cause, I remain

Fraternally yours, RALPH W. BARCROFT.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 11, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I could not refrain from writing to say that I heartily indorse the sentiments as expressed by J. D Jeffers in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Sept. 26th upon the subject of Prohibition.

I fail to see how any who think they hav been able by the light of Freethought to extricate themselvs from the vise-like grasp of fanaticism can look upon that subject in any other light, for the wolfish tail of orthodoxy can be plainly seen hanging below the sheepskin garment of Prohibition.

Some Freethinkers seem to hav an idea that in order to be consistent Freethinkers it is necessary to embrace all the isms of the day. We must be Greenbackers or hard-money men, free-traders or go in for high tariff; we must be Spiritualists, Socialists, Prohibitionists—in fact, any other ism that any half-crazy fanatic may try to force upon us. The latest craze advanced is that it is not even necessary to be respectable. Says one: "When any body of men become respectable they are doomed and damned." Great gods, how we suffer! I believe that a person can help the cause of temperance without working with the church and God-in-the-Constitution party in favor of prohibition. I claim that intemperance, with all of its attendant horrors, is not half as bad as the slavish exactments and intolerance of the church or any other superstitious and fanatical society. L. L. NORTHUP, Materialist.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Nov. 10, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Some time ago a young man came to me asking for aid. He had been selected for leader at a Saturday night Bible-reading, and was unprepared. I wrote him the following, and, to my surprise, he read it to a class of twenty, without anyone catching on. How is that for Bible students?

Yours, E. M. DEWEY.

"THE AID OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

"'Howbeit when he the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth, for he shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear that shall he speak, and he will show you things to come' (John, xvi, 3).

"These words were spoken by Christ to his disciples just prior to his final departure for home. No meaning was conveyed by them, however, until they were explained in plainer language, and they were never verified. The Holy Ghost never spoke of things seen or heard, and things to come were never shown by him. As an aid, therefore, I turn to other passages of scripture and ask your attention meanwhile. We find by reference to Mat. i, 18–20, that the Holy Spirit was an aid (strongly so) to Jesus in his advent into the world, and without such aid his miraculous advent could not hav been accomplished. As this is the first mention of the Holy Spirit, great stress should be laid upon the manner of his introduction to the world, and his abilities as an aid in such cases fully recognized.

"In the third chapter, eleventh verse, he is found as an aid in baptism, evidently used as fire-proof material, for to quote the words, 'he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire.' As an aid to the childless, we refer to the case of Elizabeth, found in the first chapter of Luke. As an aid in training doves, we hav only to look to Luke iii, 22, to find a very successful account of homing pigeons: 'The Holy Ghost descended in the form of a dove.' The time of descent is not given, thus establishing no record, but that an impetus was given to this sport by the aid of the Holy Ghost no one will deny.

"As an aid to priests, no one can calculate his worth. They hav both cheated and robbed the millions that hav peopled the earth through ignorance and superstition, cheated of their right to liv free and untrammeled lives, and robbed of their reason through the implanting of fear.

"Constantine the Great was aided by him, through his comforting assurance, to murder his wife and different members of his family. The aid of the Holy Spirit to the Inquisition can never be computed and should never be forgotten. Without its aid, Galileo, though an old man of seventy years, might hav benefited the world more than he did, and Bruno, instead of feeding the flames in Rome for the amusement of priests, might hav died teaching the whole world. John Calvin, too, might hav allowed Servetus to differ with him on the point of infant damnation, but with the aid of the Holy Spirit he burnt him at the stake.

"Much more might be said, but time forbids. Search well your Bibles, study history, learn what is meant by every mythical term used, and you will no longer need the aid of any spirit save that one that should dwell with us all—the spirit of humanity."

SNOWVILLE, VA., Nov. 1, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The more I write the more I notice how differently words sound to others from what you mean them to. I did not at all intend to hint that Mrs. Scovell purposely gleaned my character from my letters. I only said it seemed so to me. It seemed more in unison with what I understand of nature and her laws that some thought or mode of expression in my letter convinced her, in spite of herself, that I was really honest and earnest in my search for truth and fact. We hardly realize how we get our ideas and opinions. Some come upon us like inspiration, and others we mine out by slow and laborious study.

As to slate-writing, I said I was puzzled by one experience as to how it was done. But it was one of Truesdell's own efforts that he did not explain. It was done on my tied-up slates. He held them under the table. Only a word or two were written, and those poorly done and near the edge of the slate. Probably he forced a thin pencil between the frames, and did it in that way. I saw only one slate-writing before I got to Truesdell's, and that was done by a pupil of his, Joe Caffray. Truesdell had explained how Joe would do the trick, so I was forewarned. I marked my slates on the frames, and the ones that had the messages on were not marked. So, of course, Joe had changed the slates.

As to my using Quaker language, I use "thee" and "thy" and "thine" to designate a single person, "you," "your," and "yours" being plural and meaning more than one. I know that Quakers use them ungrammatically, but they all use it alike, and precisely as I do, while in Ann Lee's letter, as well as others from spirits(?), they are mismatched. In Ann's letter she says "thee hast," while it should be "thee has," or "thou hast." She says "thee wouldst," while a Quaker would say "thou wouldst," or "thee would." I write Quaker style from habit, and because it seems to bring one nearer to a friend or correspondent. There is no religion in it, only old-time associations—the love of father, mother, brothers, sisters, and other relativs, all of whom used and loved it. I think Sallie will now understand how this is.

I hav no objection to being "talked at." I rather like it. Only I don't want to be misunderstood, hence the explanation. If I see no proof of spirits, I am none the less ready to do full justice to those who think they do see it. But if I can find natural causes for what is, I am bound to do so. Therefore I felt it only right to say that, to my mind, Mrs. Sovell's opinion was gleaned from my letters, and not from spirits. That she believes differently I willingly concede; but as to which is right, each reader must decide for himself till indubitable proof settles it for us all. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

As some of my Spiritualistic opponents, failing to produce the effect they anticipated by argument, hav now turned to vituperation and attacks upon my personal character, and hav taken the advantage of type errors and standing notices in a few old advertisments, containing appeals for Tuttle and Broom, as well as dead papers, to say I am using these as a means of collecting money for my own use, I will hereby say that, being perfectly honest myself, I had never imagined any such misconstruction being put upon the errors or the "ads." I simply let them stand so as to save trouble for printers, who always dislike corrections and amendments. My friends all know Tuttle and Broom are dead, and they also know how difficult it is to hav "ads" changed, and that they may run on for a year unaltered. I will merely say that I receive no personal income from names of dead men or dead papers. I own all books I sell, and substitute double the number of other papers for all dead ones called for, and often five times as many. If any friend has ever ordered a book or paper and not received full value of money sent, the fault has been in the mails. I am always too glad to send out our truths.

Affectionately, ELMINA.

CLEAR LAKE, D. T., Oct. 25, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: You will please send my TRUTH SEEKER to Liberal, Mo., instead of Clear Lake, Dak. Although the bigots of the church hav tried their best to slander the people and lie about the town, it has now better prospects than ever before. I hav bought the National Hotel of Mr. Walser, and shall be glad to welcome all Freethinkers that will want to see the town, and convince themselvs, as I did, that the town and its institutions are an honor to the people of Liberal, and a long step in advance for Freethought.

Hoping that the Liberal industrial school will be located there, and that every Freethinker will work to that end, I remain yours for liberty or death, P. J. UMBRITE.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 5, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: A correspondent, in your issue of Oct. 17th, inquires: "Cannot something be done to prevent men and women murdering their own children in the North?"

That being a problem of greater depth and magnitude than a sane man should undertake to solve, I shall simply offer some facts and suggestions that should possibly help to a solution.

It is stated as a historical fact that the people of Peru, when discovered by Europeans, were found to hav devised and established a civilization on the basis of state community of wealth. The government was the sole business agent of the people and custodian of their goods. The result appears to hav been, that in years of plenty there was no waste—in years of scarcity there was no want. Every family had their own domicil, and it was abundantly supplied with all things needful that the country produced or could be procured. Every man literally sat under his own vine and his own fig-tree, and none molested nor made afraid. If a bachelor at thirty years of age had not found a wife, the government would find one for him and set them up in the house-keeping business like all respectable people. There being no incentiv to crime of any kind, nor allurement to vice, no crime was committed nor vice practiced. This people appear to hav had but little concern about science and religion, beyond the requirements of practical every-day life, wherefore they were supposed to be heathen, and became the victims of Christian vandalism. Nevertheless, they had a civilization that was better adapted to intelligent human aspirations and social requirements than our science, divine revelation, and boasted superior intelligence hav enabled us to devise and establish.

Making government the business agent of the people and custodian of their goods, should enable and logically require it to provide an abundance of all things needful to every man, woman, and child within its jurisdiction. Its doing so should satisfy all reasonable requirements of the governed, and no government should reasonably object to assuming the responsibility, for there can be no reasonable cause for hostility between government and people on that question of its doing so. For such arrangement should be acceptable to those who desire that all shall be alike free from the domination of private monopoly of wealth, and objectionable only to those who desire to wield the power that private monopoly of wealth confers, regardless of the evil that grows out of it. So long as the influence of the last named party is in the ascendant, nothing can be done that will prevent vice and crime at the North or elsewhere.

It appears that the law of our being has made man the supreme ruler on this planet, and left him to work out his destiny according to his own good will and pleasure. He has made such a botch of the job that he is evidently ashamed of it, and would fain shift the responsibility upon an imaginary devil. But I will take the liberty to suggest that the instinct of self-preservation is common to all animate nature, and is a necessary incentiv to the preservation of life and procurement of the means of living. Man has made exclusiv ownership the only condition on which the means of living shall be procurable, and that being the basis of private monopoly, he has virtually made private monopoly of wealth an absolute necessity for self-preservation, and has vainly endeavored to modify the effect without removing the cause. When we look upon his efforts, and upon what they hav effected, we shall find that the mountain has labored and brought forth a contemptibly diminutiv mouse. J. A. TUTTLE.

SALINA, KAN., Nov. 10, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I consider the proposed illustration of the old TRUTH SEEKER as a great means of propaganda both for the paper and the principles, and I pledge to take two copies when it shall be illustrated.

Yours for pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER, JOS. HENRY.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Oct. 31, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Dear Brother Moody has been with us for two days. He had immense meetings, and it would, perhaps, be interesting to THE TRUTH SEEKER readers to hav a short description of the means taken to secure attendance at the Moody and Sankey meetings.

Fully two weeks before they (Moody and Sankey) were to appear in our midst, their probable attendance in our locality was shouted from the house-tops. Then at once extensiv plans were adopted to prepare the community to receive them. The Opera House was engaged for six nights, two for Moody and Sankey, and four succeeding for revival meetings, at an expense of $300. Three thousand copies of the Moody and Sankey hymn books were ordered. A choir of one hundred and fifty persons were at once put in training called the "Moody Choir." Union meetings were held every evening and many afternoons for two weeks to get up steam, zeal, or enthusiasm. All our local daily and weekly papers, numbering seven, were not issued during two weeks without broad and long columns devoted to Moody and Sankey meetings. Tickets were issued for each of the six meetings to be held during the two days, and, to get excitement fully on tip-toe, one evening was set apart wholly for men, and extensiv preparations for overflowing meetings were advertised. Add to all this notices from every pulpit in the county for two weeks, the personal solicitations and invitations of good brothers and sweet sisters in Christ during all this time, and you begin to hav some conception of the labor and expense that were employed to make the Moody meetings a success. Then it must be remembered that the gospel is free. The slightest curiosity awakened by all these means was to be gratified without expense to the poor sinner. The stores were closed, and over $700 expended.

Moody came and Sankey later. Our Opera House will comfortably seat 1,200; by squeezing and temporary arrangements, room for 300 more was made. The "overflow" meetings were small on one or two occasions, and of little or no interest. Standing-room was always to be had in the Opera House. Our city has a population of 20,000, and the surrounding county about as many more. All this fuss and feathers resulted in some 2,000 persons availing themselvs of the inestimable privilege of listening to Moody and Sankey. I think most people were pleased with Mr. Sankey's singing, and quite a little perplexed as well. There is no certainty that he sings any particular song quite as anyone would hope or expect to hear it sung. Perhaps the novelties introduced in the pieces as rendered by him are not the least taking part of the performance.

Mr. Moody's preaching, if it may be called preaching, is a deep disappointment to most of us. Disregard for the king's English, both as to the construction of sentences, and as to the pronunciation of words, when long persisted in, becomes painful to the listener.

Mr. Moody's theology, as a general thing, belongs to the dark ages of the history of civilization. He can tell exactly what God thinks or wishes at any particular moment, and on every given subject; and still he has a redeeming feature. If we are to giv the devil his due, we ought certainly to do as much for Mr. Moody, and I, for one, wish to giv him credit for representing God as a kind-hearted gentleman in his more recent dealings with the children of men. I shall be better understood if I say that in his sermon on God's love he givs God a much better character than is generally written out for him by the average theologian. Mr. Moody's God has learned much of Colonel Ingersoll as to how to behave himself toward misguided and suffering humanity. But if we stop here or make too much of this idea we will wholly misconceive the Moodian theology.

Mr. Moody has no conception of what is meant by nature's modes of action, or what we call a law of nature. He continually impresses one with the idea that swearing (profanity) may result in a severe attack of the gout, or that a simple healthful amusement (Sabbath-breaking) might result in thousands of cases of small-pox, or probably set an old extinct volcano again in activ eruption. He is void of any adequate idea of the eternal continuity of cause and effect. Here is a specimen of his teachings clipped from the report of his sermons in one of our local papers:

"The scoffers won't believe that Balaam's ass spoke, and one modern critic says he examined an ass's mouth and found that it was a physical impossibility for an ass to talk! How stupid! If God made the ass, could he not make him talk? This is the stuff that our modern philosophers deal out to us. They cannot believe the Old Testament, they say, but they can go the New Testament. Why, there are two hundred quotations in Revelations taken direct from the Old Testament. They don't believe in supernatural things, they say. If they don't, how are they to believe in Genesis and in Exodus, the plagues, and the opening of the Red Sea? God is doing supernatural things nowadays. We must believe in him. We must not bring him down to our puny reason—we must believe his word. If you do not understand parts of it, believe it. If I wanted to floor an Infidel, I would confront him with the prophecies. Over two hundred of them hav been fulfilled. Skeptics hav been trying for the past six thousand years to destroy God's word, but they can't do it. More Bibles were printed in the past seven years than in all time before. It is printed in two hundred and fifty languages, and distributed to the far ends of the earth. 'Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away.' Read the Bible—every page of it—not with a penknife in hand to cut out what you do not understand. Believe it—every word of it."

How twenty of our educated and cultured clergymen can listen to such words without making such vigorous protests as would certainly hav broken up the meetings, is more than any mere citizen of the world can comprehend. That one should teach folly and the explanations of ignorance, that stupidity may be lured into the "fold of God," and intelligence necessarily driven afar off, seems, to say the least, extremely bad policy. This, however, is the result to be expected when ignorance opens its mouth, and only that runs out which God is supposed to be pushing into the back of the neck.

LIBERTA.

MILWAUKEE, Nov., 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I trust you will accord me the pleasure of expressing my high appreciation of one of the most profound, elaborate, concise, comprehensiv, and analytical lectures on the Bible that it was ever my province to listen to since Adam and Eve devoured the fatal apple in the Garden of Eden, delivered before the Liberal League in Milwaukee, Sunday evening, Nov. 1st, by Mrs. A. M. Freeman, of Chicago, Ill.; subject, "Something I do Not Understand." She treated its historical incongruity and multifarious contradiction in the light of science, showing conclusivly by scientific demonstrations the irrational and delusiv idea and doctrin held by the orthodox church of its infallibility and of its divine origin. Her argument on this vital and most important question was forcible, logical, lucid, and, I believe, incontrovertible. Mrs. Freeman is a fluent and brilliant speaker, and her oratorical eloquence is perfectly entrancing. She must be heard to be appreciated. As a scientific lecturer I believe she stands second to none. If she can be induced to take the lecture field she would be a mighty auxiliary on the side of truth in subjugating error and superstition. I hope she may be induced to make public her talent and receive the encouragement and support she richly deserves. I hav the assurance to assert that all who hav the opportunity of securing Mrs. Freeman will proclaim with me, viva voce:

"Behold a comprehensiv mind,
With logic, love, and truth combined.
Her classic lore inspires the soul—
May it resound from pole to pole."

Yours truly, hoping that truth may soon triumph over error, ignorance, and superstition. I. H. MARAMORE.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Little Dilly-Dally.

I don't believe you ever
Knew anyone so silly
As the girl I'm going to tell about—
A little girl named Dilly,
Dilly-dally Dilly,
Oh, she is very slow,
She drags her feet,
Along the street,
And dilly-dallies so!

She's always late to breakfast
Without a bit of reason,
For Bridget rings and rings the bell,
And wakes her up in season.
Dilly-dally Dilly,
How can you be so slow?
Why don't you try
To be more spry,
And not dilly-dally so?

'Tis just the same at evening;
And it's really quite distressing
To see the time that Dilly wastes
In dreaming and undressing.
Dilly-dally Dilly
Is always in a huff;
If you hurry her
Or worry her,
She says, "There's time enough."

Since she's neither sick nor helpless,
It is quite a serious matter
That she should be so lazy that
We still keep scolding at her.
Dilly-dally Dilly,
It's very wrong, you know,
To do no work,
That you can shirk,
And dilly-dally so.

To Pond Lily Farm by Land.

I told you of our visit to Pond Lily Farm by water, and now I will relate how we went to the same place by land.

The hermit who inhabits the place said we might hav some cranberries that grew wild on the farm if we would come and pick them, and one morning in September Beth and I, after an early breakfast, started down the plank walk, leaving the two dogs, Bonny and Tommy, standing on their hind legs, peering after us from the window, shrieking and bow-wowing because they were left behind.

"Poor things!" I said. "It seems as if we ought to let them go."

"There!" replied Beth, "it's no use to indulge them in everything. They must learn self-denial—we hav to!"

On we went, past the wharf and the little cafe, Hotel Onset, and the Glen Cove House, and down a flight of steps to the water's edge. A big horn was swinging from a fastening near the edge of the floating dock. Beth took it and blew a blast both loud and shrill, to indicate that we desired to cross the ferry. In a few minutes the boatmen came over from the other side, and we clambered on board the little craft, which was a rowboat, and were soon landed at Independence Point, a little wet from the splashing and the dashing of the waters, for the wind was blowing quite hard.

A wood road led up from the shore, and as it was the only one in sight we concluded we could not go far astray if we followed it. A sign on a tree told us the road was Hammond Avenue!

"A high-sounding title for a simple wood-road," said Beth. We gathered wild flowers and wintergreen as we went along, scorning the idea of an avenue where flowers and wild-wood grew so naturally and sweetly. Presently we came to the well-worn narrow country road, which, we felt sure, would take us to Pond Lily Farm, but, believing we could go a shorter way across lots, we turned from the road and followed a very narrow path over the meadows, and past farm-houses now and then, where chickens, with their mothers and fathers, cackled, told stories, and sang lullabys, all in their own language.

We stopped midway of a big field, and took a survey. "Do you see that long old barn yonder?" inquired Beth.

I nodded assent, for I was getting tired, as well as thinking that we might possibly get lost in that (to us) unknown region, and did not feel like talking.

"Well," continued Beth, "it's my humble opinion that that barn is the very one we saw the other day to the westward of the old house. Looks like it to me."

It looked the same way to me, and I said, "Let's make for the barn then, for I am really tired."

We pushed on and soon reached the barn, and, opening a gate, we passed directly through the large yard, scattering flocks of fowls as we went. One old chanticleer mounted the gate post, and, flapping his wings, crowed, "What are ye doing here!" and some little children stood and gazed at us as if they thought we were marauders.

We had clambered over several rail fences in our journey, Beth making flying leaps, or trying to, and I just rolling over and finishing the feat by rolling several paces on the crisp grass, and then, springing up with a whoop that would hav done honor to an Indian warrior.

"Hello! hello there!" saluted our ears; and who should we see approaching but the hermit himself.

"Yes, this is the way, come right along; was looking for you; no need of getting lost—path straight as a string. Come along—there's the house."

We greeted him pleasantly as we stopped to pick the glossy wild cherries that still were hanging in pretty clusters, and the purple and golden beach-plums that grew on the borders of the farm; and then we rested a while under the trees near the house.

The squirrels were running about among the trees—preparing for winter, the hermit said.

"They go into the chamber window yonder," he said, "and pile up any quantity of nuts for use in cold weather."

"In the chamber, do you mean?" I questioned.

"Certainly," replied the hermit, who was quite sociable; "I tell them to make my house their home, and they do."

"What a funny idea," thought I.

"I guess the mice make their home here, too," said Beth, pointing to a trap as we entered the house, through which peeped three baby mice.

"They annoy me dreadfully," said the hermit. "I wouldn't disturb them, however, if they didn't hav such appetites. If let alone, they would come in armies and eat me out of house and home."

After resting, we went out to the cranberry lot, and oh, we had such a lovely time picking the pretty red berries; and it was not long before we had our baskets level full.

Then we roamed in the orchard, and over the fields; and, when tired, went in the house and shared our lunch with the hermit in the room where pictures of Daniel Webster and Henry Clay beamed upon us from the old wall.

"Two of America's noblest statesmen," said the hermit. "I found those pictures in an auction-room," he continued—"dirty, dingy, miserable looking things they were. I had them cleaned, re-framed, and there they are—and I wouldn't take five hundred dollars for them to-day."

He went on: "There are folks like those pictures. We find them in some old, out-of-the-way place—dirty, grimy, greasy—but there is genuin worth in them, requiring only a little brushing and cleaning to bring it to the surface. Under the rubbish is sometimes found the pure diamond, while it is not always the best gold that glitters most."

He fell into a fit of meditation here, and we thought it time to be going. We gathered great clusters of golden rod and asters, and mingled them with some leaves of the sumach, which an early frost had just been changing to red, and left the bouquet upon the hermit's table.

Retracing our steps to the ferry, the wind blew so we had to hold our hats on, and the water splashed over us worse than when we came over in the morning. We were glad when we reached the other side, but Beth's idea of dignity was startled, she said, when she saw me creep on hands and knees from the boat to the dock. "What made you?" she asked. "I didn't want to be blown overboard," I said, "and besides, that last handful of wild cherries did something for me that I did not expect."

"What?" she asked.

"Knocked out a tooth, if you must know, and it has gone overboard."

"Do you think you'll hav a whale's tooth to grow in its place?" and Beth laughed.

"If a whale swallows it—yes," said I.

We arrived home in safety, but I think the way to Pond Lily Farm is just as pleasant by water as by land. S. H. W.

The Little Barber.

An old man who wore the gray locks of time
Came slowly home from the field,
Where his tottering steps had taken him,
To inspect the probable yield.

How much corn in the ear and how much wheat,
What amount of barley and rye,
What the probable look for fruits to eat,
Which charmed the old man's eye.

This daily task he imposed on himself,
Though not always walked he alone,
For a fairy child, like a sporting elf,
Belonged to the old man's home.

Oft by his side in the morning's cool air,
Did she cling to the old man's hand,
And toddling along, this little one fair,
Would his wandering steps command.

And when they grew faint they would rest in the shade
Of some wide-spreading tree by the road;
She would fumble his hair and frizzle his beard
Till her grandpa in slumber would nod.

One day while her fingers through his gray locks ran,
Strange thoughts came into her mind,
By some chance she put her hand in her gown,
There a wee pair of scissors to find.

She had heard him complain that his hair was too long,
That his beard was all tangled around,
She would clip off his locks while humming a song,
And strew them all over the ground.

"And when he awakes, he'll be glad it was done,
He need not then to the barber shop go,
I'll just be good to grandpa, for fun,
And clip off his hair, thus, and so."

Away they flew, clippety clip went the shears,
While her grandsire slept under the tree;
He dreamed not of worldly cares or fears,
His mind from externals was free.

But once and again she would make a miscut,
And then he would start with the pain,
When as quick as a flash she would put the shears up,
And soothe him to slumber again.

She was making good time in her innocent way,
And had finished her work on one side,
She had clipped half his locks off, flowing and gray,
And scattered them far and wide.

She stepped off a stride to look at her work,
And admire her professional skill,
But, alas! just then he gave a jerk,
Which ran through her with a fearful chill.

She gently began to twist his head around,
Intending to cut off the other,
But placing his cane firmly into the ground.
He said, "Come, dear, let's go home to mother."

Grandpa was not aware of what she had done
To his venerable and time-worn face;
But he looked so funny, and yet no fun
Could she in his countenance trace.

Oh, what will they say when they see grandpa?
She had cropped him—'twas a sin and a shame,
And she thought, "I'm sure to be panished by ma,
And dare not go walking again."

What to do she began to think and devise,
So she threw the wee shears to the ground,
Thinking, of all other things, it would not be wise
To let them on her person be found.

She often looked up to his dear kind face,
So sweet in its innocent smile,
As they walked along from place to place
The tortuous way home to beguile.

But pang after pang went through her mind,
To chide her for doing the act,
Thinking what would he say when he came to find
That one half his hair he lacked?

"I'll tell them at home that we both went to sleep,
And a bugaboo came that way,
He stooped over me and began to weep
Because my hair was not gray!

"Then he leaned over him, and looked so pleased,
To find that his hair was all gray,
Said, 'It would not be right to hav you teased,
But I'll take some of his away.'

"With a little black stick he did the trick,
And cut them off one by one,
And poked them carefully into his sack,
And laughing, away he did run."

During all this time, unconscious was he,
Of any change or harm to his beard,
Although he remarked, at times, that she Seemed fearfully nervous and scared.

As they came to the gate, old Towser sprang out,
The hair standing straight on his neck,
He growled and grinned, and jumped about
Till he was whacked with grandpa's stick.

Still he growled and grinned and acted strange,
As he looked hard at grandpa's hair,
For dog that he was, his mental range
Was considered by all pretty fair.

They opened the door, went into the house,
When all hands flew up in a minute,
She would given the world to hav been a mouse,
Or anything else to hav been it.

"Why, gracious," and "Law! what has happened to pa?"
Said dear mother, in tones all affright,
She took off his hat, exclaiming with awe:
"What a horrible! horrible plight!"

And turning to me, with looks very sad,
She tried hard the puzzle to read,
But not a word of my story, good or bad,
Would memory help me to plead.

My bugaboo tale had all faded away,
Of the man and his black little stick,
It was plain to be seen in every way
That I alone did the trick.

But how had I done it, and how could it be
That grandpa should be in the dark?
"The guilt on your face," said mother to me,
"Has left its indelible mark."

Then ma held the glass and told him to see
What a comical figure he made,
And wondered why he would suffer me
To follow a barber's trade.

To hear him grieve for the loss of his hair
Almost broke my poor little heart,
While it blew my fancies into the air
Concerning the professional art.

To the barber shop then we had to go,
To clip off the other side too,
As a lop-sided head was a crazy show,
That for grandpa would never do.

Now three score years and ten are gone
Since what I've related took place,
Of my own brown hair when I was young
There remains not a single trace.

And three score years and five are fled
Since we laid poor grandpa away,
But oft in a dream by the side of my bed
Does he hold out the locks of gray.

He tells me he dwells in a beautiful home,
Where are fields decked with living green,
Where the waters flow by with a crystal foam,
And dance with a crystal sheen.

Now who can object to a pure silent dream?
Or the raptures which it may inspire?
Suppose that it is not what it may seem?
And is born of the soul's desire?

Oh, blest are the thoughts which revert to the past!
When the mind becomes peaceful and free,
When the cares of this life to the winds I cast,
This is joy enough for me. J. R. PERRY.

Our Puzzle Box.

ARITHMETICAL.

A man buys a farm for $6,000, agreeing to pay principal and interest in three equal annual instalments, making first payment one year after the purchase, interest being six per cent. What would he pay each time?

Tyrone, Pa. Wm. Scott.

THE MISADVENTURE OF A FROG.

Hoppity hop! and a juvenile frog,
Scorning the bog of the pollywog,
Said, "Now I shall see a bit of life,
For I'm going off in search of a wife."
Hoppity hop, o'er fallow and green,
But beware, young frog, of dangers unseen!
Hoppity hop, and at last he fell
Down in a deep, uncovered well.
Here he resolved he would not stay,
So upward he crept four feet each day,
Bur alas! at night, while the young frog slept,
Back he slipped three of the feet he had crept.
'Twas Monday morn when froggie fell,
Next Sunday eve he got out of the well.
What youth will tell us quite complete,
How deep was that well? How many feet?

Irwin, Ia. J. K. P. Baker.

FOR A PRIZE.—A JASPER NODULE.

A mystic trinity are we,
Conjoined to hav some fun,
Dependent, independent still,
Although we three are one.

My first and second is a thing
Quite hard to understand.
It is a portion of the earth
That's neither sea nor land.

My second will sustain a pike
As good as any man;
My third (obs.) was much devoted to
His ancient worship, Pan.

My whole requires the arms that saw
John Brown's rebellion rise,
And still my first is often used
To show what it denies.

My first and third so well agree
The ladies prize it much.
You never would hav read these lines
Without its magic touch.

Isaac A. Pool.

Escanaba, Mich., Oct. 29, 1885.

[To the first solver of the above Mr. Pool very kindly offers as a prize the "a typical collection of Lake Superior iron and copper specimens, as good as can be bought in this market for $3." All answers to be forwarded to the Editor of the Children's Corner.]

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, NOV. 7, 1885.

1.—(1) Sugar beet (shoo-gar); (2) Lancashire has (Land-cash-here); (3) Saucy (saw-see).

2.—(1) Paine; (2) Freethought; Hypatia, Galileo, Bruno.

3.—Brush, owl, awning, raven, apple, anvil, lady-bug, leaves, tiger (plea, nap, vestige, grave, bugle, lawn, villa, show).

Solvers.—I. A. Pool, H. E. Juergens, Ross Elwin, Jack Ketch, R. Ann Jacobs, and others.

Correspondence.

Westboro, Mass., Nov. 6, 1885.

Dear Miss Wixon: I forgot to write to you before, and so I will write to-night. You must excuse my writing. I am well, and hope you are the same. I would like to hear from you very much. I do not go to school, but stay at home and help mamma do her work. I wash the dishes, and she givs me ten cents a week. I do not sell rolls and cakes here, but mamma popped some corn yesterday, and I went out selling it. I sold five bags for five cents a bag. The kitty I brought home from Onset has grown quite large. She caught a rat this morning. Bertie found a quarter of a dollar on the ground. Your little friend,

Eliza May Alexander.

[Eliza is a dear little girl that we met at Onset last summer. She is only seven years old, and very bright. She is a little trader, and perhaps will keep a store one of these days. We are very glad to hear from her, and hope she will write again soon.—Ed. C. C.]

Paxico, Kan., Oct. 24, 1885.

Dear Miss Wixon: My father takes The Truth Seeker. He has taken it as long as I can remember. I read the Children's Corner, and I like it very much. Pa bought the "Story Hour" for us. I think it is just splendid.

shall be twelve years old the 26th of November. Our school will commence next Monday. I read in the "Fifth Reader." I study geography, and arithmetic, and spelling. I hav four sisters older than I, and three younger, and one brother. My youngest sister is three years old. I saw so many boys and girls write to you, so I thought I would write also.

Yours truly, ROSA PINGER.

[Thanks, Rosa, for your nice little letter, and for the pretty flower picture. We shall always be pleased to hear from you.—ED. C. C.]

BROOKFIELD, MICH., Nov. 9, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I see so many little correspondents in the Children's Corner, I thought I would write you a little letter. I am twelve years old, my brother Clyde ten years old, and my sister Myrtle five years old. She plays on the organ and sings "Aunt Abbie" and several other pieces. My little baby brother Scottie is two years old; we all think he is very cunning. My pa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I like to read the Children's Corner. Pa has a large farm and he is getting tired of hard work and thinks he will rent his farm next year and move into town. I hope he will. The last day of school I spoke the piece about the little girl that saved the train. I learned it out of the Children's Corner. If you like my letter please print it and I will try and do better next time. Yours with love,

MINNIE M. ELMER.

[Yes, Minnie, we like your letter and shall always be glad to hear from you. We are glad you are big ehough to be of help to your mamma, but hope the time will soon come when the work will be lighter.—ED. C. C.]

The Freethinkers' Magazine for November is out, and is a valuable number. The contents are as follows: "The Albany Convention," by One Present; "Was Washington a Christian?" by B. F. Underwood; "Washington's Religion," by Hon. A. B. Bradford; "Spiritualism at Home," by Wm. Lloyd; "The Gods," by John Peck; "Marriage," by John R. Kelso; "Eternal Justice," a poem, by Charles Mackay; Extracts from Letters; "Our New Departure," Editorial; "The Freethinkers' Convention," Editorial; "The American Secular Union," Editorial; "Pillsbury vs. the Church," Editorial; Book Review; All Sorts. This magazine is to be published every month hereafter. Price $2 per annum; 25 cents a single copy. Address H. L. Green, Salamanca, N. Y.

The Perpetual Calendar.

Working the Yaer of Science
And the Common Computations.
An Almanac Forever.

Showing the day of the week for any day of the month for all time past and present and to come, and other useful information. Price, 40 cents; three for $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
Canvassers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, with Sixty-seven Engravings, Preface, and Notes.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.
Zadig; or, Fate.
The Sage and the Atheist.
The Princess of Babylon.
Tho Man of Forty Crowns.
The Huron; or, The Pupil of Nature.
Micromegas.
The World as it Goes.
The Black and the White.
Memnom the Philosopher.
Andres Des Touches at Siam.
The Study of Nature.
A Conversation With a Chinese.
Plato's Dream.
A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.
An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, 4.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON

The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail:

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study, the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy. The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

Two New Pamphlets

BY

CHARLES WATTS.

The American Secular Union: Its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands.

(Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.)

CONTENTS:

Introduction. (I.) The Necessity for the American Secular Union having Principles upon which all [Secularists] can agree. (II.) The Twofold Nature of the Advocacy Adopted by the Union. (III.) The Catholicity of the Nine Demands and the Ground to be Covered. (IV.) An Exposition and Defease of Each of the Nine Demands. (V.) An Appeal to Secular Fidelity.

32 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

SECULARISM:
Destructiv and Constructiv.

CONTENTS:

Introduction. Secularism: Its Nature and Necessity. Its Destructiv Aspect. (1) Biblical Idolatry. (2) Natural Depravity (3). Theological Supremacy. (4) The Alleged Fall and Redemption of Man. The Constructiv Aspect of Secularism. (1) That the True Guide in Human Actions is Reason Assisted by Experience. (2) That Supreme Attention Should be Given to the Facts and Duties of Existence, Regardless of any Considerations of a Life Beyond the Present. (3) That Science is a more Trustworthy Provider for Man than Relying for Help from any Supernatural Power. (4) That Morality is of Natural Growth, and has no Necessary Connection with Any of the Theologies of the World. (5) That the Best Preparation for a Life Superior to this is the Wisest and Noblest Use of the Existence We Now Hav.

22 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

POCKET ATLAS

Of the

WORLD.

Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE.

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-page colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents, by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N Y.

40

Something New!

Every Liberal should hav one of our beautiful

MOTTO CARDS,

(7x22), ready for framing, for their homes. Twenty-five cents per copy.

Also Large Cards (14x22), and expressing the NINE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Thirty cents each.

Circulars sent FREE. Address all orders to LIBERAL MOTTO SUPPLY CO., Troy, N. Y.
40tf

REPLY

TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S

"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."

By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Ingersoll Catechised:

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies $1; 100 copies $3. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

ALL in a LIFETIME,

A ROMANCE.

BY MISS SUSAN H. WIXON.

"The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks. . . . But what pleased me most in this charming story was the unflinching honesty with which its author holds up to the derision of the world the rottenness of average ministerial character, particularly that of revivalist type. I hav not space here to treat, in detail, of the characters of this truly absorbing novel. Suffice it to say that it is safe to predict that anyone who reads its first chapters will be loth to lay it down till the denouement is reached. Miss Wixon has long been doing a noble work in educating our children into the ranks of true Liberalism, thereby robbing the church of hundreds of those who, in after years, might hav become its willing dupes and servil tools, and she certainly deserves the generous and substantial recognition of all Freethinkers. Let everyone send for a copy of 'All in a Lifetime.' It will yield a liberal reward for the outlay."

ELLIOTT PRESTON.

Price, $1.50. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

IMMORTALITY INHERENT IN NATURE.

BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.

Price, 60 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, N. Y

Bible Fabrications Refuted

and

The Errors of the Bible Exposed.

BY O. B. WHITFORD. M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

WORKS OF DR. W. F. EVANS.

The Primitiv Mind-Cure. The Nature and Power of Faith; or, Elementary Lessons in Transcendental Medicin. This work is a complete exposition of principles underlying the system of mental healing. It contains a full course of instruction in the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure. Price $1.50.

The Divine Law of Cure. A standard work on the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure, a reliable text-book in all the schools of mental healing. No work has ever been written of more practical value to physicians of all schools. The book is the result of the extensiv learning and research of the author, and exhibits a familiarity with the literature of the subject. It is profoundly religious without being offensivly dogmatic. It has been received with universal favor by all who are seeking light on the subject on which it treats—the cure of disease in ourselvs and others by mental and spiritual agencies. Price $1.50.

Mental Medicin. A Theoretical and Practical Treatis on Medical Psychology. This book contains a full exposition of the nature and laws of magnetism, and its application to the cure of disease. Price $1.25.

Soul and Body; or, The Spiritua Science of Health and Disease. Price $1.00

The Mental Cure, illustrating the Influence of the Mind on the Body both in Health and Disease, and the Psychological Method of Treatment. Price $1.50.

All the above books sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE MAGNIFICENT

COLORED LITHOGRAPHS

—OF THE—

D. M. BENNETT MONUMENT.

PRINTED IN SEVEN COLORS ON THE BEST LITHOGRAPH PAPER,

SIZE, 22½ x 28½.

THE BRONZE MEDALLION

PRINTS AS LARGE AS A CABINET PHOTOGRAPH, THUS GIVING NOT ONLY A PICTURE OF THE MONUMENT, BUT AN ACCURATE

LIKENESS OF D. M. BENNETT.

The lithograph is designed for framing, and will be a treasure for all Liberals.

Sent, postpaid, and securely wrapped, to subscribers to the Monument Fund for 30 cents; to others, 50 cents. Address this office.

TRUTH:

A Poem in Three Parts.

BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.

SECOND EDITION.

Price, 25 Cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,

WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

Man, Whence and Whither.

By R. B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,
Author of "The Bible.—Whence and What?

About all that can be said for the existence of God and the future life of man, is here pungently presented, with an incidental discussion of many collateral questions, from a rationalistic standpoint.

1 vol, cloth. Price, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Poetry.

Thanksgiving.

Thanksgiving? Yes, our thanks are due;
Come, friends, let's talk the matter over.
The public press has told to you
With joy, ere this, how worthy Grover,
Our president, by grace of God,
(Aided, perhaps, by Dr. Burchard),
Who bends to humbly kiss the rod
And please those whom the church has nurtured,

With due submission has of late
Sent out his annual proclamation,
And signed it with the seal of state,
That every dweller in our nation
May know how business ventures thrive,
What blessings hav to him been given
In Anno Domini '85,
And render proper thanks to heaven.

Come forward, friends, joyous or sad,
In rare hypocrisy we'll gather,
And, thankful for the gifts we've had,
Giv thanks unto a loving father.
Stand up, ye politicians, first,
You who hav counted every minute
Between you and the public purse,
Giv thanks! giv thanks! "there's millions in it!"

Come, Wall-street gamblers, who hav made
Your ten per cent without compunction,
And spurn poor wretches asking aid,
Roll out your heartiest thanks with unction.
Up here, ye dupes, who lost your all
By these same sharpers' oily gammon,
The same God hears your starving call,
Giv thanks! giv thanks! for great is Mammon!

Ye clergymen! with faces sad,
Who somehow find enjoyment pleasant,
(Some joys I wot you wouldn't had
Had all the family been present
When you were making pastoral calls—
But truce to that, let no one grumble);
Giv thanks that gold your mind appals!
Giv thanks that God has made you humble!

Drouth-stricken farmers, join our ranks!
Pour out your praise like running waters!
Your pale, work-wearied wives giv thanks!
Giv thanks your tramp-assaulted daughters!
Scant crops? Low prices? What! What's this
I hear you murmur? When your calling
Is well paid! Grover says it is,
Who hears his fifty thousand falling.

Ho! cyclone sufferers of the West!
Come with your thanks! giv praises gladly,
Nor mourn because at God's behest
His elements hav used you badly.
What though your house went up like smoke
In the last whirlwind's rush and roaring?
The land is left, you're not dead broke!
Join with us in our hearts' outpouring.

Draw near, ye sufferers by fire,
From eastern wood and western prairie,
Who saw in flames your hopes expire;
Homes, barns and crops, a ruin dreary!
Giv thanks! giv thanks! God knows what's best,
Poor, foolish souls, that grope in blindness,
He sends the fire and all the rest,
For your own good, in loving kindness.

And you, who saw the last spring flood
Remorseless close around your dwelling,
With scenes of dread that chilled your blood;
Tumults and horrors past all telling!
Giv thanks! giv thanks! these things are sent
As blessings which are sorely needed;
Without such aid divinely lent,
Life's beauties all might pass unheeded.

Poor wretches chilled by winter's cold,
And scorched by summer's burning glances;
Ye homeless ones whose sorrows hold
Each separate ill that life enhances!
Dwellers where pitiless hailstorms swept,
And laid your crops in waste and ruin!
Wide districts where grasshoppers kept,
Unchecked, their waste-laid way pursuing.

Sufferers by famin, fire, and flood,
Victims of awful mine disaster;
Crushed trains, where lives went out in blood,
Tornadoes fierce that brought death faster!
Maimed strugglers from the earthquake's wreck,
Inmates of plague-infested city;
Doomed ones who from the sinking deck,
Implored a phantom's aid and pity!

Come one! come all! come with your thanks,
Come, let us shout our praise together;
What though death thins your shivering ranks,
Half clad this chill November weather;
What though your empty cupboards keep,
With fireless hearths a dismal union;
Giv hanks, for water still is cheap,
And air is not yet "close communion."

Year after year, the same old lie
Goes forth with each new proclamation,
How "fell disease has passed us by,
And God has blessed us as a nation."
How "crops hav prosperous been, and war
Has held aloof," like "Little Dorrit,"
While wise ones get the lion's share,
And don't forget to thank God for it.

O priests! who fatten on the fears
You hav instilled and strictly tended,
Close all your calls through all the years
With this my simple prayer appended:
"God, or whatever power that grants
A humble supplicant's petition,
Lord, keep us all in ignorance,
And bind us fast in superstition."

Greenwich, N. Y., Nov. 1885. D. L. B.

The Unselfishness of Science.

It was found last year after the death of Henry Watts in England that, although his many contributions to science had made him famous among chemists, he had left his family in absolute penury. The author of the great "Dictionary of Chemistry" had served science with unflagging industry, but his money reward had only sufficed to supply his daily wants. Scientific men in England and America who had benefited by his labors contributed to relieve the necessities of his family.

A few months ago Mr. E. C. Rye, an authority on entomology, who was known everywhere also among geographers for his valuable services as a bibliographer, died suddenly in the midst of labors from which he could ill be spared. Students will be benefited for many years to come by the work he accomplished. He made a reputation, but very little money. Some of the learned societies of England raised a fund after his death to lift his family above absolute want.

One of the most learned geographers of this century was Mr. W. D. Cooley, who died about two years ago, neglected and almost penniless. He was a profound scholar, and his books are quoted by many writers on geography, but they are not popular, and are little read except by specialists. He had not the faculty of making friends, and his last years were embittered by the fact that his financial reward for many years devoted to research did not suffice to make his old age comfortable.

Too many devotees of science are compelled to content themselvs with a bare subsistence. It is fortunate that they are able to find in the truths nature unfolds to them a degree of pleasure that poverty does not alloy, and that money could not buy.—New York Sun.

Book Review.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS, and Other Lectures. By Helen H. Gardener. With an Introduction by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. The Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

A more readable, brave, sparkling, and at the same time more true, original, and logical little volume, was never written. It is the joint product of wide reading, deep thinking, keen observation, and nativ genius.

The key-note is struck in the very first paragraph: "It is thought strange and particularly shocking by some persons for a woman to question the absolute correctness of the Bible. It is thought strange that a woman should object to any of the teachings of the patriarchs. I claim, however, that if she honestly thinks there is anything wrong about them she has a right to say so. I claim that I hav a right to offer my objections to the Bible from the standpoint of a woman. That book, I think, degrades and belittles women, and I claim the right to say why I think so The opposit opinion has been stated by hundreds of people, hundreds of times, for hundreds of years, so that it is only fair that I be allowed to bring in a minority report."

If the majority would fairly read this "minority report," testing it by the author's standard of "human reason," the crowning glory of civilization would be achieved; the minority would become the majority. If the seven-tenths of all the church-members, who, as Miss Gardener truly informs us, are women, could be induced to study the array of facts presented in these lectures, that large majority of the sufferers from faith and fear would be reduced to about one-tenth, and the army of "spiritual teachers," who know so many things that are not so, and so few things that are, would find, like Othello, their occupation gone.

The author frankly admits that she has no faith in any religion which is based upon faith, for, as she says, "the only good thing about any religion is its morality, and morality has nothing to do with faith. The one has to do with right actions in this world; the other with unknown quantities in the next. Morality depends upon universal evolution; faith upon special 'revelation,' and no woman can afford to accept any 'revelation' that has yet been offered to this world. Not one revelation known to man to-day can look in the face of the nineteenth century and say, 'I am parallel with your richest development; I still lead your highest thought; none of my teachings shock your sense of justice." Every religion must be tried at the bar of human justice, and stand or fall by the verdict there."

To those apologists who, when driven into a corner, declare that at the worst Christianity does no direct harm, Miss Gardener replies, "I do not believe in the harmlessness of any teaching that is not based upon reason, justice, and truth. I do not believe that it is harmless to uphold any religion that is not noble and elevating in itself. I do not believe that it is 'just as well' to spread any dogma that stultifies reason and ignores common sense. I do not believe it is ever well to compromise with dishonesty and pretense. It makes a man unjust to believe in unjust doctrins."

The only possible answer that even bigots can giv to such arguments is to admit their truth.

The lectures contained in this volume are not merely destructiv, but constructiv. The false is destroyed only to make room for the true. While the superstition and infamy of Bible, and creed, and the indignities that the so-called sacred writers hav heaped upon women, are attacked with biting sarcasm, and practically destroyed by philosophy and logic, justice, liberty, and the virtues that ennoble humanity are eloquently upheld and defended. Those who are constantly charging that Liberals hav nothing to offer in place of the "revelation" that nobody understands, should be forever silenced by reading Miss Gardener's "twelve articles of positiv belief" (page 53), which embrace everything there is any excuse for believing. They embody more of truth and grandeur than all the creeds of all the religions. Let the Christian show us something in his creed to equal this: "I believe that a clean life and a tender heart are worth more to this world than all the faith and all the gods of Time." Or this, "I believe that if there is a future life, the best possible preparation for it is to do the very best we can here and now." Or this, "I believe that it is better to build one happy home here than to invest in a thousand churches which deal with a hereafter." These are but three of the twelve articles, but the other nine are just as grand.

The fact is, that every page of the nearly two hundred teems with just such strong, healthy sentiments and vigorous reasoning, the whole being enlivened with snatches of sparkling wit and humor, of which the following is a fair sample: "If it takes all the honor out of a man when he gets to be an angel, they may use my wings for a feather duster."

It is a hopeful sign of the times to find a lady of education and refinement with sufficient courage to turn her back upon the church and scornfully reject its rewards for submission and hypocrisy. It is truly refreshing to find ladies who hav lost all superstitious reverence for the ashes of that saintly enemy of woman, St. Paul, who said, "I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence." Miss Gardener, in the interest of her sex, takes from the crusty old bachelor apostle the stolen staff of inspiration on which he has leaned for ages, gracefully hands him the broken crutch of bigotry, and bids him hobble off the stage of action on which he has long ceased to be either ornamental or useful.

The Introduction (covering six pages), like everything Colonel Ingersoll has given to the public, is a masterpiece in style and sentiment. He eloquently portrays the hope and promis for the future, which he derives from the fact that woman is emerging from "the ignorant age of faith" when "she was taught to obey without question, and to believe without thought." He says that "no human being can answer Miss Gardener's arguments," and that "all the priests in the world cannot explain away her objections," because "there is no answer nor explanation."

In the short compass of this introduction are found one of the most telling anecdotes, and several of the most beautiful thought-pictures ever conceived in the imagination of genius.

The book is beautifully printed, and contains an excellent portrait of the author. It is dedicated to Mrs. Eva Ingersoll, "the brave, happy wife of America's greatest orator and woman's truest friend, in whose beautiful home-life superstition and fear hav never entered, and human equality and freedom hav their highest illustration."

W. M. CHANDLER.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM. The Present and the Future Republic of North America. By a Capitalist. New York: The Truth Seeker Company. Price, $1.50.

It is not possible to giv a just idea of this interesting and valuable work within the limited space assigned for it. To be appreciated it must be read. Though it is written under the nom de plume of a "Capitalist," it is really written in interests of the people. An extract or two will be interesting just now, though by no means are they to be taken as samples of the striking thoughts which run through the entire volume. Of the Republican party the author says:

"It is indisputable that the Republican party, though brought to the helm of state through the great slavery issue, long retained its position, not because of any issue or issues wherein it was foremost in promoting the public weal, but from its subserviency to the great railways and other ruling powers. It was the money of these great monopolizing institutions that kept the Republicans in power, and this would hav continued it in power indefinitly had not our great plutocrats regarded it as cheaper to buy up and make subservient to their interests and behests the leaders of the Democratic party. . . . The day is not far distant when these plutocrats will combine and wholly control the affairs of the country. An end to our republic will then hav come, and we shall hav an oligarchy or plutocracy in its place. Toward such a catastrophe we are rapidly moving."

Alluding to the laudations of the rich for their munificence in giving away what they hav stolen, or "appropriated," as the author terms it, he says:

"It is better, no doubt, that this class should be highly lauded for all their gifts; otherwise they would soon become like the sponge—absorbing, but never giving back, except when squeezed. I cannot admit that this opulent class is necessary or useful to society in any sense. There are a few noble exceptions, without doubt, but in general I am constrained to regard the lives of this wealthy class as unsatisfactory to themselvs, and useless, demoralizing, and destructiv to their kind—demoralizing in their influence, as those below are constantly struggling to attain a like position at the sacrifice of health, probity, and peace of mind; and destructiv, in that they consume and waste what they do not produce."

The chief value of this volume lies in this, that the reader is not only interested, but is held to it by a fascination which, when he has reached the end, he finds has left his mind in better condition to think out many of the problems which almost every thinking man realizes must sooner or later come before the people for solution. To men whose minds are agitated in respect to the future of this country, this volume will be a material help.—Nonconformist.

"Rational Communism" is the work of a master mind, dealing not simply with communism but with a half dozen other questions of the most vital importance to the human race, and dealing with them profoundly and with a fearlessness and love of progress and improvement which unfortunately bring general reproach rather than commendation.

The book opens with a vision of the future, and so far as this vision goes may be quite too fanciful for the present age of hard and unpoetic labor and battle against vices and malformation that hav grown out of ages of ignorance and iniquity, of slavery and hell. But in passing on through the various phases of development for which the theme givs occasion the author takes up and discusses in a masterful manner, and often at length, nearly all the great wrongs inherent in our present social structure, our political economy, and our religious beliefs. It will be seen that he has enough to do, and when we say he does it well we intend at least to pay him the greatest compliment.

He is a Communist, and as such opposed to individual monopoly of property, to which monopoly he traces by far the greater part of the evils which afflict mankind; but he is also a believer in individual liberty and the greatest freedom to think and to act without the consent or against the prevading opinions of the community. Such freedom he insists cannot be exercised except in a state of society in which each of his contributions to the whole may insure to himself the necessities and comforts of life without fawning to his fellows.

But he does not find fault with men for being what their circumstances compel them to be. He is philosophical and practical in dealing with existing facts and institutions, yet not lacking in ideality sufficient to conceive of something vastly better. These are combinations of qualities not always found in those who preach reform. They are either up in the clouds of an ideal prefection or down in the dirt of sordid strife, too much engaged in hand-to-hand conflict with immediate surroundings to be just to those who differ with them or who seek their highest good in other ways. To be philosophical without being vainly visionary, and to be practical without being a mere plodder in the well-worn ruts of conventionality, is quite an accomplishment.

The limits of our space do not permit the extended review of this book which its merits deserve. We do not predict for it a large circulation, but it will hav the best of admirers and perform its needed work in preparing teachers for the great school in which humanity by slow and toilsome process, by indirect ways and through suffering and privation, is acquiring knowledge that shall prepare the way for liberty and a better social life. Those who think for the future will find the book a treasure, while those who are bound up in the past or contented with the present will see in it little to commend.—Winsted Press.

GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."
A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.
PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

MONKS, POPES,
AND
THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.
Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

In connection with another firm we have just published Helen H. Gardener's first volume. Helen H. Gardener was first introduced to the public by Col. Ingersoll, since when she has won a place in the hearts of all Freethinkers by her ability, and by the brilliancy of her lectures. The contents of the volume are:

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS: Introductory; Accident Insurance; Chiefly Women; Why Women Support It; What It Teaches; From Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.
VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pigmies; Geographical Religion; Revelation; Evidence of Faith; Did He talk? What You May Think; Intellectual Gag-Law; The Vicarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?
HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts,

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SOCIAL WEALTH:

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth: Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

PRICE, CLOTH, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT
AND
THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adulterv and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

St. Matthew Before the Court on a Charge of Forgery.

BY SECULARIST.

Price, 10 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TO APPEAR IMMEDIATELY.

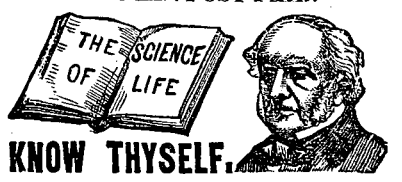
MOSES BEFORE THE COURT.
By the same Author.

WHY DON'T HE LEND A HAND
AND OTHER POEMS.

By S. E. PUTNAM, Author of Ingersoll and Jesus, Prometheus, Golden Throne, Waifs and Wanderings, Problems of the Universe, etc.

CONTENTS: Why Don't He Lend a Hand? The Golden Age, The Ideal and the Real, Not Dead but Living, Fruition, Hope, Thomas Paine, Nature's Gospel, Address to Deity, Giv us Light (Holdreth's poem often recited by Charles Watts).

PRICE 10 CENTS.



Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
POPULAR JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.

Headquarters for Fine Goods in the line of Genuin Diamonds; Fine Gold and Silver Watches; Chains; Bracelets; Wedding and Presentation Rings; Jewelry of Latest style; Gold Pens; Silverware; Optical and Fancy Goods; 3 ounce Coin Silver E'gin Watch, $10; 4 ounce, Full Jeweled, Adjusted Pat. Regulator Stem Wind, $22; this same, fine movement, in best gold filled case, $35; with cheap movement, $25. Ladies' Solid Gold Elgin stem wind watches, $20, $24, and $32—14 karat, upward. Watches cleaned, finest work in the world, $1. Springs, $1, and returned per. reg. mail or ex., paid one way. Work for the trade at reduced rates and agents sending work once a week from every state in the Union are making lots of money. Best spectacles in the world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back on demand. Try me! OTTO WETTSTEIN.

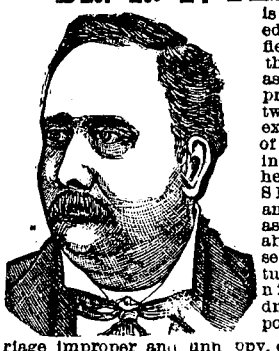
Patentee of Wettstein's New Freethought Badge. The most beautiful badge ever placed upon the market. Immense sale. Elegant present for Lady or Gent. Solid gold, $3; $3.50; extra heavy, $4; with diamond, artistically enameled, $10.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. ONLY $1.
BY MAIL POST-PAID.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.



The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14

HEAL THYSELF

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y2

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Colliagt, Smithville, Jefferson Co., N.Y.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

8tf

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY
BETTER THAN
Eternal Punishment.

BY M. BABCOCK.

The subjects discussed in this finely-printed pamphlet are, besides the title above given, Satan and Hades, Some Reasons Why I am Not a Christian, Divinity of the Bible, Theological Logic, Preachers are Not Honest, Preachers Sometimes Differ, Infant Damnation, Prayer, The Cloak of Charity, The Clergy were Afraid, No Fear of Being Damned, But What are We to Do? But Why Should I Be Damned? Why Not Pray for the Damned? Conclusion.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl, New York.

Gems of Thought.

THE difference between the conditions of the rich and the poor is far more marked than it ought to be. The homes of the poor, though humble, should be neat and cheerful.—D. M. Bennett.

LAUGH, and the world laughs with you,
Weep, and you weep all alone,
For the brave old earth must borrow its mirth;
It has trouble enough of its own.
Sing, and the hills will answer,
Sigh, it is lost on the air;
The echoes rebound to a joyful sound
And shrink from voicing care.

Rejoice, and men will seek you,
Grieve, and they turn and go;
They want full measure of your pleasure,
But they do not want your woe.
Be glad, and your friends are many,
Be sad, and you lose them all;
There are none to decline your nectared wine,
But alone you must drink life's gall.

Feast, and your halls are crowded,
Fast, and the world goes by,
Forget and forgiv—it helps you to liv,
But no man can help you to die!
There is room in the halls of pleasure
For a long and lordly train,
But, one by one, we must all march on
Through the narrow aisle of pain.
—Ella Wheeler.

WHAT a noble privilege is it of human reason to attain the knowledge of the supreme being, and, from the visible works of nature, be enabled to infer so sublime a principle as its supreme creator. But turn the reverse of the medal; survey most nations and most ages; examin the religious principles which hav, in fact, prevailed in the world, you will scarcely be persuaded that they are anything but sick men's dreams, or, perhaps, will regard them more as the playsome whimsies of monkeys in human shape, than the serious, positiv, dogmatical asseverations of a being who dignifies himself with the name of rational.—Hume's Natural History of Religion.

THAT Shakspere wrote "Hamlet," or Scott wrote "Marmion," is not so sure as that the Lord God Almighty, by his prophets and apostles, wrote the Bible. . . The Bible says that Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed by fire and brimstone, 'Absurd!' says Infidelity, 'no such phenomenon ever took place.' But Lieutenanant Lynch drops his line into the Dead Sea, which occupies the site of those two cities, and brings up sulphur—pieces of the very brimstone which came down from heaven.—T. DeWitt Talmage. He that hath (long enough) ears to hear let him hear, but as to the great bulk of our readers let them hold their sides lest they split with laughter.—Hylax.

IF I were compelled to choose between Talmage and Barnum, I should say, without any hesitation, Giv me the Sunday circus. I could listen even to the stale jokes of the clown on Sunday, and receive less shock to moral and reverential feeling than was given by these clerical jokes intended to ridicule the noblest triumphs of the century. Even the clown sings a sentimental ballad which awakes a real emotion in some of his listeners, and, in this respect at least, the clown's ballad is better than Talmage's prayer.—Rowland Connor.

POOR gapin', glowerin' Superstition
Waes me, she's in a sad condition;
Fie! bring Black Jack, her state physician,
To see her,
Alas! there's ground o' great suspicion
She'll ne'er get better.

Auld Orthodoxy lang did grapple,
But now she's got an unco ripple;
Haste, gie her name up i' the chapel,
"Nigh unto death;"
See, how she fetches at the thrattle,
And gasps for breath. —Burns.

LIFE, even in this world, has its compensations. If a dull man bores and bores his company till all hands are ready to sink, a bright and genial fellow will irradiate it; if one is as the dead fly in the ointment of the apothecary, the other is like the quince in the apple-pie—its savor and fragrance permeate the whole dish, and rescue it from vapidity.—James Payn's Under One Roof.

"FOR the most part," says Reimerus (a distinguished German scholar who was one of the first that utterly denied the supernatural origin of Christianity, 1694–1765), "men go to the devil, and hardly one in a thousand is saved." My pious and pensiv grandfather, brooding over these things, was, during the whole of his life, tormented by this idea; even as in a hive there is but one queen to many thousand bees, even so, argued he, with men also, there was only one soul saved for thousands doomed to the flames of hell.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

VILLAINY that is vigilant will be an overmatch for virtue, if she slumbers at her post, and hence it is that a bad cause has often triumphed over a good one, for the partisans of the former, knowing that their cause will do nothing for them, hav done everything for their cause; whereas the friends of the latter are too apt to expect everything from their cause, and to do nothing for themselvs.—Colton's Lacon.

DRAWING its forces from another existence, and placing man's true destiny in that invisible and untried sphere, religion necessarily depreciates this poor world where we are now in exile and probation and enjoins the depreciation on its disciples who must, from the very beginning of their spiritual life in baptism, renounce the world and their own flesh, along with the devil, and vow themselvs to life-long warfare with the three, as enemies of God and their salvation. Salvation, in the technical sense, is man's only affair, and this is imperiled by caring for the things of earth and time.—Through Rome On.

GOD knows I'm no the thing I should be,
Nor am I even the thing I could be,
But, twenty times, I rather would be
An Atheist clean,
Than under gospel colors hid be,
Just for a screen. —Burns.

To the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York:

The Constitution of our State guarantees that "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State to all mankind." The general principle of American Government is equality of all men before the law. This, as Your Honorable Body is aware, involves the principle, already acknowledged in theory, of the Total Separation of Church and State. But Church and State are now practically united by the following statutes:

1. The law exempting Church Property from Taxation.

2. The laws appropriating Money from the Public Treasury for the support of Institutions founded and managed chiefly by Sectarian Denominations.

3. The law compelling the Observance of Sunday as a religious holy day.

The undersigned, Citizens of the State of New York, do therefore respectfully but earnestly petition Your Honorable Body to repeal all the laws or parts of laws of this State which are violations of the above principles. Our reasons for asking this are:

1. The Churches are voluntary associations properly to be supported by the voluntary contributions of their members. 2. The State is compulsory. Every citizen must pay taxes. And we submit that it is unjust to a large and growing body of voters to be compelled to pay for the support of Churches which they cannot conscientiously attend; for the hire of Ministers in our Legislature and Public Institutions, in whose doctrines they are unable to believe; and to observe as holy a day to them no more sacred than any other. We also submit that the exemption of Churches from taxation, the appropriation of money for the hire of Ministers and the support of Sectarian Institutions, and the Legal observance of Sunday as a holy day, are discriminations in favor of one form of religion, are abridgments of the free exercise of religious preferences, and are therefore unconstitutional.

NAMES. | RESIDENCE.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17
The National Liberal League,	28
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73
Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardener,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,	Elizabeth Cady Stanton,	J. D. Shaw,

TRAVELS IN FAITH,
From Tradition to Reason.
BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.
Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

EVOLUTION:
A SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE.
By Robert C. Adams.
Paper, 25 cents. For Sale at this Office.

Odds and Ends.

NOT proven. Presbyterian minister: "Don't you know it's wicked to catch fish on the Sabbath?" Small boy (not having had a bite all the morning): "Who's catching fish?"

A CALIFORNIA missionary spent the best part of the summer endeavoring to Christianize a Chinaman. The missionary thought he was getting along very nicely until "John" made a proposition to him to "put in" with him and start a faro bank.

"THERE has been a revival in our town." "Many people converted?" "Oh, yes, and among them twenty pupils of the Female College." "How do you know they are converted?" "Because they hav declared their determination to flirt with none but divinity students hereafter."

"DON'T you want to go to the better world, Tommy?" asked a Sunday-school teacher of the new scholar. "No, mum," promptly replied the frank little fellow. "And why not, Tommy?" "Oh, when I die I want to go where a feller can rest." "Well, my boy, you can rest there." "Well, in that song we sung it said we'd all shine there." "Certainly; don't you want to shine there?" "No, mum, I don't want to shine there. I get enough of that here. I'm a bootblack, mum!"

MR. HUBBARD recently presented a petition from the Young Men's Christian Association to the House of Commons praying for the better protection of girls and young women. There were several ways in which the presentator could hav passed it to the proper official in silence, but he arose and without a break or pause repeated as follows: "Mr. Speaker, I beg to present a petition for the better protection of girls and young women from the members of the Young Men's Christian Association."

"I REMEMBER," said a Detroit boy to his Sunday-school teacher, "you told me always to count fifty when angry." "Yes? Well, I'm glad to hear it. It cooled your anger, didn't it?" "You see, a boy he came into our alley and made faces at me and dared me to fight. He was bigger'n me, and I'd hav got pulverized. I remembered what you said, and began to count." "And you didn't fight?" "No, ma'am. Just as I got to forty-two, my big brother came along, and the way he licked that boy would hav made your heart glad. I was going to count fifty and then run."

A SUPERINTENDENT of a Sunday-school, not over a thousand miles from Chicago, having occasion to spur the liberality of his scholars on a matter of local charity, went to the nearest stationery store to select a nice, ornamentally-framed motto suitable to the business in hand, to hang up in full view of his juvenil friends on the day appointed for the collection. He picked out one reading, "The Poor You hav always with You." In the course of his exhortation on the Sunday in question he called the attention of the classes to the quotation and asked if any boy or girl could tell him why we always hav the poor with us. "Please, sir," said a little, curly-headed rascal, son of a traveler for a paper house, "I speck's because they can't afford to travel."

CONCORD DISCORDS.

The henceness of wherefore,
The thenceness of therefore,
The whatness of whyness,
The drinkness of dryness,
The thickness of thinness,
The sinness of sinless,
The whichness of howness,
The sweetness of sourness,
The hitchness of shiverty,
The richness of poverty,
Though sounding like Concords,
Abounding in wrong words,
Like sun-set of dawn-light,
Or sober man drunk tight—
These, though all are pedantic,
Yet are also as antic
As though the Atlantic
Had discovered Columbus,
Then kicked up a rumpus
For losing a compass.
Yours, H. NATHAN BUMPUS,

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 48. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, November 28, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

COLONEL INGERSOLL has sold his house in Washington, and will take up his residence in New York city.

"A MINISTER elected to the legislature is not worth so much as a Spitz dog," says a speaker at a New Haven Prohibitionist meeting.

A COLPORTEUR, who has been going through Connecticut, says that in eighty towns he canvassed there were 500,000 people who never entered a church.

A MAINE newspaper says that the village of Prospect Harbor, Goldsboro county, "has no church society, no temperance society, no gin-mill, no drunkard, and no pauper."

KATE FIELD lectured at Chickering Hall last Saturday evening on Mormonism. She made the absurd suggestion that there should be a "national marriage law" for all the states.

THE Lick Observatory at San Jose, Cal., is now ready, and regular astronomical observations will begin as soon as the large telescope, now being finished at Cambridge, is set up.

IT is reported that the complete correspondence of Carlyle with Goethe has been discovered in the Goetne archives. Copies of the original letters of Goethe to Carlyle were also discovered.

MISS KATIE TABB, a well-known and popular young lady, was fatally burnt a short time ago. She was not attending a dance at the time the fatal accident occurred, but was kneeling by the grate in prayer.

A YOUNG Salvation Army girl recently fell very ill in Portsmouth, N. H. The captain refused to permit her to go to the hospital, and said she must work till she died. She thereupon deserted, and the indignation of the people is aroused.

ROBERT COLLYER says that "it will not be many years before it will be as difficult to find an intelligent person doubting the theory of evolution as it is now to find a person who believes in the old doctrin that our earth is the center of the universe."

LAST year the opening prayer of the Exposition was made by a Brooklyn preacher, who was brought here for that purpose, and the weather that followed was simply disgusting. Better arrangements hav been made this year. —New Orleans Picayune.

SAID a Salvation captain to a convict in penitentiary: "My poor unfortunate brother, I trust that since you hav been in this wretched place you hav been able to find Jesus?" Convict (positivly): "I havn't seen a thing of him. What tier is he on?"

IT is said that Miss Butt, the young Illinoisess, who was raised from her death-bed by prayer, has eloped with Pastor Kent, who leaves a wife and four children. This prayer-cure treatment leads to bad results. Those who contemplate experimenting with it should try it first on a dog.

REUBEN B. CLAFLIN, father of Victoria Woodhull and Tennie C. Claflin, died Nov. 19th. Tennie writes to the New York Sun that her father was killed by grief over an article about his daughters in the New York World. Yet the old man had much to grieve over apart from any newspaper article!

A BURNING question of centuries has been settled by the decision of a petty Minnesota court. A Swedish pastor and his congregation quarreled over the dogma of predestination. The case was carried into the civil court, which decided in favor of the pastor, and, presumably, of the dogma.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

AT an anti-vaccination meeting in New York at which Henry Bergh presided, Dr. Gunn read some statistics, among which were the following: Before Jenner's time 18 8 per cent of small-pox patients died. To-day, in spite of improved sanitary methods, 18.5 per cent of patients die. Before Jenner's day 39 people in 100,000 died from small-pox. To-day 71 people in a million die directly from vaccination. In short, he declared that neither reason, authority, nor results proved the advantage of vaccination. Mr. Bergh said the object of the meeting was not a fanatical crusade against vaccination, but simply to get the truth of the matter.

THE Andover Review says that "the intelligence and heart of the Christian church not merely decline to accept the old dogma of perdition of the heathen—they repudiate it." This statement is indignantly denied by the Presbyterian Banner and the Examiner, which, as the saying is, still "hope for better things."

THE clericals in Belgium are using their present parliamentary power in overthrowing the system of secularized national education organized by their opponents. Fifty-three more communal primary schools hav just been suppressed, and the pupils of two hundred and twenty public primary school hav been transferred to the convent schools The London Freethinker ventures to prophesy that a powerful popular reaction will hurl the priestly party from power as soon as their term of office expires. They will then cant and whine about the oppression, and tyranny, and spoliation involved in the reversal of their own despotic policy.

ACCORDING to a dark report from Scotland a Dissenting minister up there, who was once respected with the best of them, has fallen a victim to the passion for tobacco. Even on week days a minister of the Free Kirk might find something better to do than smoke; but so long as he confines himself to poisoning the atmosphere of his back-garden only with his tobacco, a free and liberal congregation would leave him alone. This rash clergyman, however, is said to hav gone further than that. His infatuation for the baneful weed has tempted him to a furtiv pipe on Sundays; and, with success, he has become overbold. The rumor has gone like wildfire through his congregation that on Sunday nights, when they are supposed to be safe in bed, the misguided man may be seen sitting at an open window in the manse, puffing exultantly at a small clay pipe. He can only be seen from the top of the back-garden wall, and it is said that on Sunday nights a row of black heads may now be observed peering over it. It is the kirk session collecting evidence.

THE English newspapers should hav their sporting editors attend church. Such items as this, for instance, from the London Truth, belong to that department of journalism: A most unseemly row took place on Sunday week in a parish church in the diocese of Salisbury. There had been differences between the vicar and the curate, and the temper of the former reverend person seems to hav entirely given way on the sacred day. He arrived at the church shortly before the hour of morning service, and, on entering the vestry, found the curate arraying himself in his surplice, with the intention of reading the prayers, as usual. The vicar ordered him to leave the place, and on his refusing some strong language passed between the enraged divines, the scene ending in the vicar rushing furiously on his subordinate and tearing the surplice from his back, after which he threw the garment into the churchyard. The clerk hurried into the church and summoned the 'squire from his pew to mediate between the combatants. The result of his interference was that the vicar presently proceeded to the reading desk, leaving the curate to compose himself in the vestry.

THE Christian at Work says: "Attention has been directed to the fact that in several localities during the recent election contest Roman Catholic priests instructed their people from the pulpit as to the legislativ candidates they should vote for. In this the priests exercised a right which is every way theirs; and it is quite as fitting that they should do this as that clergymen of the Established Church in England, and dissenting ministers in Scotland, should urge the support of Parliamentary candidates for and against disestablishment respectivly. The American, as a rule, is not apt to look to his minister for instruction as to his vote, and any movement in this direction does not seem to be required. But it is a pity that among Protestants there is not even a part of the interest shown in the election that is manifested by Roman Catholics. . . . If the Roman Catholics succeed in their efforts for a miscalled freedom of worship bill, it will all be owing to the supine indifference of the voters of this state. We are not sure but such results, bad as we should consider them, would work some good in awaking people from the Ripvanwinklian snooze which they seem to be now so greatly enjoying."

AN odd story of systematic theft mingled with piety comes to the Herald from Birmingham, England. It shows that fiction cannot compete with real life in thrilling narrativ. John Sturgess went to church regularly and was a sincere and devout Christian. When the banns of a well-to-do couple were published, however, a very devil lurked in his eye as he listened, for therein lay the secret of his life. He managed to keep his thoughts and plans to himself, and at home he was an affectionate father, in society a genial talker, and in the estimation of the dominie, or rector, a gentleman and a scholar. There was something peculiar in the way he spent his time. His day began after dark and ended before sunrise. This, however, seemed to be an eccentricity—nothing more. Not a breath of suspicion attached to him. At last the mystery was roughly solved. The business to which he devoted himself was, it seems, stealing wedding presents. After the banns were published he kept an eye on the couple. On the wedding night when all was quiet he crept into the house by a window, bagged everything he could lay hands on, and made off. He has done this for years. He was polite, religious, and a scoundrel.

F. S. RYMAN, of Boston, called on Colonel Ingersoll after the latter's lecture in Boston, and his impressions of the event are given to Goodall's Sun. He said: "I consider it a great event in anyone's life to meet either Mr. or Mrs. Ingersoll. They certainly are an ideal couple. Mrs. Ingersoll is an acute reasoner and a splendid talker, and she is very enthusiastic in regard to all the discussions that hav made Mr. Ingersoll so justly famous. In dedicating one of his books to her, Mr. Ingersoll speaks of her as 'a woman without superstition,' and it is, I believe, a literal fact that she has no superstitious notions whatsoever. She is one of the very grandest women I ever met. I cannot express my contempt for those people who accuse Mr. Ingersoll of unkindness or ungentlemanliness. He is, without doubt or dispute, one of the kindest and most courteous gentlemen I ever met anywhere in my life, and, to my certain knowledge, no man can be much more charitable toward people of opposit opinions than he is. Toward nothing is he severe but open and armed bigotry. How truly could he say:

> "'I am in love with love,
> And the only thing I hate is hate.'

I wish those who think it a duty and a delight to write against him could hav seen him as I saw him this morning in social conversation, I am certain that all these silly slanders would be silenced forever. Mr. Ingersoll showed me photographs of his two daughters. They hav very beautiful, intelligent faces, proving that they are the ideal children of an ideal mateship. With a just pride Mrs. Ingersoll spoke of them in the highest terms of praise. I do not believe that Cornelia was prouder of her children, nor do I think that she more fully comprehended the sublime and mysterious office of motherhood. Mr. Ingersoll is the same jolly joker in private life that he is on the stage, and few points in conversation come up that he is not able to illustrate at once with some comic and appropriate story. My desire in this letter has been to describe Mr. Ingersoll as he is, so that his circle of friends, great as it is, may be increased, and his power for eradicating error augmented. I know that his heart is as pure and grand as the sublimest period that ever left his lips, and I honor no other public person now living. He is good and grand; more I could not say if I was to write a year, and I am positiv that no one of any creed could meet him without liking him. As Mr. Sleaster says, 'Genius will be his monument, the everlasting memory of man his heaven.'"

News of the Week.

THE Prohibitionists hav organized a lecture bureau to send speakers all over the country.

THE billiard match at Chicago between Schaefer, Slosson, and the Frenchman Vignaux resulted in a tie all around.

PRINCETON defeated Yale this year at football. How the boys get along with their studies is not reported upon.

GERMANY has acquiesced in the pope's settlement of the Carolines question. It only remains now to giv it a definit form.

CAPT. JAS. B. EADS has under consideration the construction of a ship railway across the peninsula of Florida. The distance is about 120 miles.

THE editor and manager of La Monde, newspaper, hav been indicted by the grand jury of Montreal for criminally libeling Mayor Beaugrand of that city.

PASTOR DOWNS, the Boston clerical adulterer, having been evicted by his church, hired Music Hall last Sunday, and preached to three thousand persons.

IN McDONALD county, Mo., a prisoner who confessed the killing of a deaf mute for money was taken from jail by a mob, on the 22d, and hanged to save expense.

SENATOR SHARON, the western millionaire, died recently. He won great notoriety through the courts as defendant in a suit for divorce brought by Sarah Althea Hill.

CANADIANS are holding indignation meetings over the execution of the rebellious Riel. Riel's body was buried in a vault under the church of the Immaculate Conception.

PARNELL opposes Gladstone, and has indorsed the Tories in a speech at Liverpool. Some representativ Irish-Americans in this city recently subscribed $7,000 for the support of Parnell.

THE Servians and the Bulgarians are still fighting. Servia is a principality of Europe tributary to Turkey, and Bulgaria is a province of Turkey. Exactly the cause of the war would be difficult to point out.

THE mother superior of a convent at Concepcion, in South America, recently buried the body of a nun under suspicious circumstances, and has been sent to jail for ten days for not complying with legal requirements.

THE Rev. Robert F. White, of the Purdy's Station Methodist church, was arraigned in White Plains, N. Y., last week, on the charge of assaulting Miss Elfreda Robinson while she was on a visit at the parsonage. He pleaded not guilty.

A DISPATCH to last Monday's papers reads as follows: "BOMBAY, Nov. 22d.—A serious religious riot took place to-day at Broach. One English official was killed and three others were wounded. Five of the rioters were shot by the police."

THE Mormons are turning the tables upon their prosecutors by arresting gentiles for lewd conduct with disreputable women. A deputy marshal and a United States commissioner were arrested at Salt Lake City last week on the above charge.

JOHN L. SULLIVAN, the pugilist, has signed a contract to make a tour of Europe and Australia next year. He agrees to meet any man who may be brought against him, at any time, under any circumstances, with or without gloves, and under any rules.

AT Wallingford, Conn., a father's anxiety for the success of his daughter, who was singing for the first time in the choir of the Episcopal church there last Sunday, was so great that while she was singing a solo he fell in an apoplectic fit and expired shortly afterward.

A CIRCULAR has been mailed by Walter N. Thayer, president of the New York State Workingmen's Assembly, to all the trade and labor organizations in the state, requesting that delegates be sent to the twentieth annual session of the organization which he represents, which will be held in Albany on Tuesday, January 6, 1886.

Communications.

The Harmony and Meaning of the Scientific Gospels.

A LECTURE BY T. B. WAKEMAN (CONTINUED).

IX.—THE HUMAN RACE IS AN ORGANISM OF GRAND AND EVER-INCREASING COMPLEXITY, WHICH CAN ONLY COME TO ORDER, PEACE, AND WELFARE BY MEANS OF A GRAND FEDERAL REPRESENTATIVE REPUBLIC OF CIVILIZED NATIONS.

In order to understand any organism it must be regarded as a whole, and the relation of the parts to the whole must be considered first, and then the relation of the parts to each other. Next, the history or evolution of the organism and its parts must be followed as the correlative of its environment. Then the future line of its progress may be traced, and thus our wills, if we choose, may become the complement of its laws and aid its progress. Practical sociology and government consist in the application of these general and simple laws to the human race and its organization. It is evident, from a glance at the surface of our earth, that each of its continents or grand divisions has been for ages occupied by, and thus has contributed a different race of people to, our common humanity; that they have interests to some extent common and otherwise adverse; that these races are often divided into separated nations or governments; that all of these have rulers and modes of foreign and internal administration, resulting from their different origins and environments.

Now if we look at these races in true, that is, in their historic, evolution, it is evident that they have passed, through similar stages of progress. These stages have been the supports of each other in building up civilization. They may be described as five successive integrations or modes of social organization, religion, and government, viz:

1. The early Fetichistic societies, e.g., the Negroes, Indians, Polynesians, and Chinese.

2. The Astrolatry empires, e. g., the Egyptians, Assyrians, and Persians.

3. The Polytheistic cities and empires, e. g., Greece and Rome.

4. The Monotheistic empires (especially of the Popes and of Islam).

5. The Federal Republics, e. g., of Switzerland and of the United States, tending toward the republic of Man, through the gradual federation of the world.

We appeal to history, that these integrations, which began by circling the Mediterranean, have been successive, progressive, and a series of ascending steps, until finally the grand republic of civilized peoples already has its foundations laid in the necessities and hearts of all of the peoples of the more advanced nations of the earth.

We say in the necessities, for otherwise the peace, order, and intercourse needful in the further progress of mankind cannot be secured. The only cure for war, conquest, rivalry, or non-intercourse, is federation. In the striking words of VICTOR HUGO, addressed to the present selfish rulers of Europe: "I announce to you a novelty. The HUMAN RACE exists. The era of Federation is at hand." Now it has been abundantly proved by John Fiske, and many others, that the only practicable way in which the federation of mankind can be brought about is by a Congress and then a federation of representative republics. It was the dream of Thomas Paine that America, England, and France would become republics and inaugurate this movement. This conclusion I have been, with many other Liberals, stating and proving for years, but Professor Fiske, in his little work, "American Political Ideas," has left only a reference to his statement of "Manifest Destiny" necessary, and to his work I refer.*

As under our last head we pointed out how all religions could be used and harmonized by incorporation and interpretation into the higher Religion of Humanity, so the various peoples and nations of the earth can only be used, saved, and reconciled by being bound together so as to further the general interests of the world by this projected Federal Republic.

Nor is this idea impractical, utopian, or useless. Our Socialists, and political and economic reformers generally, are mistaken in supposing that their theories can be tried, much less realized, until this republican federative step is at least undertaken. For in no other way can war, conquest, and the fear and danger of war, with its consequent armaments; and war governments with their consequent leaders and officers, emperors and kings, aristocracies, priests, and, in a word, the practical slavery of the people, ever be removed. Until this war regime is over each nation can be little more than a robber in a kind of feudal system of nations, and the people must remain little more than soldiers or serfs. No change in rulers or laws, or treaties, or tariffs, or economics can avail much until this important change is begun. The federal republic of commercial civilized nations is needed now as the indispensable frame-work of the transformation scene wherein shall be revealed the opening of the reign of peace and the law of Humanity on earth. This result should and could be brought about, as Thomas Paine suggested, by a congress of the great maritime nations by delegates to frame a code of international law, and then to provide for its enforcement. If it is not accomplished in this way the English-speaking peoples will bring about the unity of their great populations, and then the rest of the world will hav to be content to occupy a subordinate position to the English in the affairs of this planet. What Bismarck and Prussia did to unite Germany, England will do for the English race and the world, unless the statesmen of Europe are wise enough to anticipate that step by a wiser one of prudence and prominence to their peoples. When destiny is manifest it is time to provide for its alternatives.

Here it is proper to note two or three of the principal errors of Auguste Comte in which the Liberal world have not followed and cannot follow him, and a knowledge of which is necessary to explain his career, and the relations of Liberals to it in view of this movement for a temporal Federal Republic of Mankind.

It is now clear enough that Comte's purpose was formed in early life (and, notwithstanding the efforts of Mill and Littré to the contrary), was substantially adhered to to the day of his death, and bequeathed to his hierachy and its adherents. That purpose was to re-establish as the government of the world the Roman Catholic papal regime of the Middle Ages. This papacy was to rest upon his statement of science, or science at large, instead of theology which science had discredited.

To accomplish this purpose, ever before his eyes, he worked out his grand synthesis of human science and history known as "The Positive Philosophy," and thereupon sought to found his Positive polity, realizing his papal, spiritual regime. The world has largely used his philosophy, and should do so, perhaps, still more freely, while the inevitable law of evolution has shown that his papal project was a social fossil made to order, which no amount of genius or devotion could ever restore to life. The course of historic evolution leads up, not to a papacy, but to the Federal Republic of Man; and Comte's polity is a false deduction in history and sociology. To speak correctly, it was not even a deduction, but a pre-judged conclusion he had inherited from Loyola, De Maistre, and his Catholic parents and ancestors. He had never been out of the shadow of the papacy, and never had any true conception of representative or Federal governments. He regards the Federal Republic of the United States as colonial and temporary. In a word, he was lost in history as soon as he was unable to follow the trail of the Roman Empire, the papacy, and the Latin race. He could not appreciate the view so often pointed out, that the Roman Empire never added (or but little) to what the Roman Republic had acquired; and that the papacy destroyed this empire, and went on, from bad to worse, until the dominant power of humanity passed over to the Germanic and Anglo-Saxon peoples, with their representative chiefs and governments, their parliaments and juries. From them that power is plainly destined never to depart again to make room for any new popes.

Among the reasons why the Latin Papacy can never displace the Federal Republic as the Ideal of the future, it is sufficient to note three, viz:

1. The Papacy was developed by, and is, the government of theology, with its revelation from a God to be imposed and taught as and by authority. It is therefore in its essence despotic, antitemporal, static, and unprogressive. Thus Comte's spiritual polity is retrogressive, and in many respects like Mormonism.

2. The government of the present is, and in the future must be, more and more "of the people, for the people, and by the people" directly, or through agents and representatives responsible to them. This arises from the constant changes in the environments and the conditions of all human societies, great or small. This fact necessitates the practical predominance and extension of the state or temporal power over the administration of human affairs. This administration requires, as above shown, the Federal Union of nations, whose internal governments must rest upon the consent and approval of intelligent peoples, co-operative in republics of their own.

3. Science, and especially social science, is not a fixed and exclusive creed, like the revelations and authority of a theological papacy, but is ever changing and growing, and free to all. Therefore, no papacy can ever be established upon it which can be recognized and sustained by all, and thus be a substitute for a flexible, temporal, general republic, even if one man could ever understand, much less represent, the temporal wants and conditions of the various peoples on the earth; but this no man can do. Even Comte could find no one to succeed him as a pope.

Thus it seems clear that the Federal Republic will be the final repository of the temporal power, while the Universities will be the repositories of learning and science for ages to come, at least. The law of evolution, which is manifest destiny, forbids that Brigham Young shall bring back as our future the theocracy of the Patriarchs, or Auguste Comte the papacy of the Middle Ages.

* "AMERICAN POLITICAL IDEAS, Viewed from the Standpoint of Universal History," by JOHN FISKE (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

Open Letter.

To Grover Cleveland, President of the United States of America:

SIR: I hav just read Your Excellency's proclamation, appointing the 26th day of the present month as a day of national Thanksgiving to "God." And now, by the right of an American citizen, and of one of your most earnest supporters, I respectfully ask you to giv the authority by which you issue this proclamation. In asking this information at your hands, I voice, as I verily believe, the wish of millions of the citizens of our common country. I hope, therefore, that you will cheerfully respond to this letter.

The offering of thanks to a God is, as Your Excellency well knows, a purely religious rite, just as much so as the offering of prayers, the performance of baptism or of mass, etc. As a private individual, you undeniably hav a right to engage in any of these religious rites, and even to exhort others to engage in them. As president of the United States, however, you cannot, as any part of your official duties, either engage in these rites yourself, or exhort others to engage in them.

In the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, we find the following language: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." When called upon to issue some such proclamation as the one you hav just issued, President Jefferson refused to do so, saying: "I consider the government of the United States as interdicted by the Constitution from intermeddling with religious institutions, their doctrins, disciplin, or exercises" (Jefferson's Works, vol. v., p. 236). And Jefferson probably understood the Constitution as thoroughly as any man has ever understood it.

Failing to profit by the example of this great statesman, Your Excellency, in issuing the proclamation in question, has very unwisely, as I think, established a dangerous precedent, or, rather, has followed a dangerous precedent already established, which clearly presupposes that the above-quoted amendment to the Constitution has become null and void, and that a national religion has been established in the United States. Your proclamation clearly takes it for granted that "God," the principal deity of the Christian sect, is already a recognized authority in the United States, and that the people thereof owe him some kind of honor, service, or allegiance. You hav, therefore—I hope not intentionally—prostituted, so far as lay in your power, the almost limitless influence of your high office to the establishing of a theocratic despotism upon the ruins of our republic. Had you thus officially called upon the people to acknowledge their allegiance to Joss, Brahma, Allah, or any other god except the god of the Christians, a howl of indignation unprecedented on earth would hav gone up against you all over the land. You would almost certainly hav brought upon yourself impeachment, if not assassination. And yet your offense, in that case, would not be any greater than it is in the present case. Indeed, it would not be so great, since in that case you would be sustaining a God who has too few followers among us to ever prove dangerous to our government; whereas, in the present case, you are sustaining the cause of a God who, through a large and rapidly growing political party, is making the most strenuous efforts to overthrow the doctrin that "all civil governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," and to hav himself, by constitutional amendment, declared to be "the rightful sovereign of all men, from whom (and not from the people) the just powers of government are derived, to whose laws (given in the Bible, of course, and interpreted by the priests) human enactments should conform" (the parentheses are mine). You hav greatly strengthened this great conspiracy against our liberties by thus giving in your allegiance to the "sovereign" of the conspirators, by urging the people of the United States to acknowledge their allegiance to him by doing him solemn public homage, and by declaring, with the conspirators, "that peace, prosperity, and happiness can come to the people only when their laws of the national and state governments are in accord with the [his] divine will." And who is this would-be "sovereign" of the United States before whose throne you would hav us bow in servil homage on the 26th day of the present month? Is he in any sense an American, and has he ever expressed a truly republican sentiment? Does a republican—does any friend of liberty—ever wish to hav a whole nation emasculate themselvs of their manhood and bow their servil necks to the galling yoke of his single arbitrary will, as interpreted by his army of fawning and well-paid flatterers? In pandering to this great conspiracy, Your Excellency has spoiled a good president and made a poor theologian.

And even admitting that this "God" were our "rightful sovereign," admitting all that your proclamation presupposes—that we do, as a nation, owe him the homage due to a "rightful sovereign"—the reasons you assign why we should offer him solemn thanks on the 26th day of this month are very faulty. Want of space will permit me to notice only a few of these reasons. You say that we should thank this particular God for the "blessings of peace, and for our safety and quiet while wars and rumors of wars hav agitated and afflicted other nations of the earth." But are you sure that any god, and especially this particular God, has had anything to do with our exemption from "wars and rumors of wars?" If not, then are you sure that we owe him any thanks for this exemption? I will ask the same questions also in regard to "our security against the scourge of pestilence, which in other lands has claimed its dead by the thousands, and filled the streets with mourners." What proof can you giv that this security came from any god, and especially this particular God? And if our exemption from this and the other scourges named really be due to this God, this "rightful sovereign," then the question arises, Did we or did we not deserve this exemption? If we did deserve it, then we surely do not owe this God, this rightful sovereign of all men, any thanks on the 26th day of this month, or on any other day, for not scourging us when we had done nothing for which he ought to scourge us. No judge, no rightful sovereign, is entitled to our thanks for not cruelly punishing innocent men. But if we did not deserve exemption from these scourgings, if we were guilty of something for which we ought to hav been scourged, then is this God of yours, this rightful sovereign, entitled to thanks for his monstrous partiality in thus letting us off from deserved punishment, while he cruelly punished his more faithful subjects, the Spaniards and the Canadians? Is any judge, any rightful sovereign, entitled to thanks for turning loose without any punishment a criminal who certainly ought to be punished? Should Your Excellency, by having thanks offered to this God for his unjust partiality, encourage him in so reprehensible a course? This year he is unjustly partial toward us. Next year, if the showing of partiality becomes a fixed habit with him, he may be just as unjustly partial against us. Let us not, by offering him undeserved thanks, render his character any worse than it is. Remember that he is a chronic office-seeker, and remember, too, that your high office makes your influence almost boundless with individuals of this class. Do not abuse that influence!

You argue that we should thank your particular God for "plenteous crops which reward the labor of the husbandman and increase our nation's wealth, and for the contentment throughout our borders which follows in the train of prosperity and abundance." Are you sure that your God had anything to do with our plenteous crops? And if he had, did he do anything more than his duty? Did not the husbandmen, by their faithful labor, earn a right to plenteous crops? And is this God of yours entitled to thanks for not depriving them of these rights? Is any man entitled to thanks because he refrains from burning his children's houses or otherwise unjustly injuring them?

As to the "contentment," the "prosperity," etc., of which you speak, they do not exist among the great laboring masses. While it is true that the Clevelands, the Beechers, and other fortunate persons who are drawing enormous salaries—while it is true that the Goulds, the Vanderbilts, the Stanfords, and other great monopolists—are enjoying great "prosperity" and "contentment," there never was a time in the history of our country in which want, discontent, and crime—the inevitable result of want and discontent—were so rife among the great laboring masses, the sole producers of "our nation's wealth." When were labor strikes—the premonitory symptoms of revolution—more frequent, more extensiv, or more determined than at present? When were our roads more thronged with want-made tramps? When were our cities, towns, and villages more crowded with prostitutes, selling their womanhood for bread? When were our hospitals and poorhouses more crowded with wretched inmates, without visibly diminishing the want and disease that reign outside? When were our asylums more crowded with want-ruined intellects, without visibly diminishing the mental suffering that reigns outside? When were our prisons more crowded with want-made criminals without visibly diminishing the criminality that reigns outside? When were our Potter's Fields more crowded with the graves of paupers, the victims of starvation or of suicide, without visibly diminishing the armies of paupers and of prospectiv suicides that still move mournfully on outside? Are we to thank your "God"—the God of the rich only—for this state of things? Are we, the laborers, under any obligations to thank your "God" for having inspired Your Excellency to favor the demonetization of silver, a measure calculated to greatly enhance the value of gold and to increase the enormous profits of the bankers, gold merchants, and other capitalists, and to greatly augment the want, the discontent, the suffering, and the consequent insanity, criminality, and other evils which prevail among the laboring classes? Are we to thank him also for having inspired our government to hoard up in the public treasury hundreds of millions of dollars, thus enhancing the gains of the bankers by creating a scarcity of money and compelling the people to pay to these financial cormorants ruinous rates of interest, when these immense sums of hoarded money should be expended in liquidating the public debt (?) (fraud), thus diminishing the burden of taxation now borne by the people, and, by making money plenty among them, render them no longer the victims of the bankers?

You, and others of the fortunate few to whom he has given "prosperity and contentment," may do so if you like. I, however, and the millions of others whose toils hav produced all the wealth enjoyed by these fortunate few, but whose own lives hav been embittered by cold, hunger, and anxiety, owe him no thanks, and I, for one, will giv him none. I hav no use for any such God, and I hav very little use for a president, or other official, who is willing to thus prostitute the powers of his office to the foisting of such a "God," such a would-be "sovereign," with his vast armies of worse than useless parasites, upon the already overburdened American people.

Yours truly, JOHN R. KELSO.

Longmont, Col., Nov. 15, 285.

No Mud on Colonel Ingersoll's Boots.

I notice in the daily papers attacks upon Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, as a party to the alleged fraudulent land entries in Colfax county, N. M. One paper says that "the history of the quarter section upon which the colonel's log-cabin stands indicates that the claim upon and under which it is held is fraudulent, and that the name in which that claim is entered is fictitious. Such at least is the report of Inspector Hobbs."

It is true that Inspector Hobbs reported that the land had not been cultivated, and that he believed that there was no such person as Abeytia, who was the homestead claimant. This does not prove that Ingersoll had any knowledge of any fraud.

The facts in regard to Colonel Ingersoll are that when the claim was proved up he had no knowledge of the fact. The land was examined by Inspector Dunn, who reported no fraud in the proof under date of November 8, 1883. This land was then in the possession of S. W. Dorsey. This report was filed in the Department of the Interior at Washington.

The receiver's certificate was issued April 12, 1883, and the land deeded to S. W. Dorsey May 3, 1883. Inspector Hobbs's report was not filed until June 21, 1884.

In March, 1884, John B. Alley, Murry Nelson, and Colonel Ingersoll purchased the Bosler interest in the Palo Blanco Cattle Company, and certain ranch lands of S. W. Dorsey. This Abeytia claim was reserved by Mr. Dorsey, and soon after he announced that he was going to build a log-cabin on it and present it to Colonel Ingersoll. The house was in process of construction when Hobbs visited the land. When the report was completed it was not made public until February 28, 1885. From July, 1884, to October, 1884, Colonel Ingersoll was on the Pacific coast, and came to Chico Springs, N. M., about October 14th, and remained one month. The land, however, was not deeded to him until January, 1885. This homestead application of Miguel Abeytia was indorsed "No fraud (see report 1883, 105, 910, in Div. P., General Land Office, Washington, D.C.)."

This record shows that Colonel Ingersoll was no party to fraud, even if he had been a purchaser of the land. But the land was given to him.

Inspector Hobbs, in his report, says he was informed the improvements were being made by Colonel Ingersoll. He was wrongly informed. Senator Dorsey made them. He was the owner of the land. He had an opportunity to know whether there was fraud or not in the proof. Colonel Ingersoll was not in a position to know anything about it.

If the land was entered by fraud, his hands are clean.

But the newspaper judges who are crying fraud seem to think it is sufficient cause to cancel a claim because a special agent reports that he believes there was no such man as Abeytia. The interior department has ruled that in every case a hearing must be had; that the special agent must first make out his case at the hearing by witnesses produced and examined. No such hearing has been had, nor has Mr. Inspector Dunn been proceeded against criminally. If his report is a fraud; if he has violated his oath of office in filing it, why does this reform administration allow him to go scot-free?

If he has filed a false report, let him be punished. Special agents who fail to do their duty, or file false reports, need to be attended to, and public censure should follow them, and not be placed upon men who are put in a false position by their official reports.

If editors wish to put down fraud, let them attack the guilty persons instead of attacking men who abhor fraud, and are innocent of it. To attack the innocent is dishonorable. Such defamation is a crime.

Springer, N. M., Nov. 12, 1885. W. S. BUSH.

CATALOG of the Truth Seeker Company's publications sent free upon application.

Lawyer Chamberlain Expresses an Opinion.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: A few points seem to be lost sight of in the discussion of the Albany arrest, which ought to be supplied. In the first place, as a matter of fact, there was nothing obscene or offensiv in Mr. Seward Mitchell's paper. The discharge of the accused proves this, but it would hav been the fact none the less if he had been held. Secondly, the paper was not put forth as the utterance of the Convention, and neither the Convention nor any individual present, except Mr. Mitchell, was at all responsible for it. These two considerations made the intervention of Mr. Palmer not only unnecessary, but undignified. The same dishonesty, malignity, and falsehood that made the charge of obscenity also made the effort to connect it with the Convention. The infamous purpose was manifest. The same scoundrels who did this stand ready to vilify Mr. Palmer or anyone else for the glory of God. They will incarcerate on false or frivolous charges, by means of corrupt judges, and chuckle over it, as they did in Bennett's case. Indeed, an Albany editor did not scruple to say that "twenty years in a dungeon was inadequate punishment" for Mr. Mitchell. Christianity is driven to the last ditch. The only argument now left is abuse. The accusation that Liberals are unclean must be expected. It must be met, and it should be met with dignity.

New York, Nov. 14, 1885. ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

A Rejoinder from Mr. Palmer.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Heywood, and Mrs. Severance miss the whole point of my letter entitled "That Arrest at Albany." They hav no warrant in describing me as a Freethinker assailing Freethought. My attitude at Albany involves no such inference. I would deny to none of the above parties, and to no man, the right or exercise of free speech or free printing. Nay, I go further and applaud them for their courage and devotion in publishing and defending their unpopular convictions.

I neither entered nor proposed to enter, however, into the merits or demerits of the sex and marriage question. The only point I made, and on that I am clear, is that at that time and under those circumstances, in the face of a convention held for a special and well-defined purpose, it was not only unbrotherly and discourteous, but also an invasion of freedom, for them to force their Freelove issues upon us. A man's house is his castle; the hired hall of a convention is its castle, and the one should be as free from intrusion as the other.

The question of the marriage relation I regard as not only the most delicate but the most difficult in sociology. I hav studied it most carefully on all sides, and hav not yet been able to come to a full and fixed conclusion concerning it. If ever I do definitivly make up my mind, I trust I shall hav no fear about expressing my belief, no matter how radical a conviction I may arrive at.

I fully indorse the resolution which we passed at Albany affirming that "Liberty is the mother and nurse of all reform," but as far as my insight now leads me, I can only see that a free and equal lifelong union between one man and one woman, based upon affection, character, and common sense, is the highest ideal, and that in order to realize it much in the way of impulse should be sacrificed.

COURTLANDT PALMER.

Lecturer Stewart's Views.

MR. PALMER, Dear Sir: Allow me to congratulate you on your manly, dignified letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER. We cannot afford to recognize the pestiferous nonsense known as social freedom, and advocated by a certain class of alleged Liberals. It will swamp any cause that touches it, and it ought to.

I tried to commit the Cleveland Convention, by introducing the following resolution, but the committee deemed it advisable not to adopt it:

Resolved, That the moral code of civilization is not the result of any system of theology, but is the outgrowth of human development, and it is therefore the duty of all true Liberals to render obedience to all the principles of morality which lie at the foundation of social order and harmony.

I need not say, "Stand your ground," for I know you will do so without any such admonition.

Ottumwa, Iowa. C. W. STEWART.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER.—Mr. Stewart offered the resolution in committee, but we suggested that to put in such an exhortation would imply that Liberals had departed from "all the principles which lie at the foundation of social order and harmony," and as we were not aware that they had so departed, or needed his exhortation to be virtuous, the resolution would be superfluous and a slur upon them. In our opinion, the last part of the resolution would more appropriate in a congress of ministers. It certainly was not be needed among the body of men and women assembled at Cleveland, nor for Liberals at large. Mr. Stewart acquiesced in this view, and he matter was dropped.

We are Glad You Hav Found It Out.

The intolerance and aggressivness of the Romish church is asserting itself more and more with the increase of numbers. Whereunto this thing will grow unless arrested by an aroused public sentiment is readily seen by a glance at Roman Catholic countries or a slight examination of history.—Southern Christian Advocate.

The Liberal Club.

The capacity of the hall where the Manhattan Liberal Club held its 389th regular meeting was none too great for the audience which assembled on that occasion. The crowd round the treasurer's table was so large that the man with the badge-pin, by the exercise of a little timely activity, was enabled to get in at the same rate as a Presbyterian. While looking about for a seat the visitor took occasion to note the alarming increase of lady attendants at the club. More than one-half, perhaps, were of that sex; the rest of the audience, of course, were males. A curious fact as to the latter was remarked: though many of them were well along in years, there was to be seen hardly any of those bald and shining domes of thought which attract the vagrant fly in church or reflect the gaslight from the front seats at the ballet.

Dr. R. G. Eccles was the speaker of the evening, and "The Knowable versus the Unknowable" was his subject. As has been before remarked in these reports, the word versus in the title of a lecture is always full of vague and inscrutable significance, but when, as in the present case, the knowable runs up against the unknowable, it is to be expected that the contest will be one of exciting interest. And so it proved. The discussion arose out of the differences of belief between the Agnostics, represented by Herbert Spencer, and the Positivists, represented by Frederic Harrison, the speaker taking sides with Mr. Spencer.

Dr. Eccles opened proceedings promptly. Said he: "Whatever is is unknowable. The unknowable is the all. Our knowledge is as a broken window; the unknowable is the stone that shatters it. As the fingers that touch our ribs are not identical with the tickle, so what we see in the landscape does not convey to us the real facts. The earliest form of worship placed a ghost in everything. Nature worship developed out of ghost worship. The reverence evoked by wonder will always remain. Those who do not reverence the unknowable never think about it at all. Not one particle of credit is due to humanity for the progress it has made. Our fathers were forced by the unknowable to be better than their progenitors. The overruling power did it all. Philanthropy is not worship. Morality is not reverence. Prayer is the soul's sincere desire spoken or unexpressed; the motion of a hidden fire that trembles in the breast. It is the province of the Atheist to prove that there is no God, because the Theist is the first in the field, and has the majority with him. Who can tell what is impossible with the unknowable? The universe itself may be a ponderous brain. Why do things gravitate toward a common center? A man goes to dinner because he is hungry. Nature may get hungry. It looks mightily like it was. I would suggest that the theory which looks upon all mind as matter and upon all matter as mind is the only tenable one."

The speaker concluded by reciting a hymn, and was heartily applauded by Madam Delescluze. Mr. Wakeman explained that he would like to make some observations upon the discourse to which we had listened, but was under stipulation to play the corpse that Dr. Eccles had been dissecting. The floor was now open. Members of the club had the preference in speeches of ten minutes each.

It was some time before any one moved. The average member of the Liberal Club is careful about fooling with the unknowable; but at length Mr. King was seen going forward, and the applause was immense. Mr. King, who is a Positivist, did not recognize whom the lecturer had been dissecting, but he thought the corpse had been having a pretty quiet time. Mr. King took no stock in Agnosticism. It was the title chosen by Spencer to distinguish him from the general run of Atheists, but it meant practically the same as Atheist. Agnostic was no better word than Atheist. A man might feel better by calling himself an Agnostic, but he was no better. Five cents' worth of George Jacob Holyoake's tracts, obtainable at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, would throw more light on the subject than all Spencer ever wrote. Mr. King believed in reverencing the highest thing a person might know of. A man's mother, for instance, was worthy of respect. Dr. Eccles would hav the son regard his maternal parent as merely a product of nature. "The man," concluded Mr. King, "who contends that there is no good in humanity is going to get left."

Mr. Langerfelt took the platform next, and everybody was pleased to see him, as he had not been there before for some time. He said that the discussion seemed to be about terms, and otherwise there was little disagreement. Mr. Spencer's object was "deanthropomorphization." This word marched once around the hall and then went out the door and started toward the East river. A sea serpent was reported the next day by a Long Island fisherman.

Dr. Kinget said that if Spencer agreed with the lecturer he feared he was returning to his infancy. It sometimes happened that early teachings resumed their sway over the reason when the mind was weakened by old age. Dr. Kinget held that the Atheist was no more bound to disprove the existence of God than he was to disprove the existence of a man in the moon were the latter asserted. He who affirms must prove. There was more practical work before mankind than standing in open-mouthed awe before the unknowable.

Dr. Eccles replied to his critics with great energy and length, the one being limited only by his capacity and the other being cut off by the president, who told him he would hav to stop if he intended to catch the last train home. The doctor sorrowfully admitted the necessity of stopping sometime, and there was hearty and long-continued applause. The verdict was that the speaker had made the greatest effort of his life.

The same subject will be continued in the next meeting, Mr. Wakeman participating, and it is reasonable to assume that he will not play the corpse on that occasion. The whole business can be taken in for five cents. Presbyterians and Mr. Shook need not pay anything.

Passing Notes.

The ultimate results of the recent Cleveland Convention will largely depend upon the continued activity of friends throughout the country. To meet in Congress and decide upon a definit course of action is the right thing to do. But that is by no means all that is required. Such decision must be followed by both individual and concerted action, and this is what is now desirable to be done by every Freethinker and Secularist in the States and Canada who is anxious to see the Liberal cause succeed as a public factor.

While still having the honor of being first vice-president of the Union, I hav preferred, for this year at least, not to renew my official connection as lecturer similar to that I had last year. Being upon my own responsibility, I shall be the more free to ascertain what should be done and to gain practical knowledge as to how to do it.

From the Convention I proceeded to Boston, where I lectured to two grand audiences. Alluding to my visit, the Boston Investigator says:

> Both of these lectures were among the very best we ever heard. As a logical reasoner and an eloquent orator, pleasing in style and dramatic in manner, Charles Watts is entitled to rank with the most popular and attractiv speakers in the country. His audiences were large and enthusiastic, applauding heartily nearly every sentence he uttered, and they will be very glad of the opportunity to giv him another fraternal welcome to Boston.

It will afford me much pleasure to revisit our Boston friends at the earliest opportunity. The very warm reception afforded me and the many marks of kindness shown me during my eight days' stay in the city will not be soon forgotten. Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Ernest Mendum, and Mr. G. N. Hill are gentlemen worth knowing. Their company is not only interesting but intellectually profitable.

My next scene of labor was Greenwich, Mass., where I gave five lectures in the very hotbed of orthodoxy. These were the first Secular addresses ever delivered in this pious town. To Mr. Chandler M. Powers is the credit due for making the arrangements for the lectures. The particulars of this very excitable event hav already appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator, and I refer to the matter now principally to express my pleasure at meeting that veteran reformer, Parker Pillsbury, who presided on each occasion. Although time begins to tell upon his physical powers, ample indications remain of that mental force which in the past did such useful work in the antislavery and temperance movements.

On Nov. 1st and 2d I spoke three times in Philadelphia, where I found crowded audiences, although a much larger hall had been engaged than the one I had spoken in on my previous visits.

George Longford is as activ as ever. He is certainly a most hard-working and consistent officer—a service and a credit to any society.

Professor Seymour is doing good work in the interest of real Liberalism, while Mr. Burgess, from England, manifests the same love of duty and desire for practical Secularism that he always evinced in the old country.

Last Sunday I lectured twice in Pittsburgh—to crowded audiences on each occasion. There was not even standing-room left, the ante rooms being also filled. The daily papers on Monday gave a very fair epitome of the lectures. Of course I could not escape being "interviewed" on reaching Pittsburgh. It was not my fortune to do so on previous occasions. This time the reporters discovered my whereabouts, and were anxious to know my opinions upon the political situation in the old country—the Irish difficulty, and the prospect of the coming English elections. Two of the principal Sunday papers contained a lengthy account of my views upon these subjects.

It appears to me that there is a good future open for the Pittsburgh Secular Society. Most of the members are men and women of the right stamp, many of whom occupy prominent positions both socially and commercially in the town. The society has an excellent little paper of its own, Truth, which is carefully edited by Mr. Pearce. During my visit I attended several social meetings. Referring to one of these gatherings held at the residence of one of the principal members of the association, the Sunday Traveler says:

> A reception was tendered Mr. Charles Watts, of London, England, by Mr. and Mrs. George H. Abel Thursday night. The spacious parlors of Mr. Abel's residence on Smithfield street were filled with guests who were anxious to meet this noted speaker. After the reception, which was thoroughly enjoyed by all who participated, an elegant supper was served. Among those who took part were Robert Rogers and wife, John Mongel and wife, S. F. DeJones, Frank Baker, Harry Hoover, W. S. Douthitt, and Roman Staley.

I hav received from Mr. Sturgis, of Upper Sandusky, a very artistically executed crayon likeness taken from a photograph of myself. It is full size, and in the opinion of those who are capable of judging, it is an excellent work of art. This is not the first specimen that Mr. Sturgis has given of his unique ability as an artist, as those who hav seen the crayon portrait by this gentleman of the late D. M. Bennett well know. I thank Mr. Sturgis for his valuable present, and sincerely hope that our friend will receive that business support from Freethinkers in the States which he undoubtedly deserves.

A CORRECTION.

There is evidently an impression among the Liberals of the country that I am at present engaged by the American Secular Union to lecture, for which I am paid out of the funds of the Union. Permit me to state that this is an erroneous idea. I am, of course, lecturing in the interest of the Union, but entirely upon my own responsibility, and do not derive any pecuniary advantage whatever from the Association. I prefer this course at present, so that the directors may hav the means at their command to do what in their judgment is necessary to advance the interest of the great Secular movement in this vast country.

Nov. 19, 1885. CHARLES WATTS.

Pennsylvania State Convention.

After the meeting of the Board of Directors of the American Secular Union on Thursday, Nov. 5th, to discuss and plan measures for the general advancement of the cause, and under advice of our secretary, S. P. Putnam, I proceeded to Philadelphia to consult with Prof. Wm. Seymour, president of the Pennsylvania State League, as to time and place to hold the Pennsylvania state annual meeting.

Having notified the professor of our intended visit, we were agreeably surprised on the evening of our arrival at his hospitable home to find that he had assembled about twenty friends to welcome us. Elegant music was provided, and we enjoyed a most delightful evening. Among the friends we were proud and glad to greet were Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Longford, and the ever genial, fearless advocate of Liberalism, Wm. Burrow. To George Longford more than to any other is Philadelphia indebted for the success of its Liberal organization.

In consultation it was decided, subject to the approval of the friends there, that Pittsburgh would be the best place, and the first or second week of December the best possible time, to hold the State Convention.

It is proposed to exercise rigid economy, hav the Convention a really representativ meeting of the Liberals of the state, at which the wants, needs, and wishes of every part of the state shall be considered; to depend mainly on the talent within the state for speakers; and to promote sociability by closing with ball and supper. If the workers of Pittsburgh approve, the success of the Convention is assured. They are excelled by none in providing feasts of reason. When it comes to ball and supper, they are simply unapproachable. Friends at Pittsburgh hav the matter under advisement. We hope to giv positiv appointment in the next issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

C. B. REYNOLDS,
Sec. Penn. State Liberal League.

Freethought in the Orient.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav much pleasure in informing you that the old "Hindoo Freethought Union" in this city has been reinforced by numerous European and Caucasian friends of the cause, and that its name has been changed to the "Madras Secular Society," to allow of these friends joining as members.

A circular (copy of which I hav forwarded to you with the Thinker) has been addressed to Freethinkers all over India, asking for their aid in the good cause which is making such rapid progress all over the world.

A hearty response is expected to the circular, and steps will be soon taken to provide a good meeting room and library, and to improve the size and tone of the Thinker, the organ of the society.

I hav to request that you will kindly giv the society a copy of your valuable paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, in exchange for the Thinker.

The gain will, of course, be all on our side, but as it will be laid on the library table of the society, we hope that some of our members will be led to subscribe for it.

JOHN UPSHON, Hon. Sec.
Madras, India.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.
Vice-Presidents.

CHARLES WATTS, JOHN E. REMSBURG, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, MATTIE P. KREKEL, ELIZUR WRIGHT, JAMES PARTON, HORACE SEAVER, PARKER PILLSBURY, WILLIAM ALGIE, ROBERT C ADAMS, TITUS L. BROWN, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York.
COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.
CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com.
E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$1,437.22
Wm. Wadsworth (paid),	1.00
Q. S. Sheppard (paid),	1.50
Mrs. Donbaband (paid),	1.00
Mrs. E. G. Robinson (paid),	1.00
C. D. Greenall (pledged),	1.00
Thos. Knight (annual member),	1.00
Elijah Schurman, " "	1.00
R. W. Barcroft (paid),	5.00
John Dainton "	1.00
Geo. Longford "	1.00
Wm. Cullington "	1.00
Luke W. Gallup "	1.00
F. A. Day "	2 00
Louis Munter (annual member),	1.00
Total,	1,456.72

PLEDGES PAID.—John Downes, 4.00

The Union has been presented with five volumes of Voltaire's Romances by Peter Eckler, and 1,000 copies of "Ingersoll Catechised," by C. P. Farrell. These are for sale by the secretary, for the benefit of the Union.

CORRECTION.—On the list of contributors to the Campaign Fund at Cleveland, acknowledged Oct. 24th, the name of Daniel Kitchen, of Massillon, O., should replace that of Samuel Watson.

The Opening of the Museums on Sundays.

This movement meets with the hearty co-operation of the press. The New York Herald, the Times, the Post, the News, hav openly declared in favor of the petition. No doubt the people generally outside of the churches are also of the same mind, and what is required is the largest possible expression of public opinion. This opening of the museums is especially desirable for the workingman. It helps to giv him a happy Sunday. It relieves him from the misery that too often accompanies his weekly toil. As John Swinton says, there could be no greater boon than such a Sunday, where the treasures of human art and history are placed before the eyes, and noble thoughts are excited. John Swinton refers to the beautiful Sundays of Paris, where all the museums and galleries are open—the Louvre, the Luxembourg, etc., and amid whose immense halls and corridors nearly half a million people enjoy the magnificence of art. What an example for our nation to follow, especially New York, so cosmopolitan, and yet in many respects so narrow and stupid! Let us learn of illustrious Paris, where the art of living has been so excellently attained. And Sunday for the people is what we need, and the American Secular Union, in the way of its Nine Demands, could not accomplish a more practical good than the opening of the museums on Sunday. Much will be accomplished in every way by such a success. It will be the triumph of the Secular idea. It will be a means of education. It will be for the happiness of the world, and it will giv dignity to labor, for Sunday will be for the millions, instead of being, as it now is, the Sabbath of the rich who worship on their cushioned pews, while the coachmen hav to sit and get along the best they can outside the elegant churches, in all sorts of weather, rain or shine, with only one consolation, and that is, that they don't hav to listen to dull sermons, which, no doubt, is the worst affliction of pious wealth. Instead of this gloomy Sunday dedicated to hypocrisy and tyranny, there should be a glorious holiday for the people, so that all the delights of the outward world—the sunshine and the flowers, the woods and the streams—shall help make sweet their lives; and with these the elevation of mind, thought, and deed, the music in the park, and the noblest strains of melody that reveal inner depths of nature, and the treasures of science, of natural history, of the past, giving hope to the future. If such a Sunday as this could be had in New York, the old, gloomy regime would receive a deadly blow. Would not such a Sunday be a minister of liberty and progress? Would not a free Sunday help to diminish the slavery of week-day toil, and bring amelioration for the bitter lot of so many? No doubt all Liberals throughout the country will feel deepest interest in this endeavor for a real holiday and Sunday for the people, for the sake of humanity, and not for the sake of God.

However, though there is such a vast interest in this matter, a prodigious amount of work must be done in order to reach the desired end. John Swinton says that two hundred thousand names should be on the petition. That number of names could be obtained if the proper instrumentalities could be used. But right here is the difficulty. Our means are not so great as they should be for the thorough accomplishment of this work. It takes time and money to reach two hundred thousand people and hav them cast their vote. It behooves everyone, therefore, who is interested in the matter to do his level best to secure signatures to this petition, and to induce others to work in the same direction, and in every possible way advertise the fact that there is such a petition at the headquarters of the Union, 33 Clinton Place, to be had upon application. One man cannot do this needed work. It is necessary that all friends should join in and voluntarily advance the matter, for we hav not those financial means at hand by which otherwise a thorough canvass could be had of the whole city, and a vast and significant expression of public opinion made. I hope that no one will be lax in this matter under the impression that we are on "the crest of the wave," and are bound to sweep to victory whether or no. This is a mistake. The opinion of the majority is with us, but this opinion must be crystallized, bodied forth, put into a material shape in the form of a solid petition, before it can be made available for success. There is a determined opposition to the opening of the museums on Sunday. Money has been and is given with the express understanding that they should be kept closed on Sunday, so there is a dark mass of bigotry right in our way, not easily to be overthrown, not to yield unless there is a most imposing expression of public will.

Already many signatures hav been received from leading men and officials of the city, and if there is only a sufficient effort put forth by every Liberal in New York city, there is every prospect of winning the battle. But it cannot be won unless there is a most enthusiastic and continued action among all the friends of progress of every shade of opinion.

The American Secular Union has been enabled to take an effectual part in this movement, because it is a national organization, and all the power of the Liberal element throughout the country can be brought to bear for the time being upon this most favorable point. All Liberals from Maine to California are interested in the movement in New York city, and through the Secular Union can lend a hand and giv power and the needed instrumentalities of work. If we were to depend simply upon the local element, it might not be strong enough to consolidate for effectiv campaigning, but by this national combination of all scattered forces, a unity is created which makes a great gain for local advancement. We, in New York city, depend upon all the friends of freedom in the land for moral and financial aid in this battle for a people's Sunday. Let us win here, and all will feel the prosperity of the result, and will be stronger in their own localities. If our forces in New York score a victory, if we make an impression at Albany in the matter of legislation, so that a present failure will make our success in the future, then we hav done that which will be of universal benefit, and will enhance the power of Liberalism in every community, and from these points of advantage the Union can go on to other points in other states and cities, and by its unity of forces accomplish still another triumph. We must select points and push the attack at weak places of the enemy, and thus each year will see something attained toward the goal of perfect liberty and universal progress.

I hope that all Liberals will realize the importance of the American Secular Union in this regard, and feel wherever they are that they hav a deep personal interest in this matter of opening the museums in Central Park, and so aid, in every possible way, the work that is now going on, for the victory will be of immense significance to the whole national life of the Liberal party.

MOST IMPORTANT.

The time of the secretary of the Union is at present occupied with the petitions both for New York and Albany, to be acted upon this winter, and with lectures in places neighboring to New York, both Sundays and week days, as required, and correspondence with the various Leagues and Liberal friends in all parts of the country; the preparing of blanks, circulars, etc., for the formation of new societies, all of which requires a large amount of office work, and which precludes for the present work in the field. After January, when the needs of this work hav been fairly met, the secretary will take the lecture field for activ campaigning for several months, to speak every night, if possible, in every place wherever an audience can be gathered together. He will speak in the interests of the American Secular Union. to show its work, its aims and methods, the justice of the Nine Demands, and in every way possible forward the fellowship of Liberals throughout the country upon these Demands. He proposes to visit the far Western friends of our cause—to cross the Nevadas and look upon the blue Pacific. He has had calls from every section of the country, and he desires to fulfil them. In order to do so, however, there must be a combination of effort, and a course marked out so that in a trip from the Atlantic to the Pacific he can reach the greatest number of communities. He desires especially to visit Colorado, Texas, Utah, and all the Pacific states and territories, California, Oregon, etc., wherever a Liberal center finds a place for him to speak, in a hall or log-cabin—anywhere. If one cannot secure a hall, let him arrange for a meeting in his own house. Hav a meeting of some sort, some manifestation of hope, and it will do good. So let all friends communicate at once with the secretary of the Union, in order that arrangements for the Western tour can be made. so as to produce at the least expense the largest possible results. By such a personal effort the Liberals of the East and West, of the North and South, can be brought into a better and more powerful companionship, for the secretary will giv full reports of all meetings, etc., and thus in a manner Liberals will be introduced to each other, and know how the work is going on in a hundred different localities.

VINELAND, N. J.

On Sunday, Nov. 22d, I was at this beautiful village, which is quite alive with reform of every kind, and I felt quite at home and enjoyed my Sunday's work very much indeed. In the morning I lectured on the "Work of the American Secular Union," and in the evening on "The Demands of Humanity." Almost all my audience were of the Spiritualistic persuasion, and they do say that the spirits—good ones, of course—did hover about my brain. However that may be, there was delightful harmony, for the genuin Spiritualist is a genuin Secularist, who believes in making the very best of this world and would work for humanity as the noblest duty of the hour. There is nothing to separate, for a philosophic belief in a future life which shall be the fruit of this, grand and beautiful, because one has endeavored to make this life so—such a belief is by no means antagonistic to the Secular philosophy. It is simply a broadening of the field of labor—that is all. It does not change the kind of labor, the motiv for which we work, nor the value of the results here and now. It adds hope, but it does not make this life nothing, nor does it create a tyranny like that of church belief, which limits instead of amplifying human joy and effort. I found the most cordial acceptance among these noble Spiritualistic friends, who are most devoted to human emancipation. Mrs. Mary E. Tillotson, well known, I guess, to most Liberals, is full of cheeriness, good hope, and health. She believes most thoroughly in dress reform, that shall make for the physical welfare of woman. I think she must be about right, for she bears her age of almost seventy, quite lightly, as if she were twenty years younger, and I hav no doubt that, with her bright philosophy, exultant and unconquerable spirit, and free exercise in the open air, she will liv to a century and thus see many a triumph of reform that to-day seems almost impossible. She is secretary of the society here, and does her duty well amid many discouragements. Mr. Street, the president, is quite enthusiastic, and a steadfast worker, a thoroughgoing Spiritualist, but an ardent believer in reform here and now, and of poetic fervor.

Mr. A. C. Cotton, editor of the Rostrum, is doing first-rate local work for reform, and is animated by a most liberal spirit. Mr. Young, the eloquent lecturer now here, is in cordial sympathy also with our work, and will join heart and hand for its success. Vineland is indeed quite a place for the gathering together of the friends of progress, and I think that eventually a Union will be in operation here for practical good. However, there are sixteen churches in this place of seven thousand people, and so, of course, there is a very great deal to be done before all obstacles can be removed.

These are pretty heavy battalions to work against with a church to every five hundred inhabitants. Satan's kingdom is not tumbling down quite yet. He has too good a bank account for that.

I enjoyed a pleasant call upon Mr. and Mrs. Gage, subscribers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, who for many years hav been stanch advocates of emancipation, and whose old age is illuminated with all the bright rays of mental liberty, and so they seem as young as ever in the ardor of their Freethought convictions.

And so, with a pleasant memory and many a bright hope, and illuminated perhaps by a thousand spirits, and touched by the magnetic influence of the Summer Land, I leave these friends of Vineland who hav done so much for liberty, and whose work will end only with life, and who will indeed hav the immortality that belongs to noble purpose.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Lectures and Meetings.

THE Wisconsin State Association of Spiritualists will hold their next quarterly meeting in Armory Hall, Portage, Wis., Dec. 11, 12, and 13, 1885. All interested in Freethought are invited to participate. The platform is a free one. Dr. J. C. Phillips, of Omro, Wis., is secretary.

W. F. JAMIESON is just closing his debate with Elder J. W. Damon in the Christian church, Savannah, Mo. He is engaged to deliver lectures in the following named towns: Morrill, Kan., November 26th, 27th, 28th; Paola, Kan., December 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th; Union Star, Mo., December 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th. Debate with Elder D. R. Dungan, of Des Moines, Ia., beginning December 22d. Six sessions at Maitland, Mo. Address, Paola, Kan.

THE Ottumwa, Iowa, Daily Democrat, of the 15th, givs notice that "Mr. John E. Remsburg, one of the most noted speakers in the field of Liberal thought, will lecture at Liberal Hall, Sunday forenoon and evening; also on Monday evening. His subjects will be, 'Sabbath Breaking,' 'False Claims' and 'Bible Morals.' Mr. Remsburg is recommended by United States Senator Ingalls, United States District Judge Arnold Krekel, and many others."

NOVEMBER 17th, 18th, 19th, and 20th Prof. W. F. Jamieson debated with J. W. Damon, Christian, at Savannah, Mo. Mr. Jamieson affirmed that the Bible is of human origin, and Genesis and geology are irreconcilable, both of which propositions the Christian denied, affirming in his turn that the teachings of the Bible are moral and ennobling, and that Christianity is conduciv to the moral and intellectual elevation of mankind. Mr. Jamieson denied these assertions. We hav no report of the debate, but presume—leaving Mr. Jamieson's ability out of the question—that the Infidel had the best of his opponent, because he had the right side of the argument.

THE Wabash Weekly Courier reports Mr. Bell's lecture in that place in these words: "Prof. W. S. Bell, of Chicago, an advocate of what certain misguided citizens euphoniously term 'Freethought,' but which is neither more nor less than rank Atheism, addressed a corporal's guard composed chiefly of scoffers at Infidelity at the city hall on Tuesday night. Bell is a bright man, an interesting speaker, and it is to be regretted that he should hav chosen his present erratic course. The idea of which these apostles of 'Freethought' are possessed is a cranky one. In this broad republic every man has the privilege of thinking as he pleases on all subjects, and the people who entertain the belief that there is a God, a heaven, and a hell, are not disposed to persecute Mr. Bell and other workers in, as Mr. Arthur Everett puts it, 'the cause which needs assistance,' because of their queer notions."

For the Bruno Statue at Rome.

Wm. Thorpe,	$1.00
Lewis Garlick,	1.00
Thomas Knight,	1.00
R. W. Barcroft,	1.00
John Dainton,	1.00
S. Graham,	1.00
John Malonski,	1.75
F. A. Day,	.70

Mr. Reynolds's Tent Fund.

R. W. Barcroft,	$4.00
Geo. Longford,	1.00
F. A. Day,	1.00
Thayer D. White,	10.00

Communications.

Library Vandals.

I am a stranger in your city, but through the courtesy of one of the directors of that remarkably fine collection of books, the Mercantil Library, I was recently enabled to examin a large number of volumes. I hav made the same sort of examination of books in leading libraries in eight or ten of the large cities of America, in all of which cities I hav found evidence of the vandalism of ignorant partisans and bigoted sectarians.

The most valuable books are disfigured by marginal notes which show the capacity of the readers in no enviable light. And these vandalisms are not committed by young and light readers, as the character of the books will show, as well as the mature penmanship. For example, Buckle's "History of Civilization" is annotated and marked throughout, and you can tell the religious belief of almost every one (and there are a number of different ones represented) who saw fit to display his ignorance or malice at the expense, and through the medium, of an institution so important as the Mercantil Library. The most copious and frequent display is made by some one who is a Roman Catholic. In many cases, where Buckle has made a point, this reader does not follow the argument beyond the first line or two, when he immediately proceeds to indite a marginal note of denial, or protest, or ridicule, the basis for all of which is fitly disposed of if he had only read far enough before he had his spasm to take the position taken by the author. This fact does not deter him from making the same silly blunder on the next page. He never seems to learn to wait until the close of an argument before he rushes at it and beats his own brains (or what serves him in that capacity) out against the authors' bulwarks. Then a Predestinarian takes up the fight, and it is amusing—if it were not so disgusting—to see him sail between Scylla and Charybdis. He wants to refute Buckle, but he yearns equally to demolish his unknown Catholic adversary, and the air is full of "You're another," "No such thing," etc. By the time he pays his respects to the Romanist and the author the margin is filled, and he finds himself without space to state his own case more elaborately than by a "What is to be will be," or "Whatever is is right," or some equally antiquated and fallacious epigram.

Is there no way to protect valuable library books and intelligent readers from this sort of trashy criticism? A thoughtful reader does not care to waste his time reading through such nonsense to get at the printed page. He cannot help seeing it, because it overruns the print. He cannot help being more or less distracted by it. A student does not wish to be forced over and over to tread these childish paths in his serious reading. He does not wish to be forced to dig his social or natural or political sciences out from under theological crusts or sectarian venom. Is there no way to protect him? In one of the largest libraries in this country I discovered that they had James Parton's "Life of Voltaire." They had had it less than two weeks. It had been drawn but once, yet when I asked for it to refer to I found two pages torn or cut out clean with the back. They were the pages containing the story of compulsion as practiced by the Catholic church to force Voltaire to retract. It was well known who had drawn the book. The motiv for the mutilation was plain, but the reply to my inquiry was: "We could not directly accuse a divine of such a thing as that. It would make a scandal." I said, "The scandal is already made. The proof is here. He has wilfully mutilated and destroyed public property. Is he to be protected against the consequences of his act? If a man breaks a glass in a public building, if he throws a stone and destroys a lamp purposely, is he shielded against the consequences of his deliberate act? Now this misdemeanor is of a double character: it mutilates public property and it aims to suppress truth. There should be a double punishment." The librarian shrugged his shoulders and said: "I do not care to lose my place. If you will write an account of it to any paper in the city, and if the editor will publish it, I will assure him (privately) that the facts are as given."

I did so. Not a paper in the city would publish it. I thereupon set about getting up a fictitious case. I told of the mutilation of several theological works. The librarian was not consulted. The matter was printed without delay, together with a demand for just retribution, and the next day the library was besieged by zealous and indignant Christians, asking for books that never existed outside of the brain of a grim joker. And yet we are told that there is one law for all in this land of freedom, and that church and state are separate. This does not look like it to an unprejudiced observer.

But whether these library vandals are offenders against Christian or Agnostic prejudices, they are equally offenders against public welfare and morality, and there should be some way to reach them all, and to make public libraries something besides a means of spreading and intensifying sectarian ignorance and bigotry, and shielding their perpetrators from the consequences of their own deeds.

H. H. Gardener.

SUPPLEMENTARY.

From the New York Sun of November 13th.

Library thieves were discussed by the New York Library Club in the Columbia College library yesterday.

Dr. Buel, librarian of Union Theological Seminary, was asked how he got along with the ministers. He said he was afraid that ministers were as bad as anyone else in this respect, for since he had been librarian more than one thousand volumes had been stolen "One minister," he said, "kept a book twenty-three years, but finally returned it, with a note to the effect that he needed the book no longer, as he had obtained a better edition."

"My opinion," said Mr. Peoples, "is that ministers are not to be trusted in a library any more than anyone else. They like to write their opinions on the margins of books also. I found a book so marked one day, and, recognizing the handwriting as that of a prominent divine, sent a note to him, asking to see him at my office. He came, acknowledged that he had written in the book, but said that his writing made it more valuable.

"'Others do not think so,' I said; 'so if you will get us a new book, you may keep the more valuable one.'"

Mr. Hannah said that a Staten Island minister came into his library one day to consult some forty or fifty volumes on a certain subject. "I placed the books on a table for him and left him. Shortly afterward, while passing him again, I saw him throw a volume on the floor, and looking under the table, saw twenty books lying there. I asked him what he threw the books on the floor for. 'Oh, I'm through with those,' he answered. I told him I guessed he was, and with the others, too."

Small-pox for Christians Exclusivly.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Notwithstanding the small-pox scare, we pursue the even tenor of our way, and hold our meetings as usual. It is a remarkable fact that although, according to the Catholic bishop, God is so angry that he has sent the small-pox as a "punishment," not a single Freethinker has yet been attacked with the disease. If this is so, he must be wonderfully well pleased with our record in the past, and we can assure him that in the future we shall endeavor to beat it if we can. We are either basking in the smiles of his sunshine, or else he has taken alarm at our propagandist efforts and has gone into the angel-manufacturing business wholesale, for fear of there being a scarcity of material in the near future. Whatever may be the object, it is an undeniable fact that the numbers of the "faithful" are being rapidly reduced. Some of our orthodox friends suggest, however, as an explanation of our exemption from attack, that "Auld Clootie" being such a near and intimate neighbor of ours, we are consequently in receipt of a regular and liberal supply of the necessary sulphur and brimstone for fumigating purposes. Not only that, but they believe that his usual midnight ramble through our premises is more efficacious than a visit from an average Health Board official. After all, it is not the first time that the devil has done a good turn for poor humanity when its creator was suffering from a fit of bad temper; and if he will only do our business of disinfection well, we shall be eternally obliged to him.

C. Stevens.

Montreal, Can.

The following, from a Montreal paper, reads as we imagin a report might of a fourteenth-century gathering in Italy—that is, if the Italians of those days had had newspapers, or been able to read them if they had had them:

A solemn religious service was held this morning in the church of Notre Dame, at the request of the hon. judges and members of the bar of this city, the object being to offer prayers for the disappearance of the small-pox epidemic. With a very few exceptions all the Catholic members of the local bench and bar were present. Seats had been prepared in front of the altar railing for the judges and members of the bar, and among those present were noticed the Hon. Mr. Mercier, battonier; the Hon. Justices Jette. Papineau, Mousseau, Loranger, Desnoyers, Mr. Recorder DeMontigny, the Hon. Sheriff Chauveau, the Hon. Senators Trudel and Lacoste, Deputy Recorder Bourgoin and others.

The religious service was performed by his lordship Mgr. Fabre. The Rev. Mr. Marcoux, vice-rector of Laval University, acted as assistant, and Rev. Messrs. Hanon and Gaudin as deacon and subdeacon of honor.

A number of the members of the choir of Notre Dame, who had volunteered their services, rendered Gounod's Messe breve with much effect. The church was crowded with a large number of worshipers. The Rev. Mr. Colin, superior of the seminary, delivered a short but very effectiv address. He congratulated the members of the bench and bar upon the spirit of faith displayed by them, and the good example thus set to the whole community. After acknowledging the good works done by the several civic organizations, he said he was happy to see the leading citizens doing more, and coming to implore the help of their God. The present act was one both of faith and charity, as their offerings would go to help the suffering poor. In offering prayer in the Lord's house they were really humiliating themselvs and recognizing a superior power, a supreme God in whose hands rest our destinies. They came here to acknowledge the justice of the Lord's chastisment, but at the same time they could not forget that his goodness and mercy were equal to his justice, and upon his own authority they were entitled to call him father and to call for mercy at his hands.

Mr. Recorder De Montigny, who recently had small-pox in his family, received communion at this morning's service as a thanksgiving.

After mass the hon. judges present and the batonnier went to the vestry and offered their thanks to Mgr. Fabre and to the Rev. Mr. Colin. His lordship congratulated them and the members of the bar upon their Christian act. Over one hundred dollars were subscribed at this service, and as the expenses are small, the amount will be given to the Sisters of Charity for distribution among the poor afflicted with small-pox. This morning's service was held in honor of St. Roch, who is considered among Roman Catholics as a special protector in cases of epidemic. Tradition has it that this saint, during his life-time, was served with a written document by an angel from heaven, said document being to the effect that any one imploring him in the event of contagious diseases would receive sure help and relief. The confidence in the saint among the Roman Catholic population of this city is unbounded, and booksellers are selling any number of his pictures, which are to be found in almost every Catholic household.

If the small-pox is really sent as a chastisment, as Mr. Colin says it is, it seems that the pious are the sinners, or that the Lord dislikes them more than he does the Infidels. In either case the logic of the situation is against the church.

Mr. Mallonee Against Woman Suffrage.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Mrs. Iliohan inquires, "Can it be possible that Mr. Mallonee, of Cleveland, should begin his speech at the Convention by saying 'the just right to govern comes from the consent of the governed,' and afterward make a motion to strike out the resolution favoring woman suffrage?" I will say such is not only possible, but true. What then? If Mrs. Iliohan or any one else can giv one logical reason why that resolution should hav been passed by that Convention, I should like to hear it. I for one do not propose to put a power into the hands of our opponents whereby to retard Secularism half a century at least. If we are bound to indorse the views of a faction simply because it is asserted that in some unexplained way such views if carried out would benefit humanity, we might just as well advocate Free-love or Anarchy, or any other idea, simply because the advocates happened to be Liberals. I accord to woman all the rights I claim for myself, and one more, the right to be protected—protected from the necessity of participating in the public affairs of the nation. Your woman suffragists are always talking about the right to cast a ballot; why do you never talk of carrying a musket, serving in the militia, police force, etc.? My wife has sufficient confidence in my ability not to demand the right to buy her individual coal or ask to do her individual voting; neither does she consider herself a slave, and I am quite certain she stands the peer of any advocate of woman suffrage to-day. It has proved a failure wherever it has been tried. My wife would not vote, neither would other women of her class. When we were married we formed a copartnership, the object of which was happiness. Two things were absolutely necessary, our home and the means of maintaining it. I am ready to recognize the fact that she is mistress of the home, and she compliments me by trusting in my hands the financial and public affairs of our life. To make woman a mental duplicate of man (as indeed you will if there be any point to your argument) is to destroy the very qualities which every woman should seek to retain. Strong-minded girls usually die old maids. The resolution adopted was as much out of place as a resolution supporting the claims of the Spiritualists or Materialists would hav been. The only thing upon which the American Secular Union can agree is the Demands of Liberalism, and we hav our hands full without championing a pet scheme of the enemy.

Cleveland, Ohio. J. D. Mallonee.

As Things Are.

In reviewing the political situation, we find the hitherto two great leading parties being forced to the wall of concession by the pressure from without. The Democracy has fairly accepted the workingman as a factor in politics, and by his vote a preponderance has been emphatically secured at the state election. And it will go hard with the leaders of the trades unions if they will not be found as claimants of the spoils of office. Catch the astute fellows letting slip good chances! They deserve all fair rewards. They hav skilfully and courageously managed to interpret to the men of the bench, through the medium of their unions, the equality of the rank and file with the boss element as participants in industrial profits, and the ease with which the trade of society might be conducted for the benefit of all—Socialism, "for to that complexion must it come at last"—instead of, as now, bringing the merest pittance to the employee while making millionaires of employers. The basis of the social war is Syndicate vs. Labor.

Society is fairly awakened to the fact of overwhelming abuse in our industrial relations. The general intellect of Christendom, throwing aside the authority that has so long dominated the masses, has resolved henceforward to act independent of the aid hitherto so humbly deferred to. Men hav found that they hav been duped, made to meekly bear the degradations of poverty through the systematic machinations of humbugs and despots. Deception has been on the rampage through all the centuries, dooming the many to all severities of toil in favor of the few, while thanking their enslavers for the barest means of life. Civilization has been pivoted on the madness of a theory born of church teachings and the idiocy growing out of a barbaric system of ranks. And so imperiously hav the false claims been enforced that habits of thought and conformity of action hav, to the common mind, made the conditions impossible to be changed without insulting the "great author of all" under whose guidance society has been shaped.

It is only within the past century that a general change has come over the spirit of life's dream in the matter of social relations; and perhaps not more than twenty years that resistance to the old regime has been insisted on—modestly at first and with an appearance of uncertainty as to the rightfulness of the modern interpretation of social life. No truer delineation of the monstrous lie embodied in society can be found than in the lines of the obscure versifier:

> And everywhere they went they saw
> A thousand of the rank and file,
> With four the rest to overawe,
> To keep one specious rogue in style.

And the verse immediately following is the capsheaf magnified to the culminating horror justifying revolution:

> They halted at the Stock Exchange,
> Where prowls the mean commercial knave,
> Who seeks a "corner" to arrange,
> The public market to enslave.

Force has had its day. Fraud now must succumb. The people swear by the great facts of life that a change must come—not in Christendom alone but throughout the big world. The gage of contest has been thrown; its acceptance forced. Where the defiance of tyrants has been most strongly felt the scourged hav sought the aid of dynamite. Let it be for us to seek the agent hallowed as the gift of the "fathers," and used by them, the ballot, hopeful of so accomplishing releasement from the idiocy of thraldom. But accomplish we must. It is so nominated in the bond. And in obedience to the forceful mandate Great Britain is now thrilling in the throes of a revolution made rampant by an American tramp, Henry George—a modern Peter the Hermit, arousing the people for the redemption of the land torn from their ancestors by the remorseless avarice of the lawyer legislators of the past.

> The acres are the people's, the heritage of life,
> Unowned by any, owned by all, without a chance for strife;
> And the question has gone forth to each beneath the generous sun,
> Shall one man own a million while a million owns not one?

Le Roy, N. Y. M.

Taxing Churches.

This would certainly work well in New York, for it works admirably in California. One of the leading clergymen in San Francisco, Rev. Horatio Stebbins, D.D., who has been there since 1864, says:

> The law requiring all property to be taxed here arose in the tendency to accumulate great values in ecclesiastical estates, especially in the Roman Catholic church. It has been in operation nearly twenty years. . . . The law works as well as any law regulating taxation, which is not saying much, if you mean by regulation equal justice. The disposition is to value church property at a low figure, and make the taxation relativly light. I do not see how the idea of the law can be upset. It is just, though at some points it works hardship, and at others an apparent incongruity. Something might be done to relieve this by setting a limitation within which property should go free. There is no limitation here. A religious society here cannot receive a bequest. I do not think that the law has any effect to hinder the churches in any work, or teaching, or influence for human welfare, any more than it hinders an honest man in his business to pay his taxes. There is no money he spends that he gets so much for.

The plan of limited exemption is now followed in Rhode Island; but it was given up after a brief trial in New Hampshire, partly because the rich churches got themselvs so grossly undervalued as to make the law a dead letter, and partly because its constitutionality was contested. If any churches ought to be taxed, they should all be—Justice makes no exceptions to her rules. In Massachusetts, last winter, two proposals were made simultaneously, and with little discord among their advocates, to tax all churches without exception, and to tax all whose value exceeded $10,000. Both plans were opposed with equal vigor, and all the open resistance came from the Roman Catholics. No wonder that the clergy of this sect are peculiarly averse to taxing churches. This is the only body of ministers which holds all the property of the denomination in its own hands and manages it in its own way. Send the tax-gatherer to a Protestant church, and he goes to deacons and wardens, who perhaps gain more individually by the reform than they lose as members of the corporation, all their taxes on other property being diminished by the levy on the church. When the tax-gatherer gets among Roman Catholics, he has to put his hand into the pocket of the priest, who has no property except what he gets in virtue of his office. Thus our struggle is mainly with the Romish priests—a fact which should be made plain to all sensible Protestants.

Another remarkable feature of our long struggle in Massachusetts against dead-heading the churches is that nobody claims that they ought to be exempted on account of their merits as religious institutions. Some appeal to their architectural beauty, which would bring in a new standard of taxation, one by which the rich man's palace might go free. Others claim that a church raises the value of property in the neighborhood, which again is just as true of the palace. Moreover, I hav known the owner of a house fail to get a tenant on account of the noise made by the bell of the adjacent church. So, again, it is urged that there are some churches that could not afford to pay their taxes. Many individuals are equally unfortunate. The difference in favor of the poor church is that it is sure of help from wealthy societies in the same denomination. The old plea that churches are public charities is simply ridiculous to those who notice how few keep their seats free, and how many systematically keep strangers standing at the door, until the proceedings are far advanced. There is no public charitv in a private pew. Most of the churches are simply Sunday club-houses.

Let me add that the movement in Massachusetts has taken a new form, through the vote of the town of Princeton—thirty-six to twenty-five—to request the legislature to repeal the law by which the churches are exempted. All honor to Princeton.

F. M. Holland.

Crooked Church Work.

A sensation of the first magnitude occurred in Philadelphia, on the 13th inst., near the close of a session of the Methodist Church Extension Society. These meetings are usually of the most quiet and unexciting character, but on this occasion a mysterious paper was presented by a lay-member. Mr. Thomas W. Price, of No. 505 Minor street, who introduced the paper, had taken the precaution to hav the matter printed. Mr. Price has been one of the most liberal givers to the cause of Methodism in that city for many years. The startling character of his pamphlet, therefore, has additional weight. He arraigns the society for carelessness in the management of its business affairs. After overhauling the accounts of the German conferences, Mr. Price says: "The same want of agreement is found in your report for 1883. On one page you say you paid for interest $22 563 29. Your treasurer claims to hav paid but $16 341.02, a difference of $6,222.27. Which is correct? Large as your expenses are, you seem to need some one that can make out a report that can be understood. You hav no paid-up capital, as all trust companies are compelled to hav, as a basis of doing such business; and yet, whether you take the report of your secretary, or that of your treasurer—the first declaring that you paid $23 985.84, the other claiming to hav paid only $20,628.70—you hav far exceeded your receipts for interest; for in 1883 your receipts for interest were $13 704.51, while your payments were $16,341.02. In 1884 you received from all your loans $16.550 60, and paid out for interest $20,628.70, or $4,078.10 more than your receipts. In my simplicity, I take this to be a clear violation of your charter; and, as the governor of this commonwealth is a member of your board, I would call his special attention to the matter. He may feel it to be his duty to refer the case to the attention of the attorney-general, as he recently did the case of a great railroad corporation in this state. Excuse me if I ask, 'Is it right for a great religious board to set at defiance the civil law?'

"Last year—1884—you received on all your loans, which you tell us are $464,718.33, the sum of $16,-550.60, which is about 3 1-2 per cent, and you paid interest on $324,254.30 the sum of $23,985 84; in other words, you receive a little over 3 1-2 per cent and pay nearly 8 per cent. I trust you may be able to make me out to be mistaken. If so, I will gladly do what I can to correct my mistake.

"I must now call your attention to what you designate as 'Named Loan Funds,' in relation to which you tell us that, 'We reaffirm that no part of said Loan Fund shall ever be donated for any purpose or used for current expenses, but shall be preserved without diminution a perpetual fund.' To carry out this pledge you must do injustice to the church at large by diverting funds from the purpose for which they were given. You hav outstanding loans to the number of 853, varying in amount from $13,-120 to $11, amounting in the aggregate to $428,-280.90. Now, I aver that since the organization of human society there never was a man or corporation of men that loaned to 853 different parties that did not lose some part of their loans; and you must remember that your loans are, 'as a rule,' made to parties who cannot borrow of any other moneylenders, for the reason that they are not considered safe.

"The fact is that, while church-members may be perfectly honest in their personal relations to society, in regard to church liabilities they are, to put it mildly, careless, as in your board. You are all honest men, but in the management of the affairs of your board you hav been—careless. Is it not well known that the chief reason why moneyed men or corporations do not loan to churches is the difficulty of collecting their claims at maturity, and the almost universal repugnance to foreclosing and selling churches at sheriff's sales? How, then, are you to be sure you will collect your loans from all the 853 churches to whom you hav loaned?"

